She was impressed with the notion that she would live long and be called to endure much. While at Chapel Hill she dreamed one night that she was a Missionary in Africa. "The last place in the world to which I ever thought of going. I was happy and rejoicing in my work; happy not because of worldly comforts, but because I was trying to do something for my great Redeemer. I plainly saw the ebon faces of the heathen about me, partook of their friendly food, and lodged in their tents. The will of the Lord be done. I am in His hands, ready to go wherever He calls, willing to do whatever he bids." The dream was a picture of many dim expectations which she entertained in her ardent desires to be useful. She longed to fill such a station as that her grandmother had labored and suffered in. She was "strongly drawn to the life of a preacher's wife." Probably she was about this time tempted, in no bad sense, to enter such a field. She wrote to one, himself a preacher of age and experience, asking his counsel, and received but poor encouragement. He answered her that he thought her "opportunities of doing good would be no greater as the wife of a preacher than in any other station," and indeed "inclined to the opinion that, under only peculiar circumstances, the wife of a Methodist preacher is more of a drudge than most women." She had been from early life too well accustomed to contemplate the "hardness" of the fortunes of a soldier's wife to be intimidated by such a gloomy estimate. Not two years after and she writes: "Courage. Be of good cheer, a gentle spirit whispers: I am even now in the vineyard, in His own good time."

And in a few days after, on the 12th of November, 1851, she was united in marriage to the Rev. A. E. Goodwin, an itinerant preacher and member of the Louisiana Conference.

How mysterious the ways of God! She did not live a single year to grace the position for which she was so peculiarly fitted. Her health was bad from the first of the year and so continued until she died. Whenever she was able to be, she was engaged actively in the discharge of the various duties which presented themselves in her new position. Everybody loved and respected her.

She had marked out a still wider field, in the efforts which are made to extend Christianity by the pen and press. She was a frequent and highly appreciated contributor to this paper, and to the "Ladies Companion." Her pieces recommended themselves by their quiet pathos and pure Christian sentiment. "My beautiful roses!" she exclaims in one of her compositions, "look upon them and read the lesson of life; for each bud and blossom will tell the same story and convey some truth. Behold there an emblem of infant beauty, the maiden's blush, woman's maturity, and life's decline. Look again! they are lovely to all, withhold fragrance from none, even as our Father who "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust."

She seemed to struggle desire death. Strangely enough when we remember that she had an irrepressible ardor to live to be useful. Such expressions as the following often occur in her short journal. They show us that Death was to her at least neither an unexpected nor an unwelcome visitor: "At the usual hour we went to the church. Bro. G. preached the funeral of little Ella C., and though I do not know that the sermon was better or as good as usual, it was a season of much interest to me. Death is a pleasant theme, for I regard it as the portal to endless rest, as the entrance chamber to the presence of the Most High; and my soul bounds at the thought of crossing the chill waters of Jordan."

It was not only amid the sad sights and sounds of a funeral that through the shadows of grief her eyes saw the King in his beauty and beheld the land that is very far off; but in her moments of joy, Heaven seemed home, and death seemed but the gate of Heaven. She writes on one occasion: "Such breezes from the Heavenly shore are wafted to my soul; such a sense of God's love! O, my spirit longs to leave this world and soar to the presence of my Saviour.

"'Tis not that meek submission flies,
And would not suffer still:
* * * * * * *
It is that hope with ardor glows,
To see Him face to face,
Whose dying tone no language knows
Sufficient art to trace.'

"I cannot praise my God here, I cannot utter the adoration my spirit feels; but when faith is lost in sight my tongue shall speak the language of the new Jerusalem. How do all things sink before me, how vain, how trifling do earthly objects appear! Christ is all in all."

For two years she had been looking deathward. "Having a desire to depart, and to be with Christ; which is far better."

On the 5th of July her disease attacked her violently, and on the 13th of August she died. During this long painful process of death she manifested great patience. She retained her reason to the last, but for a long time was so feeble as hardly to be able to speak two words together. Previously she spake of the wisdom of preparing for death in health, and that she knew that in sickness it was hard to make the mind act—that she had attended to all this long before; this she said, smiling. No doubt she was directly carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom. K.

LOUISIANA, 1852.

If men plot against your interests, commit your way to God in prayer. Thus you will have the advantage, for those who secretly labor to injure their neighbor cannot go to God and ask him to crown their efforts with success.

"The error of a moment is the sorrow of a life."

The parable of the wise and foolish virgins is exemplified much more frequently than most people imagine. Hundreds are dying daily, of whom it may be feared that they knock when the door is shut, and hence knock in vain.

When Satan tempts the afflicted Christian to rebellion by saying to him, "Where is now thy God?" he should promptly reply, "He is present with me, giving the evidence of his love to me as a son, by applying his chastising and purifying rod."

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

Mr. Bones, of the firm of Fossil, Bones & Co., was one of those remarkable money-making men whose uninterrupted success in trade had been the wonder and afforded the material for the gossip of the town for seven years. Being of a familiar turn of mind, he was frequently interrogated on the subject, and invariably gave as the secret of his success, that he minded his own business.

A gentleman met Mr. Bones on the Assanpink bridge. He was gazing intently on the dashing, foaming waters, as they fell over the dam. He was evidently in a brown study. Our friend ventured to disturb his cogitations.

"Mr. Bones, tell me how to make a thousand dollars."

Mr. Bones continued looking intently at the water. At last he ventured a reply.

"Do you see that dam, my friend?"

"I certainly do."

"Well, here you may learn the secret of making money. That water would waste away and be of no practical use to anybody, but for the dam; that dam turns it to good account, makes it perform some useful purpose, and then suffers it to pass along. That large paper-mill is kept in motion by this simple economy. Many months are supplied by the manufacture of the article of paper, and intelligence is scattered broad-cast over the land, on the sheets that are daily turned out: and in the different processes through which it passes, money is made. So it is in the living of hundreds of people. They get enough money; it passes through their hands every day; and at the year's end, they are no better off.

"What's the reason? They want a dam; their expenditures are increasing, and no practical good is attained. They want them dammed up, so that nothing will pass through their hands without bringing something back; without accomplishing some useful purpose. Dam up your expenses, and you'll soon have enough occasionally to spare a little, just like that dam. Look at it, my friend." [Trenton True American.

HOT SUMMERS.—The excessive heat which prevails at present gives some interest to the following account of remarkable hot summers: "In 1132 the earth opened, and the rivers and springs disappeared, in Alsace. The Rhine was dried up. In 1152 the heat was so great that eggs were cooked in the sand. In 1160, at the battle of Bela, a great number of soldiers died from the heat. In 1276 and 1277, in France, an absolute failure of the crops of grass and oats occurred. In 1303 and 1304, the Seine, the Loire, the Rhine and the Danube were passed over dry-footed. In 1393 and 1394 great numbers of animals fell dead, and the crops were scorched up. In 1440 the heat was excessive. In 1538, 1539, 1540, 1541, the rivers were almost entirely dried up. In 1556 there was a great dearth all over Europe. In 1615 and 1616 the heat was overwhelming in France, Italy, and the Netherlands. In 1646 there were 58 consecutive days of excessive heat. In 1678 excessive heat. The same was the case in the first three years of the eighteenth century. In 1718 it did not rain once from the month of April to the month of October. The crops were burnt up, the rivers were dried up, and the theatres were closed by decree of the Lieutenant of Police. The thermometer marked 30 degrees Reaumur (113 of Fahrenheit.) In gardens which were watered, fruit trees flowered twice. In 1723 and 1724 the heat was extreme. In 1746, summer very hot and very dry which absolutely cut-off the crops. During several months no rain fell. In 1748, 1754, 1760, 1767; 1778 and 1788 the heat was excessive. In 1811, the year of the celebrated comet, the summer was very warm and the wine delicious, even at Sussex. In 1818 the theatres remained closed for nearly a month, owing to the heat. The maximum heat was 35 degrees (110 75 Fahrenheit.) In 1830, while fighting was going on, the 27th, 28th and 29th of July, the thermometer marked 30 degrees centigrade (97 95 Fahrenheit.) In 1832, in the insurrection of the 5th and 6th of June, the thermometer marked 34 degrees centigrade. The highest temperature which man can support for a certain time varies from 40 to 45 degrees (104 to 113 Fahrenheit.) Frequent accidents, however, occur at a less elevated temperature." NOTES OF AN ITINERANT.

MR. EDITOR: From the Conference at Washington, Miss., in 1821, I was appointed to the circuit lying above Natchez, embracing Port Gibson, Warrenton, and the place where Vicksburg was afterwards located. That year we had some outpourings of the Spirit. A good many were added to the Church. At the close of this year I visited my friends in Alabama, and on the 7th of November married Miss Mary Walker, near Cahawba. Soon after I set out for Conference, to be holden in Green county, Miss., at a camp-ground on the Chickasawha river. This Conference was held in December, 1822. It was still small, and we were disappointed in having a Bishop, and Wm. Winans was made President. Here I was appointed P. E., and sent to the Louisiana District, covering all the territory of Louisiana west of the Mississippi, viz., Ouachita, Red River, Opelousas, Attakapas, etc. That country was pretty much under the influence of Roman Catholics. Here I spent two years. The influence of Romanism began to wane in some places, but still we had hard struggling to get on.

My health declined considerably, and my wife seemed to have lost hers entirely; so I thought it best to leave that work, and our friends did not oppose. We left the district in the fall of 1824, and spent some time near Nashville, Tenn., drinking the blue lime stone water. Both of us recovered and proceeded to Alabama, where I designed to settle my family, inasmuch as there was no provision made for the families of traveling preachers. I traveled ten years after marrying, and did not receive one dollar for family expenses.

In December, 1824, I attended Conference in Tuscaloosa—the first Conference ever held in Alabama. I was appointed to the Alabama District, since Mobile District, which embraced a portion of Mississippi and of Florida, and a large portion in Alabama. Pensacola, in Florida, was a large Catholic city, but we had a desire to share with them. Mobile, too, was pretty much the same way; both mission ground. So the Conference united them in one mission station, and appointed H. P. Cook to these two places, some sixty miles apart, and the bay twelve miles wide between them. There was no house of worship in Pensacola, and but one small Protestant church in Mobile, for all denominations to worship in. The prospect was truly gloomy.

This year the yellow fever visited both of those cities, and Bro. Cook died of it in Pensacola. The prospect in these old cities seemed truly discouraging, but still it was determined to break the Roman spell in both of them. They were separated, and Pensacola fell to the South Carolina and Georgia preachers, and Mobile to Mississippi. I was continued on the Alabama District, and in the year 1826 Bro. Lambeth was in Mobile, and we commenced the first Methodist Church ever attempted in Mobile. The society was small and we built a small church in the woods, then the outskirts of the city. During the four years on this district, the advance of Methodism, and almost every other good thing, was very great. From small beginnings great matters grow. From the small beginning in Mobile the work has spread to large societies and splendid brick churches, reared up in different parts of the city. And through the country, where but a few years before I had to spend the night on the ground, hearing the wolves howl, now are comfortable dwellings and good houses of worship.

During the four years I was on this district, I attended Conference in Dec., 1825, at Washington, Miss., December, 1826, Tuscaloosa, Ala., and in December, 1827, at Natchez, Miss. In December, 1828, I attended Conference at Tuscaloosa, Ala., where I was appointed in charge of the Cahawba District. Just before I closed my last year's labor, a circumstance occurred worthy some notice. I left a camp meeting in Clarke county to attend another in Marengo, intending to pass by home. Night overtook me in a large canebreak on the Alabama river; here I became bewildered, and had to spend the night. I gave my horse some cane to eat and laid down by the side of a tree to sleep. Not long after I was awoke by my horse snorting and jumping, and heard some wild beast move near me, which I supposed was a panther, as there were many in that part of the country. It past away but came again before I got to sleep, and by slapping my hands and hissing it left; but still unwilling to miss its prey, it came a third time, and then passed off and did not return. The Lord preserved me. I closed the year in peace and entered my new district, thus placing me on the ground where, ten years before, as a missionary, I had planted the standard of the Cross in the almost wilderness. The scene was so changed that I could scarcely realize it to be the same.

EBENEZER HEARN.

CLEAVING TO CHRIST.

Solomon charges us to "buy the truth and sell it not." Purchase it at any price and part with it at none. Many have refused to give its price, and many have parted with it, always infinitely below its worth. Paul, who had made great sacrifices to obtain this precious pearl, when writing to the Christian Hebrews, who had also given their all for it, said, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; for he is faithful that promised." Not a few have done this. A poor girl, who resided on the sea-coast of England, was asked, when dying, by a clergyman, what she thought of Jesus; her reply was beautiful and sublime—"Jesus," said she, "I cleave to him as the limpets to the rocks." Excellent girl, who does not almost envy her! Yes, the Christian will cleave to Jesus in spite of everything. The stormy ocean, hurling its destructive fury around, only causes the limpets to cleave to the rocks more firmly. So was it with Job; the more heavily his sorrows fell upon him, the more fully did he determine. "Though he slay me yet will I trust in him."

When tempted to desert the truth, or to renounce the cause of Christ, "we may," says Andrew Fuller, "imagine that the martyrs in Heaven are calling to us. One may say, 'hold it fast; I died in a dungeon rather than forego it.' 'Hold it fast,' says another, 'I bled for it.' 'Hold it fast,' says a third, 'I burned for it.'"

Let this duty be considered as practically devolving on every one who has named the name of Christ. Let us boldly confess Christ, and cleave to him constantly, that so we may humbly expect that he will own us in the presence of his Father and an assembled universe. Such a line of conduct ennobles us in the esteem of all holy beings, while even the most ungodly cannot despise us; it strengthens us for the discharge of all duties, and makes us blessings to the world. We thus serve the Church while we live, and obtain a victory over the last enemy when we die. [Watchman and Reflector.

A SERMON AT THE SPRINGS.

The Responsible Position talented Ministers occupy—Signs of the Power and Glory of Methodism Departing.

At a popular watering place not far from the city of M., it was announced on Saturday that to-morrow (Sunday) at 10 o'clock, in the ball-room, the Rev. Mr. —— (Methodist) would preach. I was glad to hear the announcement, not that I hoped a sermon at the Springs would be appreciated by a majority of the visitors, but that the professors of religion present might be reminded of their obligations, and "a word fitly spoken" might result in arresting the attention of some thoughtless one, and indeed conviction of heart and reformation of life. In reflecting on the subject, I was prompted to suggest a text for the occasion. I thought of the multitude of impotent folk of halt, blind, and withered, who were assembled on the occasion of the Saviour's visit at the Bethesda's healing pool, waiting for a moving of the water. The interest awakened in the bosom of him of withered limbs, as he lay stretched out, helpless and forlorn, when the question proposed, "Wilt thou be made whole?"—the joy evinced in experiencing his miraculous cure; and it occurred to me a sermon, with this subject for the theme, would be opportune. The present circumstances would be contrasted with those of Bible history, and a cure of moral as well as physical infirmity would be urged. I thought, too, of the scene of the interesting conversation held by the Saviour with the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well. Of the water of life promised on asking, the drinking of which would be a well of water springing up into everlasting life. But presuming the preacher was prepared with a sermon, or the notes of one, I did not venture to propose a subject. Sunday came, and with it the hour for preaching. Notwithstanding the number of visitors was large, the congregation was small. Some were in their rooms dozing away precious hours. Some were perusing tales of fiction, and others (among whom were ladies) were engaged at nine-pins. The subject selected was Paul's exhortation to holy living in consideration of the fact that "these things shall be dissolved." The subject admitted of display, and the privilege was not disregarded. The sermon was eloquent and interesting, but it lacked power. It had not the characteristics of what I conceived to be the style of the author of the text, the illustrious Apostle of the Gentiles, nor of Mr. Wesley, whom we regard as our great example. There was an exhibition of more originality of thought than manner. Of the occasional indulgence in the style of some of our popular preachers the speaker might have been unconscious, but for a seemingly studied conformity to the conventional notions of the day, he was inexcusable. Paul in preaching the gospel of Christ before kings, though a scholar, despised the excellency of speech and man's wisdom. The announcement of his glorying alone in the cross of Christ made kings and governors tremble, whilst they acknowledged the power of his reasoning. The doctrine of total depravity, the necessity of repentance and faith, and the new birth, which constitutes the burthen of Mr. Wesley's sermons, is regarded by some of our modern divines as obsolete. The observance of some of the most important Church usages have been repudiated. The popular taste has been carefully unalized and ascertained, and it must be catered to. Instead of gospel sermons, such as Paul and Wesley preached, is introduced a sickly, sentimental, intellectual essay sort of sermonising, which the rulers can listen to and believe—assuming as a basis the postulate that man is depraved de jure but not de facto, and maintaining that to train and cultivate the mind will improve the heart. It is unfortunate that the hearers minds are not more highly cultivated. Until, however, this embarrassment is removed care should be had that the gospel be preached in its native simplicity, especially that it be not mystified. And in regard to doctrine and usage, it is better for us to dissolve the connection we have with the Church of our choice than to impeach, in letter or spirit, one article of its association.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, Sept. 18.

BRITISH CONFERENCE.

The 109th session closed the 17th ult. The Rev. J. Scott, President, has been appointed President of the next Irish Conference, to meet in Cork June 25, 1853. Rev'd Enoch Wood appointed President of the next Conference in Canada. The mission in France has been set off to its own government, and Dr. Cook (the Superintendent Missionary heretofore) appointed President of the first French Wesleyan Conference, to be held the present month. This step, of which our readers have been kept notified by our correspondent, is regarded an important one in the evangelization of France. It was taken very guardedly, and with a unanimous consent of the leaders of the Parent body. The French antipathy to any thing English must heretofore have operated seriously against this mission, and our English brethren seem to have had little regard heretofore to this national prejudice. As an instance, a friend, who last summer visited the mission, told us that in the use of the Liturgy the Wesleyan minister always struck to the letter and prayed for the Queen of England, and his royal highness Prince Albert and the Prince of Wales, etc. This in the ears of Frenchmen and in the Metropolis of France! The effect of a Church, naturalized in the country, such as is now provided for, will doubtless soon be evident for good. Dr. Cook himself very delicately hints this in his own remarks, when the proposition was under discussion. We quote from the Watchman of the 10th ult. He said:

"The proposal had arisen out of the feeling, that the evangelization of such a country as France could not wisely be left to depend on the labors or funds of any foreign missionary society. Considering the responsibility of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, in the various parts of the world, it could do but little for France. Their minds had been exercised with the conviction of the paucity of their means. They had concluded to organize a Home Mission among the French, so as to lay the burden in a greater degree on the French themselves. They might thus have funds to employ, such as they could not at present command. They had succeeded in a very great degree in awakening Protestant France. Other communities in that country could employ means of a subordinate kind, which they themselves did not, and they had a deep sense of the importance of doing something by means of a subsidiary agency, and through a separate Evangelical Society of their own. There were reasons against the latter proposal, as they had already heard. It had been then proposed to see whether the time had not come when their independence as a Church should be acknowledged. He had said that the Protestant world in France had been awakened, and, in consequence of that, the Roman Catholic Church had been awakened also. Their labors had therefore been circumscribed by the efforts of the Jesuits and others, by means which the Wesleyan Missionary Society were not able to employ. Many in France would have preferred sending their children to Wesleyan schools, who were compelled to send them to schools that were Roman Catholic. The employment of the press in such a country as France was of great importance. They were in France a minority in a minority, and could do but little, and this had led them to desire an Evangelical Society naturalized in France. The result had been the proposition which had been made by Doctor Beecham. They were not insensible to the difficulties of their position. They were convinced that the present state of the political world in France was such, and their relative position to other bodies such, that something else was necessary. The fact was, that for some years past they had not been increasing their numbers at all, and this was in consequence of others being able to do with subsidiary help what they were not able to do. The brethren in France were willing to make every personal sacrifice necessary. They would thus be able to command the co-operation of their people under the influence of such an example. Their influence among other denominations of Christians was very great. He had been assured, the other day, by a French journalist, that if he had not known him, (Dr. Cook) he should never have understood how much the Wesleyans were in the truth, because of their bearing the name of a man (Wesley) that in France there were seven-eighths of the evangelical ministers, and nine-tenths of the evangelical people, who held the doctrines of Methodism."

In view of this evident national inadaptation, and of the good feeling existing between Frenchmen and Americans, on the score of old friends and republican sympathies, the project has been seriously broached by the M. E. Church North, of establishing a mission in France. Whether this new arrangement will supersede it, we wait to see; but if our Northern brethren have the men and the means we should be pleased to see them to go into the measure and doubt not of their success.

The following is the numerical statement made before the Conference:

GENERAL RECAPITULATION.

Number of Members in Great Britain—
This year	281263	281263
Last year	302209
Decrease on the year	20946
Number of Members in Ireland—
This year	20040	20040
Last year	20915
Decrease on the year	875
Number of Members in the Foreign Stations—
This year	101338	101338
Last year	98011
Increase on the year	8327
Total		402641
Total Decrease in Great Britain		20946
" " Ireland		875
		21821
Deduct Increase on Missions		3327
Net Decrease throughout the world		18494
On Trial in Great Britain		13304
" " the Foreign Missions		5499
Total number on Trial		18803

The President observed, that although the return appeared to be discouraging, yet there were favorable indications, as a considerable increase of numbers had taken place during the last two quarters.

The Watchman, in summing up, expresses both faith and hope that the present will be a year of work and of peace. It thus comments upon the numerical statement:

"The returns stand almost exactly as we anticipated and announced in June, but with this relieving circumstance, that the President was now able to refer to considerable additions on both the two last quarters.—When it it considered that, in those two quarters, so many thousands of our population have emigrated to Australia, Canada, and California, these accessions form indeed an encouraging indication. That the decrease in Ireland, during such a year of excitement and voluntary expatriation, should have been only 875, should be an occasion for any thing but despondence. Then in the Foreign Missions there is an increase of three thousand three hundred full members and communicants. The total loss on the year, or, as it is called, 'net decrease throughout the world,' is 18,494; while the candidates for membership are by some hundreds more numerous, being 18,803. There is here cause sufficient, for humiliation, self-examination, and prayer for our Zion; but no justification for inaction or despair."

The British Wesleyan ship has endured a great storm. She is safe, but damaged. It took strong timbers to endure so. Social peculiarities, in a measure, prevent us "on this side" from fully appreciating their ecclesiastical difficulties. High conservatism is evidently, at last, yielding. The old leaders are giving place: young men are progressive. But the history of the last few years has shown something in the organic structure of their Methodism which secures it from being sacrificed to popular clamor.

The British Wesleyans are laying hold upon education, as an ally, in a style vigorous, practical and far-reaching. We hope this is not an indication of the prevalence of a worldly over a highly spiritual policy.

Rev. R. Young has been deputed to visit Australia and erect the Methodist churches there into a separate organization—the Australian Conference.

Next Conference is to meet in Bradford, July, 1853.

Dr. Newton has taken a superannuated relation.

An interesting circumstance in the Conference was the visit of the poet, JAMES MONTGOMERY. May the blessing of the Patriarchal bard be realized upon the "people called Methodists" on both sides the Atlantic:

"At this Conference, assembled in the town of his long residence, and in his own eightieth year, there was a mutual attraction, leading to an interview, between the successors of John Wesley and the great devotional Poet of the Moravian Church, and of all true Churches. Even the venerable and aged Dr. Buoting, a contemporary of Wesley, and, as such, acknowledging the obligations of Wesley, and of the great Christian body known as Methodists, to a few brethren of the Moravian Society, seemed then in the presence of an elder, as Montgomery blessed the Conference, and the 'people called Methodists,' with the blessing wherewith Aaron and his sons blessed the children of Israel:

"'The Lord bless you and keep you: the Lord make His face to shine upon you, and be gracious unto you: the Lord lift up His countenance upon you, and GIVE YOU PEACE!'"

MATERIAL AID.

Some of the oldest and best established of the "Advocates," keep this subject stendily pressed upon their patroos and agents. We do not like to do it, but if they have much need, we have more. Among the youngest of the Advocate family, our circulation is of course comparatively limited. We need, therefore, the constant attention of our friends. Besides regular weekly expenses, there are our clever "J. P. C.," and "X. Y."—and surely none of our readers are willing to part with them. Our weekly receipts are very frequently below the weekly expenses. What can we say more?

At the approaching Annual Conferences, it is very much desired by the Committees of Publication to present a fair and prosperous showing. Getting new subscribers, collecting subscriptions and sending on the cash, is the plain process to accomplish this. With pleasure we receive many and cheering assurances that the position and services in the cause of Protestantism, Methodism and Christianity, of this journal, are esteemed. We are thankful for them. This result is not an accident—for this it was established, and for this we have labored. Our patronage, too, is gradually on the increase; but a little more grape, brethren: a little more grape.

REV. CHARLES GOLDBERG.—Bishop Paine has designated Rev. C. Goldberg, of Texas, as a missionary to the foreigners in California—especially to the Germans and French, and forwarded his appointment. Bro. Goldberg is to raise $500, which we judge he will readily do in Texas. When he has raised this sum, the balance, $500, will be furnished by the Missionary Society, for which the draft of Bishop P. is now in our hands. He is expected to be ready to go by 1st November, or when the other missionaries go.

NEW POSTAGE LAW.—On fourth page it is given in full. The yearly postage of this paper, if paid in advance, can not cost the most distant subscriber in the Union more than twenty-six cents.

TEXAS.—At the recent session of the Convention of Texas, the Rt. Rev. G. W. Freeman, D. D., was unanimously elected Bishop of that diocese.

BAPTIST SCHOOL.—The Louisiana Baptist Convention held its session in July last, and came to the conclusion that they would establish at Mount Lebanon, Bienville Parish, La., a male school of high character, with a theological department, also a female seminary as soon as practicable, all under the patronage and supervision of the Convention. The situation selected is healthy, and in the midst of an orderly population. The citizens of Mount Lebanon and vicinity are preparing to erect, and will have ready by next year, buildings suitable for the reception of seventy-five or one hundred male students.

GENERAL MINUTES.

Our copy has not yet arrived, but our order for one has been forwarded to Richmond, accompanied by the cash. Surely it will come now. Albeit, a few of our contemporaries, more highly favored, have received a copy from the General Agent himself, Doctor Early.

He advertises for sale, at the Book Concern, a portrait of himself. We have a mind to buy that, too, as it is unlikely we shall ever see the excellent and dignified original in the Southwest. We assure the Gen'l Agent that there are some Methodists in Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas and Texas. The Valley of the Mississippi contains almost as many as that of James River, and they like to be informed of the current church history, and to be informed upon the same terms as others.

An exchange, "nearer the Virginia line" than ourselves, has been favored with a copy, and makes up this summary:

Floating Bethel for Mobile Bay.

The Mobile Advertiser informs us that this moral desideratum to the commerce of Mobile is about to be supplied by the benevolence of a few gentlemen. The ships, lying out in the Bay several miles from the city, give the sailors no opportunity to go to church. The Church is now going to them. The Advertiser suggests that the institution, in honor of its generous founder, be called "Roger Stewart's Sailor's haven:"

"A Worthy Act.—The purchase of the ship Mersey was an instance of exalted benevolence not often seen in this money-loving world. The large sum of twenty-five hundred dollars was invested in the purchase of the hull and tackle of the Mersey, by our fellow citizens, Roger Stewart and R. Purvis, Esq., in order to appropriate the ship to the worthy purpose of supplying a bethel and hospital in the midst of the shipping where they are so greatly needed. Nor is even this the extent of the public and benevolent spirit that influenced the generous investment. It is the object of Mr. Stewart to moor her in the midst of the fleet—to rig a single (main) mast, on which is to be hung the best light that can be procured, so as to assist, not only the general navigation of the bay by night, but especially those cotton laden lighters bound for the shipping.

"Irrespective of all this, the proposition of her liberal owners is to have a resident surgeon and established hospital on board, for immediate attention to the thousand inevitable accidents occurring there. To all this will be added a regular 'Bethel,' where all the seamen in port, nad away from the city, can attend divine service regularly."

AMERICAN BOARD FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS.—The annual meeting of this board commenced its session on the 7th inst., at Troy, N. Y. It appears from the annual report that six corporate members have died during the year, and also one ordained missionary and five assistants. The whole number of surviving members is now 187.

Fourteen ordained missionaries and 23 assistant missionaries, in all 37 persons, have been sent out for the first time; and 5 missionaries and 4 assistant missionaries, in all 9 persons have returned to former fields of labor, making a total of 46 missionary laborers who have been sent into n foreign field during the year.

Thirty-four persons, 11 males and 23 females, have been appointed by the committee since the last meeting of the board, and there are now under appointment in this country 14 males and 13 females, in all 27 persons, expecting to take their departure as soon as their arrangements shall have been completed. Of these 27, 3, namely, 5 missionaries and four female assistant missionaries, stand designated to the American field.

There have been published, of the Missionary Herald, 210,000 copies; of the Journal of Missions, 450,000 copies; of the Youth's Dayspring, 602,000 copies, making a total of 1,225,000 copies of the three monthly publications—being an average of 1004,333 copies per month. Of the annual report there were published, as usual, 5000 copies; of Dr. Riddle's sermons, 5000, of different tracts, 14,600; of maps and illustrations, 1500.

The board has 26 missions, 111 stations, and 145 outstations; 136 ordained missionaries, including 7 physicians; 461 laborers, including 212 females, have been sent from this country; 245 native assistants are employed; 11 printing establishments are connected with missions, which last year printed 52225,203 pages, making 922,595,924 pages from the beginning; number of churches, 93; church members, 24 386, of whom 1276 were added during the past year; number of seminaries and schools, 803, of which 441 are supported by the Hawiian Government; number of scholars, 23,564.

NEW ORLEANS AND JACKSON RAILROAD.—We understand that, yesterday, eight miles of the New Orleans and Jackson Railroad, immediately on this side of the plantation of Hon. D. F. Kenner, were let out on contract to Messrs. John Coleman and P. O'Shaugnessy. When the contracts are given into the hands of such reliable and responsible gentlemen, the public have the best guaranty of the practicability of the road and of the intelligence and energy of the Directory. Whatever Messrs. Coleman and O'Shaugnessy (known for fifteen years in this city as faithful and scrupulously exact contractors) undertake, they will do.

GUANO.—The NewYork Mirror remarks that if the positions in Mr. Webster's great letter on the guano question can be maintained, the agricultural interests of the country will bless him for evermore. "The deposits of the rich manure, which have been accumulating since the flood, are said to be in some places six hundred feet in depth—and the mines may be considered as inexhaustible. It opens not only a new field of commerce, but will increase the value of every foot of land, on Long Island for instance, twenty-five per cent. The subject, dirty as it sounds, absolutely rises into sublimity when considered in all its relations to commerce and agriculture, to say nothing of politics. Cargoes of guano can be landed on Long Island, at an expense of but little above the cost of city manure; and the wheat crops under its quickening influence, will throw our farmers into ecstacies."

AMERICAN MUSICAL FUND SOCIETY.—The American Musical Fund Society of NewYork, have recently issued a circular to the press of the United States. It states that three years since the society was chartered for the purpose of sustaining unfortunate musicians by relief drawn from a common fund. The charter granted them allows operations to commence only after $20,000 have been amassed, the interest of which, together with the subscription of members, is to go to sick and distressed musicians, to support their destitute widows and educate their needy orphans. Only $6000 have as yet been raised, of which more than one-half has been the gift of women, viz: Madame Otto Goldschmidt $2000, Mrs. Frances Anne Kemble $1000, and Miss Catherine Hays $200. The object of the circular is to extend the knowledge of the existence of such a society, to induce all musicians to become members, and to invite into that avenue the charities of the sick and liberal.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Athens Circuit, Ala. Conf.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: In the year 1850 this circuit was blessed with a gracious revival of religion. Rev. C. S. Hurt labored with this people. The year 1851 was followed by another revival, under Rev. D. B. Lyne. The labors of the present year have not been in vain. Our third quarterly meeting was held at Pleasant Hill on the second Sabbath in August. It resulted in the conversion of thirty-four souls, and thirty-three accessions to the Church.

We held a meeting at Pleasant Grove Church, which continued eight days; had twelve conversions and eleven accessions. We have just closed a meeting in the neighborhood of Old Hamilton. It is in the fork of the Tombeekbee and Buttahatchie rivers. The Lord was with us in his convicting and converting power. We organized a society numbering twenty-three. To God be all the glory. THOS. W. MANNING.

Butler Circuit, Ala. Conf.

DEAR BROTHER: Last Saturday we commenced our third quarterly meeting for this Butler Circuit, at this place, and have had conversions daily up to this time. The meeting was characterized by clear, satisfactory conversions. We have had added thirty-nine up to date, all whites, and the meeting last night was more powerful than any we have had. Among this number are some young men who promise much to the Church. Bro. Campbell, our circuit preacher, is much encouraged. We have had good help from Brothers Dunlap and Killough. I leave this morning, with Dr. Dunlap, for his quarterly meeting, and the other brethren will continue this. J. T. HEARD.

The Rev. J. W. Ellis writes, on the 6th instant:

"We have had some good meeting. At one just closed last Friday night, of a week's continuance, we had some fifteen or seventeen conversions and twenty-two accessions; sixteen blacks and six whites."

Summerfield District, Ala. Conf.

The Presiding Elder, Rev. F. G. Ferguson, writes of "some glorious meetings" on his work.

Tuscaloosa, Ala. Conf.

God has graciously revived His work in this place of late. The Church has been greatly refreshed, and some thirty souls have professed to find peace with God. The country around is in a general revival.

White Water Mission, Ala. Conf.

DEAR BROTHER: I hasten to say that the Lord of Missions has greatly blessed us on this mission.

I appointed, at a new place, a three or four days' meeting, to commence Saturday before the fifth Sunday in August, but by reason of hard rain and high water I was prevented from getting there until Tuesday night; but the local brethren went to work as though they felt that God had called them to warn sinners to flee the wrath to come; and they continued the meeting until I got to their help. But the best of all, the Lord had come to their help.

We continued the meeting for eleven days, and at the close there was an increase of interest generally. When we closed there were about twenty-five or thirty conversions, and some thirty mourners at the altar: thirty-eight whites and four blacks received into the Church. During the last five weeks I have received on the mission fifty-three members. To God be all the praise. Amen.

JOHN W. BROXSON.

Sept. 8, 1852.

Madison Mission, La. Conf.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: Since my last report of our work we have had six accessions and eighty-four baptized. We preach on seven plantations, and altogether I think the mission in a progressive condition. In the circuit there is perhaps a better state of things than ever has been. During the summer we labored long and hard to get up what we call here a basket meeting, and succeeded in making preparations for such a meeting, to commence at Richmond on the 3d of September, with the sure promise of the assistance of ministers from abroad. But the first day, instead of being beautiful, as we had hoped and prayed for it to be, to the disappointment of every heart, it was gloomy and raining, and nature seemed to say that you shall not have a meeting. Saturday, however, assumed quite a different appearance; the clouds all gone, the morning was serene and calm, and the cooling breezes seemed to say the clouds of yesterday were only sent to try your faith. The only fear now was, Can the preachers come? We went to church: nine, ten, and half past ten o'clock came, and the people were coming before we had any news of the preachers' coming. Just at this time we were entirely relieved by the presence of Dr. S. W. Spear, of Natchez, and Rev. C. K. Marshall, of Vicksburg, and I never saw preachers come to a meeting more in the spirit of preaching. During Saturday and Sunday they preached eight sermons—long, earnest, soul-stirring sermons. I say long, not that any body's patience was wearied, but because I believe the shortest one was a little over an hour long. The meeting was well attended; congregations unusually large for this country.

Doubtless by this time you would like to know the number of accessions and conversions. There were no accessions and conversions; but there is such an interest manifested on this subject, and such a waking up, that I do not know but what we are justified in saying that the mass is converted. We may be a little enthusiastic, but we expect soon to have a meeting at this place, at which we do hope that these awakenings will be ripened into sincere repentance, implicit faith and Bible conversions.

CASE OF DR. KING.—The London Standard of the 24th says: "From Athens, of 10th instant, we learn that the American Embassador to the Sublime Porte had visited Athens to inquire into the affair of the Missionary, King, who was said to be ill-treated in Greece; when, after having examined the official papers relative to the matter, he found that Mr. King had been tried by the laws of Greece, which he was bound to respect, as he was those of his own country, the Embassador appeared quite satisfied. He sailed from the Piræus for Trieste on the 9th."

METHODIST PRESS.

EDITORIAL COURTESY.—The Richmond and Nashville Advocates are settling a point in the code. He of Nashville admitted an incog. correspondent to make insinuations against him of Richmond, as to his soundness upon good old Methodism, (mind the old) based upon certain editorials which, in the opinion of Incog., smacked of lay delegation and agitation. Incog. calls on him to clear himself. Dr. Lee refuses to plead at that bar. Incidentally, however, he puts forth the following:

"We believe Methodism to be 'radically right,' but not perfect. We wish it to 'go on unto perfection;' and earnestly desire to have a hand in helping it to 'apprehend that for which it was apprehended of Christ,' and to accomplish its destiny of 'glory and honor' in the earth. It shall not stagnate if we can stir it into life. If it prefers things old and good, but passive, to things new, good, useful and glorious; or if it differs with us, or we with it, we shall regret the difference, but will not dissolve our connection with it. No. Sin or death are the only gates of egress from Methodism to us; at least so we think now, and have thought for many years."

DEATH OF MINISTERS.—The Christian Advocate and Journal, in an eloquent editorial on the subject, remarks that since the late sessions of the New York and New York E. Conferences, "not less than four ministers belonging to these bodies have gone down to the grave." And they men of mark, too. Sorrow upon sorrow afflicts the heart of the Church. Another good name has been added to the list. Our exchanges inform us that Rev. W. M. Bangs, son of Dr. N. Bangs, and 20 years an itinerant preacher, died on the 5th inst. In harmony with these tidings, the editor indulges in reflections upon the dignity and grandeur of the ministerial calling:

"Of all who toil through the years of this pilgrimage, no man's work has the permanent character of the minister's. The labor of the husbandman ends with the consumption of the produce of his land, and each succeeding harvest perishes in the using. The produce of mechanical skill, for the most part, have but a fleeting existence. The wear and rust of years destroy them all. Raphael's paintings fade on the rotting canvass, and even the sculptured glory of Praxiteles is lost in the mutilated forms of what once only wanted breath. Apelles boasted that he painted for eternity. It was a bold figure of speech that far outstripped the sobriety of truth, for no mortal eye for long centuries has seen a line of his pencil. But that same empty boast, with slight modification, is but the plain literal truth concerning the minister's work. He labors for eternity. His instrument and subject alike immortal. The first is the word of God that abideth for ever, and the last is that immaterial, thinking, feeling, indescribable something, that shall survive the general conflagration itself. He labors for the salvation of immortal spirits. He gives up his life on earth to the toil of preparing men for a life in Heaven—a life so holy, so happy, and so long, that in the attempt to think of it, the stoutest intellect becomes bewildered, and even the apostolic pen, piles word upon word, until the description swells to an untranslatable climax, which is set down in our English to 'an far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory.'"

HEAD THE EARTH.—A few weeks ago we published the memoir of Bishop McKendree, by Prof. Larrabee. His representation of him on his appearance in Baltimore in 1808, when he was elected Bishop, has been corrected by an old friend, Rev. L. Garrett, of Mississippi. Prof. L. has the backswoods P. Elder, appearing "a stranger" and in rustic garb, rather affecting awkardness for the sake of effect. The Holston Advocate, for the truth of history, confronts the statements, and remarks:

"The whole story of the 'Light street Church affair,' as told by the Professor, represents McKendree as really 'awkward' and un-genteel, which the whole history of the man, from his youth, contradicts: or as descending below the dignity of a Christian minister, to dabble in clerical waters for a time, that he might, by a contrast of which he knew himself capable, storm a citadel and throw off its guard by a little contemptible trickery on the part of a Christian minister, an August Christian assembly. Is it not enough that the 'treasure' is placed in 'earthen vessels,' without making the 'vessels' to appear in the most awkward and un-genteel forms!"

THE DOUAY BIBLE.—The Romanists are hard to suit in a Bible. The Commissioners who would introduce it into public schools know this. The Protestant Bible is rejected, and when asked to propose a substitute, the best offer Romanists make is the Douay! The introduction of this version into the common schools of Cincinnati is now before that people, and the Western Christian Advocate takes occasion to make a few remarks upon it, showing it to be worse than none at all. This, doubtless, is what the Papists expect, and the matter will end in no Bible.

"The Council of Trent forbade the circulation of Scripture in the vernacular tongues for the masses. They were forbidden to be published without notes; and even then no Romanist was allowed to read them without a written permission from the Bishop, at the recommendation of the priest. The notes of the Douay Bible and Rhemish Testament were among the most flagitious, immoral, revolutionary, and murderous, perhaps, ever put to print. When the Pope excommunicated Henry VIII and Elizabeth, absolved their subjects from the oath of allegiance, and invited afterward Philip II., of Spain, to take possession of the British crown, the Douay Bible was printed, teaching the doctrines contained in the bulls of excommunication. The Spanish armada was set on foot for this purpose; and thus, by the Spanish fleet and the Douay notes, England was to be transferred to the dominion of the Roman Catholic Philip. This design is avowed by the most important Popish journal, edited by Dr. Wiseman, Mr. O'Connell, and Mr. Quin, in 1836, in the following words:

"'The notes of the New Testament were undoubtedly intended to prepare the public mind for the invasion meditated by Philip II—the armada. They were in unison with the celebrated sentence and declaration of Pope Sixtus, who designated Elizabeth as an illegitimate daughter of Henry VIII—as a usurper and unjust ruler, who ought to be deposed; and as a heretic and schismatic, whom it was not only lawful, but commendable to destroy.'"

THE STEAMSHIP ATLANTIC.—The four last voyages of the steamship Atlantic have been made in the following time: May 29, to Liverpool, 10 days, 2 hours and 30 minutes; return voyage, 10 days and 3 hours; July 24, to Liverpool, 10 days and 15 minutes; return voyage, 10 days, 7 hours, and 15 minutes. No other steamer has ever made four such successive voyages.

PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

PARIS, August 19, 1852.

The measures of persecution which threatened the Wesleyan Methodists in this city, as I mentioned at the close of my last letter, have not been put into execution. It seems that when the authorities sent the prohibition to preach to Dr. Cook and to his colleague, the Rev. C. de Boinville, they forgot that these two ministers had English audiences as well as French, and when they found this out, unwilling to quarrel with the English, they thought it best to let the matter drop without enforcing their orders. Our meetings have not therefore been once interrupted, and they are, if anything, more numerously attended than before. We do not, however, know whether this will last long. One of the employees at the Prefecture de police told me a few days ago that the minister of police was determined to have no foreigners preaching in France. How he will manage to stop the hundreds that are now officiating here, I cannot tell; we are determined to resist to the last, and we know that God is on our side.

In this emergency the Paris Committee of the Evangelical Alliance have resolved to take up the cases of persecution that may occur in this country, and to act as circumstances will direct. Should the fight be engaged, we have no doubt that sooner or later we shall gain the victory. "En avant," therefore.

All the ministers of the President seem to be agreed on the crusade which is beginning against religious liberty, and they have indeed thrown behind them, as not deserving their notice, the fine programme of freedom of worship which was laid down by the Emperor Napoleon, and which I mentioned some months ago. A very extraordinary instance of this has just taken place. A young Protestant named, if I mistake not, Perrot, having lately taken his degrees, asked to be admitted as a candidate to the Normal School, where are formed all the Professors of our Colleges and of the University. This was refused to him for the sole reason that he was a Protestant. He complained at once of this injustice, the Consistories of the Paris Lutheran and Reformed Churches met, as well as the Supreme Council of the Reformed Churches, and the President of the latter body, Admiral Baudin, a zealous Protestant, went to see, on the subject, the Minister of Public Instruction and Worship, Mr. Fortoul. "The thing is quite decided," answered the Minister, "we shall not hearken to anything (nous verons intraitables); none but Catholics shall be eligible to the Normal School; neither Jews nor Protestants need apply." On hearing this, the Admiral declared that the Protestants would not quietly submit to such an infringement to their rights, and that they would, if necessary, agitate the whole country. The Minister then changed his tone a little, and said he would do anything to please the Admiral, and would think over the matter again. The consequence was that a counsel of the Ministers was convened that very evening, the obnoxious restriction was withdrawn, and next morning the Moniteur announced that among the young men allowed to be candidates to the Normal Schools, there were four Protestants and one Jew. Mr. Perrot received an official letter informing him that he was admitted, and in order to make it appear that this decision had not been taken in consequence of Admiral Baudin's energy, the letter was antedated three or four days back. This I know to be a fact! Can one imagine a greater absence of all principles? Let me remark that if we have gained our point, it is not because our rights were acknowledged, but because M. Fortoul wished to please an influential gentleman.

The sequel to this scandalous affair is rather amusing. I have said that Mr. Perrot had just finished his college studies. Last week, at the annual examination of the Paris Colleges, he obtained the first prize or prize of honor, and, according to custom, this prize was handed down to him by Mr. Fortoul himself, who had, at the same time to give him a kiss. (That was something like Judas's kiss, said a friend of mine). In the evening the annual dinner given by the Minister of Instruction to the dignitaries of the University, came off, and as it is usual for the young man who has borne away the prize of honor to be invited, Mr. Perrot was invited, received the honors of the evening, and was actually placed at table between the Minister himself and the nuntio of the Pope!

Another case of oppression and persecution by the authorities is that which has taken place at Estissac. It will be remembered (see No. 72 of the Advocate) that Estissac is a small village near Troyes, where one-third of the inhabitants became Protestant last year. About two months ago some agents of police and gendarmes arrived and ordered the sermonizing (a term of contempt to designate the Protestant service) to be stopped immediately. Of course, it was impossible to bow before such iniquity. Active complaints were made to the Minister of Public Instruction and Worship. The general Consistory of Meaux and Admiral Baudin exerted their influence. But it was in vain. The trial took place day before yesterday. The two ministers who had preached at Estissac were accused of having had political motives for holding Protestant meetings, and they were condemned to a fine, although some of the witnesses, and amongst others a police agent, declared that they had always been present to the meetings and had never heard a single political allusion. One of the Paris pastors, present at the trial, told me this morning the Jesuits had so much power in the place that the jury and judges dared not act otherwise, although the trial evidently ought to have led to an acquittal. The Protestants have appealed against this decision, and the affair will come before the Cour de Cassation, we shall soon know with what results.

Of course, the daily press care very little about what they would call this religious controversy. For them the great event of the day is the Paris fetes, which took place on Sunday last, in honor of the Emperor's birth day. Preparations had been made on the largest scale. The Place de la Concorde, for instance, was ornamented with eighty-six immense poles (one for every department of France) covered with wreaths and illuminated lamps. Fifty-two fountains had been placed in the Avenue de Champs Elysees, but they were not finished on account of a strike of the operatives, which delayed the works for two days, so that after working all the Sunday morning, nearly one-half the fountains could not play, when the evening came, and a few were scarcely illuminated at all. Still the fete was splendid in many respects, and I was, unwillingly, a spectator of a great part of it, in consequence of the Wesleyan Chapel and my residence being situated in the very midst of the places chosen for the principal part of the exhibition. That in the morning, whilst going to the Sabbath school, I had to pass along the Avenue where the whole of the Paris National Guards were waiting for the President to review them and to give them their new standards. I saw the President himself come out of the church of the Magdeleine, with the whole of his staff in full uniform, the magistrates in their red gowns, the Professors of the University in their black gowns, and many senators and deputies in full dress. It was a very showy sight indeed, but it made my heart sad to think of such a desecration of the Sabbath. The President looked remarkably well and in good spirits. Whilst he advanced slowly on horseback, he smiled and laughed repeatedly and bowed now and then, when the people cheered him. Amidst a great deal of noise I could hear no other cry but that of "Vive Napoleon!"

In the evening, as I came out of the Chapel with two ladies, I had to go through the Place de la Concorde, where the fireworks were to be let off. They began just as we arrived, and the crowd became so great that we found it impossible to advance. The fireworks were certainly splendid. They were in fact the best part of the whole programme, but I shall not attempt to describe them, having little or no imagination, and being unacquainted with technical terms.

When they were over, the rush was great still, so much so that we saw five women fainted around us, and the rumor says that there were forty that night who were carried away insensible, and that one woman and some children were crushed to death. I do not know whether this be true or not, but it is not unlikely. We took more than two hours and a half to get home, though the distance was not quite two miles, and the next day I heard a man say that he would not have consented to go that distance for ten thousand francs. A morning paper says that nearly a million of persons were met together on that occasion.

In connection with this national fete, Louis Napoleon has given marriage portions of five thousand francs each to fourteen couples who were married on the 14th. One of the daily papers says that when the intention of the Prince was made known, applications to no fewer than 12,797 persons were sent in in the course of eight days. The Moniteur announced on the morning of the 15th that numerous graces were granted to political offenders by the President, in memory of the fete. The names of the persons who have thus been liberated have not yet been made known.

The elections of general Counsellors in the various departments of France are just over. Political agitation has been succeeded by such a disgust for political life, that very few electors care to vote, especially as some of the candidates have not been allowed to come forward. The result has been that in many cases the elections have been void, because less than one-fourth of the electors had voted. Some persons are pleased at this; they say that the people will be happier in proportion as they meddle less with politics. Others are quite indignant, declaring that so much unconcern on the part of the electors is shameful.

The organization of the Methodist in France into a separate Conference, is now a settled thing. I do not, however, yet know the conditions on which the separation has been effected. The first Annual Conference will be held next month. I shall then be able to write all about it.

I leave to your London correspondent all the news relative to the British Conference held in Sheffield, and to the opening of a new mission in China. I shall only say that Rev. Mr. Beach, one of the young men who are to be signed for that Mission, has been stationed in Paris during the last year, and I have had the pleasure of residing under the same roof as himself. He is devoted to God and to the Chinese, and I doubt not that he will make an excellent Missionary. He leaves Paris with the regrets of his congregation, and their best wishes for his welfare and success.

A FRATERNAL CONTRAST.—A score of years ago or more, there were two brothers, eminent for their varied learning, for subtle and capacious intellect, for love of truth, and many gentle and zealous virtues, who lived together in the University of Oxford. One was John Henry Newman, and the other Francis. The one ranks to-day—and will more memorably hereafter—as very first rank of the divines of the Roman Catholic Church; the other is accounted one of the most able and deadly enemies of revealed religion in Europe.

THE FLORIDA INDIANS.—A correspondent of the New York Express, writing from Jacksonville, Fla., under date of 3d instant, says:

Gen. Hopkins has recently returned to his post at Pilatka from Fort Myers, whither he had been to "talk" with Billy Bowlegs, the Chief of the remnant of the Seminole tribe, now remaining within the limits of this State. His interview with Billy was highly satisfactory, and leads us to hope that before many months shall have passed, the wily Chief and his tribe will be safely and comfortably quartered in the Far West. Gen. Hopkins informed Billy that seventy days would be allowed him to make up his mind as to what course he may see proper to pursue at the expiration of which he should be with us fully prepared to compel his emigration. Bowlegs, it is said, said that as for himself he was perfectly willing to go, as much as he regretted to leave the graves of his fathers—the grounds on which his forefathers have so freely spilt—but he feared he should not be able to obtain the consent of his sisters and many of his people. He said, too, that the land which his people now occupied was given to them by Gen. Worth by treaty. Gen. Hopkins informed him that General Worth had no right to give him the lands; that it never was given to him by their Great Father and his Chief at Washington. Billy then said that if he must go he would try and make his people consent to do so without fighting, fighting to be done. The General and Billy have agreed to meet again at the expiration of seventy days, when it is thought the Indians will make a virtue of necessity, and consent to bid a final adieu to the "land of flowers"—the land they love so well.

QUININE.—"Let me here mention," says the Paris correspondent of the Washington Intelligencer, "a fact which has just fallen beneath my eye, of an attempt being made by the Dutch in their East India possessions to avert from the medical world the love with which at present it is seriously threatened, in the disappearance of the materia medica of the quinquina, or Peruvian bark, from which quinine is obtained, the potent febrifuge. A letter from Batavia, (Island of Java,) dated the 5th of May, says upon this subject":

"The project, long since conceived by the Dutch Government, of attempting the cultivation at Batavia of the tree from which Peruvian bark is obtained, has been realized. The ship Prince Frederick has just arrived at Vera Cruz, bringing a great number of quinquina trees, particularly of the species called cinchona officinalis, or genuine royal. These plants have been carefully selected in Mexico, by the distinguished botanist Miquel, professor in the university of Leyden, who has himself superintended with the trees, and will superintend the planting and acclimation of them."

CHRISTIANS AT JERUSALEM.—Bayard Taylor draws a sorry picture of the Christians residing at Jerusalem, among whom there are nineteen sects. These sects, he says, are so quarrelsome, that a Turkish policeman is always stationed in the Holy Sepulchre, to prevent bloody conflicts. Mr. Taylor says: "Whatever good the various missionaries may accomplish, Jerusalem is the last place in the world where an intelligent heathen would be converted to Christianity. Were I cast here, ignorant of my own religion, and were I to compare the lives and characters of the different sects as the means of making my choice—in the absence of any other guide—I should at once choose Mahometanism."

Obituary.

Died—In Benton, Miss., July 16, 1852, Dr. M. Smith. Bro. Smith was born in Cumberland county, Va., Oct. 27, 1814, professed religion in 1836, and joined the M. E. Church, of which he remained a firm and useful member till removed by death to his reward in heaven.

He was an amiable man, an humble Christian, an affectionate husband and kind father. Throughout the subject of protracted affliction, which he bore with Christian fortitude and resignation, and when he came to the Valley of Death he was calm and peaceful.

On Jesus' breast he leaned his head,
And breathed his life out sweetly there.

May heaven bless and protect his bereaved family.

Brother McTyeire: Our brother, Sam'l Owen, of the Louisiana Annual Conference, buried his wife, Rachel, on yesterday. She died at her mother's, on the 7th, after a most painful affliction. Such was the constant and severe suffering for five days, that her debilitated frame was incapable of reaction after it had subsided, and she slept in peace with her new born infant by her side. Sister Owen had been from childhood pious, and possessing a temper of much natural amiability, united to her husband a constant comfortor. Her pure and spotless life gives to her relatives and sorrowing friends the only hope worth living for—that of living and meeting beyond the grave, where pains and sorrow never come. Your brother,

W. H. Crenshaw.

General Intelligence.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival Thursday of the steamer Mexico, Capt. Hines, we have received (la)weston papers to the 15th inst. and our exchanges from the interior.

The Extra Session.—The Indianola Bulletin has numerous communications, all in favor of an extra session of the legislature. The editor is fully persuaded that nine-tenths of the people of Texas desire that measure, in which opinion we are inclined to concur. He believes that all the papers in Eastern Texas, except, perhaps, the Marshal Republican, are advocating it; and besides, numerous meetings have passed resolutions to the same effect.

Senator Dead.—We notice the death of Mr. John Rusenbach, Senator from Uuxter county.

Coal Mine Discovered.—The Legrange monument says that McCashan, of that place, has discovered a coal mine within half a mile of Legrange, which, from the samples that have been examined and tried, it is thought will produce coal of an excellent quality. The mine is believed to be very extensive.

The editor of the Houston Telegraph says he examined specimens spoken of, years ago, and that the discovery is valuable.

The Rivers.—Latest accounts still represent the Brazos as still fully in good navigable order.

New Species of Cotton.—The San Antonio Ledger says that Major Neighbors has now in a state of maturity a species known as the rattoon cotton, a re-spring from the plant of last year; and is confident that the neighborhood of San Antonio is equal, and in many respects superior, to other portions of the State for the cultivation of the plant.

Light-House at Indianola.—The Bulletin announces the completion of the light-house at the Pass. It can be seen twenty miles at night.

Attorney General.—The Indianola Bulletin says there is no doubt about the election of Jennings as Attorney General.

Wrecked.—The brig Narraquaqua, from Mains, with a cargo of lime, was wrecked in attempting to cross Galveston bar on the 4th inst. Vessel and cargo a total loss.

Railroad Meeting.—A large and enthusiastic railroad meeting was held at Latirange, on the 30th ult.

The Crops.

The Houston Telegraph says: "We are sorry to announce that the cotton worm has commenced its ravages in several plantations in the bottom lands, and has already greatly injured the crops. The worm first made its appearance about three weeks since, and as dry weather set in soon after, it was hoped that the chrysalis would be destroyed, and the crop would mature without serious injury. But, unfortunately, rains have again set in, and the worms have appeared in vast numbers. On the plantation of Colonel Groce, they had ravaged a large field of cotton a few days since; and on the plantations in the bottom they were rapidly extending their ravages, thus far, have been timitted to the bottom lands that were planted after the overflow, in the spring. The cotton in the uplands has not yet been injured to any considerable extent, and, if the weather should be favorable, the planters will yet secure a full crop upon such lands. The cotton in the bottoms is now backward, but very few bolls have yet been opened, and if the rains should continue, scarcely one-third of a crop can be made. The crop on the upland will, however, probably be twice as great as the crop of last year."

The crop of apples in the Red River counties this year has been very abundant. Some of these apples, it is said, compare favorably in size and flavor with the best varieties cultivated in the Middle and Western States.

The editor of the Victoria Advocate has lately visited Jackson county, and says the worms have entirely disappeared, after having done but slight injury to the cotton. He estimates the yield in that county at from one bale to a bale and a half to the acre.

From Santa Fe.

We take from the San Antonio Texan of the 2d inst., the following summary of news from Santa Fe, El Paso, and Chihuahua:

Capt. Wallace arrived on last Sunday evening, nineteen days from El Paso, bringing the mail from that place and Santa Fe, also letters from Chihuahua. The following gentlemen came as passengers:

Captain A. W. Bowman, and Dr. Hammond, U. S. A., Messrs. Ed. Dwyer, C. W. Howard, and J. Charles Hart.

By this arrival we received the Santa Fe Gazette of June 26, for which we are indebted to the kindness of Mr. Smith, of El Paso.

The Gazette contains but little news of importance. It announces that a farm has been opened in the vicinity of Fort Webster, near the Copper Mines, which, it is expected, will in a short time become a government farm. The valleys of the Mimbres and Gila are said to contain very fertile country.

The Gila and Mescalern Apaches have expressed a desire to make a treaty of peace.

The 5 cents says St. John's day (24th of June) was celebrated by a Masonic procession, general exhibition of stock, and extensive horse-racing during the day and dancing at night. The editor is of opinion that if St. John is the patron of all the ceremonies, he must be in a bad way for exhibitions, that some people thought Saint John was Saint Bacchus at least cousine-german.

Some two or three burglaries had occurred during the week preceding the 26th of June.

Jesus Lobo, a Mexican gentleman from Chihuahua, has commenced the operation of sinking an artesian well a mile south of Santa Fe, the first effort of the kind in the territory. The apparatus was manufactured in Santa Fe. He bore twenty-feet in a single day.

The precarious titles by which lands are held in New Mexico are becoming the cause of much bickering and litigation, which bids fair to grow worse and lead to serious consequences. Congress is asked to send a land commissioner to settle and adjust the land titles in that territory. The Circuit Court for the First Judicial District, Judge Pope presiding, was in session, and had sufficient business before it to keep it for three weeks.

A considerable number of Kossuth hats have found their way to Santa Fe, and the Gazette says the wearers have themselves considerably upon their own importance.

Mr. Hart, an American residing near El Paso, has constructed a dam upon the Rio Grande, which the Mexicans affirm is of serious detriment to them in times of low water. It is thought this matter, small as it is, will become a national affair. Doubtful, unless it can be shown that Congress are at stake.

Trade at El Passo is dull and money scarce. The Indians are still troublesome in the vicinity. They have taken Magoffin's, upper ranch, drove off his stock, shot down the pecans and camped in the fields.

The San Antonio Ledger says there are now about four hundred thousand dollars' worth of goods at El Paso, or at Magoffinsville, the village on the American side of the Pass, while the goods now on the way there must amount in value to eighty or a hundred thousand dollars more. These goods were destined for the Chihuahua trade; but Gen. Trias, the Mexican Commandant there, has suddenly enforced the Mexican tariff, which will probably prove a death-blow to that trade, for the present. Heretofore, the duty has been three cents per vara, or Mexican yard of thirty-three and one-third inches, for admission into the territory, and two cents more for interior transportation; making in all, a duty of five cents per yard for domestics, which one would suppose quite enough. But the tariff now enforced amounts to nine cents. There is, therefore, no alternative, but that the large amount of goods at the Pass must either remain unsold for a long time, or be smuggled over. The editor of the Ledger is of opinion that it is the object of the Mexican government to cut off all trade and intercourse with the United States.

Chihuahua.—A letter from Chihuahua, of July 30th, says considerable excitement exists there in consequence of some change or derangement of the revenue regulations, which has grown out of a controversy or some ill feeling existing between Gov. Cordaro and Gen. Trias, the military commander. Each has his party and backers, and it is believed the difficulty will end in a revolution. The mass are believed to side with Cordaro.

Business is rather dull in consequence of the above state of affairs, but it is believed that trade will revive as soon as the crops begin to come in.

Alabama Statistics.—The Selma Enterprise has compiled some interesting statistics from the census returns of 1850, with regard to the productions and wealth of our State. There are in the State 4,435,614 acres of improved land, the number of acres unimproved is 7,763,007. The cash value of farming implements and machinery $3,126,903. The number of horses in the State is 120,000, and of mules 50,895. The total value of live stock amounts to $21,000,112.

With regard to crops, we find that there were raised that year of wheat 291,044 bushels, and of rye 17,291, of corn 28,754,084, of oats 2,965,097, of rice 2,211,252 lbs., and of tobacco 104,000 lbs. The cotton crop amounted to 564,429 bales of ginned cotton, weighing 400 lbs. each. This puts Alabama at the head of the States so far as the cotton crop is concerned; Georgia being next, which is set down at 496,01 bales; and Mississippi third, which raised 484,293. The wool amounted in lbs. to 657,118. Of peas and beans there were produced 892,701 bushels; of Irish potatoes, 246,000 bushels; of sweet, 5,475,274; of barley, 3058, and of buckwheat, 348 bushels. The value of orchard products was 15,408, and of markets and gardens $1,821; of butter 4,098,711, and of cheese, 31,112 lbs. were made. The crops of hay, clover and other grasses, hops, hemp, flax, sugar and silk are but trifling, and add but little to the wealth of the State. Of molasses there were made 83,428 gallons, and of beeswax and honey 867,521 lbs. The total value of home-made manufactures, $1,021,120; and of animals slaughtered, $4 823,485.

Ship Railroad Across Florida.—The Cotton Plant, published at Washington City, in alluding to the project of a ship canal across the Peninsula of Florida, suggests, as it thinks, a better and more economical mode of connecting the Atlantic and Gulf, viz: by a ship railroad in every dock-yard in the world, remarks the editor, it is usual to elevate on stocks the largest sized ships and steamers for repairs; a vessel, indeed, of any tonnage, can be elevated to any required height. On canals, it is known, locks have been successfully used to take vessels from one ascertained level and place them on another, higher or lower; and this being done, the vessels are towed or transported on their bottoms to any distance by horse or steam power. It may, therefore, be assumed, that any vessel can be raised to any desired elevation—that she can be lowered in the same ratio—that she can be safely transported. Then, why not transport vessels on railroads constructed for the purpose?

Clock Making.—Some idea of the extent to which clock making is carried on in Connecticut, may be formed from the fact that in the town of Bristol alone, a capital of three hundred thousand dollars is invested in the manufacture of clocks. The number of this description of time pieces annually finished is one hundred and fifty-thousand. One hundred samples of inside work, in addition, are turned out and sent to other factories for completion—that is, to be supplied with cases, and other external embellishment. Between three and four hundred hands are employed in the different establishments, besides a large number of females who do the ornamental part of the work, such as painting, etc. Other flourishing factories exist in various parts of the State, equally worthy of notice; particularly of Terryville, Plymouth and Litchfield.

Terrible Affair at Smyrna.—Letters from Smyrna, of the 20th ult., give an account of a terrible disaster which occurred at Adalia some days before. A furious wolf suddenly appeared in the midst of the market place, and bit several persons most severely; but, taking flight at the cries which arose on all sides, he jumped over a wall, and got into a large garden where several hundred persons, who had come to the town on account of the silk crop, were sleeping in the open air. Here to wounded one hundred and twenty-eight persons, but being again frightened away by the cries of the people, he got into a sheepfold, where he killed eighty-five sheep, and wounded seventy-five. Unfortunately, the Governor had caused the whole population to be disarmed a few days before, so that the unfortunate people were without means of defence: but on the following day arms were distributed, and the wolf killed. According to the report of the physician of the place, the wounds inflicted by the animal are hideous, but the most horrible circumstance in this disaster is, that several of the wounded have already died of hydrophobia, so that the whole population is in the utmost consternation.

The Coal Trade.—As a new feature in the Cumberland coal trade, the Alexandria Gazette says that there is now at NewYork a vessel from Genoa waiting for a cargo of this coal for the use of the Sardinian government.

The Freshet in South Carolina.—The Charleston Courier contains still further accounts of the disastrous effects of the recent freshets. Along the Santee, the loss is almost beyond calculation.

Bell Casting in Texas.—Jose Maren Gomez, near San Antonio, has succeeded in casting a copper bell weighing twelve hundred and fifty pounds. The casting was made by digging a hole in the ground, and notwithstanding the disadvantages of this primitive operation, it is said to be very perfect.

Fire at Griffen, Ga.—A fire broke out in the Collegiate Seminary, at Griffin, Ga., on the night of the 5th instant, and the flames had made so much progress before the discovery, that the building, with nearly all its contents, was consumed. All the philosophical and chemical apparatus, and two fine pianos were destroyed.

Jews in Power.—M. Achilli Fould, who has been restored (with promotion) to the French Ministry recently, is a Jew or of Jewish descent. It is peculiar that three gentlemen of "the Hebrew persuasion"—Mr. D'Israeli, Baron Rothschild, and M. Fould, should have so much of the affairs of Christendom at their disposal; and quite appropriately, it happens, through the money bags: the Baron as lender of loans, Dizzy as Chancellor of the Exchequer, Fould as Finance Minister of France.

Guano.—The London Farmers' Magazine, on agricultural journal of high character, has given its opinion, in direct opposition to the use of guano. While it believes that it may be a temporary benefit, it denies that it is a permanent fertilizer, and these opinions are deductions from actual experiments made by the editor; he even goes so far as to say that the use of guano is positively injurious, and highly detrimental in nine out of ten cases where it is applied. The Magazine stands almost alone in this opinion.

American and English Machines.—The Edinburgh Review, in a late article on agriculture, claims for Great Britain the original invention of the reaping machines, threshing machines, and all other agricultural labor-saving machines. It says that Hussey's is only an improvement upon one invented in 1820, by a Scotch Presbyterian named Bell, and that McCormick's is an improvement upon that of an Englishman named Ogle, who invented it in 1822. There are those who think Mr. Bull has rather overshot the mark in bragging, this time.

Terrible Slaughter.—The past summer and autumn in France. The Paris correspondent of the Washington Republic says that 205,000 were slaughtered by poison and wiasiles. Of this number 170,000 were mastiffs, 15,000 poodles, 15,500 hunting dogs, 600 spaniels, 600 lap-dogs, 200 griffons, 185 bull-dogs, and 100 shepherds' dogs. The destruction of cats was also large. The pussies had eaten of the poisoned food thrown into the gutters, and perished, in harmony with the declaration of the proverb, that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. The skins of the dogs, used by cabinet-makers in polishing wood, and by the leather-dressers in the making of purses, bags, slippers, etc., produced no less than a sum of 200,000 francs.

Chinese Thieves.—The expertness of thieves in China is well known; but occasionally they give the outside barbarians some touches of the quality, more astonishing than agreeable. The ship Reliance, of Boston, while lying in the river at Wampoa, had sixty-eight sheets of copper stolen from her bottom below the water line, at such a distance that the theft would not be easily noticed.

Tobacco Crop of Virginia.—The Richmond Times publishes a comparative statement of the tobacco crop of Virginia for this and the preceding year, from which it appears that the total yield of 1851 was 30,154 hhds., whilst for the seven months of the present year the inspections already amount to 47,421 hhds. By October, it is thought, the quantity will reach 50,000 hhds., being an increase of more than fifty per cent. The ruling prices, though not so high as during the two preceding years, have been sufficiently handsome to remunerate the planter.

Women's Rights Convention.

The New York Herald has the following telegraphic report of the proceedings of the Women's Rights Convention, assembled at Syracuse, in that State. It is dated the 8th inst.:

The Temporary Organization, etc.—This Convention met this morning at ten o'clock, at the City Hall, and was temporarily organized by the appointment of Mrs. Paulina B. Davis, of Providence, R. I., as Chairwoman. Miss Lucy Stone, of Mass., was appointed Secretary, and read the call of the meeting, which enjoins upon lovely woman, with her own right hand, to carve out her destiny.

Letters from Mrs. Read, Horace Greeley, etc.—A letter was read from Mrs. Hugo Reed, of England; also a letter from Horace Greeley, which was well received, and in which he said that bread rises at the foundation of all moral and political reform, including Woman's Rights.

The Permanent Officers of the Convention.—A committee was appointed to nominate officers. After due consultation, the committee made the following report:

President—Lucretia Mott, of Pa.

Vice Presidents—Mrs. E. Oakes Smith, of N. Y.; Mrs. Paulina B. Davis, of R. I.; Gerrit Smith, of N. Y.; Mrs. Phemention W. Nichols, of Brattleboro, Vt., and Sarah L. Miller, of Pa.

Secretaries—Susan B. Anthony, of Rochester; Martha B. Wright, of Auburn; S. J. May, and Lydia H. Fowler.

The above report was adopted.

The following were then appointed as a

Business Committee—Mrs. Sarah L. Miller, a mulish doctress; Mrs. C. M. Severance, of Ohio; Miss K. Hunt, Mrs. P. W. Davis, Mrs. Elizabeth W. Phillips, of Syracuse; and Mrs. Rose, of New York.

The President addressed the meeting at some length.

Letters, Sketches, etc.—A letter was received from W. G. Channing, in which he says that a little boy of his died—a very plump, spirited little creature, and therefore he has no heart to write to the Convention in reference to its principles.

In the course of the morning a letter was read from H. W. Johnson, of Suffield, enclosing $10.

A Voice—Is the writer a man or a woman?

Mrs. Davis—A woman.

Mrs. E. Oakes Smith wanted the names plainly given in full to the beginning of our enterprise, we want all our honors and privileges. (Laughter.)

Mr. Wright read the address of the Convention held at Westchester, Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Nichols suggested that in the popular elections were not proper places for the women to vote at, special places and days might be set apart for them.

Business of the Business Committee.—The following resolutions were then submitted by Mrs Rose, on behalf of the Business Committee, as a part of their report:

Inasmuch as Bishop of the Institutions handed down to us from the past, like heirlooms, are felt to be, though time-honored, hindrances to human progress, or to the spread of that Divine truth which gives light to the world—therefore,

Resolved, That it is our duty to examine these institutions and to ascertain which of them are still worthy of honor and support—which we should seek to reform, and which in fact aside.

Resolved, That it is the right of every one holding property as a citizen of the republic, to resist taxation till such time as she is fully represented at the ballot box.

Anti-Tobacco Speech or Opinions.—It was agreed that the discussion should be open to all persons, whether opposed or friendly to this cause.

Appearance of the Assemblage, etc.—The meeting is not as yet so numerous as it was last year, but it is very orderly and enthusiastic. There are very few of the masculine gender present. There are only two Hicksmen, but a great many blooming pretty girls and married women, dressed in the first gloss of fashion. Mrs. Davis and Mrs. Oakes Smith are particularly fine.

The Convention adjourned at five o'clock, till two in the afternoon.

Afternoon Session.

The Convention re-assembled at two o'clock.

Gerrit Smith's Opinion of Women's Rights.—Gerrit Smith reported the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the demand of women is not for privileges, nor favor, nor employment, nor honors—but for rights.

Resolved, That the rights of human beings to their own persons, to their own earnings and property, and to participate in the choice of the civil ruler, are rights which belong as naturally and absolutely to woman as to man.

Resolved, That we beseech woman never to consent to hold any of these great sacred rights in abeyance, nor to consent to exchange any of them for bribes and privileges, or favors and lotteries—however alluring and seductive.

Disorganization of Time-Honored Customs.—Mrs. E. Oakes Smith advocated woman's rights to resist taxation. She said, we convene to disorganize time-honored institutions. Let Syracuse, which has become the Thermopylæ of freedom, be the place for our struggle. Stupified ignorant foreigners may be made voters, but half our population are disfranchised. Mrs. Smith concluded by moving the following:

Whereas, Woman's society is such that human freedom, in its best sources, can only be increased through pecuniary independence; therefore,

Resolved, That every woman should engage herself in literature, the fine arts, professions, agriculture, commerce, or whatsoever honorable occupation is best adapted to her capacities; that she may then remove the stain from labor, and work out her own emancipation.

And further Resolved, That it is the right of every woman holding property, to resist taxation till such time as she is fully represented at the ballot box.

Miss Stone's Opinion of Tobacco.—Lucy Stone made an eloquent speech in favor of Gerrit Smith's resolutions, and expressed her opinion of the law which gives the husband his wife's earnings and property.

Nobility in the Nineteenth Century.—Miss Brown said women were tried by juries of men, not by their own peers. Guilty women cannot get justice in our courts. Ignorant women suffer in silence rather than endure exposure.

Woman Held in the Shackles and Man Uses her Money.—Mrs. Rose said I need know no law. If it did, man could not represent both sexes. If it did not, then both sexes have as much right as man. Woman hugs her shackles. Men admit we are right, and what does woman say? Why, men won't like it. Oppression has become legal and therefore is fashionable. She urged the removal of these unjust laws.

Woman to Remain Women.—Antoinette Brown said women had no part in this Government, for their consent had not been obtained. We would not send women into public life to become men, but to remain women.

A Chair after Lost Garments.—Clementine W. Nichols said she was introduced as a monster of womanhood, a political editor, and that we have hoped that though the rights of woman are now suspended, she will come out and be a live woman yet. We are said to be running after the pants—they have legislated away our skirts, and are about sitting upon them in courts of justice. They must not complain if we give chase after them. Mrs. Nichols concluded by moving the following:

Resolved, That equally involved as they are by the ordinance of God in the natural relations which lies at the base of all society, the sexes are equally entitled by original claim to all the rights which cover means for the discharge of the civilities involved in those relations.

Also Miserable Woman.—Mrs. E. O. Smith moved the following resolution:

Resolved, That as the imbruted slave who is content with his lot and would not be free if he could, (if any such there be,) only gives evidence of the depth of his degradation, so the woman, who is satisfied with her lot or condition, thereby proves that she has all the rights she wants, does but exhibit the enervating effect of the wrongs to which she is subjected.

The Convention then adjourned till this evening.

The hall was crowded to excess during the afternoon.

Evening Session.

On re-assembling, the hall was more crowded than before, and still greater excitement prevailed.

Sympathy.—Mrs. E. O. Smith read a letter of sympathy from John Neal, of Portland.

Gerrit Smith's Rights Interfered With.—Gerrit Smith said the women had taken great liberty with his rights in getting a speech out of him. Woman was not an angel; she was only woman. He did not believe in getting her to Heaven before her time. Give her a fair field, and dislike her when she fails.

Lucy Stone also made an eloquent speech.

Occasion to Taxation.—A address from Mrs. Stanton was read, advocating the refusal to pay taxes.

Mutiny—Punishment of the Mutineer.—J. B. Brigham said all this noise about woman's rights was got up to bring the speakers into public notice.

Herrit Smith cited the Scripture case of Abimelech, but said he should leave Brigham to be slain by—

Lucretia Mott, who castigated Mr. B. severely, and turned the laugh against him. She invited him to discuss this question to-morrow, with Lucy Stone and Antoinette Brown.

Mr. Pruyn and Mr. Hoffett followed on the same side. There were loud calls for Mrs. Lucy Stone, but she only spoke a few words. She said, she lacked faith in God, that made us women, and will keep us such. God's work cannot be blotted out till he is blotted out.

It was intimated that the discussion would be renewed to-morrow, the President having invited any man to meet them in open discussion.

At half-past 10 o'clock, the Convention adjourned till to-morrow morning.

Draining of Harlem Lake.—In No. 9, Vol. 8 Scientific American, we published an illustrated description of the "Leeghwater" steam engine, for pumping the waters out of the tierlaem Lake, in Holland, in order to reclaim the land. This lake covered about 70 square miles, and was 13 feet deep. Three engines of great power were constructed in England in 1846-7, but the pumping was not thoroughly commenced until 1848. The steam engines are nearly through with their labors; the last accounts from Europe stated that much of the bottom was now exposed, and only large pools were left. To lower the lake one inch, four million tons of water had to be lifted. In three years the lake was lowered 7 feet 3 inches; in December, last year, it was lowered to nine feet and a half and now it is nearly dry. It is believed that no less than 700,000 000 tons of water have been lifted by the engines since they commenced operations. This is equal to a mass of water a little more than three square miles, and one hundred feet high, that is, allowing fifteen cubic feet for a ton. We can easily see what an immense amount of labor the engines performed, and what power there is in coal applied in a state of combustion to water, for the purpose of raising water. Each engine was 350 horse power, and so economical were their working qualities, that two and a quarter pounds of Welch coal per hour were all the fuel used for each horse power of an engine. The Dutch engineers were nearly unanimous for using the old-fashioned wind-mills, which had been so often employed for the same purpose, but it was asserted by the two English engineers that the steam-engines could be built and do the work for one half the amount of wind-mills; this has been completely fulfilled. [Scientific American.

Another Victim.—At Cincinnati on Monday, the 6th instant, Mrs. C. Millcham was examined on the charge of lunacy, and sent to the asylum. Some lady who professed to be a medium, induced the poor unfortunate to believe in the humbug of spiritual communicating, until it finally destroyed her reason. And now she is literally mad, and leaves three little children with not a relative in the world to provide and care for them. The Louisville Courier asks, cannot the law be made to reach the knavish trickery, which is thus filling our mad-houses, and making children motherless and homeless?

A Use for Aldermen.—The Providence (R. I.) Journal says the chief use of Aldermen in New York is to let rowdies out of prison. Formerly, when a fellow was nabbed, his confederates sent him a file and chisel; but now they send him an Alderman.

A Numerous Family.—At Lexington, Mass., on the 31st ult., died Mrs. Anna Nevers, aged 96 years. Her descendants were one hundred and thirty-five, viz: thirteen children, sixty-one grand-children, fifty-nine great-grand children, and two of the fifth generation.

The Hon. H. P. Letcher, our late Minister to Mexico, arrived yesterday in the brig Tehuantepec, after a boisterous and disagreeable passage of twenty-six days from Vera Cruz.

The Rot in Cotton.—The Natchez Courier of Tuesday, has the following: "The complaints are extremely general among planters, of great inroads being made upon the crop by the rot. We were shown yesterday, and have now at our office, stalks from a field in this county, where every boll is utterly ruined. Samples from a field below Fort Adams, in Wilkinson county, we have also seen, where a like injury has been sustained. All along the river, up as high as Vicksburg, almost, every overseer gives the same information.

"The rot appears to be confined to plants from the Peruvian. Peruvian, and other seeds of the kind. Plants from the old Mexican seed do not appear to have been affected. The distinction is remarkable. A field of Mexican on the one side of the road will be perfectly free, while a field from fancy seed on the other side will be greatly injured. The injury appears to be accomplished with great rapidity, three or four days serving to blight completely very fair prospects for a full crop. In the plantation that we could name, where ten days since 1000 bales were expected to be made, not more than 1000 will be picked. Planters, whose fields have been effected, speak confidently of a loss of a quarter and a third, and some even of more. If it is any way as general an injury as is supposed, united to the inundation and storm in Georgia, Alabama and South Carolina, the deficit to the expected crop will be great indeed."

New York Fire Department.—Mr. Carson, chief engineer of the New York Fire Department, has just made his annual report, from which we learn that there are in that city 43 engine companies, 24 hose companies, 68,360 feet of hose, 12 hook and ladder companies, and 3 hydrant companies. There are 2731 men in the department. If the companies were all full there would be 3558, being an increase of 1070 since the last annual report. During the year ending on 1st August, 1852, there were 329 fires, by which the loss on buildings amounted to $320,123, and on wares $1,558,581—making the total loss by fire during the twelve month, as nearly as can be ascertained, $1,879,240, being an increase over the loss of last year of $1,171,760, which is attributed by Mr. Carson, in a measure, to the scarcity of water and the severity of the weather last winter, which froze the water in the hydrants. He recommends that hereafter hydrants be stuffed with straw.

The Expected Flying Ship.—Mr. Rufus Porter, the proprietor of the proposed flying ship, reports progress. He says that the most essential part of the apparatus is ready for inflation with air; the longitudinal rods, rudder, pulleys, regulating pipes and saloon wires will soon be adjusted. The engines are superior, both in construction and style. The floor of the saloon is twenty feet in length by six in breadth, and consists of a combination of upward of one hundred and forty pieces of spruce timber, and strong enough to sustain forty persons; yet its entire weight is only twenty-five pounds. The floor of the engine-room is arranged to be independent of the main floor; and the engine and boiler are so arranged as to be at any time instantly disconnected from the wheels and detached from the saloon, should occasion so require, for the purpose of repair or otherwise. If the weather continues favorable, and no unforeseen misfortune prevents, Mr. P. expects to gratify the friends of the project in about two weeks time by a successful demonstration.

Canadian Parliament.—On Monday, the 6th instant, Mr. Brown introduced a bill to abolish the rectories, established by Sir John Colborne. On motion of Mr. McKenzie, an address to the Governor was adopted, calling for a return of the public moneys expended during the last four years, in payment of certain missions to Washington City, Halifax and London. The bill to amend the St. Lawrence and Atlantic Railroad act, was read a second time. The object of this bill is to enable the company to extend the road fourteen or fifteen miles on the United States side of the line; but it is provided that neither the guarantee of the Government, nor any of the creditors of the company should be effected by it. On motion of Mr. Merritt, the House went into committee on the propriety of addressing her Majesty, in relation to amending the navigation act of 1845. Mr. Merritt offered sundry resolutions, the tendency of which is to ask the British Government to impose such duties on the productions of foreign countries as they imposed on those of England and her colonies. Mr. Hincks did not think the resolutions would have the desired effect, but he would not oppose them if the House desired their passage. He was of the opinion that the closing of the canals would be more effectual for obtaining reciprocity.

Railroad Accidents.—An accident occurred on the New Haven railroad on the 8th inst., which for a moment threatened to be of a very serious character. It appears that the switch-tender at the Housatonic Bridge, near Bridgeport, on going to his dinner neglected to adjust the switch at [illegible] and when the morning express train from more than [illegible] that place, the locomotive, tender and baggage-car were precipitated over the side of the bridge. Fortunately, the connection between the baggage and passenger-cars either broke or was loosed by some one—otherwise all the passengers would undoubtedly have been dragged over into the river, and resulted in a dreadful loss of life. The engineer and fireman, on discovering the approach of danger, sprang from their posts and escaped with slight bruises. The accident caused a delay of about five hours in the arrival of the passengers in this city.

Another accident occurred on the same day, on the Harlem Railroad, which resulted in two horses being killed. According to the information obtained, it seems that a team of four horses were drawing an empty car through the new tunnel between Thirty-second and Fortieth streets, to the depot of Forty-second street, and was immediately followed by a locomotive, the engineer of which, not perceiving the car ahead, in consequence of the tunnel being full of smoke, created by the express train which had just gone up, ran with great force against the empty car, and drove it over the two shaft horses, killing them on the spot, and severely injuring the leaders, besides demolishing the car.

The Blue-Ridge Tunnel.—A Western correspondent of the Petersburg (Va.) Intelligencer states that the workmen on the eastern side of the tunnel have penetrated about 600 feet, and on the western side about 900 feet. The whole length of the tunnel, when completed, will be 4300 feet.

The New Minister to England.—The Hon. J. R. Ingersoll, our newly appointed Minister to England, sails from New York to-day in the steamer Arctic, for the scene of his duties. The Hon. Abbott Lawrence will probably return in the Atlantic, which leaves Liverpool on the 22d inst.

Earthquake at Port-au-Prince.—The schooner Smif, arrived at New York, left Port-au-Prince on the 25th ult., reports that there was a heavy shock of an earthquake there on the 18th, at 9 o'clock, A. M., followed on the next day by two others, one at 3 and the other at 4 P. M. No serious damage was done.

The Albatross.—We learn from the Quebec Chronicle that the steamer Albatross will be sent to Australia. The Chronicle says that the Australian fever is raging very high in that city. "Old men and boys, old women and girls, are packing up for Ophir." If this is the case in Lower Canada, we believe it is much more so in the Upper Province.

The Dark Case.—The Savannah Georgian of the 9th inst. says: "The north-easterly wind on Monday and Tuesday has tended greatly to keep back the descending waters, and by retaining the rice fields covered, did much to the injury of the crops. All the rice fields five miles above the city have been flooded with several feet of water for two or three days past, and will yield the smallest quantity, if not, as some suppose, be entirely ruined, and prove a total loss. From this point to the city, every gradation of injury has been inflicted, from complete destruction up to no injury at all. The plantations immediately opposite have barely escaped; those lower down have not suffered at all or been in any danger. The water commenced to fall on Tuesday, about noon, and with the wind which was veered to the South, will soon take its exit from the river."

The New Suspension Bridge.—The Buffalo Queen City gives some interesting facts as to the plan on which the Railroad Suspension Bridge at Niagara Falls is to be built. It will be a single span of 800 feet. The upper floor, which supports the railroad, will be twenty-four feet. The anchorage will be forward by sinking eight shafts in the rock, twenty-five feet deep, at the bottom of which will be massive cast iron plates, firmly held down by solid mason work. Saddles of cast iron will support the cables on the tops of the towers, capable of supporting the pressure of 600 tons. The towers are to be sixty feet high, sixteen feet thick at the base and eight at the top. Weight of timber in the bridge, 910,120 lbs.; wrought iron and suspenders, 125,120 lbs.; castings, 41,333 lbs.; rails, 66 770 lbs.; cables between the towers 335,400 lbs. When the whole bridge is covered with a locomotive and train of cars, it is estimated that it will have to sustain a weight of 1253 tons, which amount of burden, though not likely ever to occur, is more than is provided for. It will be the longest railroad bridge between the polnts of support in the world.

Curious Effect of Fashion on the Senses.—When Paine's Patent Ventilating Car was first put in operation on the New York and New Haven Railroad, the ventilating vessels, in honor of the commencement of the experiment, instead of water, were filled with perfumes, cologne, patchouli, jockey club, bergamot, etc. Of course the air came to the passengers laden with these luxurious odors. But they, not being biased by a knowledge of the secret, and not accustomed to expect fragrance in an express train, unanimously protested against "that very disagreeable smell."

The only point to be settled is, whether the fashionable or the railway estimate of the perfumer is the correct one.

Three Days Later from Europe—Arrival of the Steamer Humboldt—Interesting Intelligence.

New York, Monday, September 13.

The steamer Humboldt has arrived here, having left Southampton on the 1st instant. She brings 150 passengers and $40,000 in gold. The accounts from Liverpool are up to 31st August inclusive. The following is a summary of her news:

Liverpool Markets.

Liverpool, August 31.

There has been a fair demand in the Cotton market since the departure of the Europa, with sales of 7000 bales yesterday and 5000 to-day. Prices since firm at previous quotations. Accounts from the agricultural districts represent the weather as very favorable for harvesting, and Wheat has declined 1 to 2 per 70 lbs. Flour has been in fair request at unchanged prices. Corn has sold at easier prices, but without any quotable change. The rates close at 29s. 3d. to 29s. 6d. per quarter for White and Yellow. Cargoes afloat, however, have sold 6d. lower. It is ascertained that the injuries to the crops will be less than were anticipated.

London Markets.—At London, on the 30th, the Corn market was dull. Flour had slightly fallen off in price, but Wheat and Indian Corn were unchanged. Cargoes of Wheat afloat were firm.

Havre Cotton Market.

The sales of the week at Havre were 5500 bales; the market closing firm, at previous quotations.

General Intelligence.

French—English Newspapers.—Rouher.—Louis Napoleon has issued orders requiring all English newspapers to be placed at the Post-offices in France, for the purpose of suppressing all those that contain objectionable articles.

The movement in favor of the Empire is progressing more rapidly.

Scotland.—Queen Victoria has left England on a tour through Scotland. Accounts have been received from Bombay to the 21 May. The marine steamer Heralia (?) is safe. Advices from Australia show a great increase in the yield of the gold mines.

Italy.—Vesuvius Eruptions.—A magnificent eruption broke out in Mount Etna on the 20th August, the consequences of which have been terrible. Seven villages are reported to have been destroyed by the flow of lava from the mountain.

Liquor Law in Boston.

Boston, September 13.

The houses of Edwin Draper and Lewis Thayer, two of the most active advocates of the Maine Liquor Law, were entered on Saturday night, and outrages were committed upon their persons by some of the opponents of the law. Messrs. Thayer and Draper were badly beaten and their lives were threatened. Much excitement has been produced in the city by this outrage.

Three Days Later from Europe—Arrival of the Niagara—Cotton Steady.

New York, Tuesday, September 14.

The Cunard steamer Niagara has arrived at Halifax bringing dates from Liverpool to the 4th instant, four days later than the accounts brought by the Humboldt, and three days later from London and Paris. The following is a summary of her commercial accounts:

Liverpool Markets.

Liverpool, September 4.

There has been only a moderate demand in the Cotton market since the departure of the Europa, and the sales of the week are limited to 51,000 bales, of which exporters have taken 5,000 and speculators 13,000 bales. Prices have generally been firm, but there is no material change, and the official qu part of the machinery; I do not know upon what part of the boat the most part of the passengers were at the time of the explosion; this connection which exploded is on the part of the boiler, about half-way between decks, and is called "the connection of the return flues;" she had on at the same time twenty pounds of steam to the square inch, and I had not blown off any steam at this landing.

Capt. Farnham was here recalled, and said: I am a practical engineer; the engine and boilers were under my immediate superintendance at the time of their construction; the steamer was, also; I have examined the boilers and machinery since their explosion, and have particularly examined the exploded part; the cause of explosion, in my opinion, is the defect of the iron of the connection, because the thickness of the iron and the manner with which it was braced, was sufficient to contain a pressure of fifty pounds of steam to the square inch, in my opinion; and there being a less amount of steam than fifty pounds on, I attribute the explosion to the defect of the iron; this connection is about thirty feet from the safety-valve.

The cause of most of the injury to the passengers was in consequence of the water running down from the connection into the fires, and the doors of the furnaces being open at the time, the steam passed through into the cabin, where the passengers were dining. We usually carry from twenty-five to thirty-five pounds of steam. The engine and boilers underwent repairs last spring; no repairs were done to this exploded part of the machinery; said machinery has been in use two years; it is customary to open the doors of the furnaces at the time of landing, so as to stop the draft of the furnace, and so that steam will not be generated while landing; the reason why the part exploded was not repaired, was because there was no indication of any defect.

At this stage of the investigation the Coroner and jury proceeded on board the Reindeer, and, with the Captain, inspected the shattered boiler, the demolished machinery, and all parts of the boat.

The jury subsequently rendered a verdict "that the connection of the return flues, attached to the forward part of the boiler, on said steamer, accidentally burst, and that such accident is not attributable to any negligence or carelessness on the part of the officers of the boat, and that such suffocation and scalding, by which the death of the aforesaid persons was produced, was in consequence of such accidental bursting, as aforesaid."

In addition to the above, eight of the Reindeer's passengers took the stage to Catskill, and thirty-seven hired other conveyances, and left Bristol for various places along the line of the Hudson river. In order to show about the number of passengers that were on board of the steamer Reindeer, at the time of the explosion, we give the following recapitulation of the killed, wounded and saved:

Killed and died of scalds, 20; scalded, 21; passengers saved, 168. Total, 215.

ANOTHER CORONER'S INQUEST.

Coroner Merclean, on Sunday, being informed the public would never submit to such an investigation as held on Saturday, empannelled a new jury, of which Supervisor Smith, of Saugerties, was elected as foreman. The investigation was then re-commenced with more earnestness, and a solemn determination to probe the matter to the bottom. Capt. Farnham was re-called, and testified that there were from 175 to 200 passengers, besides 53 persons employed on board. No register of the passengers' names was kept.

Mr. McFarlane, a passenger, testified that the Reindeer must have been running at the rate of twenty miles an hour; he said it would require that rate of speed to enable her to reach Albany by four o'clock. The investigation was not concluded at night.

The news of the dreadful accident having spread throughout the villages of Ulster and Greene counties, the residents flocked to the scene yesterday in large numbers, and by all sorts of vehicles; and the most intense excitement prevailed from sunrise until dark.

FURTHER PARTICULARS.

Saugerties, Sept 6.—Up to 5 o'clock this morning, the total number of deaths by the explosion of the Reindeer was 32, and two or three others are very low and expected to die. Among those saved are John Taylor, of Philadelphia; Wm. H. Lawson and wife, of the same place; Mr. Hamilton, of Pereline, and three ladies, of Charleston, S. C., and Mr. Patrick and wife, of New York. Mr. Wood Baker, of N. J., belonging to the Coast Survey, made his will yesterday. He is fatally injured. Hugh Rillegh, of Richmond, Va., since dead, made his will yesterday, leaving his estate to his relatives in Richmond. The coroner commenced to hold an inquest yesterday, and is to proceed to-day. The accident was caused by a defect in the boiler. The boat was owned by Jno. Bishop & Co.

AUSTRALIA.—The Intelligence from the Austrian gold mines is calculated to stimulate emigration from England to a still greater extent. The last vessel brought £140,000 sterling, with an announcement of considerable sums forwarded by others, which had left at earlier dates, but not yet arrived:

The estimated weekly produce of the mines in the colony of Port Phillip, (or Victoria) was £160,000 sterling, while of those in New South Wales it was £40,000, making a total of £200,000—or at the rate of between ten or eleven millions sterling per annum. The greater productions at Port Phillip, as compared with New South Wales, is owing partly to the mines in that colony being nearer to the capital town, Mount Alexander, the most prolific source of the gold, is no more than sixty or seventy miles from Melbourne, while the distance of the New South Wales mines from Sydney is 130 to 150 miles. At the same time the richness of Mount Alexander appears to exceed any thing that has yet been discovered in the neighboring colony, within similar limits, although there may be reason to believe that, looking at its general diffusion the metal may be as abundant in one as the other. Indeed, by the last accounts from Sydney, it seems that the Rev. Mr. Clark, a geologist of repute, has just notified the Government of the discovery of a new district, 400 miles in extent, the whole of which was believed to be more or less productive.

In some localities, it is said, it was impossible to put in a spade anywhere without the evidences of gold being observed. An announcement even of this fact, however, would be likely to produce little immediate effect, because the miners were very well satisfied with the spots already discovered, and its chief importance therefore lies in the indication it affordes that, to whatever extent population may pour in, there are districts to which they may repair without interfering with others. The people thus far had been greatly disappointed at the limited number of emigrants that had been attracted from England by the first announcement of the discoveries, and wages of all kinds were consequently rising. They will be better satisfied, however, with the numbers that have since gone out.

PRIZE DOWAZES IN PARIS.—The Daily News correspondent says: "I had almost forgotten to mention a subject far more interesting than the sham fights, either of naval or military—I mean the nuptials of fourteen couples, which have been to-day civilly and religiously celebrated at the mayories and other churches of the arrondissement. The tempting amount of dowry, £20, offered by the municipality of Paris, to the most virtuous couple in the arrondissement, has occasioned a competition for the prize of virtue quite unexampled in the annals of the city. The mayors have received no less than 12,797 applications from couples professing to have been engaged this long while, and only deterred by poverty from tying the matrimonial knot. Now, if there be any guidance in statistics, by far the greater part of these engagements must have been improvised for the purpose of begging the dowry. One instance, indeed has come to my own knowledge, which is amusing enough. A young man, regular in the performance of his religious duties, and hence rather a favorite with the curate of his arrondissement, stated confidently to the latter his anxiety not to loose so good an opportunity of helping himself to an independent establishment; and only that he was perplexed by the small difficulty of finding a suitable mate, who would find equal favor with himself in the eyes of the authorities. 'Oh, is that all,' replied the friendly curate, 'then, between ourselves, I think you might do worse than ask the beadle's daughter.' The advice was followed, and crowned with complete success. The curate's protege and the beadle's daughter, form one of the fourteen happy couples; and if you were to visit this evening the restaurant of Pierre Latuille, or other grand establishment outside the barriers, famous for 'noces,' you might hit upon the lucky couple twirling away in a waltz to their heart's content. For the rest, this instance, which I have from the best authority, shows the style of patronage used in the disposal of prize dowries of virtuous couples."

SPAIN AND THE CUBAN INVADERS.—It is said that the Spanish Minister at Washington has called the attention of the President to the fact that organizations are now forming in various portions of the Union, for another invasion of Cuba. The Washington correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquirer, in announcing the alarm of the Spanish Minister, adds:

"Spain will contest the possession of Cuba, as it is her just right to do, at every hazard, and with every means of defence that can be procured by her own resources, or, if need be, by alliance with other powers. A vigorous policy has been ordered, and the Captain General of the island, in obedience to instructions, under the apprehended revolt and invasion, has directed that every person taken with arms in the hands against the authorities, shall be shot within three hours afterwards. A further order has been issued, that in case any officer should refuse to execute the foregoing penalty, he shall be shot instantly for contumacy. The failure of our search to convict the expeditionists engaged in the last crusade against Cuba, has not only encouraged others to repeat the lawless enterprise, but it has created a distrust in the question abroad as to the ability of the judicial tribunals to administer the law in the face of a morbid state of opinion."

The debt of the American Board of Missions has just been paid off by private subscription. The sum of $2000 was given by A. G. Phelps, of New York.

There are four hundred thousand Indians in the United States Territories west of the Mississippi. Among them are laboring one hundred ordained Missionaries, besides assistants, and ten thousand Indians are communicants.

Foreign News by the Arctic.

We take from the Baltimore Sun the following summary of the news brought by the steamer Arctic, which arrived at New York on the 5th inst.:

The news is without particular interest. The passengers number 178, and among them are the following:

Count and Countess Rossi, (Sontag) and two servants; M. Eckert, Conductor National Opera, Paris; Signor Fogalini, Principal Tenor from Berlin and Milan; Miss Laura Keene, from the Royal Lyceum Theatre, London, and servant; Messrs. Robert and Ernest Hiller, the "Mysterious Brothers;" Mr. James Browne, comedian, and lady; J. H. Wilton, the magician; L. Kirkpatrick, Royal Agricultumist, of Ireland, and lady; E. G. Squier, our former Charge to Central America; Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Easter, of Baltimore, and Judge Wm. Kelly, of Philadelphia.

Rev. H. V. D. Johns, of this city, who has been making a tour in Europe is also among the passengers—as is also Gen. J. J. McCahen, the Pennsylvania Lunt Commissioner.

ENGLAND.

Lord Cowly's sudden return from Paris has revived the rumor that he is to be succeed as Embassador to France by Lord Malmesbury, and that Lord Stratford de Redcliffe, late Embassador to Turkey, will receive the appointment of Foreign Secretary. These changes, it is said, will take place in the course of September.

Parliament will be called together on the 11th of November for a session of four or five weeks.

The Liverpool Chambers of Commerce held its quarterly meeting on the 23d. With the exception of a recommendation to have letters from the United States sorted on board the mail steamers, and a reference to the proceedings of the Mexican Government respecting the import duties at Matamoros and Tampico, the report touched on nothing of interest to American readers.

During the week ending the 23d, ten ships, including the Great Britain steamer, of the aggregate register of 9600 tons, sailed from the port of Liverpool for Australia with 3000 emigrants.

On the night of the 23d ult., at 11.30, J. R. Hind discovered another planet—being the sixth he has discovered within the past five years. The new arch is in the constellation Aquarius.

Three arrivals from Australia had brought 30,278 oz. of gold, and report another ship due with 15,405 ounces. Great difficulty was found in procuring sailors, and from £10 to £12 per man were asked and obtained for the run to England.

IRELAND.

The Dublin Evening Post states that the Government Commissioners have selected Limerick as the Transatlantic Packet Station.

The Six-Mile-Bridge affair in Ireland continues to excite much angry feeling in the locality where it occurred. Mr. C. Delmege, Justice of Peace, and eight soldiers of the 51st Regiment have been committed to Ennis jail, in accordance with the Coroner's finding against them of "wilful murder." A detachment of the 47th Regiment is stationed within the jail to protect them against any attack by the people. The London Times comments strongly on the verdict of the Coroner; and the counsel for the imprisoned soldiers has applied for criminal warrents against Priests Cluno and Burke for inciting the people to murder troops.

The celebrated Donnybrook Fair passed off tamely this year—not a fight to be had for love or money.

Hon. Robert J. Walker was expected at Galway on the 21st, and the Galway Vindicator surmises that this visit has some connection with the establishment of a steam-packet line between New York and Galway.

FRANCE.

Since the festivities in honor of the Emperor, little has transpired.

Considerable uneasiness has been created in commercial circles, at the cessation of all business between France and Belgium, in consequence of the delay in arranging the commercial treaty between the two countries.

Among other decrees, the Moniteur publishes one abolishing the duties at present payable on the export of raw and spun silk.

The Government papers continue to insert the addresses of the Councils of Arrondissements, expressive of their adhesion to Louis Napoleon. These addresses are more or less explicit in relation to the establishment of the Empire.

Rear Admiral Fedrier-Despointes is appointed to the command of the French fleet on the Pacific station.

The settlement of the boundary between France and Spain still attracts the attention of both Governments.

SPAIN.

A Cadiz journal announces that the line of steamships plying between Spain and Cuba, would be shortly reinforced by two other large steamers, and the departures from Cadiz will then take place twice a month.

The Spanish war-steamer Volcano sunk at the entrance of the port of Vigo, a few days since.

PORTUGAL.

Opocte letters are to the 20th of August, and state that shipments from that port were almost entirely suspended, in consequence of the expected reduction and equalization of the export duty on wines. Several vessels loading for ports in the United States were detained from the same cause, and could not get cargoes.

HOLLAND, THE UNITED STATES AND JAPAN.

We find the following in the London Morning Chronicle of the 26th:

"The Staats Courant publishes an important communication from the Colonial Department, relative to the past and present relations of Holland with Japan. It appears from this official document that the reports of the intervention of Holland to prevent the departure of the American expedition, and the abandonment of the project by the United States, in consequence of which the authorities of Java have permitted their country to be entered in order to arrange the question, is unfounded. All that the Government of Holland proposed to do, was to address to that of Japan an amicable dispatch, with the view of preparing a favorable reception to Commodore Perry, and to point out the advantages that would result to Japan from the opening of its ports to foreign commerce, as the Emperor of China had done in 1842. It is not improbable that the negotiation may be crowned with success, and that Commodore Perry, on arriving within sight of the coast, will find little difficulty in the negotiations he is directly sent to bring about with the Imperial Court."

AUSTRIA.

The Voss Gazette of the 19th states that the French Embassador at Vienna had, in conference with the Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, declared, in the name of his government, that it would continue to use every effort for the maintenance of European peace, and that he regarded the treaties of 1815 as the condition, sine qua non, of the peace of the world, and the political equilibrium of Europe. In his turn, the Embassador was assured of the friendly disposition of the Northern Powers, and their determination never to attempt to force any form of government upon France.

ITALY.

An Englishman—a Lord Somebody—was arrested recently at Verona, for sketching the fortifications, and after being imprisoned two days, was hurried out of the country, without any apology. Coming so soon after the Mather difficulty, the affair makes some noise.

A modification of the Piedmontese Ministry is again on the tapis.

GREECE.

The Courrier d'Athens of the 9th announces the arrival at Athens of Mr. Marsh from Constantinople, and his having obtained an interview with the Queen Regent respecting the case of Dr. King. Another account says (no date given), "The American squadron left the Piræus after Mr. Marsh had taken possession of the documents relative to Dr. King's case. The squadron is supposed to be on its way to Trieste."

THE ACORN.—If an acorn be suspended by a piece of thread within half an inch of the surface of some water contained in a hyacinth glass, and so permitted to remain without being disturbed, it will, in a few months, burst and throw a root into the water, and shoot upward its straight and tapering stem, with beautiful little green leaves. A young oak tree, growing in this way on the mantel shelf of a room, is a very elegant and interesting object. I have seen several oak trees, and also a chestnut tree, thus growing; but all of them, however, have died after a few months, probably owing to the water not being changed sufficiently often to afford them the necessary quantity of nourishment for the matter contained in them.

FIRE ENGINES RENDERED UNNECESSARY.—The citizens of the borough of Tamaqua, Pennsylvania, have just completed their water works, at a cost of $23,000, which, besides furnishing the village with an abundance of pure water, will be highly valuable in case of fire. The water is brought from Ralpbit Run, a distance of two miles, with a fall of 175 feet, giving it so much force that by attaching an ordinary hose to a fire plug, the water is readily thrown over the highest house in the borough, thus rendering fire engines altogether unnecessary.

STATISTICS OF DISASTERS AT SEA.—From a return ordered by the English House of Commons, we gather that, from January, 1847, to December, 1850, there happened at sea upwards of 12,000 casualties, varying in magnitude, from the shipwreck in the dead of the night, with all its horrors, to a clumsy collision in the Channel, and a hasty refit in the nearest port. The annual loss of life averages 1250, the gross number for the four years being 4928. One of the chief features in the catalogue of disasters is the consoling fact, that but few accidents have occurred to ships ably manned and commanded. Out of the 12,000 and odd casualties only sixty-five are recorded against ships above 700 tons.

FATAL REALIZATION OF A DREAM.—On the 1st inst., Wm. Huey, of Delaware, just across the line from Kennett, Chester county, Pa., left his home in company with two of his men, to fell a tree. At first, one of the men objected to go, in consequence of a singular dream of the night previous, which so impressed him with danger, that he was fearful of its reality. He finally went, however. When the work was nearly accomplished, and while those present were looking for the tree to fall, Mr. Huey took hold of a branch and attempted to push it—he was warned to leave, and just at the moment of falling, sprang, but instead of out of the way, he fell directly under, and was crushed to death.

RARE CURIOSITIES.—Purser Ramsey, of the United States Navy, has recently brought from Brazil a number of very elegant head dresses for ladies, which, in their material and fabric, may justly claim a place among the curiosities of the age. Many of them are made of the scales, eyes and bones of fish, in the form of flowers, beautifully arranged into wreaths and bouquets, while others are made up of the feathers of birds of the most brilliant plumage, rivaling the hues of the far-famed birds of Paradise. Several of the ornaments represent delicate little birds in the most natural postures, while others are made of the breasts of humming birds, surrounded by leaves made of parrot's feathers, forming gorgeous flowers of variegated hues of the most beautiful description. These ornaments were made by the nuns at one of the convents of Brazil.

A CLERGYMAN DEAD.—Rev. Dr. Bang, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died in New York on the 5th inst. This is the fifth death among the members of the New York Conference, since June.

RECEIPTS OF SPECIE.—The exports of specie to foreign countries, during the week ending on the 4th inst., amounted to $243,970; by far the greater portion of which ($230,000) was taken out by the Atlantis, for Liverpool, to-day. The aggregate for the year is $18,776,811.

The New Postage Law.

The National Intelligencer says the subjoined postage tables have been prepared at the Post-office Department, and are believed to be correct. The editor is, however, requested to say that it is expected the United States and Prussian postal treaty will be returned executed in the course of a few days, when a general postage circular, with more full instructions, will be prepared and sent to Post-masters. In the meantime, it is suggested that editors of newspapers will render a public service by pinning these tables before their readers:

3. Postmasters are not entitled to receive newspapers free of postage under their franking privilege.

4. If the publisher of any newspaper or periodical, after being three months previously notified that his publication is not taken out of the office to which it is sent for delivery, continues to forward such publication in the mail, the postmaster to whose office such publication is sent will dispose of the same for the postage, unless the publisher shall pay it; and whenever any printed matter of any description, received during one quarter of the fiscal year, shall have remained in the office without being called for during the whole of any succeeding quarter, the postmaster of such office will sell the same and credit the proceeds of such sale in his quarterly accounts in the usual manner.

5. Quarterly payments in advance may be made either at the mailing office or the office of delivery. When made at the mailing office, satisfactory evidence of such payment must be exhibited to the postmaster at the office of delivery.

EMBARRASSING, VERY.—The exclamation of Dick Swiveller when he discovered that the "Marchioness" had disposed of his clothes during his illness, and that he was left even without an umbrella in case of a fire, is familiar to our readers. Not less awkward was the predicament in which Mr. Jones was placed, the morning after his marriage, when on his way to Niagara, with his blooming bride. That gentleman was exceedingly cautious, and ever evinced the greatest dread both of fires and robbers. Having stopped for the night at one of the principal hotels in Washington, he charged his wife before she retired, to "leave nothing about," and carefully deposited his own luxuriously, the pockets of which contained his valuables, (including the door key, which he had prudently withdrawn,) in his new trunk with a patent lock. As he intended to take the early train at six o'clock, he awoke betimes, but to his dismay discovered that he had neglected to remove the keys from his pockets, and that they were within the trunk, which closed with a spring. This was sufficiently provoking, but to add to his perplexity, Mrs. J., in her anxiety to "obey" literally the injunctions of her husband, had placed her own garments in her trunk, and given him the keys for safe keeping, which he had secured with his own. It was not until after repeated knocks at the door, and when the cars were far on their way, that Jones could summon resolution to reveal the cause of his tardiness. The chambermaid, with an extra key, relieved him from his imprisonment, but the attendance of a locksmith was necessary to procure the pair presentable suits.

The recollection of that day's involuntary detention never fails to elicit from Jones a hearty anathema against all new fangled notions in the way of tcunk locks, which he chases with man traps and other devices of the enemy. [Journal of Commerce.

EDITORIAL LIFE.—The following remarks of Dr. Johnson, says the Journal of Commerce, give an answer to many complaints of the present day:

"I know no classes of the community from whom so much disinterested benevolence and thankless labor are expected as from editors of newspapers. They are expected to feel for every one but themselves—to correct public abuses, and private ones also, without giving offence—to sustain the difficulties of others, without regard to their own—to condemn improper measures of every one, and not one at the same time. They are expected to note every thing that is important or extraordinary of men's opinions: their notices must be calculated to please every one, and at the same time offend no one."

A city mies newly installed as the wife of a farmer, was one day called upon by a neighbor of the same profession, who, in the absence of her husband, asked her for the loan of his plow for a short time. "I am sure you would be accommodated," was the reply. "If Mr. Stone was only at home—I do not know though where he keeps his plow, but," she added, evidently zealous to serve "there is the cart in the yard—couldn't you plow with that till Mr. Stone gets back?"

Constable Clapp, of Boston, has a peculiar way of astonishing the rogues who fall into his hands. On Saturday, the 4th inst., at the Providence depot, he stopped up to a young man, and with great familiarity said: "How do you do?" "Pretty well," returned the person addressed, and after looking at the Colonel a moment continued, "But I don't recollect you." "Your name is George Curtis, ain't it?" "Certainly." "I thought so," said the Colonel, "and where are you going?" "Oh, I am going to New York," said the man. "Well, I guess I wouldn't go to-night," and without further preliminary walked him to the lock-up, there to await the arrival of the city marshal of Providence, who had given information by telegraph that Curtis had committed a larceny. This is what they call being struck by lightning.

In April, of last year, Mr. J. M. Bemus, of Pittsburgh, lost the use of his right eye by a piece of steel flying from a file and striking it. After suffering from the wound for some months, the inflammation subsided: and he felt the pain from it until last week, when the inner surface of the eye-lid became inflamed from something which seemed to project from the eye-ball. After suffering some days from this, he called upon a physician, who extracted from the ball of the eye the piece of steel, which was long, flat, and about the shape of a scythe-blade, measuring one inch and three-sixteenths in length, by more than one sixteenth broad. How so large a foreign substance should have remained for sixteen months in the ball of the eye, without causing more injury to the sufferer than the mere loss of its sight, is beyond comprehension.

THE DEAF AND DUMB GIRL.

BY MRS. FRANCIS OSGOOD.

She sits like some enchanted maid,
Amid the thoughtless, joyous throng:
For Heaven a hallowing touch has laid,
To charm her life from care and wrong.

She needs no speech—a power is hers
More pure, more worthy of the name;
A passionate eloquence, to which
Our uttered words are weak and tame.

The very soul of language fills
Those dark, wild, earnest, pleading eyes,
Each movement talks, each gesture thrills
The gazer's heart like plaintive sighs.

Oh, could she speak, the soul that pours
Its music now through every glance—
That kindles every wistful smile—
Would waste in words its wealth perchance.

We should not mark that pale pure face
Lit up with every waking thought;
Nor watch the eager, eloquent grace,
Her heart, denied a tongue, has taught.

And could she hear the discord round,
The worldly jest, the idle vow,
Would drown the low sweet hymn of love
That pitying angels sing her now.

PARTICIPATION IN THE SINS OF OTHERS PROHIBITED.

"Sins of others!" some are ready to exclaim: "what have we to do with the sins of others? It is a sufficient responsibility to be held accountable for our own; for, alas! they are aggravated and numerous." The inspired Apostle, however, was commissioned authoritatively to say, "Be not a partaker of other men's sins." This injunction refers to a duty which a man owes to himself; a duty seldom thought of, and too frequently neglected. That neglect is sin; and it is often committed. No doubt the prohibition has a special application to the election and ordination of ministers; but it must also be regarded as the general prohibition of a general evil. In what way, then, is it possible to partake of the sins of others? Those who would confine the act to the actual commission of a similar sin, are in dangerous error. There is no necessity for a man to be drunk in order to share the guilt of the drunkard; he may lead another into the sin of drunkenness in many different ways, and thus he may have made that sin his own. Of old it was declared, "Woe unto him who giveth his neighbor drink, that putteth the bottle to him, and maketh him drunk!" A man may not have stolen his neighbor's property, but he may have instructed others to do so, or he may have received goods illegally acquired; and thus, if not the principal, he is a partaker of the dishonest deeds, and open to the charge implied in the declaration, "When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him." A man may not personally take the life of a fellow-being, and yet be stained with blood-guiltiness in having contrived and incited to the commission of murder. David was the murderer of Uriah, though he was slain by the sword of the children of Ammon. Saul was a blasphemer, yet his tongue had never uttered blasphemy: but he had compelled many of the saints to blaspheme, and thus was the father of the sin in others, and, in a certain sense, more guilty than they were in the sight of God. Indeed, in a variety of ways man may partake of the guilt of sin which he does not personally commit. He may induce others to sin by provocation; draw into sin by the influence of example; allow it when he could have prevented it; connive at it after it has taken place. He may, moreover, neglect to reprove it when opportunity is afforded; silently pass it over when it ought audibly to be condemned. To do so is to violate the enjoined duty, "Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him." (Lev. xix. 17.) Willingly to remain in the presence of the sinner a spectator of his criminal conduct, when by withdrawing disapprobation of it might be manifested, (1 Cor. v. 11,) is another form of this evil. In all these ways there may be a participation in other men's sins.

With this conduct, ministers of the gospel may be charged when they know that their hearers are addicted to certain vices, yet are silent on such subjects in their ministrations, instead of crying aloud against them; or when they address their congregations as Christian, and are aware that many of them are sinners; and keep back Bible-truth, which might trouble the consciences of private transgressors. Conduct so offensive in the sight of God will subject the unfaithful minister to awful condemnation. "When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity: but his blood will I require at thine hand." (Ezek. xxxiii, 8.) So also are ministers chargeable with this offense when they continue unholy members in the Church. They are to a considerable extent, accountable to the great Head of the Church for its purity. Read what the Spirit says to the angel of the Church in Pergamos. (Rev. ii, 14-16.) Church sins allowed by ministers become the sins of ministers.

Magistrates are participators in the sins of others when crimes are perpetrated which they might have prevented by the exercise of that authority with which they are invested. They are called to sustain the character of being a terror to the evil, and the executioners of judgment on offenders. But should any one "bear the sword" of office "in vain," and so sanction the commission of sins he might by the power of his office have restrained or punished, he partakes of the guilt of those sins. Parents, also, may be guilty of those sins of their children, which, in the exercise of parental authority, they might have prohibited and prevented. That child "left to himself" on the Sabbath, to neglect the house of God and the word of God, and to wander in the ways of wickedness, accumulates tremendous guilt on the parent's head. Nor are masters free from responsibility in reference to their apprentices and servants. The morals and conduct of these are committed to the master's care, and while they are directed to forbear threatening, it is their duty to discountenance, and withhold from, sin. The regulations in their families should be restrictive and condemnatory of the wickedness to which servants may be prone.

It may also be observed that there is a possibility of sinning in others as well as with others. The sin of drunkenness, with its fruitful source of crime, not only rests on the head of its slave, but it "lieth at the door" of the unprincipled vender of the intoxicating cup. The family of the drunkard suffer hunger and nakedness; the laws of society are violated; perhaps the more than degraded drunkard takes away, in the madness of his folly, the life of a fellow-creature, and he becomes a murderer. But is there not another guilty in such a case? What of the man whose hand supplied the exciting draught? He hears that the wretched man, inflamed by the poison which he improperly gave, is transported to a foreign land, or closes his wretched life on the gallows; he may not think that he also is a felon, a murderer; yet, awful thought! such he is by participation. Well would it be if such were aware of this truth, and would reflect on and forsake the sin, and cease to "destroy souls to get dishonest gain." (Ezek. xxiii, 27.) Such, with many more, are violators of the prohibition, "Neither be a partaker of other men's sins."

Many, however, are the examples to be met with of obedience to the Divine injunction. Such a noble example was Moses when he came from the Mount, and saw the Israelites bowing down to the golden calf Aaron had made. Aaron had been a partaker of their sin, but Moses was faithful: he burned their God in the fire, ground it to powder, and rebuked Aaron and the people. Such an example was David, when he would not allow the deceitful worker to dwell in his house, nor the liar to tarry in his sight. Thus he resolved that they should have no sanction from him; nay, he commanded them to depart out of his presence. Such, also, was the admirable conduct of the Hebrew youths, when they refused to join in the worship of the golden idol erected in the plains of Dura, though by so doing they jeopardized their lives. Such examples have been found in the Christian Church of modern days, when its ministers, rather than be partakers of the sins of others, have sacrificed lucrative situations, overcome the feelings of natural affection, and subjected themselves to painful persecution. A father who had resolved with Joshua that the members of his family should in the observance of certain duties, serve the Lord, had a beloved son who refused to comply with the regulations required. Entreaty, reproof and command were employed in vain. From a stern sense of duty, and against the pleadings of nature, the father had to place the alternative before his son, "You must cease from sin or depart from my house." Sin was loved more than the parental abode; the foolish youth went on frowardly in his own way, and in a distant land had to seek for bread. There are a few duties belonging to Christian conduct which have been more neglected than the apostolic prohibition. Few have seriously thought on the subject; yet it is of solemn interest. So St. Austin deemed it, for he frequently prayed, "Lord, forgive me the sins of other men." Many have need to adopt the same prayer, and to secure, by grace, the power to avoid sinning by proxy, as well as by personal practice. [London Christian Miscellany.

CLERICAL SECULARIZATION.

REV. H. N. McTYEIRE: With deep sorrow I read in the Advocate a communication from a P. Elder, that nearly all of the preachers on his District were engaged in secular business. In that announcement I find the answer to the questions, Why are we not more successful? Why do the churches in Louisiana languish? and why are sinners dropping from the door of the Church into hell? The ministry is secularized. Those that are called to minister at the altar are serving tables. The time, the talent, the all, consecrated to God upon the altar of the ministry is taken thence and given to the world. Each itinerant, after solemn fasting and prayer, did promise to devote himself wholly to God and his work, with the determination to employ all his time in the work of God. Dis. p. 47. But instead of this devotedness, the whole week is given to the duties of the school-room, the farm, merchandize or other business which yields to them pecuniary profit. The exhausted energies are then bestowed on one single day to the work of the ministry. Yesterday, a gentleman remarked to me that Mr.—— was a man of some considerable ability, but his school taxed his time so much as to prevent preparation for the pulpit, and, said he, "I do not like to listen to a long string of exclamations and truisms, and therefore I have quit going to church."

A friend writes me that "Brother —— preaches here once a month, but after a ride of fifty miles, this is too fatiguing, he does not give satisfaction." Do we wonder at the scarcity of revival notices from Louisiana? We are not men of one work.

Why are these things so? Is it because they are not supported? The minutes of the Louisiana Conference show that nothing was needed to make up deficiencies. Every preacher professed to have received his disciplinary allowance. Do they give disciplinary service when so engaged in the world? If not, then they claim and receive that to which they have no right.

But perhaps they do not receive support. Then why so report? Why give the circuit a position in the Church to which it is not entitled? But we suppose there is hardly a circuit within the bounds of our Conference where if the preacher does his duty, and sees that the stewards do theirs, but that he will be supported. If there is such circuit it should be placed upon the mission plan, that the preacher be not compelled to neglect his peculiar work of saving souls, for that of a less important one. If the disciplinary allowance is not sufficient to save the Church from this evil, let us make effort to increase it. This is not a question of dollars and cents, but of the value of immortal souls, redeemed by the precious blood of Christ; it involves eternal interests, and is not computed by the science of figures.

Is there no remedy? Must these things continue to be? Mr. Editor, you wrote against ministers teaching the sciences in the Church institutions, but here are those who employ the time that belongs to the Church for the purpose of making money for themselves. Let us look to it, before our candlestick be removed. H. J. C.

TO A DELINQUENT CHURCH MEMBER.

A LADY WHO SENDS HER CHILDREN TO THE DANCING SCHOOL.

As I have a right to suppose that you intend to be governed, in all your conduct, by honest convictions of duty, I take for granted, that in giving your children the opportunity to learn to dance, you do not act without mature reflection. I feel constrained to say, that my judgment in reference to this matter differs entirely from yours; and I am sure you will not blame me, if I state to you candidly my reasons for believing, as I do, that you have fallen into a serious practical error.

I wish, however, to speak on the subject with due discrimination. I do not mean to intimate that in the mere act of dancing there is any thing necessarily wrong. Dancing, considered as a mere exercise, and apart from the circumstances with usually attend it, could not reasonably be objected to. And I can suppose circumstances in which, even as an amusement, there might be comparatively little to be said against it. Nevertheless I can not view it, as it usually exists, or as it is likely to exist, as other than a serious evil; and I can not but think if you will give due weight to the considerations which I am about to adduce, that you will regard it so also.

The great argument that is generally used, and that I suppose has prevailed with yourself, in favor of sending children to the dancing school, is that it gives them easy and graceful manners. My answer to this is that, if your children are accustomed to refined society, they do not need such auxiliary—their manners, unless they happen to be constituted with the most incurable tendencies to awkwardness, will become graceful, of course—if they are not accustomed to refined society, the efforts of the dancing master will accomplish nothing more than to make them miserably affected. I remember to have heard President Dwight of Yale say, that "manners acquired at a dancing school, were apt to be like something tied with a tow string." When I was at home, I found that a new dispensation of refinement had opened upon my native village in the establishment of a dancing school. A new set of rules had been given for entering a room, for taking off the hat, and divers other small matters entering into the economy of social intercourse. I was unfortunate enough to see the new rules reduced to practice first at the church door; and such was the flourish with which the uncovering of the head was accompanied, that instead of being grave enough to enter the church, I could hardly keep decent enough to stay outside. The secret of it was, that a number of the lads who had been brought up in the plainest way, were then in a course of training under a dancing master, to become gentlemen; and each one acted as if he thought that the graces had all settled en mass upon his own person. For myself, I had much rather see rusticity united with simplicity than with affectation.

Allow me to say, that you can yourself do more to make the manners of your children what they ought to be, than all the teachers of dancing in the world. Endeavor to encourage in them benevolent dispositions, and check all tendency to rudeness and impropriety of conduct, and teach them that there is nothing so beautiful in manners as the simplicity of nature, and you will have little occasion to invoke any foreign aid.

My great objection to sending children to a dancing school is, that I am persuaded it puts in serious jeopardy their immortal interests. As an amusement it soon becomes exceedingly attractive, and even absorbing. Children will neglect their lessons in every thing else, but the lesson in dancing nothing must interfere with. The young lady will dance all night, though she sleeps the whole of the day before as a preparation, and the whole of the day after as a consequence. And then, too, she is hereby brought into a scene of unrestrained levity, not to say of boisterous mirth; and if a word were to be spoken that had even the remotest bearing upon a serious subject, it would be felt to be sadly out of place. There is, on these occasions, every thing to stimulate and exhaust the animal nature; and I may add, not unfrequently much to blunt the natural sense of delicacy, without which, female character is never really attractive. I think I may appeal to all experience to justify me, when I say that the direct tendency of mingling in such scenes is to cherish spiritual insensibility, and to render religion every way more distasteful. Quite in harmony with this remark is the fact, that whenever a young person who has been accustomed to attend balls and dancing parties is brought to serious consideration, that is uniformly the signal for giving up all such amusements.

You will say, perhaps, that you agree with me in this, and that you are no more an advocate of large dancing assemblies than I am; but you do not consider it at all a necessary, or probable consequence of your children learning to dance, that they should ever be found in any such adverse circumstances. But permit me to ask, why not? If they understand the art of dancing, and have acquired, as they naturally will in learning it, a strong relish for it, it is almost presumption in you, to say the least, to suppose that they will never practice it, except within such bounds as you may prescribe! If they have grown up devoted to this amusement, doubtless they have grown up in a state of indifference to religion; and what else can you expect but that their views in regard to the extent to which the amusement may be indulged, will be much more liberal than your own? And by and by, in all probability, their impunity will prevail over your scruples, or else they will claim that they are old enough to judge and act for themselves. They have reached a point now, where you can not disguise to yourself that they are doing wrong, and that there is great danger that they will always be "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Have you no painful sense of responsibility in the case? Would it not have been better that you should have never led them into this temptation? If you were to see a beloved child lying on her death-bed without any of the consolations of religion, reviewing a life of folly and anticipating an eternity of misery, would there be any thing to alleviate your anguish in the reflection that you had not refused her the advantages of the dancing-school?

I can not but think that the course which you are taking is fitted to depress the standard of Christian character, and to hinder the progress of true religion. Your children are given to you to educate for the Lord; and you have recognized this obligation in dedicating them to him in baptism. But can you really feel that you are discharging this obligation in learning them to dance? Do you even expect that their thoughts will be directed seriously to the subject while they are thus being trained? Nay, if they really should become serious, would you not expect them to exchange the dancing-school for the prayer-meeting! Would you give credit to my pretensions of seriousness which they might make, so long as they retained their accustomed interest in this amusement? But it is not merely that you oppose an obstacle to their becoming religious—your example has a much wider influence; it helps to confound the Church and the world; and that not by bringing the world up, but by bringing the Church down. If professedly Christian parents will educate their children upon mere worldly maxims, and with a view chiefly to enable them to shine in worldly circles, can you wonder that the world should look on and say with a measure of triumph, "What do ye more than others?"

I must not omit to say that you do not duly consider your obligations to those with whom you have covenanted to walk in the gospel. Doubtless there are those among them who see no evil in what you are doing, who, on the contrary, testify their approbation of it by doing the same themselves. But I put it to your conscience whether these are among the more spiritually-minded members of the Church; whether, on the other hand, they are not among those whom you would fear lost to see on their death-bed; and whether, finally, you have not reason to believe that your example in this very matter strengthens them in their worldliness. But it is not thus with all your fellow-professors. There are among them not a few who believe your course to be fraught with serious evil, and do feel well nigh paralyzed by its influence their efforts to break up the reigning spirit of lethargy around you. Your minister, too, knows, sympathizes in their anxiety. He is that you are opposing an obstacle to the success of his labors. If he has never spoken to you on the subject, I am sure it is not because the subject has not rested heavily upon his spirit.

I will ask, finally, to say that you are not taking a course which will secure the highest happiness to yourself. You must, at no distant period, either die and leave your children, or they must die and leave you. In either case do you believe that you are consulting your own highest enjoyment? What gratification would you feel as you were closing your eyes upon a beloved daughter, to reflect that she was first in this elegant accomplishment, though she had not ever begun to think of an hereafter? Or if the case should be different, and she should go before you to mingle in the scenes beyond the veil, would the remembrance of her dancing-school days—days in which she was trained to nothing but vanity—make it easy for you to bend over her coffin? [Presbyterian.

SIR WALTER SCOTT AND WILBERFORCE.—In reading a few evenings since, the diary of the great and good William Wilberforce, we were struck with the flowing passages in reference to the Waverly novels, (which were just then in course of publication,) "I am always sorry that they could have so little moral or religious object. They remind me of a giant spending his strength in cracking nuts. I would rather go to render up my account at the last day, carrying up with me 'The Shepherd of Salbury Plain,' than bearing the load of all these volumes, full as they are of genius."

A FACT NOT TO BE OVERLOOKED.—During the past two years forty-three thousand persons were committed to so "Tombs," in New York. Of this number, all but about one hundred, ascribed the first cause of their imprisonment to the use of intoxicating drink. So stated William Edwards, Esq., the keeper of the New York city prison, at a temperance meeting in New Jersey, a short time since. Surely alcohol and crime are as cause and effect.

"Have you not mistaken your house, sir?" blandly said a Sunday Chesterfield, to a stranger, as he entered it. "Beg pardon," replied the intruder, "I fear I have; I took it for a Christian's."

CONVERSION OF THE SOUL.

Our text is plain—Christ's words: "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye can not enter into the kingdom of heaven." The testimony of his servants, who frequently mention conversion, show us the doctrine.

Paul calls this change "a quickening"; "you hath he quicked, who were dead in trespasses and sin."

The wicked and their works are dead; the righteous only are alive from this state. Here manifestly is taught a translation from a state of death in sin, to a state of life in Christ. The same, writing to the Galatians, speaks of "Christ being formed in the heart." Naturally, nothing but pollution is found there; when Christ is "formed in the heart," sin can not remain. Two things directly opposite to each other in character cannot be assimilated. Hence, where Christ is, sin can not be.

Peter speaks of this change as "of our partaking of the divine nature." Is God holy? We become holy. Is God just? We become just. Is God wise? We, for the first time in our existence, have the wisdom to distinguish between evil and good. "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Those who are born again are able to "overcome the world." They are known of all men as having a "faith that worketh by love and purifies the heart."

We have spoken somewhat of the nature of the New Birth. Men sometimes substitute their own fancies for the explanation of this mysterious change. The Bible declares "that there is no other Saviour besides God," "that he will not give his glory to another," and "cursed is he that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord."

These texts absolutely preclude "changed purpose," "moral reformation," "good resolutions," and "the reception of baptism" as this change of heart.

Who, then, is the author of this new heart? Speaking of Christ, John says: "But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." "For we are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works," etc. God is the author of all salvation, by the Holy Spirit and his word. "The letter killeth but the Spirit giveth life." Speaking of the "Father of lights," James says: "Of his own will begat he us with the word of truth." Peter writes of "being born again, not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth forever."

The word is the instrumental, the Spirit the efficient cause of the conversion of man. To explain the distinction, we use the following illustration: In the propulsion of a steamer, the steam moves the piston-rod, this turns the wheels which propel the boat. Steam is the efficient, and the wheel the instrumental cause of the moving of the boat.

The Spirit of God applies the word powerfully to the human heart. Man is convicted of being a sinner. For the first time he feels that he is a sinner. There is no man who has heard the word of God that has not been thus convicted. Perhaps he yields to the conviction; he prays for a new heart; he prays on until the witness is given. "The Spirit of God beareth witness with our spirit that we are sons of God."

This brings us to the most mysterious part of our application of the text. How can man know his sins forgiven? And here again we are brought into contact with the Universalist, who says that God punishes all sin, and makes no remission of the penalty.

David addresses the Almighty thus: "But there is forgiveness with thee, that thou mayest be feared." "Through Christ is preached forgiveness of sins."

We quote the 24th verse of 31st chapter of Jeremiah: "And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the LORD; for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the LORD; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more." Now, from the above are taught, that God does pardon man—that he does not afterwards, unless he goes back to sin, condemn him for his past transgressions.

It is true that some sins may produce such physical suffering as will end with death; but when the man knows that God has remitted all the past sins—that there is "now no longer any condemnation"—there is no mental misery. He is not tortured with looking back to his dark career, but with joy presses on towards heaven. It is manifest that if the criminal condemned to die were pardoned, if kept ignorant of that pardon he would not be any happier from its having been given. A million of dollars may be bequeathed to by a distant relative, but if I am not conscious of the fact, I am thereby rendered no richer. The very idea of pardon implies knowledge in the mind of the culprit, of that pardon.

Well, how shall man know his sins forgiven? Only by the Spirit of God witnessing with his Spirit.

This results from the facts, that the knowledge of the conversion or pardon—we use the words together, not because they are the same thing, but because they always are together in time—must come from the pardoning power; and that man can not possibly ascend to the council chamber of the Most High to know whether his many prayers have been answered. It is an absurdity to suppose that God absolves a man from the punishment due unto his sins and keeps this knowledge from him. In this case the future would be covered with dark and angry clouds; and occasionally the light of heaven should fall down upon him, and make the future all beautiful, he must, according to the Bible, immediately close his soul to the forgiveness, immediately close his eyes in forgiveness. But some one can not know that he is forgiven. "A man may know that he is accepted of his Maker, by the good works that he is enabled to accomplish." All good works are "the fruits of the spirit"; and there can be no fruit without the tree, consequently, good works are resultants of the Spirit of God. They form the secondary witness—our spirit—and, in the mouth of these two, the truth is established. The mystery of the manner makes not the slightest difference in relation to the happiness of man, so that he has the assurance that for Christ's sake his sins have been forgiven. If a man receives a million of dollars from an unknown source, and is informed that it is his own for him to use as seemeth best to him, is he to make himself miserable in trying to find how the blessing came, instead of enjoying the same?

We can not understand how one man's mind influences ours; yet we know that such is a fact, and from this knowledge we have weal or woe.

A man would be counted somewhat beside himself to inveigh against benevolent societies because he did not understand the mystery of their initiatory ceremony, when he could see their effects in a thousand wants relieved. And if one should say that this case is not strictly analogous to the subject of the conversion of the soul, because a man could understand the secret by initiation, we answer, the "secret of the Lord is with them that fear him," and we may know that we are born again.

A man would be counted mad if he rejected meat and water, because he understood not what their composition was, or how their constituent principles were united. Yet how many, many millions of human beings eat and drink that of which they know not the nature. Their knowledge begins and ends with this, that such things are pleasant and prolong life. Thousand of beings declare that they have been converted, and their righteous actions and blameless words do imperatively demand that we believe them, though we do not understand the nature of that conversion. They are happy in the possession of a new spirit without troubling themselves about the manner of the communication of the same. All men—God is not a respecter of persons—can, by using the same means, arrive at the same result, and know for themselves that, "of a truth, God has power, on earth, to forgive sins." And we challenge any man's sincere love for the truth, who, seeing that there is only one means by which Christians testify they have obtained pardon—namely, prayer—is unwilling to try the same. The same cause must always produce the same effect.

NOTES OF AN ITINERANT.

MR. EDITOR: In the fall of 1828, I entered on my new field of labor in the Cahawba district. Here I had many difficulties. The society then called Reformers, afterwards the Protestant Methodists, had split off from the Methodist Episcopal Church and set up for themselves. Many of them were my first acquaintances in this country, both preachers and laymen, who were once my warmest friends, but now become my bitterest enemies because I did not join in with them, but still defended the Conference and Church of my choice.

One of the most fruitful sources of my troubles was, that I defended the Annual Conference against the aspersions which one P——S—— published against it. This was such an offence against them (for they had received him as a preacher and subsequently made him their President) that I could have no forgiveness, while at the same time made such efforts to blast my character, both with his tongue and with his pen, that after bearing it for more than fifteen years, I was compelled to prosecute him for a libel, and sustained the charge in the Circuit and then in the Supreme Court. Here was an end to the aspersion of my character from that source. This unfortunate split in the Church was the greatest draw-back to the Church that we have ever experienced in this country; for it separated best friends. Many of the best members were drawn off, and what was most astonishing, they became the most bitter against the Church in which they were born and brought up. I can account for this on no other principle than the sad disappointment they met with, for I heard them say that in less than ten years there would not be found a Methodist Episcopal member in all the country; and to bring that to pass they used all sorts of means to put down the M. E. Church. Such was the violence on that subject that I found it a difficult matter to attend to my regular quarterly conferences on some of the Circuits where the most rabid of them lived. But all those are gone, and I hope to a better world.

During this year my trials were more than the preachers now in our Conference could possibly imagine; and when I look back to those days I am astonished how I did surmount those difficulties. Nothing but the Grace of God could enable men to bear up under them, I am sure. At the closing up of this year's labors I had a severe stroke of affliction to bear, what all itinerants are subject to who have families to leave, when they go to attend their appointments. I left my sweet Carolina Matilda well, to be gone some two or three weeks, but when I got home she had gone to another and a better home.

In the fall of 1829, attended Conference in Washington, Miss., (for both States were in the same Conference, as was Louisiana.) Here I was re-appointed to the same field of labor. In those days all had large works to perform. During this year times were much calmer. All had assumed their position and hope of taking things by storm, had, in a degree, subsided. The year passed away more comfortably, with me than the year [illegible]. At the close of 1830, attended Conference at Tuscaloosa, and was re-appointed for Lagrange College. This Colle[illegible]

The Roman Church is a great trade-shop and drives a lucrative commerce. The credit system is unknown in their business. Their moneyed success is a lesson that political economists might well learn of. John Randolph once boasted of the discovery of the philosopher's stone. He said it consisted of four plain, monosylables—"pay as you go." He was behind-hand. The Pope had, long before the Roanoke orator appeared, discovered the same. Over the Cathedral door and the Confession box, at the baptismal font and the grave-yard, and even upon the gloomy gates of purgatory, is written, "Cash in Advance." And the way to heaven is blocked up to the poor man by the priestly sentence, "No pay, no go."

An illustration of this relentless commercial policy, in things spiritual, occurred last week only a few doors from our office. A young man died, whose friends were Papists—perhaps he had been himself. Of this we are not informed. The officiating "father" of one of the Roman Chapels was politely notified of the same and requested to attend the funeral. Our readers are aware that the Romish priest, in burial, performs a more indispensable function to the soul's rest, than merely with a few words to commit "dust to dust."

The reply would have become a Camp street broker. The reverend "father" sent a missive which has been laid on our table and conned over with no little interest. It was to the amount that his services could be commanded but not without the pay was sent in advance, together with the carriage bill. The sum required to be forthcoming was accurately put down, $15. It was time enough for them to send around the cash before the hour fixed for burial arrived. If it was not sent they need not look for him. The trade was not struck. The friends of the deceased were not without respectability or liberality, and would have stood all the charges, but they did not feel like driving so close a bargain over a coffin. A Protestant minister was sent for and went and improved the occasion by remarks which, in the house of mourning, always make a deep impression.

Comment on the above is unnecessary.

PERIODICALS.

The National Magazine for September is upon our table. It takes true position between the quarterly and hebdomadal literature of the Church—a good deal nearer the former than the latter in the weight of its discussions and the scope of its criticism. Excellent; but no better than we expected from the taste and activity of the editor and the liberality of the general Conference in its establishment. The Book Agents, at 200 Mulberry street, would oblige us by forwarding the first and second numbers. We see a valuable book in prospect.

North British Review, for July.—The foreign and even our home reviews have had a choice bone to pick in Lord Cookburn's life of Jeffrey, the father of reviews. The North British gives its account of the said book, affording a comparison in its favor between it and its cotemporaries. The contents of this number are unusually rich and various.

Southern Pulpit, Sept.—A pleasant and readily recognizable portrait of Dr. L. Pierce, of Georgia Conference and a sermon by him on Wisdom. The Doctor could never have built up his reputation by such sermons as this one.

Sunday Schools and Revivals.—A revival of religion recently occurred at Larissa, Cherokee county, Texas, in which some sixty persons professed conversion. A majority of those had been connected with the Union Sunday School, organized at that place four years since.

"Preach, not Read."—An editorial in the New York Observer, one of the leading Presbyterian papers, in a call for preachers for one of the new States; designates those who can preach acceptably—not READ. Good! Would that all our new States were furnished with such preachers.

The Galveston News says one hundred and fifty Sunday school teachers, and three hundred teachers of common schools, are much wanted in that State.

Progress of Temperance.—Three of the most prominent papers in Texas are lending their columns to the advocacy of the Maine liquor law.

Any Good Done?—Within four months after the assumption of the pastoral charge of the Baptist Church, Houston, Texas, by Rev. Thomas Chilton, some forty white members had been added to the Church by profession, of whom, at the end of six months from that time, not one had apostatized. Do revivals do any good?

The Southern Rights Convention of Alabama met in Montgomery, on the 13th inst., and nominated Ex-Governors G. M. Troup, of Georgia, and Gen. John A. Quitman, of Mississippi, for the offices of Presidency and Vice Presidency. The Montgomery Times, a neat and readable paper, the organ of the Convention, has lately been issued.

The Presbyterian Church in this place, says the Caddo Gazette, (Shreveport, La.) is in progress of completion, though the work goes on slowly for the want of funds. The belfry now being constructed, is only a temporary affair, and will be replaced by a handsome cupola, so soon as the Church can afford it.

Methodist Press.

Expansion.—The Provincial Wesleyan, Halifax, N. S., thus opens an interesting description of the opening of a Chapel in that city:

Among the instructive apothegms which occur on almost every page of Dr. Dixon's elaborate and inestimable production on the Origin, Economy and present position of Methodism, there is one especially entitled to the practical attention of any genuine Wesleyan, and Wesleyan Clergymen. It is this: The true theory of a Methodist circuit is Expansion.

A theory true and noble but sadly at war with permanent arrangements. It involves longer rides, and the necessity of describing a large circle about home; and another sermon or two in the round of appointments. It is easy work, dropping an appointment: but Dr. D. is allowed to have stated the Methodist theory correctly. Strong and well-to-do congregations often oppose this expansion policy in their minister—forgetting how much they were originally indebted to it. His detour from the regular track leaves them less of him. The spirit of sacrifice is wanting, and the preacher contends against more in their opposition than in his own indisposition. Large bodies draw to themselves and thus tends to regulate the pastoral labor expended to the scale of things as they actually exist. But is not expansion the theory, and ought it not to be steadily kept in view and persistently carried out though all these things be against it?

Emory and Henry College.—The editor of the Holston Advocate says that Professor Wiley has been temporarily appointed to the Presidency of this College. The Joint Board will meet a year year hence and elect a President. Speaking of the probable effect upon the College, of Dr. Collin's resignation, (we believe he has been at its head from the beginning) the editor remarks:

We have been inquired of, as to the wisdom of this policy, and in reply, as we have no concealment on the subject, we remark—No man perhaps had a higher appreciation of President Collins' services as the chief officer of the College, or of his ability and efficiency in the Professorship which he filled; and yet, we have no fears for the Faculty of Emory and Henry. Professor Wiley is fully competent to the duties of his new relation, as President; and, assisted in the various duties which devolve upon the Faculty, by such men as Longly, Davis and others, we auger for Emory and Henry a continued upward and onward course. We might be regarded as officious and premature, were we, at this early period, to make any suggestion on a subject which belongs exclusively to the Joint Board—but we repeat our convictions, that the College has a fair sea, and a well spread canvass.

Quarterly Conference Resolutions.—The S. C. Advocate publishes the action of five Quarterly Conferences in the Gainsville District, Ga., Conference, strongly disapproving the movements of several local preachers in that Conference towards Congregationalism, regretting the agitation caused by the discussion of "Sunday preaching," and deprecating any material change in government and polity of Methodism as it is. The P. Elder, Rev. J. P. Turner, thus represents the substance of the action:

The movers in this action of the Conference hoped in a greater or less degree to restrain the further agitation of the matters involved in these controversies, and to fence up the way of agitators in their own bounds at least. The particular things referred to in the general language of the preamble and resolutions are: The card of a number of Local brethren, published in the Advocate soon after our Annual Conference, calling upon the Locality generally to join them, and upon the Quarterly Conferences to appoint delegates to meet in convention at the time and place of our next annual session for purposes therein stated: the articles by "Ecclesia" on the institution of the Local preachers: the several conventions of Local preachers and others held in Coweta, Rome and Marietta, together with their action and call for support: and the notorious discussion of "Sunday preaching."

The P. Elder is authorized "to add a word of application" to the above proceedings and he does it in the following hitting style:

Finally, these Conferences believe that these theorisers and lovers of experiments are dangerous to the Church. Their fondness for new things, and for originating new things, may run away with their sobered judgment, may disturb the equilibrium that is always necessary to a safe discretion. And, in addition: the repeated, almost continual scribbling in the papers about proposed amendments to our polity, gives the restless among us a handle and to our opponents, without, the materials wherewith to establish their objections from our own confessions, and undermines the confidence of the indifferent community and of many friends, within and without, in the stability of Methodism, inducing expectations of frequent, important radical changes. To join us, or stand by us, is to do they know not what. They can comprehend what it would be just now; but the apprehension is rife, and so far as it proceeds on these premises with moderation, it is just that things will not long wear their present garb, nor retain their present form; and they like not to wed a Proteus whose present shape and character give no indication of that of the future.

Pulpit Notices.—"They preach short sermons—reading no announcements after the discourse." This is what the Northern Methodist preachers do—according to a correspondent of the Nashville Advocate, writing from New York. They do well in this thing—especially the latter. Notices before sermon have the advantage of a full and fresh congregation—none are weary and none are fallen off. They also come less in the way of the sermon. Nothing foreign to its sacred theme intervenes between its delivery and the after-reflections of the congregation. They go away, meditating on these things, and not on the half dozen news items last announced. We remember once to have heard a sermon full of unction, and at the close of it, when the hearers would fain have gone away without any interruption of the delightful frame of spirit that prevailed, they were treated to a string of notices, in number seven. They were notices of no extraordinary sort; no occasion was a common one. The pulpit for the nonce was converted into a bulletin-board—the Church into a general intelligence office. It was a difficult to bear of the heads of the notices than the sermon, for while the latter had only three heads, the former had seven.

Gutzlaff.—The Western Christian Advocate says, that this great apostle of the Celestials was once a member of a Wesleyan Class; and that Rev. Thomas Jackson was his class leader.

California Exchanges.—The Observer & C. C. Advocate have made their last few visits in dishebille. The latter in a gentool pasteboard, the former on a single sheet of yellow and brown paper. Our friends on the Pacific do not stand for trifles. The religious news they bring us is of a healthful tenor. Both of them speak in a tone becomingly indignant and independent, against the dueling practice which has lately been illustrated by bloody crimes in California. They condemn it as a double crime—being guilty, by intention, of suicide and murder.

Austin and Bastrop Ct. Texas Conf.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire—Dear Brother: For some time past, I have been thinking of dropping you a few lines for the gratification of my numerous old friends within the bounds of your circulation. I reached my field of labor about the middle of April, having had a safe but costly public passage, and found it without a preacher, and as a necessary consequence, in rather a deranged condition.

In due season, as is my custom, I commenced protracted meetings, which, though opposed by some, have resulted in the awakening and conversion of many sinners, and the accession of near one hundred members to the Church. Besides this, I have lifted six missionary collections during the progress of these meetings, and the following is a detail of the result of them, at the several places, viz:

At Comanche	$208
" Young's Prairie	73
" Moore's Camp Ground	100
" Webberville	60
" Gilleland's Creek	40
" Craft's Prairie	75
Total	$550

So you see, Mr. Editor, that Texas Methodists can and do pay missionary money, as well as those of the older States, when they are called on to do it. Several of these collections were taken up under brush arbors, and one of them, the first and largest one, under a gin-house.

Taking all things into account; considering that Texas is a new country, and in many places sparsely settled, we think that our friends who aided in raising the above collections, justly deserve to be classed in the first rank of liberal donors to the missionary cause.

I have several other collections to take up yet, and confidently expect to raise the amount to $800 at least, before the year closes. We do not know what other circuits are doing in this matter, but one thing is very certain, if they do not arouse themselves to quick and energetic action, Austin and Bastrop Circuit will be entitled to the name of the Banner Circuit of the Texas Conference.

We have some protracted meetings to hold yet, and two camp meetings, at which we are looking for still greater seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; and our continued prayer is, O Lord, revive thy work.

I may say in conclusion, I have had some trials and discouragements since my arrival in Texas. But in the midst of them all God has been with me, and his grace has been sufficient, and I am willing still to trust in Him who, by his Providence brought me here, believing that he will order all things for my good and his glory. I feel like living and dying at duty's post, as an itinerant soldier of the cross, in the Methodist E. Church, and within the limits of the Texas Annual Conference.

Yours, in Gospel and Itinerant bonds,
September 8, 1852. Allen M. Fox.

Holmesville Miss. Conf.

Dear Bro. McTyeire—The Lord is still reviving His work on the Pearl River Circuit. Since the 31st ult., we have had three meetings, at all of which God was with us. The first continued four days. Seven persons joined. The altar was often times filled to overflowing with penitents. And God's people were made to rejoice aloud. The second continued four days also, and, thank God, it was a good time. Six on whites joined, and three blacks. The altar was filled again and again by those who said, "pray for me." The members were greatly revived. Our last was a two days meeting, and notwithstanding we were in the open air and some little rain, yet God was with us in power. Three whites united themselves with the people of God, while they were greatly revived. Many sinners said pray for us, with tears in their eyes.

Yours, in Christ, P. E. Green.

Dear Bro. McTyeire—Please say to your readers that the Lord is reviving his work in the Starkville circuit. For the past two weeks fifty-two have joined the Church and near that number converted. We are looking for greater things at our camp meeting.

Allen Castle.

Warren Ct. Miss. Conf.

Bro. McTyeire—The prosperity of Zion is always matter of interest to you, no doubt, and to all the lovers of Christ. And while you report revivals in other quarters, I take pleasure in saying that God has been with us in much power since July, on this circuit.

There has been quite a revival at almost every appointment on the circuit. And very many precious souls converted. Some seventy or eighty have joined the Methodist Church on the circuit since the middle of July.

We have succeeded in getting a comfortable parsonage at an eligible point, as near the geographical center of the circuit as we could well determine, and immediately upon the railroad from Vicksburg to Jackson. The house is very well furnished, and all will be paid for, I reckon, this year.

Bye-the-bye, I will just say that you may report twenty-five dollars more from Warren circuit for the California Mission, subject to the order of brother J. M. Jones, if he goes. But really, I think he ought to go now, since the Mississippi Conference has shown so little disposition to sustain him.

Yours,
H. J. Harris.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

The recommendations of the Memorial Committee, as I told you last week, were substantially adopted by the Conference. The Quarterly Meeting of the circuit has been liberally and yet safely defined, consisting of leaders, stewards, local preachers of three years full standing, and trustees being members of society; it has now the constitutional right of memorializing the Conference at mid-summer, on any subject whatever, ten day's notice by the proposer of the memorial having been given to the Superintendent; a select jury chosen out of and by the Quarterly Meeting, at any of the regular quarter-days, has the right of hearing any case of discipline on which any leader's meeting has previously pronounced a verdict, from which either the minister or accused party appeals. No member of society can, for any cause whatever, be put away without a formal trial before the leaders, if he demand it. This, indeed, has been ever the rule of Methodism, but the lay-gentlemen who met the Memorial Committee, in March, unanimously recommended that those who persisted for three months, after admonition and warnings, in withholding supplies to the ministry and the Church, should be considered as having, by such conduct, excluded themselves, without having the privilege of trial. To this the Conference has declined to accede, substituting instead of such a summary enactment, a declaratory law, which lays down the reasons of Scripture and common justice, on which the Methodist rule is founded, and thus re-issues and more formally authorizes that rule. A member who rails against the minister and the church at the very moment of "meeting" to receive his quarterly ticket, may have his ticket withheld, there and then—so it is provided—but, his case must afterwards be named at the leader's meeting, and he cannot be refused a trial before expulsion, if he demand it.

Every new law is to be read at the first quarterly meeting after the Conference, and the quarterly meeting has the right, if it think proper, to suspending its operation for a year, and then expressing its views to the coming Conference, by memorial, at its mid-summer meeting.

A manual of our essential Rules for the use of our preachers, is to be at once drawn up, and a committee is appointed to do this.

Such is a fair beginning in the way of wholesome and safe "reform"—reform that is in full consistency with our first principles, and which fairly carried out will prove the best safeguard against revolution. There is no talk or thought of "finality." There is still work to be done. But the work must be slowly and warily, if it is to be safely and wisely done. Every step must be well considered, every point nicely weighed; and even the right thing must not be done too soon.

The bulk of the ministers and of the people must be brought to see the wisdom of every proposed alteration, and fully to acquiesce in it. The leaders of the body must not move too fast for public opinion to keep up with them. They have no right to do this. They must keep in advance, but not advance so fast or far that other people cannot intelligently or comfortably keep them in sight.

Circuit internal organization is now about complete. In the next place the connexion between Circuits and Districts must be made still closer than it is, and the representation of the District Laity in the Conference committees—already conceded in principle—must be more fully and practically carried out. And, with God's help, this will be gradually accomplished in following years. Quite as much has been done this year as could be fully discussed, elucidated and defended—the rest must be gradually accomplished from time to time.

You will see both from some of the speeches—I may refer particularly to William Arthur's on the last day of the Conference—and from the leading article in the Watchman of last week, entitled "The Conference—Legislation of 1852," that there are those here who are both able and willing to go, on all points, as far as it is good and safe to do so. You will observe, too, that a committee is appointed to take into full consideration the important question of securing a good report of all Conference proceedings of public interest.

The decrease of members in our universal Methodism, according to our March census, from which the returns are made to Conference, is upwards of 18,000, leaving 300,000 members for this Kingdom, and 400,000 for the world. The number on trial is a few hundreds larger than the decrease. On the last two quarters (March and June,) it is ascertained that there has been an increase. The year before our loss was 56,000; making about 75,000 in the two years. The "Reformers" report their members at 47,000; the Wesleyan Association—those who separated in 1835—report a decrease of 1000 members this year, and have since their Conference lost, at one stroke, by a mere vote of a quarterly meeting, a whole circuit, Liverpool. Their church members are now considerably fewer than when they left us seventeen years ago. The New Connection (or Kilhamites,) also report a decrease of some hundreds, and stand about where they did, as to numbers, some twenty-five years ago. Our own Methodism, thank God, is evidently beginning to rally, and soon we shall have again to report progress.

A large mixed Committee of Finance is appointed to meet in the course of the ensuing year, to take into consideration the state of our whole financial system, and to endeavor to relieve funds, several of which have felt heavily the pressure of the present crisis.

I say "mixed committee," for we have scarcely any thing but mixed committees. Even our two annual District Committees are mixed—the two stewards of every circuit being members—and ministerial character and qualifications alone being subjects snored from the direct and authoritative inspection of the laity.

I told you at the beginning of my letter last week that the late Conference was remarkable for the absence of any great predominance of influence on the part of any member of the Conference. Dr. Bunting was of the minority on the most important points. The influence of Dr. Beaumont has for the last five years been rapidly declining, and now is less than it has been at any time since Dr. Beaumont first rose into any note in the body. Indeed, in the Conference it is quite insignificant, and out of doors is not much. And in practical legislation Dr. Beaumont has never manifested any useful talent, however great may have been his facility in declamation of a certain order upon certain subjects. It is remarkable that at the present Conference, whenever he has opposed his brethren, he has never obtained a seconder or even a solitary vote in his support. The guides of the Conference have been principally the President, (John Scott) and Dr. Beecham. But many more have taken a fair share in discussion and direction.

In concluding, I beg to direct attention to a very interesting tableau vivant, of which you will find a description in the Watchman—the interview of the poet, Montgomery—in his eightieth year—and of the students of Wesley College, Sheffield, with the Wesleyan Conference. Montgomery has for sixty years been a resident in Sheffield.

The next Conference will be held in Bradford, Yorkshire.

SHREVEPORT CORRESPONDENCE.

The Season—Railroads—Itinerancy in its prime—A high example of it—Camp Meetings—An Invitation.

"While autumn, nodding o'er the yellow plain, Comes jovial on."

This is September, and I claim the privilege of a letter writer, to inform the world thereof, and to congratulate the editor of the Advocate and its readers thereupon. Congratulate us about what, say you? That we have grown older and time is shorter and eternity is nearer? Or that quills are dull, and money scarce and subscriptions due? For none of these things. It is all suggested by the season, and by the paper published at 56 Gravier. It has survived the heat and dust and dullness of another burning summer, and makes its weekly visits as fresh and hale as though it were summering in the mountains and rejuvenating at the Springs. Luminous and hearty and comely withal, it has gladdened a thousand homes for nearly two years; and is it not time to shake hands over our common favorite, and with the inspiring vigor of autumn to say All hail?

For a long time we have been enjoying the large and splendid varieties of fruits common to the climate, and now the cotton bales begin to roll in, and our town, as if by magic, awakes from its annual hot weather repose. The great staple is placed beyond any contingency, and the crop in Northern and Western Louisiana will be large over any recent precedent. The navigation of Red River has been unusually good, and it is now rising rapidly, so that the planters anticipate an early and favorable market. Never before have the agricultural interests been more highly blessed, and universal plenty begins to crown the passing year. Providence, for once, has almost pleased every body, and bestowed its bounties with magnanimous impartiality.

The excitement and enthusiasm usually bestowed upon elections and politics, are pretty much devoted to the Railroad acuse. Several conventions and barbecues have already been held for its furtherance, and more are had in contemplation. The northern parishes have secured the co-operation of Eastern Texas, and the survey of the line, from Vicksburg to Marshall, will be completed before the first of January. Much unanimity prevails in regard to the practicability of this route, and it will undoubtedly receive prompt and liberal support, so that we look forward with confidence to the time, not distant, when this whole country will be "riding on a rail." An outlet of this kind for trade and travel has become a felt necessity. The small rivers and bayous of the interior are always a precarious dependence, capricious and inadequate at the best. This conviction has aroused the people, and it will lead to decided action and speedy and tangible results.

Besides the magnificent enterprise just mentioned, another improvement is under way. A company has been organized, and a commodious plank road, extending from Shreveport to the Texas line, say twenty-five miles, is about to be constructed. This improvement will afford facilities of trade hitherto unknown, and secure to us a large trade, beyond the reach of competition. From these facts you will see that the spirit of internal improvement, which bids fair to turn the "world upside down," is come hither also.

The Christian aspect of the subject is both interesting and important. The itinerant system, and a traveling ministry, must give the Gospel to the world, and all enterprises of this sort, which by considerable approaches annihilate distance, are their natural auxiliaries. Ocean commerce has borne Christianity on its wings to benighted continents and islands, and may we not suppose that in like manner the innumerable locomotives, running to and fro, through the land, will powerfully conduce to the increase of religious knowledge? By them your Missionary Boards and Book Concerns and Bible Houses will be brought in juxta-position with remote fields of operation, and their fiat will, in a week's time, send a thrill of evangelism over a whole continent. The spirit of the age is evidently making into the genius of itineracy—going is its life—to go is its motto and destiny. Very like this was the maxim of our Methodist fathers, and the world, and the Church especially, must come up to the work.

At first itineracy, by sober interpretation, meant going on foot, next the call was to horse, then to ship, and now to car and telegraph. The tendency of the times—the restlessness, the inventions, the enterprise, run parallel and flow into our peculiar, moving economy. Bunglingly do they read, who gather from the signs of the times that this economy has done its work, and that the golden age of settled pastorates has arrived. That golden age, if there be any, is reserved for the Millenium, or more likely, for the annals of eternity; but itineracy is certainly written in flaming capitals upon the frontlet of the present century.

Could Asbury and McKendree be evoked from the shades, and could Coke and Cookman come up from the deep, they would mark the present age as the boon of an active and circuiting ministry! Heaven forbid, however, that their great spirits should ever be disquieted, or that the Church should ever become so God-forsaken as to call for the bringing up of its buried prophets. Let others be content to tarry inglorlously with "the stuff;" let those who will, sink as sediment beneath the on-rushing floods; but let Methodism march in the van of both, let her ride the crested wave of human progress.

The departure of the senior [illegible] California will be an epoch in our [illegible] and so it should be set down in the [illegible] An example of sacrifice and labor [illegible] than the lives of many of us. [illegible] such an act, will be the best legacy [illegible] than indomitable old hero can leave [illegible] traveling connection. May he live [illegible] return, and may the race of such [illegible] never degenerate nor run out.

This is the season for protracted [illegible] and revival efforts. Usually the [illegible] other circumstances are favorable [illegible] preachers of a whole district, with [illegible] Elder, concentrate and devote [illegible] efforts upon a single point at a time [illegible] now the fruits of the year's labor [illegible] but partially secured. This is the [illegible] a more general ingathering, for [illegible] home, and for a close reckoning with [illegible] science and accountability. Odd [illegible] be picked up, and all accounts to be [illegible] for eternity. Perhaps nature makes [illegible] pression upon us—somehow it is made [illegible] sive and serious moods creep over the [illegible] of the people, and their attention is more easily fixed [illegible] religious subjects than at other times. [illegible] what fellcity of appeal and application [illegible] those oft repeated words enforced, "The [illegible] vest is passed and the summer is ended [illegible] we are not saved."

"When autumn's yellow lustre gilds the [illegible]

Camp meeting time is also at hand. [illegible] have given place, for the most part, to [illegible] tracted meetings held in the churches, [illegible] have become numerous and common. [illegible] There will nevertheless be a sprinkling [illegible] them in the country, and you shall hear [illegible] them in due time. The signs of promise [illegible] fair, if not flattering, and we expect a [illegible] of general refreshing and special visitation.

How pleasant it would be for you, my [illegible] editor, to leave your dusty sanctum, for [illegible] nonce, and enjoy an autumnal [illegible] amongst the "high places" of our [illegible] Zion! Right glad would we be to see [illegible] phiz editorial amongst us. And then [illegible] paper! People would subscribe just to see [illegible] the editor—certainly for the hearing of [illegible]

September 2. Woodman.

THE CONFERENCE COLLECTION.

An esteemed friend and brother, a [illegible] preacher, writes us, on the 10th inst.:

"Please make a warm appeal to the [illegible] ers and members about our Conference Collections for the deficient claimants."

We are prepared to respond favorably. The appeal as called for is ready. Think it time something should be laid before Church on this subject, we clipped the following from the St. Louis Christian Advocate a few days ago. It is written by Dr. [illegible] of that Conference, and addressed to preachers and members:

"Allow me to call your attention to [illegible] important duty of taking up this fifth collection. You already know all that I can tell you about this duty, but it may be well to stir up our minds by way of remembrance. As one [illegible] as I have been for several years with [illegible] whose immediate business has been to receive and divide the Conference Collections, I have been mortified and pained at the lack of funds to meet the claims—the sacred claims of worn-out preachers widows and orphans of our Conference. I am led to believe that a deficiency is caused mainly by the neglect of proper discharge of duty on the part of preachers—either they do not take up the collection at all their preaching places, or they fail to instruct their congregations in the obligation in the premises. Every preacher should take up this collection at every appointing place on his circuit, with as much promptness as he preaches the Gospel. Every member and friend of the Church, should punctually contribute as they would pay any debt, to the payment of which they were bound by any law of God or man. If this duty be neglected, both preachers and members will suffer the penalties of the delinquent. In the true preachers may be, and will be, the first sufferers; but the Church must be the great and final sufferer. The Church will be that some preachers will be driven from the Lord's vineyard. Of these some become farmers, others merchants, others lawyers, others pettifoggers and poor physicians. The members may lift up their hands in holy horror, and utter piteous moans over these changes, but they will cry in vain while they leave the ministry to starve to a large extent at least, for support. Just as far as our itinerant preachers are turned to secular pursuits, so far do the members chargeable with sin, whether [illegible] rantly or knowingly, is not providing for their wants; for such pursuits are the unavoidable result of a deficient ministerial support.

"In vain do the members demand that preachers devote themselves solely to the ministry of the word, while they, with a mean and parsimony, withhold the necessary supplies of quarterage, house-rent and other expenses. Our ministry in this Conference is already partially local, and in some cases entirely secular, for this very reason; and it is a disgusting sin and shame that it is so. With a full and disciplinary allowance, small as they are, fully met, then there would be no excuse or apology for preachers abandoning the work of the ministry, and following worldly pursuits. Then every preacher who would withdraw from his proper work, or do it negligently, should be instantly dismissed from the ministry, unless he would immediately repent, reform, and give satisfactory pledges against subsequent relapse. Then any man who would propose to locate, unless unable to serve the Church, should be required to be stripped of his ministry, as he would be stripped of his need ministerial credentials to enable him to be a man of the world.

"In the English Methodist Church, every preacher does his work as a matter of duty, and nothing else on any pretence whatever. The moment he touches any other business than his ministry, that instant he becomes a criminal offender, and is tried as such, and is punished by the deprivation of the ministry and excommunication from the Church. Now the delinquent have, as with us, a choice of employ. He cannot say, my family must be provided for, and I must provide for them by a farm or a house, and I must provide for them, and how can I then serve the Church as best I may be able? What can the St. Louis Conference say to a man with a large family, who loses time from his work, because he can, travels the circuits around, and in the coomos of necessity a non-resident, and in spending his rest time, not at home, but in preaching his people, but is purely worldly employment? The Conference is powerless—the Church is powerless—the circuit must remain without services; for merely preaching and occasional classes at regular places, are but little better than half services. And for this unjust and disastrous state of things we are responsible, or at least delinquent from [illegible] responsible."

The witty novelist, Thackeray, is about to [illegible] country.

Obituary.

Died, in Centreville, Bibb co., Ala., on the 6th inst., J. C. Campbell, in his 38th year. In childhood he lost his father, and having few relations, and his mother poor, he met the common lot of poor orphans. He entered the struggle of life for himself, and in the right way. The most prominent traits in his character, were honesty, industry, kindness, etc. He was always ready to relieve the distressed, consequently gained friends, and increased in worldly goods; he had perhaps had as few enemies as any man who transacted as much business and had as many friends.

For about two years the deceased has been a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church; some time last year was elected steward of the Board of Stewards for Centreville Circuit, but the Great Head of the Church has called him to give an account of his stewardship, and we have reason to believe that he was found faithful, and permitted to join his sainted mother, who died one week before. He has left a wife and five little children to mourn his loss. May God be near to console them in their bereavement.

Man Killed.—Another homicide, altogether wanting in those mitigating circumstances arising from excessive provocation, or from the heat of blood attendant on suddenly excited passions, was committed yesterday, in the ante-house known as "The Falcon," on the corner of Conde street and Theatre alley. This particular locality (Theatre alley,) which scarce two months ago was the scene of a tragedy in which several were badly wounded, and Captain Weymouth killed—that it might be more fully devoted to the demon of discord and destruction—has received another and a bloody baptism.

The man killed was named Louis Lloyd, a native of Switzerland, and about twenty-five years of age. He had kept a cigar establishment for Mr. Laborde, in the southwest corner of the Falcon house, and was noted as a man of a quiet, unobtrusive temper. He was of a stout and active frame, about five feet ten inches high, and had light hair and blue eyes. The name of the slayer is Antoine Guerrera—better known about the establishment as William Henry. He is about twenty-one years of age, and a Spaniard by birth. He had previously been employed behind the bar at the Falcon house, to wash the glasses, and had recently been dismissed.

From inquiries as to the cause of the difficulty, it appears that Guerrera attributed his discharge from his situation behind the bar, to the interference of Lloyd, who, he said, had misrepresented him to the proprietor. Guerrera had bantered Lloyd for a fight, which the latter declined. Eagerly pursuing his revenge, Guerrera yesterday about 2 o'clock, observing Lloyd go up stairs in the Falcon House, went into the kitchen of the establishment and picked up a carving knife, which he was carrying away, when he was asked by a woman in the room what he intended doing with it? He replied "that it was none of her business," or words to that effect. He then went into a room between the kitchen and bar-room and sat down at the foot of the stairs, up which Lloyd had gone, where he remained some time as if waiting for him (Lloyd) to come down. Lloyd remained above some minutes, when his prowess becoming impatient, followed him up stairs. Here high words were heard. Guerrera exclaimed, "You did do it?" and Lloyd answered, "You are a liar!" There was then a noise of scuffling, and Lloyd immediately ran downstairs, making a great outcry and saying he was murdered. He passed through the middle room, into the bar-room, holding both hands on his left side and staggering as he walked. To his exclamation, "I am murdered," some one cried out, "Who the devil killed you?" he did not answer, but staggered into the alley and fell exhausted, with a stream of blood pouring from his side. He was immediately taken up by Officer Hunt and others, and conveyed to the Charity Hospital, where he died after about fifteen minutes.

Immediately after Lloyd fell, Guerrera came down stairs holding in his hand the bloody knife, which he handed to the proprietor of the house, saying, "I killed him and this is the knife I did it with." A member of the Police, who was near, took Guerrera into custody. When asked if he had killed the man, he laughed and said "yes." To a question "why he had done it?" he answered "he told me that made me lose my situation, and I killed him for it." Being asked "if he was not afraid of being hung for the murder?" he replied "no, for he had but one time to die?" He seemed perfectly indifferent to the consequence of the deed, and on his way to prison laughed and joked about the fun it would afford the public to see him hung. He was heavily ironed and locked up in the Clerk street prison.

The deceased had two wounds—one about an inch and a half long on the breast bone, which did not penetrate deeper than the skin. The other in the left side, about an inch and a half wide, which severed the sixth rib and penetrated about eight inches, with a direction towards the right hip. The wound bled freely, quantities of fat protruded from it, and there was an appearance of echimoses or effusion of blood about the neck and shoulders, probably produced by the friction of the slayer's arms in the struggle.

The knife taken from Guerrera is an old carving knife, with a blade about ten inches long, strong and so much worn as to taper towards the point in the form of a dagger. It was bloody from this point to within two inches of the hilt.

Mock Auction Swindle.—Charles Smith yesterday made oath before Recorder Genois that he was the victim of an auction swindle, perpetrated upon him at the store, No. 5 Front Levee street, as follows: Deponent says that he bid $20 on six pair of pantaloons, which were knocked down to him. He handed $2 to the keeper of the store, and being asked if he had a bank bill, handed over a $10 bill to one of the individuals in the establishment, who told him that it was all right and that the price of the pantaloons amounted to $12 at $2 each. Another individual then offered to go with him into another auction store where he could sell the pantaloons and double his money. The deponent then followed his new friends to No. 44 on the same street, when the pantaloons were put up with others for sale, and were about going at $1 95 for the lot, whereupon he bid $3 and was told that he had to pay $2 each. Seeing that he was about to be swindled again, he went to the police office to make this complaint. Warrants were issued for the arrest of the parties implicated; who, being brought into court, compromised the matter by paying the green ones his money and taking back their bowelles.

Singular Claim—Nine Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars!!—The City Council has before it a singular claim, for an immense sum of money, preferred by an old man named Montague. The claimant was, many years ago, a bird-fancier, and made traffic of the feathered tribe by way of gaining a living. It happened that some thing over a quarter of a century ago, the old gentleman's birds became obnoxious to a member of the police as they hung dangling in their cages over the sidewalk of a public street, which fact determined the policeman to have them removed. In the process of their removal, in consequence of rough handling or foul play, two of the birds suffered death. Mr. Montague immediately charged their value to the city, (about one dollar and fifty cents,) and sent in his bill to the Common Council. It was passed over without payment, and after the next general election for Aldermen the demand was renewed, with the addition of the interest that had accrued from date. The bill was treated with neglect as before, and so on from year to year, up to the present time—an addition of compound interest being made to the demand at each successive presentation of it.

The claim is now before the Boards of Aldermen, and as the sturdy applicant has calculated the bill at compound interest, it now amounts to about $650,000! Some wag-gish members of the Council have fed him with hopes that the amount will be allowed. In that event, he promises to subscribe $750,000 to the Opelousas Railroad, and to divide $50,000 among the members of the two Boards, as a bonne for their favor. The hope of getting the claim allowed is a mania with the old chap, and he attends every meeting of the Council, in the confident expectation of realising the full fruition of his golden dream

Death of a Strange Character.—An old man, aged eighty-four years, was found dead in his bed in a house on Main street yesterday morning. He was an Englishman by birth, and had resided as a recluse for many years in the house where he died. He had been a great navigator by land and water, and in the course of years had

Of all the wondrous sights nocturnal."

In the course of his peregrinations he had visited all the out-of-the-way places in the old and new world—consumed bird's nest soup with the Emperor of China, danced with the "sairidges" around the North Pole, crossed all line of latitude without tripping up, fought battles, and

"On Afric's plains and the wilds of Timbuctoo,
Slew a Sultan hand to hand,
Raised his red plume in victory's hand,
And showed 'em what he could do!"

He was, moreover, a man of great genius and extensive scientific acquirements. From his private note book, we make the following extracts:

"I first made a pencil in 1818, that gave the days of the week, the month, etc., and long afterwards I found Brahmah had a patent for the same sort of a pencil. I made a model of a twin-ship and sent it to the Marquis of Hastings, and Buckingham published it. Solved three intricate problems in the oriental star. A song on indigo, published in the India Gazette in 1820. A song on the Chinese war, published in the Columbo Observer. Made a reel in a bottle for Lady W. H. Ceylon in 1830 odd. Saw a water spout descend from a cloud to a large tank, which it emptied of all its water, weeds, and some brass pots that had been lost in it. The spout then entered a lake, and raised its tail up again to the cloud, and after moving about three miles, the cloud burst in rain, which fell in torrents, and destroyed one hundred acres of cotton and tobacco. Some of the pieces of brass pots raised from the eistern were afterwards found partly melted, and were brought to me by a man who was sent to examine into the phenomena.

"I saw in 1812 or 1814 a round ball of snakes, about fifty of them, fall down from the clouds on the parade, in front of the Sepoy lines at Hassarabaugh. I engrafted apples on locust seedling stocks, and found the produce much improved."

Da. King.—The controversy at Athens concerning the treatment of the American Missionary, Dr. King, appears to have been adjusted without difficulty by Mr. Marsh, the United States Minister at Constantinople. The steam frigate San Jacinto was sent for him, while the Cumberland remained at the Piræus. On reaching Athens he sought an interview with the Queen (regent during the absence of the King, who is visiting his friends in Germany), and it is understood that Dr. King's claims were conceded. Her Majesty is a clever little person, and quite as qualified for affairs as her Bavarian spouse. Mr. Marsh, soon after the negotiation, left in the San Jacinto, for Trieste, and will visit Venice and Italy on his route to Constantinople.

An Austrian Exile Dead.—Col. Wm. A. Beyse, who, with his two sons, was sentenced to twenty years' imprisonment by the Austrian Government, for his devotion to freedom, and who fled to this country before his sentence could be carried into effect, recently died near Mount Sterling, Me, where, with his family, he had settled on a farm he had lately purchased. As a civil engineer, he stood at the head of his profession in Austria.

The Fishery Settlement.—The National Intelligencer, in referring to the various speculations of the Eastern press, in relation to the reported settlement of the fishery dispute, says:

"We presume there has been no new arrangement entered into, even if any has been on either side thought of or proposed. All that was meant, as we believe, by the late accounts from England, was that the British Ministry had disclaimed the adoption of any new policy, or the enforcement of any more stringent regulations respecting the Fisheries than had been observed prior to the late groundless dare-up in this country; in short, that the British Ministry had no thought of adopting any new line of conduct in the premises, but meant to leave the subject, both in principle and practice, just where the treaty of 1818 placed it, and where it has remained ever since."

New Invention.—The Springfield (Mass.) Republican says that S. D. Nims, of Palmer, has made an invention for ringing a bell at every railroad crossing, when the cars are within half a mile of it. It consists of a gear, operated upon by the flange of the car wheels, which communicates motion to the bell by a wire.

A Narrow Escape.—It is stated that as the U. S. mail steamer Franklin, from Havre to NewYork, was passing through Cowes Roads, on getting abreast of the R. Y. S. schooner Constance, she fired two guns, according to custom, the wad of one of which passed directly over the head of the Marquis of Conyngham, who, with his son and daughters, was on deck. Had they been standing, fatal consequences would most probably have ensued.

Ohio State Fair.—A dispatch from Cleveland, dated the 17th inst., says: "Prof. Mapes delivered the annual address yesterday afternoon. Hon. H. L. Ellsworth, late commissioner of patents, also made a few remarks. The manufacturers' department is well filled from all parts of the Union. The collection of fowls is large and varied, and excites much interest. The collection of farming implements is unusually large. The total number of admissions into the enclosure yesterday was 40,000, and the number of strangers in town is estimated at 75,000. Pickpockets are doing a good business, and several of them have been arrested. One fellow was stabbed while in the act of picking a gentleman's pocket. The total receipts yesterday were $14,500. Mertin Wells was arrested yesterday for stealing $1400 and two horses belonging to St. Louis."

Fires.—A great fire occurred at Ravenna, Ohio, on the morning of the 15th inst., which burned down twelve stores and several private dwellings, but little of the contents being saved, so rapid was the spread of the flames. The loss is estimated at from $40,000 to $60,000 in building alone, the insurance on which is partial. The town presents a deplorable sight.

A destructive fire occurred at Elizabeth City, N. C., on the 10th inst. The warehouse and lumber yard of C. W. Suverly, the store of Capt. A. White, and an unoccupied warehouse, were consumed. The loss is estimated at $12,000.

Polish Exiles.—The exiles of Poland, to the number of over sixty, assembled in NewYork, a few evenings since and formed themselves into an association "for the purpose—as they say in their published address—of assisting their destitute countrymen either already in America or those who may arrive; and, further, to unite all patriotic Polish elements spread over America in such a manner as to enable us to became, together with similar corporations in Europe, a pillar of the regenerating and freeing of Poland."

The Record Divorce Case.—The now nearly forgotten Forest divorce case will be revived in NewYork, in the course of a few days; counsel for Mr. Forrest intending to argue the motion for appeal on the 25th inst. The report that the lady is about to marry again, in England, is not credited.

Collision.—The steamers Columbia and Maryland came in collision about 5 o'clock, on the morning of the 16th instant, in the Bay of Annepolis, by which both boats were badly injured. The consternation among the passengers was very great, but fortunately none were hurt.

The Japan Expedition.—Commodore Perry is now in Washington, and arrangements, it is said, are to be made for the speedy departure of the expedition to Japan. The repairs of the Mississippi, and the completion of the repairs of the Princeton are alone waited for. The full complement of seamen will be made up.

Deaths at Havana.—During the month of August there were 813 deaths in Havana, being about double the usual number; 397 were white, and 416 colored. The number of soldiers who died is not included, and among them there was great mortality.

Sale of a Ship.—The splendid clipper built ship Sovereign of the Seas, one amongst the largest and most elegant vessels of her kind in the world, has been sold in NewYork, for one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. She is now on her way to Californis.

Sailing of the Arctic.—The U. S. mail steamer Arctic sailed from NewYork for Liverpool on the 18th inst., with 100 passengers, and $825,000 in specie.

The Webster Movement.—The Boston Courier, the confidential organ of Mr. Webster, hoists the name of Webster and Jenkins at the head of its editorial columns.

Arrival of the Glasgow.—The steamship City of Glasgow has arrived at NewYork, from Glasgow, Scotland. She brought 166 passengers.

Death of the Mayor of Albany.—The Hon. Eli Perry, Mayor of Albany, N. Y., died on the 15th inst., of cholera morbus.

ENGLAND.

Parliament will not meet until the 11th of November. In the mean time, Mr. D'Israeli is said to be hard at work with his new financial scheme, but what shape it may assume is still more matter of conjecture. Rumors creep out occasionally that he proposes a great saving by reducing the three and a half per cent. into a two and a half per cent stock, giving to those who decline to accept the new arrangement the option of selling out at the current rates.

If rumor is to be credited, there are already serious and angry controversies in the cabinet. Mr. Christopher heading the discontents, and Mr. D'Israeli the progressionists. There are those who say that D'Israeli is preparing to do what Sir Robert Peel did before him—to go further in the way of practical reform than the whigs—and that his bidding high for popularity will enable the country to get better measures from the existing government than it would get from any government that is likely to follow them.

FRANCE.

The correspondent of a London paper has received a warning from the ministry of police, with an intimation that the next offence would be visited with expulsion. It is said that, from the 1st of September, a regular office of censorship on the foreign journals will be established at the post-office, and that no paper will be distributed until the transactions here been supervised by the ministry of police.

M. Girardin has replied with indignity to the assumption of Mr. Granier de Cassagnac, that but for the coup d'etat of December, France would have been the prey of pillagers and murderers. As editor of the Presse he points to the rank and merits of the men who have been expelled by the government. What is more to the purpose is the emphatic form of the denial. M. Girardin says at the close of each triumphant refutation, "Sir, you are a liar." "You are a liar and a slanderer"—language which, according to French usage, can only be answered by an invitation to appeal from the pen to the sword or pistol. Girardin, since his fatal rencontre with Carrel, has been converted from duelling. Grainer has no alternative but to challenge his adversary; but it does not seem probable that his challenge will be deemed more respectable by the editor of the Presse than it was by M. Creton, who refused either to fight or to apologise, after having called M. Grenier, in the Assembly, a miserable pamphleteer.

The honest indignation of M. Girardin against the Bonapartist calumniator of France, has brought down a second warning on Le Presse.

The Univers has nearly the whole of its front page filled with an article, the object of which is to increase the subscription that it has opened in aid of the funds to corer Dr. Newman in his defence against Dr. Achill, and which, the Univers says, has cost £19 000 sterling, while the whole amount of subscriptions in different countries is only £3000.

Another unsuccessful attempt was made with what is called the navigable balloon, at the Hippodrome. The experiment was brought to a premature end by the bursting of the balloon, and two persons were injured, one of them seriously.

ITALY.

Letters from Rome, of the 24th ult., inform us that the Pope was to visit the church of St. Louis des Fraliceaise on the 25th, where a funeral monument was to be inaugurated to the memory of the French soldiers who fell during the siege of Rome; their remains have been carefully collected and interred under the monument, which has been executed by M. Andrie, a young student of the French Academy at Rome.

TWO SICILIES.

A plot is said to have been discovered at Castrogiovanni, in Sicily. The conspirators, it is alleged, were in correspondence with Ruggerio Stettimo, the ex-chief of the revolutionery government, now a refugee in Malta. According to papers found upon an individual named Cinghero de Messina, who has been arrested, there is every reason to believe that several of the mounted chasseurs are in league with the conspirators. Eighteen soldiers of that corps have been arrested.

GERMANY.

The misfortunes of the German fleet, which was called into struggling existence during the revolutionary period, are finally extinct. After repeated failures to effect sales of the ships by private contract, they were finally put at auction, at Brake. The Deutschland, with the German flag, only fetched 9200 thalers, and was bought by a Bremen agent.

TURKEY.

A Roman Catholic Church is to be erected at Aleppo. The only one now existing there is within the Latin Convent. This is believed to be part of the satisfaction given to the French for the murder of the Capuchin Missionary, Father Basil.

INDIA.

Bombay dates are to July 24. We learn from the northwest frontier that Sir Colin Campbell has resigned the Peshawur command. The gallant Sir Colin thought he had an insufficient force, while the Board were of a different opinion. There has been temper shown on both sides.

By the news from Rangoon, the troops continue in a healthy state. It is positively stated that Gen. Godwin has demanded from the Governor-General a very large addition to his forces, and that 15,000 or 20,000 men will be placed under his command. Such a force must bring the Burmese Sovereign to his trumps. It seems that the military resources of the King of Ava have been considerably diminished since the last war. It is thought the next campaign will settle the affair. The little bill which his Majesty will have finally to pay already amounts to £500,000.

Foreign News by the Pacific.

The Charleston Courier has the following telegraphic summary of the news brought by the Pacific, which arrived at New York on the 18th inst.:

The British mail steamship Africa arrived at Liverpool, from New York, on the 4th inst.

The state of trade in the manufacturing districts of England was not so satisfactory, business being not so buoyant.

Trade in France was disturbed in consequence of the Commercial Convention with Belgium, and a remonstrance had been addressed to the French Chamber of Commerce respecting it.

The crops throughout England and the Continent of Europe generally, were promising.

The Dutch Markets have improved. Three hundred chests of Carolina rice were sold at Entwerp at from 13¾ to 14 fls.

A misunderstanding has occurred between England and Turkey in consequence of two British vessels having been fired into while passing through the Dardanelles. Explanations have been demanded from the Porte in relation to the matter.

France.—Great preparations are making for the proposed tour of Louis Napoleon to Vienna.

The Austrian Lloyds says that the marriage of Louis Napoleon with the Princess Vasa, has only been postponed on account of her ill health, and that it will take place after the proclamation of the Empire. The same paper states also that the French Senate will be convoked to obtain the decision of the people regarding the Empire.

The French Minister at the Hague has been recalled.

The Paris Journal des Debats strongly condemns the course of England in seizing French vessels without previous notice.

Belgium.—The Austrian Envoy at Brussels has addressed a strong note to the Belgian Government relative to the indignity offered to Marshal Haynau.

The Late Accident on the Erie Railroad.—A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun furnishes the following particulars of the recent terrible accident on the New York and Erie Railroad:

The accommodation train, running east, was just starting from the Almond depot, one minute before its time, when it was run into behind by a freight train, which was said to be running by telegraph, off its regular time. The locomotive plowed its way through the passenger car of the accommodation train near its entire length, and of the eleven or twelve persons, including passengers and hands on that car, no one escaped unhurt. One—Sanbury, of Hornellsville, was instantly killed. Jas. McElroy, brakeman, of Canada, Thomas McCullen, oil-man, of Dunkirk, expired in a few minutes. Matthew B. Stillman, of Friendship, Allegany county, and J. E. Oreek, said to be from Addison, died about eight o'clock this morning.

William Wickham, Jr., of Watage, N. J., is still living, at one o'clock, a. m., but in a very critical condition.

Mr. Mackey, millwright, of Jefferson, and John Clancy, Irishman, of Waverly, are badly scalded, but some hope for their recovery. Billy Donoell, conductor of the accommodation train, is awfully burned, but may recover. One or two others escaped with slight scalds and bruises. The engineer of the freight train sprat by the furnace door, and escaped unhurt. The fireman jumped off soon enough to save himself. The scene, as described by the inhabitants, who heard the screams and cries of the scalding passengers, was heart-rending beyond degree. All the dead that were not killed by the concussion were scalded by the escaping steam from the locomotive. The skins of several hands, with the nails on, were picked up this morning.

The Police System of London.—The police of London consists of two commissioners, (appointed by the crown,) who are magistrates for the districts over which they preside; one chief superintendent; eighteen superintendents; 121 police stations; 124 inspectors; 585 sergeants; and 4707 constables—in all, 5525 persons. About 3700 men are on duty all night, and about 1800 all day. During the night they never cease patrolling the whole time they are on duty, being forbidden even to sit down. Every street, road, lane, alley and court within the metropolitan police district—that is, the whole of the metropolis, (except that small part called the city of London,) the county of Middlesex, and all the parishes (218 in number) in the counties of Surrey, Kent, Essex and Hertfordshire, which are not more than fifteen miles from Charing Cross, comprising an area of about 700 square miles, ninety miles in circumference, with a population of two and a half millions—is visited constantly, night and day, by some of the police. The ordinary constables—the rank and file of the force—are paid eighteen shillings sterling per week, the sum increasing according to rank. The total cost of the force in 1850 was £383,108, in addition to which the police courts cost £450,000.

A new kind of Mirror has been introduced into this city, which may be considered a kind of labor-saving machine, as with one of these looking-glasses a person need not look out of the window to see what is going on, up or down the street. Two mirrors are set at right angles on the window, and in these every individual passing up or down on either side, is visible to the person sitting inside the window. It is a neat and convenient little affair, made by two Swedish fabricators, and may be seen in the Art Union rooms, and looking-glass stores on Chestnut street [Philadelphia Ledger.

Cholera.—The Western mail brings a report of the prevalence of cholera at Toledo, Ohio. It is said that twenty deaths a day were occurring.

The new Postmaster General, Hon. Samuel D. Hubbard, has arrived in Washington, and will at once enter upon the discharge of his duties.

Cholera at Rochester.—Fourteen deaths from cholera occurred at Rochester, on the 9th and 10th instant. The disease was increasing.

Hon. Ben. Hardin.—We copy the following from the Elizabethtown (Ky.) Register of September 16: "The health of the Hon. Ben. Hardin is rapidly declining, and no hopes are entertained of his recovery. The news of his death may soon be expected. We understand that he has made a profession of religion, has become a member of the Methodist church, and expresses a willingness to leave the shores of mortal life."

Telegraphic Items.

Three Days Later from Europe—Arrival of the Africa.

NewYork, Tuesday, September 21.

The Cunard steamer Africa has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 11th instant, three days later than the accounts brought by the Pacific. The following is a summary of her commercial news:

Liverpool Markets.

Liverpool, September 11.

There has been only a moderate demand in the Cotton market since the departure of the Niagara on the 4th instant, and the sales of the week have been limited to 41,000 bales. Speculators have taken 6000, and exporters 4000 bales. The official quotations are, Fair Orleans 6⅝d; Middling Orleans 5⅝d; Fair Uplands 6d, and Middling Uplands 5⅝d per lb., showing a decline of nearly ⅛d.

Flour has been in moderate request at 20s per bbl. for Western Canal, and 21s for Ohio. Corn is without much change, and the quotations are for Yellow 28s 6d, and White 29s per quarter. Lard firm, at 50s per cwt. Consols have declined to 99⅞.

Ohio River—Markets.

Pittsburgh, September 21.

There is now barely 3 feet 2 inches water in the channel and the river still falling.

Cincinnati, September 21.

The river here is yet stationary. Markets quiet and the rates unchanged.

Temperance Movement.

Philadelphia, September 23.

The State Temperance Convention commenced its sessions yesterday, at Trenton, New Jersey. About one thousand delegates were present. Resolutions were adopted, urging the passage of prohibitory laws with regard to the sale of liquors, and opposing the proposition of a separate political organization.

NewYork Markets.

NewYork, September 24.

There is very little inquiry in the Cotton market, and prices are nominal. Flour is steady, at $4 31½ to $4 37½ per lb. for Slate, and $4 50 to $4 55 for Southern brands. Corn is in moderate request at 68 to 69c. per bushel for Mixed Western. Provisions dull, at previous rates. Sales of Lard at 11½c per lb.

Post Office Envelopes.—The post route bill passed by Congress contains a provision authorizing the Post Office Department to cause envelopes to be made, with suitable water marks on the paper, identifying them as official, and with a printed stamp, for single or double postage, with a suitable device. These envelops are to be sold at all the post offices, at the price of the stamps now sold—with the very small addition of the actual cost of the envelopes. This will enable persons to deposit their letters, pre-paid, in the post offices at all hours, without trouble or inconvenience, and without the risk of having double postage charged on a letter, by reason of the stamp slipping off by the time the letter gets in the office, if not before, as is too often the case now. It will also admit of the safe transmission of letters by private hand, when preferred, without a violation of the post office laws, which, after the first of October, will be very stringent on the subject.

Distressing Occurrence.—A most distressing occurrence, resulting in the death of three members of a family, lately occurred at Black Creek, near Goldsboro,' N. C. Mr. Farrell, in whose family the casualty happened, went to his own field at twilight in the evening to superintend some labor, leaving a brandy still, which he had been running during the day, in charge of his wife. During his absence, Mrs. Farrell, her daughter, who was a grown up young lady, and a younger child, undertook to empty the vessel into which the liquor was running from the still, the young lady taking a candle with her. Having emptied the brandy into a barrel, the young lady lifted up the tunnel, and said to her mother she would touch the candle to it to see the brandy burn. At this moment, the fumes of the brandy were escaping from the bung of the barrel, and the burning drops falling into it from the funnel an explosion followed, which was heard throughout the neighborhood. Mr. Farrell hastened from the field, and found his wife and children enveloped in flame. The child died almost instantly; the young lady two days after, and Mrs. Farrell the same evening. Mr. Farrell was also badly burned while endeavoring to extinguish the flames.

Factory Life.—Mrs. Nichols, the editor of the Windham County Democrat, (Vermont,) publishes a long and able article upon the stupifying, as well as demoralizing, nature of factory life to young girls. "Whatever inducements or advantages factory life has left," says the writer, "will soon disappear before the influx of foreign hands. Indeed, the inevitable tendency of things, in all our large manufacturing cities, is downwards to permanent and degraded factory population, like to that of Birmingham and Manchester, in England." "Does it," she asks, "aim in any way to qualify its female operatives for the duties and relations of domestic life? Does it give the delicate girl, in return for sacrifice of health and years of toil, aught but bank bills and bread?" Is there a single accomplishment, or, (save a machine-like regularity) advantage gained during years spent at the mills, that is not obtained despite, and not in consequence of being engaged in them?" These questions are answered emphatically in the negative.

The Webster Convention.—In Electoral Ticket Nominated—Boston. Sept. 10.—The Webster Convention, which assembled at Boston yesterday, issued a long and able address to the people of the State, concluding as follows:

"We call upon the friends of the Union every where throughout the country to arouse themselves from the lethargy which is upon them, and to act with the vigor that becomes them—we call upon independent whigs every where to reject an organization which will hand down the National Government to a sectional fragment of their great party in hands that they cannot approve. We call upon the people every where to undo the work of politicians of every party, who would persuade them that they have too little intelligence to confer their highest honors upon their best statesmen, and that military reputation is the best avenue to the Government of this great Republic. Even now, if they assume their rightful control over the destinies of their country, it is not too late to place at the head of its affairs an Administration worthy of its better days, and able to perpetuate to a united people a Constitution which has made the blessings of liberty and union one and inseparable."

The following Electoral Ticket was then nominated:

Electors at Large—Pliny Cutter, of Boston; Edward A Newton, of Pittsfield.

Congressional Districts—1st District, Isaiah Gifford, of Provincetown. 2d, Samuel Slay, of Attleboro'. 3d, Frederick W. Lincoln, of Canton. 4th, Wm Hayden, of Boston. 5th, George T. Curtis, of Boston. 6th, Mark Haley, of Linn. 7th, Albert H. Nelson, of Woburn. 8th, H. Y. B. Pearson, of Harvard. 9th, ——. 10th, Homer Foote, of Springfield. 11th, Luther Griffin, of Richmond.

J. L. Dimmock, in announcing the candidates, said Mr. Jenkins, of Georgia, was as great a man as Mr. Webster, only he was not as well known in Massachusetts. The several names, as they were called, were received with great applause, although the chairman said they were all well known to the people of Massachusetts.

The following persons were announced as the Webster Executive Committee: Hon. Hubbard Winslow, Tolman Willey, H. Lyman, Charles A. White, J. A. Hedge, John L. Dimmock, Charles A. Wells, Arthur Pickering, Charles Torrey, Thomas Watcher.

A majority of them are residents of Boston. This closed the business. Speeches were then made by the Rev. M. J. Smith, Rev. Hubbard Winslow, a young lawyer named Wilson, and others. No distinguished politicians took part in the meeting, which adjourned shortly before ten o'clock, with nine cheers for Webster.

Letter of the Hon. John P. Hale, Accepting the Free-Soil Nomination.—The following is the letter of the Hon. John P. Hale, addressed to the Hon. Henry Wilson, accepting the free-soil nomination for the Presidency:

Dover, N. H., Sept. 6, 1852.

My Dear Sir: When I wrote to my friend G. G. Fogg, Esq., of Concord, prior to the Pittsburgh Convention, declining in anticipation any nomination by that body, I supposed that I should not have occasion to trespass on the attention of any one on that subject. The decision which I then announced was not only in accordance with my own taste and judgment, but was also in pursuance of the earnest and oft-repeated request of those whose wishes I felt bound to respect, viz., my wife and children.

I had supposed and hoped, after that letter was written, that the close of my present term of service in the Senate would close forever my political career, and that the brief period which was to elapse between the present and that event might not be disturbed by any attempt on the part of my friends to introduce my name into the contests and struggles of a Presidential election.

But the members of that Convention, with singular unanimity, have judged differently. Such being the case, and the friends with whom I sympathize having determined that the great interests of civil and constitutional liberty may be best promoted by a course different from that indicated by myself, I have not felt at liberty, under the peculiar circumstances of the occasion, to set up my own opinion in direct opposition to such an expression of my friends. I therefore yield my own wishes and opinions to those of my friends, and thus assent to what has been done, notwithstanding my previous refusal to consent that it might be done.

I wish also to say to you, and through you to that portion of the public who may feel any interest in the matter, that to inquiries which may be made of me, as well as to those which have already been made, as to what my opinions are on various subjects, I have no answer to make. I suppose that those who nominated me did it from a conviction of what I would do, founded on a knowledge of what I had done, rather than any facility I might be supposed to possess in making pledges and promises for the future.

But if I were ever so much disposed to enter the lists and contend with those who deal in promises and pledges, and professions of fidelity to the cause we espouse, I could hardly hope to come up to the standard of those made by men prominent in our ranks four years ago, but which have been since forgotten and trampled upon by those who made them, in their hot haste to enroll themselves under a banner upon which are inscribed sentiments and principles, seven-fold more odious and abominable than those against which they have revolted.

Very respectfully, your friend,

John P. Hale.

The Pennsylvania Loan.—The three millions of the Pennsylvania 5 per cent. railroad loan, taken by H. C. Fisher, is for the Barings and Rothschilds, at $103 20 for every $100 of this loan.

Preparing for the Worst.—The Directors of the Camden and Amboy (N. J.) Railroad Company have provided a medicine chest for each train of cars, so that in case of sickness or accident the proper remedies will be accessible at the shortest notice.

Cotton Crop of the United States.—We have no reason to specially refer our mercantile friends to the Annual Statement of the Cotton Crop of the Union. We republish from the N. Y. Shipping List. The total far exceeds all calculations made, and is suggestive of large and steady increase in the future.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Loud knocking at the door was shortly after heard, and she hastened thither. It was her master and his family, accompanied by several of their neighbors. The unaccustomed appearance of the mill-sails in full swing on the Sunday, and, as she anticipated, attracted their attention, and they had hastened home from church for the purpose of ascertaining the cause of the phenomenon. The father bore the boy in his arms; he had cut the cords wherewith the child was tied, but he was unable to obtain any account of the extraordinary circumstances that had occurred from the affrighted innocent.

Hannchen, in a few words, told all; and then the spirit which had sustained her so long and so well while the emergency lasted, forsook her at once as it passed away. She fell senseless into the arms of the miller's eldest son, and was with great difficulty recovered.

The machinery of the mill was at once stopped, and the inesiminate ruffian dragged forth from the great wheel. The other ruffian was brought down from his prison. Both were then bound, and put on to them under strong escort; and, in due course, came under the hands of the town executioner.

It was not long till Hanchenn became a bride. The bridegroom was the miller's son, who had loved her long and well, but with a passion previously unrequited. They lived thenceforward happily together for many years, and died at a good old age, surrounded by a flourishing family." To the latest hour of her life, this brave-hearted woman would shudder as she told the tale of her danger, and her deliverance.

Splendid Eruption of Etna.

MALTA, Wednesday, Aug. 25.

At 8 P.M. of the 20th of August, a party of English, composed of Captain and Mrs Hallett, two Misses Sankey, Hon. Lieut. Finch, (68th Light Infantry), and Lieutenant Ravenhill, (Royal Engineer), with three guides, three muleteers, and a servant, together with eleven mules, left Nicolisi with an intention of ascending Mount Etna, and taking a shelter at the Casa Inglese. At 11 o'clock the party, in excellent spirits, reached the Bosco, where they put on their light clothing. The wind was blowing fresh from the westward; so much so, indeed, that the guides persuaded a small Italian party to defer their ascent till the morning, but could not succeed with our friends, the leader of whom had weathered too many stiff breezes at sea to turn his back on one on shore—on, therefore, they went.

Passing the Bosco about two miles, the huge crater below Etna, called the Colossal, glared awfully, and shortly threw up large bodies of fire and smoke. Immediately after Etna vomited forth its fire and ashes, and as the wind set towards the Casa Inglese, it was not prudent to seek its friendly shelter, as in all probability it would be destroyed; their course was, therefore, changed, the Colossal being now the point to which it was directed.

The weather, which had been very cold, was increasing in its comfortless intensity, and when our travelers had got above the height of the Casa Inglese, in a narrow defile, of which sand and lava were the component parts, they were overtaken by a hurricane so violent, that in an instant seven mules and their riders were blown over; and not only so, but to render the scene more terrific, it was afterwards found they were blown to the very edge of the crater.

For the gentlemen to descend in search of their companions was the result of a moment's decision. At this time the scene was indescribably grand—heaven and earth presented one magnificent glare of light—Etna above vomiting its sulphurie flames, the Colossi below belching forth its dense masses of smoke, lurid from the furnace below, the huge mountain pouring out from its interior prolonged moanings, without, the hurricane roaring in all its mighty and awful majesty. Crowling on their knees and hands, unable to face the violence of the hurricane, the gentlemen sought the ladies, who were not discovered and collected together until after a search of twenty minutes. They were then placed under columns of lava, their light clothing literally blown off their backs, and a pyramid of living beings was formed around them for their safety and protection.

As by magic the scene suddenly changed. An earthquake shook the land. Up jumped the guides, bawling their unmusical evenli! evenli! (get on: get on!) mules broke from their keepers and were abandoned to their fate, the hurricane increased in strength—the scene around was too majestic for contemplation, too diversified for description—in ten minutes the little party had fallen from sheer exhaustion on the pointed lava. To face the wind charged with sand and small stone was beyond their power. In this manner two hours passed away, and most anxiously did they look for the approach of dawn.

Within the crater, which some of the party courageously examined, forty small furnaces were burning awfully; these, as they reached Catania, seemed to amalgamate, and one vast issue appeared to carry destruction to some villages and pasture lands, which, as reported, have been seriously injured.

Often has the indomitable courage of the soft sex, when tested, been proved to be greater than that of man. Nothing on this occasion could equal their more than heroism. On setting forth on their return the sharp points of the lava presented no obstacle; courageously did they undertake their six mile walk, regardless of all the inconveniences, and reached the Bosco at 7 A. M., when after an abstinence of sixteen hours, a hasty dejeuner was a welcome event. After spending a few minutes in this employment they continued their journey by mules, and reached Nicolisi by 10, whence they started for Catania, which they reached at 2 30 P. M. The Italian party which had preceded them had reported their obstinacy in proceeding against the opinion of their guides, and this led to the natural report that they were numbered with the dead.

Their safety, indeed, is miraculous; for had rain ensued, as often happens before an eruption, they would have been washed away; had the wind changed, they would have died under the sulphur-impregnated air. As it was the Catanese turned out and hailed the return of the brave party as men and women miraculously saved from a fearful doom. [Malta Mail.

"AND SHE WAS A WIDOW."—A pale and pensive lady has just passed—she is clad in "the weeds of profoundest woe"—doubtless she is a widow.

A moment to imagine her history. He whom she mourns had wooed her in her girlhood. There is a fragrant nook, where a rivulet gurgles, which she never remembers save with tears, wherein love's blessed drama was performed by their fervid lips. They were wed at last. Months, perhaps years departed—and then the shadow fell. He blessed her amid the murehes of the night, and in the morning went out with the stars. The earth is laden with such histories.

She was blithe and merry once. She loved the customs of society, and adhered with a sort of piety to the maxims of fashion. Gay and happy was the world in which she did dwell. But it is changed now.

It is a mournful thing to carry a dead heart in a living bosom. It is a bitter thing for a lip used to dainties to feed on ashes. It is a fearful thing for the living to know that their only treasure is hid in the still and mouldy grave—beautiful life linked to repulsive corruption.

Her dieters are written upon her meek face. Its expression translates her mattered yearnings. She longs to join in the distant and better country him who has gone before.

The waleoma hour is nearer then she thinks. They shall soon lay her beside her buried idol. How lovely will be that dying smile, when the prayerful lips shall close at the touch of death's cold finger. God grant that the drooping lily of earth may become a fadeless amaranth in Heaven.

A BLOODY TRAGEDY.—The Madison Banner publishes the following account of a horrible tragedy, recently enacted in Indiana:

Two brothers, Ilram and Warren Francisco, residents of this county and well known in the community as respectable and peaceable citizens, have been for some time selling clocks in Jackson county, in this State. They usually travel different routes, but make a practice of meeting each other frequently. They agreed to meet at a public house in the vicinity of Brownstown, last Friday night. One of the brothers reached the tavern about nine o'clock, and inquired if his brother had arrived, and was informed by the landlord he had not. After eating his supper he called for a light and asked to be shown a bed. The landlord informed him he had no candles about the house but that, if he would follow him, he would take him to a bed. Francisco followed the landlord into a dark room and undressed himself and retired to rest. The bed seemed to be wet, and, having some matches about him he struck a light. Upon examining the bed he found that it was wet with blood. Discovering a candle on a table near by, he lit it, and looking under the bed, saw the body of his brother, with his throat cut from ear to ear, and perfectly lifeless. Fastening the door immediately, he proceeded to load a revolver which he had, but before he could do so there was an effort made by several men to enter his room. Pretending not to be alarmed, he asked them to wait until he dressed himself. As soon as he had finished loading his pistol he opened the door, and the landlord and two other men rushed on him, when he fired two barrels of his pistol, immediately killing the landlord and one of his accomplices, after which the other man fled.

We further learn that Francisco went before a justice of the peace in Brownstown and surrendered himself up, but after an examination of the case, the justice released him.

THE LIGHTNING.—A Few Hints.—It may be well to encourage timid people who are religiously or constitutionally alarmed at lightning, to state the doctrine of chances. As a general thing, the lightning does not strike within the space of a square mile, more than once a year. If the person is a rod distant, he is seldom if ever killed. Now there are 70,400 square rods in a square mile, and if the lightning struck rod after rod, it would take 100 years to go over it; but it smites here and there, and that it will smite any specified rod, there is not more than one chances to a hundred billions.

Again, other things being equal, the chance diminishes as it regards a low object, as the difference between the square of its height and that of a tower; so that with a person six feet, and a tree sixty feet, there is but one chance out of 3564 of the person's being struck. If he will go close to a tree, or in a house without a rod, his danger is proportionally increased.

Again, objects, non-conductors when dry, become good conductors when wet. A dry silk umbrella, if not tipped with metallic substance, will ward off the lightning; but if wet, not. Set lightning rods for your houses and see to it that the fastenings be much smaller than the rods—that the rods enter the earth, and fear not the "red artillery."

It is well for persons who are naturally timid to get electrified a number of times. It renders them less electric, and therefore less in danger. Finally, a death by lightning is the easiest of all deaths. An electric enters, we are instantly filled, and life is gone without a pang. "Ah! but the hereafter!" Well, live right here, and it will be all right with you there—if it must be so.

ADVERTISING.—Barnum, who bought his Museum in New York ten or twelve years ago, when he was not worth a dollar, and who is now a "millionaire," thus sets forth the way to make money:

"Advertise your business. Do not hide your light under a bushel. Whatever your occupation or calling may be, if it need support from the public, advertise it thoroughly and efficiently, in some shape or other; that will arrest public attention. I freely confess that what I have had in life may fairly be attributed more to the public press than to nearly all other causes combined. There may possibly be occupations that do not require advertising, but I cannot well conceive what they are. Men in business will sometimes tell you that they have tried advertising and that it did not pay. This is only when advertising is done sparingly and grudgingly. Incapacitate dose of advertising will not pay, perhaps; it is like a half portion of physic, making the patient sick but effecting nothing. Administer liberally, and the cure will be sure and permanent."

A BENEVOLENT BANKER.—The Staunton (Va.) Spectator states that Mr. Corcoran, the wealthy Washington banker, was recently informed by the lady philanthropist, Miss DIX, of the destitute condition of a deaf and dumb orphan girl of Washington, who had been unable to obtain a place in the Northern institutions. Mr. Corcoran immediately addressed Miss Dix a check for a sufficient amount to educate the girl—with the choice of course.

Foreign News by the Humboldt.

We find in our northern exchanges, the following summary of the news brought by the steamer Humboldt. The news is four days later than was brought by the Europa.

Queen Victoria left Osborne House on the 30th ultimo with Prince Albert and the Royal Children, for the Highlands of Scotland. Her reception on the whole route was most enthusiastic.

Telegraphic dispatches in anticipation of the overland India and China mail had been received, with dates from Bombay to the 24th of July. The missing Indian steamer (the Ittraile) when 700 miles distant from Aden, with the mail of the 25th June, had been obliged to return to Bombay, for want of coal. The Governor General of India had proceeded to Rangoon, to concert measures with General Goodwin. The British troops in Burmah were healthy, and were about to be largely reinforced, preparatory to a general advance upon Ava, to take place in November.

The cholera was pursuing its march westward through Europe, and prevailed in several parts of Prussia. The accounts of its spread are more and more unfavorable.

Mount Etna, in the Island of Sicily, became suddenly convulsed on the night of the 20th August, and a magnificent eruption took place, which has not been surpassed by any within the last forty years. It was feared several villages would be destroyed by the streams of lava.

The European and Continental news is unusually devoid of incident. In France, the movement, fomented and encouraged by the Government, for producing an early establishment of the Empire, was progressing rapidly, and an Imperial regime is apparently not far distant. The Moniteur announces that the President would leave Paris on the 15th of September, for a tour through the Southern Departments, and fixes his return for the 16th of October; so that, for a whole month, Paris will have to deplore the absence of the Chief of the State. The Constitutionel, in an article emanating from authority, hints at a commercial treaty between France and Germany.

Great interest was excited by the warfare going on between the Times, the great organ of English opinion, and the Paris Moniteur. Several exchanges of shot had taken place, and when the Humboldt left, the firing was becoming warmer than ever, the Moniteur accusing the Times of willful misrepresentation and defamation—the Times retorting on the French Government with affirmation of the entire truth of its statement, and taunting Louis Napoleon with being afraid of giving the truth publicity; as it was known that the articles in the Moniteur were direct from the pen of the French autocrat, the discussion was an important one. Louis Napoleon had resolved upon preventing the circulation of these articles in France, and had ordered that for the future all English newspapers are to be opened at the Postoffice; so that any objectionable matter may be suppressed.

A loan of £2,000,000 sterling for the bank of Constantinople, guaranteed by the Ottoman Government, had been brought out on the London Stock Exchange, and was likely to find subscribers.

Three weeks later news had been received from Australia, dates from Sydney being to the 3d of June, and from Victoria to the 29th May. The rains so anxiously desired had set in, and a great increase in the production of gold resulted. The receipts at Ports Phillip and Sydney were immense.

HEALTH OF LONDON.—There were but 930 deaths in London, during the fourth week in August. This is said to be far below the average.

HARVEST PROSPECTS IN IRELAND.—The reports of the progress of the harvest in Ireland are in general more favorable than of late. The damage to the potato crop appears to be much less than was contemplated. The Clonmel Chronicle says: The weather continues fine, and all hands are busily employed at harvest work. The late rains did some partial damage to the heavy wheat and oat crops, but on the whole the farmer has not much reason to complain. We hear no more complaints about the potato disease, and we therefore hope our fears as to a total failure were not warranted by the extent of the dreaded evil.

The Ballinasloe Star has the following:

"In oats there will be an abundant yield; even though 'lodged' very much, the damage is not considerable. The hay will suffer more than any other description of produce; at present there is great difficulty in saving it, but the callow meadows are seriously injured. Potatoes are coming into our market as fine as we have ever seen them, and people generally declare that the disease is not extending."

The Meath Herald has the following:

"Harvest work progresses in this district with a rapidity such as we have seldom witnessed. An immensity of oats have been cut down during the past week, which promises to yield above an average quantity. Potatoes are improving in quality as the season advances, and we have little doubt but that the supply will double that of last year. Green crops are doing well."

The Galway Vindicator says:

"Our advices this morning from all parts of the province agree in the improved condition of the potato crop, and no doubt is entertained that we shall have a sufficient supply. The progress of disease appears to have been arrested, and the gloomy anticipations of a total failure have vanished. The potatoes, in general, about Tuam are holding out well, and the virus has evidently spent itself. Whilst it must be admitted that some patches are rather badly affected, in many cases scarcely a tainted one in one hundred can be found."

FRANCE.

General Haynau is still in Paris. On the 29th ult. he dined with a large party at the house of a great capitalist. There were several French officers and other persons of distinction present, and, in the course of the evening one of them, whilst paying his compliments to General Haynau on his military skill, which, he said, had been serviceable not only merely to his own sovereign, but also to Europe in general, alluded delicately to the report which had been circulated against him on the subject of the illtreatment of a female. General Haynau replied as follows:

"I had intended to leave to history the task of doing me justice, but I am thankful to you, sir, for giving me this opportunity of contradicting an infamous calumny. It is quite true that a female was flogged. The Countess——, on the abdication of the predecessor of my Emperor, in order to express her joy, had a figure representing him dressed up, and, with her entire household, went through the farce of interment, with the most outrageous insults to the illustrious personage. The captain chief d'escadron, who was in the place, hearing of the affair, arrested the Countess, and ordered her to be flogged. This is true; but I declare, on the honor of a soldier, (sur mon honneur comme militaire,) which I hold sacred, that when this occurred I was at a distance of sixty leagues from the place, and, when I heard of it, I expressed disapprobation of the conduct of that officer, and placed him under arrest."

After some further explanations, Gen. Haynau observed that he had been spoken of as a severe and harsh man. He would admit, he said, that he had shown severity, but it was in the conscientious performance of his duty. He was at the head of brave troops, ardently devoted to their Sovereign, and it became him to act with energy as the best means of bringing to a close a war in which they had so many difficulties to contend with. "I regard war," he added, "as the greatest scourge that can be inflicted on humanity, and consider that a severity which is likely to hasten the triumph of one of the contending parties is the best sort of humanity that can be practiced." He then alluded to the charge that had been brought against him, in cold blood, ordering at one time the execution of eighteen persons. These persons, he said, were condemned by the military tribunals, after a patient examination into the charges against them. He had nothing to do with their condemnation. He had not the power, indeed, of preventing their execution, but circumstances were not such as to make clemency consistent with duty. An example was necessary, and he allowed justice to take its course.

COM. PERRY, GEORGE LAW, AND CUBA.—Ion, the Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, has the following interesting (if true) statement, relative to the Cuban movements on foot. It says:

Washington, Sept. 12.—The statement that Com. Perry had been summoned to this city for objects connected with supposed designs on the part of citizens of the United States, to make another descent on Cuba—cannot be true. The Secretary of the Navy and the President were not here to confer with the Commodore at the time which the rumor mentioned. There are no very startling proofs of the facts that another filibuster expedition is about to be on foot. Some of George Law's muskets have been sent to Cuba, and the recipients of them are likely to be garoted without the choice of handling them.

No power is able to conquer Cuba from the Spanish crown, except George Law. He has, as he proclaimed a while ago, a fleet of the most powerful and swiftest steamers in the world, ready for war purposes—and a large supply of every thing necessary to naval armament; artillery stores, muskets, swords, pistols, ammunition, and what not, for carrying on a prolonged war with any first-rate power. Of course he can enlist any number of filibusters in his service; or he may become an ally of the new organization of the Lone Star, and these two powers united would be an overmatch for all Spain, or for the United States.

If, in fine, George Law is going any further in this business—and it seems he has commenced it by sending out a lot of muskets to Cuba—the Executive Government will only waste time in attempting to defeat his movements: for their consultations with Commodore Perry would result in nothing but the conviction that no naval force, or no adequate force, is at the command of this Government for the purpose of suppressing illegal expeditions against Cuba. It is whispered that an expedition is certain to be got up in the next month, October; but I do not credit it.

The cholera movement, at the present time, is a subject of as much importance as the Presidential, filibuster, or fishery questions. We have accounts by the last arrivals, of the appearance in Central Europe of this mysterious scourge, in its worst form. It is traveling westward, as before, and no one has any right to say that it will not sweep across this continent, in its western march. On the contrary, the little knowledge we have had of laws governing its progress, leads us to infer that it will visit this country. Our cities ought to be warned in time of the approach of the pestilence, on attack of which is one that is not easily cured or prevented.

GALVANISM IN ASTHMA.—Perhaps in no disease is galvanism of greater value than in cases of asthma. Dr. Wilson Philip particularly recommends it for this complaint. In nearly every case of asthma I have had, I have been successful.

A lady of Torquay was brought to me in a carriage, so dreadfully afflicted with the asthma that her friends imagined every moment she would be suffocated; indeed, it was enough to make one's heart sobe to witness the agony she was enduring. I placed her under the action of the galvanic apparatus, administering it so weak, that she was scarcely aware I was galvanizing her at all. In ten minutes her anxious friends, as well as myself, noticed that the breathing was getting easier; in five minutes more she exclaimed, "Thank God, I am relieved!" She was now breathing quite freely, and told me that she wished she had tried it years ago, and had not listened to the advise of her medical attendant, who was continually ridiculing galvanism. In one month she left me, quite free from the complaint! I have lately been informed that she mounts a hill with the hilarity of a young girl. [Hales on Medical Galvanism.

HOW INDIGO IS PREPARED.—The indigo is a shrub-like plant two or three feet high, with delicate shine green leaves, which, at the harvest time, about the month of August, are cut off close to the stem, tied in bundles, and laid in great wooden tubs. Planks are then laid on them, and great stones to cause a pressure, and then water is poured over them, and after a day or two the liquor begins to ferment. In this process of fermentation lies the principal difficulty, and every thing depends on allowing it to continue just the proper time. When the water has acquired a dark green color, it is poured into other tubs mixed with lime, and stirred with wooden shovels till the deposit separates itself from the water, which is then allowed to run off. The remaining substance, the indigo, is then put into linen bags, through which the moisture filters, and as soon as the indigo is dry and hard, it is broken into pieces and packed up. Indigo is cultivated in the West Indies to a considerable extent. [Scientific American.

The floor of the Crystal Palace is soon to be taken up, when vast treasures are expected by some to be brought to light. It is expected that large sums have been secured by the first comers.

THE RECENT FRESHET IN SOUTH CAROLINA.—The Charleston Courier of Thursday, 16th inst., says: "To give some idea of the vast amount of water created by the recent freshet, we would state that we were politely furnished yesterday by Capt. Arthur McOee, of the steamer Nina, with a bottle filled with water taken by him from the ocean, one mile east of the mouth of the Santee River, which, on tasting, we found to be perfectly free from all saline properties whatsoever. Capt. McOee also informs us that very great damage has occurred on the Rice Lands on the Santee, down as far as Mr. W. B. Pringle's plantation. Below that point, however, no material injury has been sustained. The Santee is now falling. On the Pee Dee, so far, everything is in good condition, but the planters are unable, we learn, to harvest their rice, of which there is a considerable quantity ready for the sickle, in consequence of the vast amount of water in the fields. Should the crop, however, be detained any length of time by another fresh from above, and there are rumors that one has occurred, serious injury may be sustained."

BIG BELL.—Wm. Kaye, bell-founder of Louisville, is casting a bell for the Catholic Cathedral in that city, which, when finished, will probably be the largest in the United States. It will be six feet high, ten feet in diameter at the bottom, and will weigh 4000 pounds!

A NORWEGIAN COLONY.—Ole Bull has just arrived in Philadelphia from a tour to the Western part of Pennsylvania, where he has purchased a large body of land, on which he designs to establish a colony of his countrymen, the hardy, industrious people of Norway.

SWALLOWED BY A WHALE.—The whaling bark Sacramento, Capt. Sowle of Westport, was spoken at sea, Aug 22, in latitude 35 50, N., longitude 51 20, W., and reported that a few days previous they had lost the second mate, Mr. Timothy Allen, of Westport, who was knocked overboard while fast to a whale, and when last seen was in the monster's mouth.

IMPORTANT SUIT AND DECISION.—An important case was tried, a few days since, in the Circuit Court of Shenandoah county, Va. The Rockingham Register states that about a year since a gentleman, while going down the Valley, in a stage coach, belonging to Messrs. Parish, Harman & Co., was seriously injured by the upsetting of the coach. His leg was dreadfully broken, insomuch that he is inside a cripple for life. He brought suit against the company, obtaining damages to the amount of $10,000. The jury in the case rendered a verdict for the plaintiff and assessed the damages at $9,000. This is the first case of the kind that has ever been tried in Virginia, and may be regarded as fixing the principle that in case of carelessness the proprietors of stage coaches are liable for damages in case of injury to the passengers.

THE CASE OF DR. GARDINER.—A correspondent in Washington informs the Baltimore Sun that the investigation in the case of Dr. Gardiner has been in progress sometime, under the auspices of the committee of Congress. The examination is conducted privately. Sixteen days have been occupied in the examination of a single witness, Senor Barragan, Comptroller of the State of San Luis Potosi. It is averred, that if Dr. Gardiner had ever been engaged successfully in mining, the duties due to the Mexican government should have passed through the hands of Senor Barragan; but on this point it is alleged that no duties were ever paid by Dr. Gardiner on the proceeds of mining operations. It is still further declared, that the location of the silver mine, as stated by Dr. Gardiner, is in a district of country in which the witness disavows the knowledge on the part of the Mexican authorities, that a silver mine ever existed there. There are five more witnesses to be examined, whose testimony it is said will be corroborative of that of Senor Barragan.

A WIFE STARVED AT CADOS.—A recent French paper reports that a case was brought before the correctional police, in which Madame T. brought a suit for divorce against her husband. In the course of the evidence it was proved that on two different occasions the wife had been staked and lost at cards, and the key of her room handed over to the winners! In the first case she escaped by jumping out of the window, and in the other the winner was too much intoxicated to be dangerous. The court granted an act of separation, but refused to divorce the parties.

A LIQUOR LAW RIOT.—At Watertown, Mass., on the 11th inst., E. Porter, of the Cambridge Cattle Fair Hotel, and Samuel Knights, of the Watson House, were brought before Justice White, on complaint for selling liquor. Quite a row ensued, in which the Justice was insulted, and some of the Government witnesses compelled to flee for safety. A man named Richardson, said to be employed as an informer by the temperance people, drew a knife and pistol, when he was knocked down and disarmed. A complaint was then made against him for carrying concealed weapons, and he was required to give bail for trial. Knights, for selling liquor, was acquitted, and the trial of Porter was postponed. The Court adjourned amid great excitement and confusion.

FOREIGN NEWS BY THE NIAGARA.—The Charleston Courier has the following telegraphic summary of the news brought by the steamer Niagara:

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.—The weather has been favorable for agricultural purposes, and the accounts from the English and Irish rural districts, were of a most satisfactory character.

ENGLAND.—The harvest is progressing satisfactorily.

The steamship South Carolina is offered for sale at Liverpool.

The Fishery excitement is now over.

FRANCE.—Louis Napoleon is about to publish a pamphlet, in which he will defend himself against the aspersions of the English. It is said that he has transferred his attention to the daughter of Prince Czartowita.

The Government has announced to French merchants that it will not protect them against the consequences that may attend their loading ships with guano at the Lobos Islands.

GERMANY.—The cholera has at length made its appearance in this country.

ITALY.—The French troops are not to be withdrawn from Rome.

CIRCASSIA.—Three villages have been burned by the Russians.

HOW TO KILL AN ALLIGATOR.—The Boston Post gives an account of the way an officer in the British Army of India killed an alligator, and thinks it may have suggested the voltaic battery in the capture of a whale. The alligator had established himself close to a ford, to the disgust and terror of the neighboring population. The officer sewed up six pounds of gunpowder in the stomach of a nice fresh kid, with which he went trolling for the creature, as a fisherman for pike. Having bolted it greedily, the brute sunk to the bottom to enjoy its digestion at leisure. His scientific enemy then applied a voltaic battery to copper wire running through his fishing line, and there was a violent tumultuous boiling of the water, large torn pieces floating hither and thither in the eddy. The alligator's life and his dinner were finished together.

SAD EFFECT OF SPIRIT RAPPINGS.—Mrs. Catherine Milham, a widow lady of Cincinnati, and the mother of five children, was taken to the insane asylum last week, in consequence of becoming deranged through the spirit rapping delusions. It appears that another female had pretended to have communication with the other world, and thus put Mrs. M. in correspondence with her deceased husband, in heaven. She became intensely interested in the rappings, and held, as she was led to suppose, frequent interviews with her husband, until finally she became deranged. The Commercial says that among her other mental vagaries, she imagines the spirit of her husband occupies her body, that her own has departed to give place to his, and that if she could discover his mortal remains she would be enabled to endow them with life, by returning to him the soul which, though properly his, now animates her.

KOSSUTH.—Kossuth, at last accounts, was living in a private boarding house in one of the back streets of London. He keeps exceedingly quiet, and attracts but little attention. The police, however, it is said, are instructed to keep a sharp eye on his movements. The numerous French, Italian and Hungarian exiles, now in London, it is alleged, look with more confidence to Mazzini, than to Kossuth, whose speeches in the United States served but to keep kings and princes on their guard against every attempt at revolution.

ADVANCE OF THE CHOLERA IN EUROPE.—The accounts from Warsaw, Poland, are of the most distressing character. The cholera has raged there with unprecedented violence. On the 18th ult., the number attacked was 402, of whom 207 died, and 1474 cases were under treatment in the hospitals of the city. From the first appearance of the disease about one-half of the attacks had proved fatal, but a slight improvement in the returns gave some hopes that its fury had abated. But, however distressing these accounts are, it is far more alarming to learn that this frightful malady is advancing westward.

From Landsberg it seems threatening Breslau, and its progress towards Berlin is watched with deep anxiety; whilst northwards, along the whole course of the Vistula to the Baltic, the inhabitants of the numerous towns and villages have been carried away in great numbers. In some villages two-thirds of the inhabitants have perished. At Berlin the alarm is very great, and medical men have been dispatched to the frontiers to use their efforts to stay the pestilence. As the course of this destructive disease is precisely that which marked its track in former years, the next accounts are looked for with great anxiety.

A letter of the 17th, says that the cholera, at present committing such ravages in the neighborhood of Kalisch, arose from making some excavations in the cemetery of Lask, near Kalisch, where the victims of the cholera of 1832 were buried. Almost immediately after leaving work several of the workmen employed in the excavation were seized with the epidemic, which has spread with great malignity.

Hon. Ben Hardin, now lying ill at Elizabethtown, Ky., is rapidly declining, and no hopes are entertained of his recovery.

Fergus O'Connor has recovered his sanity. This happy result has been brought about by total abstinence from intoxicating drinks.

There is a rule in a debating society down town "that any gentleman wishing to speak more than half an hour shall have a room to himself."

THE LOBOS ISLANDS FORTIFIED AND GARRISONED BY LAND AND SEA.—The New York Journal of Commerce has been put in possession of the following important intelligence, which it says comes from a perfectly reliable and authentic source:

Immediately on receipt of dispatches at Lima, 31st of July, sent by the Peruvian Minister at Washington, the Council of State clothed the Executive with extraordinary powers. One steamer and two ships-of-war were sent to the Lobos Islands, and three more were to be sent immediately after. Gen. Desina was at the Island with a force of 300 men. The English steamer Lima, which left on the 11th of August, landed five hundred and fifteen men, well officered, at Payta, on the 14th. They would leave the next day in the steamer Bimac, for Lobos Island. Orders had been given to station two thousand men at Lambayeque (coast opposite Lobos Islands.) The Lobos Islands would be strongly fortified, everything being prepared for so doing.

Joaquin J. de Osma, brother of the present Peruvian Minister, has arrived here as Minister Plenipotentiary Extraordinary, to treat upon the Lobos question.

A letter in the Herald, dated Lima, August 10, says the people of Peru are en masse in favor of resisting the United States, and that Gen. Bestna has orders to warn off all vessels found loading with guano, three times, and should they persist, to sink them. The standing army was to be increased to 8000, and the National Guard throughout the country called into active service. The letter adds:

"Government has purchased a French man-of-war steamer in Valparaiso, and ordered four steamers more to be immediately purchased. In Callao a frigate is being armed with twenty-four long guns; other vessels are preparing, and the splendid steam-frigate Amazonas was daily expected with orders to proceed to the Lobos, where all the present men-of-war of Peru are stationed.

The vessels-of-war are not prepared merely to protect the Lobos Islands, but also to attack the Raritan or other vessels-of-war that may wish to protect the guano plunderers. The popular feelings are very much excited, and the leading idea is, that if the Americans should succeed in robbing guano, to confiscate the property of American residents here. In Callao there is a prevalent idea among the English, French and others, to arm privateers, and go and assault the Californian steamers, and vessels in that route, which, if carried into effect, would be most fatal for American commerce.

CURIOSITY OF ANIMALS.—In conversation with a gentleman who had crossed the plains to California, he informed us of the curious mode of shooting the antelope. His party had often tried to shoot one, but they were so timorous they never could get within shooting distance of them. They met a party in which there was a U. S. officer, and to him mentioned the difficulty of getting a shot at an antelope. Oh, says he, it is the easiest thing in the world—I will show you how to do it. Next day they saw a troop of antelopes, and the U. S. officer approached as near as he thought was prudent before they would take flight; he then laid down on the ground, waved a handkerchief and made some antic movements. The antelope having their bump of curiosity excited, approached gradually nearer and nearer to see the row, until they were within thirty rods. By manœuvring in this manner with a troop of antelopes, the party never afterwards had much trouble in alluring them to within range of the deadly American rifle. [Scientific American.

POMOLOGICAL CONGRESS.—Philadelphia, Sept. 13.—The Pomological Congress assembled here to-day. Doctor Brinckle, of Philadelphia, resigned the Presidency, and M. P. Wilder, of Boston, was elected in his place. The Constitution was adopted, after changing the title to the American Pomological Society.

The delegates have contributed a splendid collection of pears and apples, clustered, which will form a part of the Horticultural Exhibition, to commence on Wednesday.

About 100 delegates are in attendance from Maine, New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, Iowa, Kentucky, Georgia, and the District of Columbia.

It has been observed that turtles cross the ocean from the Bay of Honduras to the Cryman Isles, near Jamaica, a distance of 450 miles, with an accuracy superior to the chart and compass of human skill; for it is affirmed that vessels that have lost their latitude in hazy weather, have steered entirely by the nose of turtles in swimming. The object of their voyage, as of migration of birds, is for laying eggs on a spot peculiarly favorable.

The papers announce the death of J. P. Norton, Professor of Agriculture of Chemistry in Yale College. He was the editor of the American edition of Stephens' Book of the Farm.

A traveler in a stage coach, not famous for its swiftness, inquired the name of the coach. A fellow passenger replied: "I think it is the Regulator, for I observe all the other coaches go by it."

A French officer, quarreling with a Swiss, reproached him with his country's vice of fighting on either side for money, "while we Frenchmen," said he, "fight for honor." "Yee, sir," replied the Swiss, "every one fights for that he most wants."

"I thought you told us that your woods was a good place to go hunting; now, we tramped it for three hours, and found no game." "Just so—well, I calculate, as a general thing, the less game there is the more hunting you have."

The French steam line-of-battle ship Napoleon lately went, by aid of her engines alone, eleven and a half and twelve knots an hour. The Napoleon is the most powerful vessel now afloat on the seas. She carries ninety guns, two months' provisions and one month's water, for its crew of nine hundred men, and its stock of fuel exceeds one thousand tons.

A New York paper says the late Robert C. Sands sued for damages in a case of breach of promises of marriage. He was offered two hundred dollars to heal his broken heart. "Two hundred!" he exclaimed; "two hundred dollars for ruined hopes, a blasted life? two hundred dollars for all this! No, never! Make it three, and and it's a bargain!"

A commodious and splendid brick edifice has just been completed—ninety-seven by forty-seven feet, three stories high—for stability, convenience of arrangement, and for number, size and comfort of private and school rooms, is not surpassed by any similar one in the country. The Principal resides in the building, and with his lady and competent female assistance, superintends the Boarding Department. A lady will reside in the Seminary, who faithfully discharges the duties of Matron, Nurse and Governess, so that at all times, pupils will find the comforts, kindness and attentions of home. The Principal, with the aid of female teachers, who also live in the Seminary, diligently guard and form their morals, manners and habits of the pupils. Being under his charge at all times, they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations, respecting neatness, order, punctuality, economy and regularity, calculated to give a safe and vigorous development to character. The appliances of home and family are not removed by this arrangement, but perpetuated and strengthened.

The ensuing scholastic year will commence on Thursday the 23d of September, 1852. Pupils can enter at any time during the year, chargeable from the time of entrance. No deduction will be made but by special arrangement with the Principal.

Boarders study at night under a teacher. They are required to retire 9 o'clock at night, and rise early in the morning at a given signal, and to take frequent and wholesome exercise.

Private rooms are large, conveniently and comfortably furnished. Pupils are required to keep their wardrobes and private apartments in neatness and order. A proper officer weekly takes charge of their clothing, inspects its condition, and every Saturday morning mending implements them in plain sewing and necessary repairs of clothing. Every article of clothing must be marked with the owner's name.

Bi-monthly reports are sent to patrons, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and deportment of pupils.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, or any amusement calculated to interfere with their studies.

Visitors are not received by pupils, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The Principal must have certain information respecting every correspondent. Pupils are required to attend Church and Sunday School on Sabbath.

No accounts will be opened in Marion but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, on the lady of the Principal must approve the purchase (who superintends their trading), and thus expenditures will be controlled. Patrons should anticipate and supply the wants of pupils as far as is practicable.

Dental operations will not be performed but by special permission from patrons.

Patrons are earnestly requested to encourage economy in all the expenditures of pupils—clothing, pocket money and jewelry.

AUTUMN HYMN.

Translated from the German of Muenter, by the Rev. William Hunter.

Now sendest thou thine autumn, Lord!
Now, sinking southward at thy word,
The sun withdraws his rays:
In cloudy veils conceals his light,
And with a waning, feeble light,
Metes out the stinted days.

The milder season now is gone;
And fiercer blasts come hurrying on,
Through bleak denuded aules;
The latest flowers their heads must bow,
For autumn's colder breathings now
Sweep o'er the hills and dales.

Now heavy mists around us rise;
Nor harvest-blessings greet our eyes,
Or all the wide-spread plain:
How are the lovely fields laid waste!
And nature, worn with toil, makes haste
Her wintor rest to gain.

Tho fowls that fly the frosts severe,
For more congenial climates steer,
Far over land and flood:
Thou dost conduct their flitting hosts,
And point the path to destined coasts,
And sate with needful food.

No harshness of the icy north
Drives us, migrating wanderers, forth,
From our warm dwellings torn;
Here dost thou still our food prepare,
And we expect thy guardian care
Renewed each winter morn.

Wo own thy hand from day to day,
As boisterous winds around us play,
And winter rudely roars;
For thy good providence ordains,
That earth both man and beast sustains,
With summer-garnered stores.

Oh! thou that screen'st the weak from harms,
And round the poor dost throw thine arms,
Almighty Helper, thou!
Support us, as our strength decays,
And let us in our wintry days
Still share thy love as now.

With life-long blessings wilt thou bless,
If we with pious carefulness
To seek thy grace engage;
And he that does his works in truth,
Will ne'er have cause to curse his youth,
In his declining age.

THE POPE AND THE BIBLE.

We take the following from the Belfast News-Letter, of August 27. Besides its spirit al pungency, it condenses much valuable al reliablo information. [En.

FATHER GAVAZZI IN LEEDS.

This renowned padre, whose burning eloquence and unconquerable love of liberty mde him so intensely popular amongst the priots of Italy, in their glorious, but unsuccesful, struggle for freedom, in 1848, has visite Leeds, and delivered three lectures, in the hall of the Stock Exchunge, Albion stret.

The lecture on Monday night was on "The Pope and the Bible," and occupied nearly two hours—fifty minutes in Italian and sixty-five minutes in English, the difference, no doubt, arising from the comparative deliberation with which the English was spoken. The hall was well filled by the highly respectable of both sexes.

Father Gavazzi, shortly after 8 o'clock, entered the Hall, amidst loud applause, and took his seat alone upon the platform. Whilst sitting, he said, in English, "I shall prove, firstly, that the Popes have prohibited the Bible; secondly, that the Popes have altered the Bible; thirdly, that the Popes have substituted the word of man for the Word of God." He then rose and delivered his lecture in Italian, many of the passages, as we have already said, being warmly applauded. At the close of the Italian lecture, he proceeded to recapitulate his arguments in English. He commenced by saying—My friends, I ask for that great peticance and great kindness in my support because I am very now in your difficult English, and to express myself fluently upon this subject, I should find it a matter of very great difficulty. Light and darkness, God and Satan, the Pope and the Bible, can not go together. The Popo has absolutely prohibited the Bible, and this statement is not an exaggeration. No; but the Romish priests say sometimes it is untrue that the Pope has ever prohibited the Bible—others say that the Roman Catholics can read the Bible, even in their own tongue. Very well; but I maintain to this contrary, that the Popes have prohibited absolutely the Bible, and the more so; in any veraneulnr tongue. I refer to history, that can not be denied by bigots. My documents are from the decrees of Popo Innocent III., against the Waldenses, and from the council of Toulouse, 1229; from the council of Boloniie, 1553; from the fourth rule of the congregation of the Index; from the Bull Unigenitus, 1713. When Papists shall have destroyed these monuments against the reading of the Bible, they can then say with impunity that the Popes do not prohibit it. Popes have good reason to prohibit the Bible. Under the control of the Bible the Popes can not introduce into the church anything against the Word of God. But because the Popes gain both influence and money by the propagation of errors and enormous falsehoods, they have prohibited the Word of God in order to prevent detection. My dear friends, sometimes I hear Roman Catholic priests say—"Oh, Father Guvazzi, you are very exaggerating; it is untrue as to our Church that the Bible is prohicited." What Bible? The Latin Vulgate! That Latin Bible! That Bible which is unknown to the greatest part of Christianity, because the laity can not read the Latin language. I have the proof in my Italy. Very few of the lait know Latin. Ladies not at all—and in many cases the priests themselves know not a word about it. Therefore, I say, the Pope prohibits the Bible, because the people, generally speaking, can not read the Latin Bible. I say again, being unknown, it is as if absolutely prohibited. Now, my friends, the Pope and the Devil never change. As Satan is always Satan, the Popes are always Popes for ever. We have seen ancient Popes prohibit the Bible. Modern Popes also have prohibited it. Gregory the XVI., published an encyclical letter against the sellers, buyers, and readers of the Bible in the vernacular tongue: any vernacular tongue. After him, and equal to him, Pius IX.—this arch-angel of peace, of meekness, of righteousness—this angel of God has prohibited the Gospel of God in two encyclical letters. In my poor Italy, you know its history, the modern history of Italy: in some Churches of Tuscany, by the command of the bishopric, all Scriptural sentences were effaced. The Count Guicciardini and companions are exiled because they read the Bible. Your countryman, Captain Packenham, has been dreadfully molested by despots for introducing Bibles into Italy. You have heard of Archdeacon Beresford. This good man had written some Scriptural sentences on the tombstone of his wife, but Pius IX. ordered them to be effaced, seeing that it was not right to put under the eyes of the Romish people those Scriptural words—not right! And the consequence was, that those Scriptural sayings were effectually effaced. This, my friends, is Italy under Pius IX: Italy, without the Bible—this is the conduct of the Pope with regard to the Bible. Englishmen, I will show you very well our position, and you can not fully realize that position to your imagination. You read your Bible—you consult your Bible—you study your Bible—you have your Bible every where as your counsellor and friend; but in my poor country it is a crime to have a Bible at all—it is a crime to read it. There are people going to prison for it, every day, for having the Bible in their possession. This is the position of the Popo and the Bible in my country, but the Pope has got a good reason for all this. Christ gives their motives in the Gospel—"He that doeth evil hateth the light, because he fears that the light will discover his wicked works." If the Church of Rome was right, the Church of Rome would not fear the Bible, nor the control of the Bible; but the Church of Rome fears very much the Bible and the control of the Bible; therefore this is a clear proof she is wrong. Only one hour's good reading of the Bible, all imposture, all falsehood of Pope and Popery, would fall in my Italy under the power of God's Word. But the Pope and Popery have not only forbidden the Bible, but altered it. We have, in Rome, a great group of marble called "The Laeoon," in which the father and his two sons are enveloped by two great serpents. Suppose that an artist, not having sufficient marble to complete a copy of this group, leaves out one of the boys; then you have an imperfect copy. It would be natural that people should say, "Take another piece of marble, join it to the first, and complete the second boy." But "No," answers the Church of Rome, "cut off the boy from the original Laeoon, and then you will have the copy equal to the original." So it is with the Scriptures; she says, "You may cut off the original, you may mutilate the original, in order to assimilate the original to the mutilated vulgate." (Loud applause.) This is the reasoning of the Church of Rome. A celebrated cardinal, named Ximenes, the greatest divine of his age, prepared a polyglot Bible in Greek, Hebrew, and Latin. In this edition the Latin vulgate was put in the middle of the Greek and the Hebrew. In his preface he called the vulgate, Christ crucified between two thieves. (Great sensation.) The Greek and Hebrew texts, the original texts, are called by Cardinal Ximenes the two thieves between whom Christ was crucified. When the Church of Rome became a temporal kingdom, Cardinal Bellarmino, the fatal Jesuit, endeavored to adapt the Bible to the exigencies of Rome as a temporal kingdom, and established himself near Rome in a very good country-house, with ten other mannneuses. In a few years he completed a perfect corruption of the Bible, such as the present Roman Catholic Bible is. This is not exaggeration. Cardinal Bellarmino announcing it himself to Lucas Bourgensis, says, "I want you to know the vulgate Bible has not been by us accurately corrected. By my will, and just reasons, many things were left that wanted much to be corrected." One of my brethren, Father Ungarelli, (now dead) who was a great friend of Gregory XVI., a bigoted man, a simple man, who refused two or three times the mitre, but the most learned man in Rome, both for Scriptural knowledge and all the ancient languages, a great philosopher, and a great antiquariau—this Father Ungarelli has discovered in the present vulgate, received as infallible by the Popes, 750 errors!—750 capital errors—altering the true sense of the Bible. Such is the Bible proposed by the Romish Church for the children to read. All these errors have crept in because it is a Bible of man's preparing instead of God's. Under this system, which claims a right to make any alteration in God's Word which it thinks politic, a new dogma can be manufactured any day, and every day, by these alterations of a text—a new rule of faith may be adopted for Christians. This is Rome's rule of faith, and in this manner she can introduce any day, any errors which she may think necessary. Rome, then, I say, forbids the Bible, and Rome has altered the Bible. (Great applause.)

Rome substitutes human authority for for that of the Bible—she substitutes councils, oracles of Popes, the fathers, divines and the mystical ascetical writers. (Hear, hear.) You allege the councils. Very well. But you have some heretical councils—precisely heretical. Let us examine these councils. The third Constantinopolitan sanctions the re-baptising of those baptised by heretics. The second Nicene council declares angels and souls corporeal beings. The council of Jerusalem agreed with Arius. The council of Ephesus approves the doctrine of Eutiches. Such are your infallible councils. Infallibly heretical! Again, the council of Constantinople declares the bread and wines merely images of the living body of Christ; but the councils of Lateran, of Constance and of Trent, proclaim the real presence. Moreover, the councils of Constance and of Basilea declare the councils superior to the Pope; but the fifth council of Lateran declares the Popes superior to the councils. Make your councils agree with each other and with themselves, and then call them infallible; but so long as they are the productions of men, they always will be fallible, because God alone, and the words of God alone, are infallible. (Applause.) With regard to the Popes, their infallibility is a merchandise worse still, if possible, than that of the councils. We have heretical Popes. Ormisda, who denies the passion of Christ; Liberal, who maintains the Arian doctrines; Honorius, who teaches the errors of the Monotelites; Vigilius, who adheres to the follies of Eutiches; John XXII., who for his numerous errors is condemned by the University of Paris; John XXIII., who rejects the immortality of the soul.

Oh, ye infallible Popes! and now we shall have infallible Popes contesting the infallibility of infallibles. We have Gregory the Great, who said that St. Peter was a bishop of a particular see, and that he is Satan only who assumes the title of universal bishop; but on the other side, we have Gregory VII., who declares that Bishop of Rome is universal bishop. You have Pope Vigilius rejecting the doctrine that the bread and wine are the real blood and flesh of Christ; well, but on the other side, you have Innocent III., who makes it obligatory to believe in transubstantiation of the bread and wine into the flesh and blood of Christ. You have Sextus V., who held that the Bible given by him was infallibly correct: and on the other side you have Clement VII., who declares that the Bible given by Sextus was full of errors. You have Clement XIV., who was for destroying the Jesuits as enemies to the church and to society; but, on the other side, you have Pius VII., who re-established the Jesuits as necessary to the safty of the church and society. This, my friends, is the infallibility of the Popes. (Great applause.) Yes, infallibility—but infallible in what? Infallible in lies, infallible in impostures. (Repeated applause.) Fie, fie! Go, Popes, with your infallibility; go, Popes and Anti-Christs—go to the devil. (Vehement cheering.)

And, now, I have one word or two to add to the mystical transcendant writers of Rome. Popery says to its confessors and preachers, "If wish to be perfect read the ascetical books; you will have a good mind, a charitable heart, and every good and Christiun feeling." Oh, no, my friends. In order to have a good and Christian feeling working within you, you must not read those ascetical books. Christ has said to me as to you, "I am the water rising into eternal life; drink of me and you shall have peace and satisfaction." Yes, I will drink of that living water, for the Bible alone can make man perfect before God. You, Popes—all of the Popish priesthood, hear me! What, Christian, what do you wish? Answer me—Christ and the Word of God or the word of man? the eternal authority from on high, or the contemptible authority of the world? Answer me. You say the Bible alone can not be our rule of faith. Blasphemy, blasphemy! Prove to me by gospel, prove to me by the Testament, that the Pope is the Vicar of Christ—prove to me that it was always and everywhere believed that the Pope was the vicar of Christ. You can not prove any thing of the sort, because it is unscriptural, and their grandeur only dates from the seventh century. Prove it to me, if you can, and I will adore Pope Pius IX. as vice-God upon earth. Prove to me from the Gospel, if you can, that Popes may have palaces, gardens, promionades, stables, horses, Swiss guards, dragoon guards, noble guards, gentlemen, prelates, Bishops, cardinals, ministers, magnificent courts, Pagan courts, proud and corrupted courts, filled by apostate priests from their temples, and I will adore your Pope as vicar of Christ. (Tremendous cheers.) If you can not prove this, I shall despise the papacy as an emanation from Satan. Prove it to me—(loud cheers)—prove it to me, ye priesthood of Rome, ye priesthood of peace, ye priesthood of mercy, priesthood of pardon, priesthood of clemency, priesthood of righteousness, priesthood of altars—prove it to me, ye Romish priesthood, that your mission is to have a temporal kingdom, temporal power, temporal empire—prove it to me that Christ has ordered that you shall be prefects of police, commissaries of police, myrmidons of police prove to me that Christ ordered you to be home ministers, ministers of war, ministers of foreign affairs, ministers of finance—prove to me that you are divinely commanded to be governors, delegates, legates, presidents, in all the powers of the Roman State, with pomp and splendor—prove to me that the church of Christ must have prisons, gallows, sentences against your fellow-christians—sentences of exile, of incurceration, of death, only for the crime of love for one's own country—(applause)—against Austrian oppression and French barbarians; prove to me these things, and I will believe you as true priests of Christ. (Cheers.) Finally, if you wish to see me a bigot of Rome, you must first prove that all the enormities of Rome are Scriptual, and all based upon the Bible. Prove to me that the authority of the Pope is Scriptural and was always and everywhere believed, and not given to you by the murderous Emperor Phocas; prove to me that the infallibility of the Pope, which was first set up in the sixteenth century by Bellarmine and the Jesuits, was always and everywhere believed. Prove to me that the doctrine of purgatory, first set up at the Florentine Council in the fourteenth century, is Scriptural, and was always and everywhere believed. Prove to me that works of supererogation, introduced in the ninth century, and was always and everywhere believed, and is Scriptural. Prove to me that transubstantiation is Scriptural, and was always and everywhere believed, and not first brought in, in the eighth century, and sanctioned by Innocent III., and then will I believe in transubstantiation. (Hear, hear.)

I will now conclude, my Christian friends, with a few words for your and my edification. You are a great people—you are a free people—you are a glorious people—you are God's people, because you have the Bible. (Hand applause.) Long live the Bible and the Protestant Reformation, which gave the Bible into the hands of the people. (Loud applause.) But my poor country, my oppressed Italy, is forbidden to have the Bible, and, in consequence, she is always oppressed and enslaved. To-day, when I speak to you, it is a crime in Italy to have a Bible in your possession. It is a crime to read the Bible. It is a crime in Italy to study the Bible. It is a crime in Italy to live as the Bible commands. (Loud applause.) We have the Count Guicciardini exiled for reading the Bible. I will tell you in my last lecture the cause for this. We have the couple Madini now in prison three years and a half for having obeyed the will of God, as they were instructed by the Bible. This is my poor Italy. But Italy is not Ireland. Italians are not Irishmen. These poor Irish people, they are a vivid people, as are the Italians; they are a poetical people as are the Italians: they are a strong hearted people, as are, the Italians: they are a good people, naturally speaking, as are the Italians; but they are oppressed, insulted, trampled upon by the Irish priesthood—the most sordid money-loving priesthood in the world—the most tyrannical priesthood in the world, for their bad manners and conduct in the church. (Loud applause.) But the Italians know too well the Pope and the priesthood of the Pope, and if God will shorten the time of the slavery and oppression of Italy, in the hour of which she shall awaken and arise to the enjoyment of civil and religious liberty, the first thing which will happen to Italy will be destruction of Pope and Popery. (Loud applause.) And after the death of Antichrist Italy will be free, finally free, and then the Italian people, joyful with open forehead, and face serene, and grateful heart to God, will have in their hands their own Italian Bible, and will read therein the full and perfect will of God. (Vehement cheering.)

The lecture closed a few minutes before ten o'clock.

NOTES OF AN ITINERANT.

From the Conference of '39, in Mobile, I was reappointed to Montgomery District. This year I had considerable affliction, both myself and family; but still met the most of my appointments, for in those days small afflictions did not cause the P. Elders to miss their appointments. My field of labor was still, much of it, on the frontiers, the Creek Indians having just gone West. We had good times where but a short time before the savage yell was heard instead of the soothing sound of the Gospel of Christ.

About this time many line Methodist families came over, from the State of Georgia, both preachers and laymen. This year or the year before, Dr. J. Boring and Thos. H. Capers fell in my work as L. P.'s.

This year I visited New Orleans and took a trip up the river to Vicksburg, to attend the Mississippi Conference. Here I spent a week with my old friend and brother, Rev. Jno. Lane, and greeted most heartily many of my old traveling companions, still in the work. I met, for the last time, some of my old fellow laborers in the Itinerant field. Returning, attended Conference, 1840, held in Selma, and after a pleasant session I was again appointed agent for Lagrange College and the Centenary Institute. This was both a laboring and unthankful appointment, but as it has always been my disposition to do whatever the Conference wished, I took it without a murmur, traveled extensively and collected considerable for both those excellent institutions.

In 1841, Conference was held in Montgomery. I was appointed to the same agency, hard and sacrificing as it was. I entered on it as usual, believing the Lord had a hand in all my appointments. The work became still harder as the subscriptions became older; still I had some success in my work. Finished the year in harmony, and attended the Conference held at Columbus, Miss., and at the solicitation of the trustees of both the Institutions, I was reappointed the fourth year to serve in the agency and did the best I could, meeting with many sour looks and some times with positive refusals to pay old subscriptions. All this an agent has to bear.

In 1844, attended Conference in Wetumpka, and was released from the agency and appointed as a missionary among the colored people of Dallas and Wilcox counties.

In the close of 1845, attended Conference in Mobile, at which time and place news reached me that all my property, both real, personal and otherwise, was all executed to pay security debts. And so it was, and was sold in April, 1846. Servants, land, stock, household and furniture, and provisions—all sold. Let this admonish all preachers to be surety for no man. But still the Lord has provided for me and mine. The Conference gave me a supernumerary relation on the Cahawba circuit. I labored the latter part of the year on the circuit, and closed up the business, as the other preacher had left.

In the close of 1846, attended Conference in Tuscaloosa—the venerable Bishop Soule, President, and I was appointed to the Talladega District. This was from where I lived, say 100 miles to the nearest appointment, but still it was the will of the Conference, so I went. The Lord gave us some glorious showers of divine grace during the year. Here I attended quarterly meetings on the identical spot where I had fought the Indians in 1813. The battle of Talladega was a memorable battle. Many fell there, and I heard the bullets whistle. The last battle was better than the first by far.

In 1847, Conference at Montgomery, I was reappointed to the District, and, as I had never objected to a work given me by the Bishop, I went cheerfully, although I had to be from home some two months at a time. This year I had great affliction in my family, which caused me to miss nearly a whole round. This was quite distressing to one who had always made it a point to attend every appointment on his work. The year ended with a smiling sun, for the affliction of the family was removed and a good work on the District.

In 1848, attended Conference at Greensborough. The Bishop changed my field to Mobile District. This was a pleasant field to me, for the most of the work I had occupied many years past: so that many pleasant associations were revived as I passed around. The District now has ten circuits and stations spread over two counties in West Florida, together with Pensacola and the Navy Yard, one county in Mississippi, with five counties in Alabama and the city of Mobile.

In 1849, at Conference in Columbus, Miss., I was reappointed to Mobile District—the work enlarging some. An attack of fever left me quite feeble, and my attempt to finish up the work on the District gave a relapse and threw me quite out of health, so that I had scarcely strength at the close of the year to reach the seat of our Conference at Auburn. There I was solicited to superannate, but declined, and was returned to the same District. Such was my health that I could not preach, but I went to the circuits and stations, held quarterly conferences, and encouraged the preachers to go on. My health was again restored and I attended to the duties of the District until the close of the year; had my last quarterly meeting on Sunday and Monday, and the Annual Conference convened on Wednesday following, in Mobile. Here I received my 36th appointment.

And now, Mr. Editor, I am closing the work of my District, hoping to meet the Conference in Marion, the 1st of December. Permit me to say to all the preachers that it is my decided conviction that no small matter should keep them from attending the Annual Conferences, and my example shows that I am sincere, having never missed one for 36 year.

And, Brethren, one and all, I am old and gray-headed; having borne the burden and heat of the day, and can't much longer serve the Church as I have done, and my greatest fears are that I may be considered as a burden even by those who have been born since I have been fully in the field. Such cases I have known. Let all remember they, too, must get old one day. I am willing yet to share the labor with my brethren, and especially the itinerants. With them I have lived, with them I have suffered, and among them I wish to die.

THE GOSPEL TO THE NEGROES.

BRO. McTYEIRE: Suffer a few thoughts and suggestions, briefly expressed, by your old Conference fellow, which, though they may not secure applause to the writer—I desire it not—may possibly arouse the sensibilities of the Church and engage her to correct an evil.

My theme is, The destitute and uncared for condition of, at least a respectable minority, of the slave population of these Southern States; I mean their destitution of the means of grace, and the almost total unconcern about it, that is manifested by the great body of Church. This may, at first view, be regarded as a bold assumption, altogether without foundation in fact, because it is read and known of all men, that missionary operations have been going forward among this class of community for a number of years—that almost all the churches have taken an active part in this glorious enterprise. But it is equally true that the missionary operations of the Church, among this class are confined to the densely populated sections of the country, while the sparsely inhabited are unprovided for—that is to say, the slave population is unsupplied with the means of grace, only in so far as they may share in the general provisions.

And some one may say: this is sufficient—fully equal to the demands; but to this conclusion I demur:

First. Because there are no arrangements made for the accommodation of these children of Ham; that they might share equally in the provisions alluded to. For in nine cases out of ten, if not in ninety-nine out of every hundred, the chapels are constructed with a view only to the accommodation of the white congregation. I speak advisedly, for I have not always been confined to my present geographical boundaries. And I have often observed it, and lamented, that while one portion of those for whom my message was intended, were in circumstances sufficiently comfortable—though it has frequently been the case that the chapel was but a rudely constructed cabin, built of materials obtained from the surrounding forest, covered with clap-boards, and seats and all to correspond—to receive it, another class—the same whose claims I advocate, were any thing but comfortable—unsheltered, unseated, and necessarily moving about from one shade to another, hanging round the door, gazing in at the windows, if there were any, or in the event there were none, looking through the unsealed cracks. And I have seen, too, the big tear rolling down their cheeks, plainly telling that, if differently and better situated, they would not only be hearers, but doers of the word. But their devotions have been interrupted by the lowering tempest, and they have been driven from this unenviable position to seek one still less desirable—some oak or pine or other tree to shelter them from the drenching rain.

Now, I ask, are such circumstances favorable to hearing the Word profitably? Or can those so situated, be said to have the means of grace afforded them? I think that every candid man must negative these interrogations, which being done, it remains to be proved that any considerable number of the negro race are in such destitute condition. And this, if I mistake not, is by no means a difficult task.

Go with me into those parts alluded to, and you will find that a goodly number of the citizens are slaveholders, to a greater or less extent—some have five, others ten, etc. Take the aggregate, and you will have the minority for which I contend. Yet there is not, perhaps, a sufficient number, within any reasonable limits, to justify the establishment of a mission. What, then, is to be done for them? Any thing, or nothing? Shall we leave them still unprovided for? How, then, shall we clear our skirts of the blood of all men?

But who is at fault in this matter? The preachers who labor in those less densely populated regions, or the people—the membership of the Church? The preachers, as a class, are not at fault, they being willing, as far as in them lies, to preach the gospel to these poor, also. The membership of the Church, then, are culpable: not that I accuse you of design, brethren, in this matter, but of indifference. You know the condition of the country in which you live. You know, also, the chance for ministerial aid—that under existing circumstances the same preacher must serve both the white and the colored population—that very often the regular pastorl duties devolving upon him, together with his pulpit and altar ministrations, are quite sufficient for both his time and strength, without any extra labors. But it is your desire, if you are a Christian, or even a philanthropist, that your servants should share their part in the public ministrations of the Word—that they should be taught the way of life and Godliness. Therefore, it behooves you—it is your duty, to make such provisions in the construction of your houses of worship as shall secure to them a comfortable position and an undoniable right and interest both in the house and services.

In this way, and this alone, can you enable us to supply the lack of service, of which they have a just right to complain; and, also, bring them within reach of the ordinary appliances of the gospel. I like, in some respects at least, the plan of the old Jewish temple—there was in it a court for the Gentiles, so should all our houses have a court, awning or division set apart for the colored race that is in our midst.

Secondly. I demur to the conclusion above stated, because of the few opportunities offered, at least to this people, of having the gospel, "which is the power of God unto salvation," etc. We not unfrequently engage in special and protracted services for the promotion of the Redeemer's kingdom in the earth. From day to day the white congregation are present before the Lord; and each one rests in his place as well contented as if every sinner in the community was present to receive "his portion in due season." But lift up you eyes and see yonder scattered over the adjacent farms, are men and women with souls in their bodies, and who are still out of the ark of safety. But why are they not here? Ah! they are not permitted to be. Their daily task must be done before they can bend their steps to the house of God. But would it consume much time to attend worship?—About two hours, ordinarily. Better loose a whole day than loose their souls. Brethren in the ministry, let us use every lawful means to awaken up an interest in this behalf. May God give us the hearts of the master and of the servants—the whole as seals to our ministry, in Christ Jesus, Amen.

"PREACH SMALL."—"Mother," said a little girl seven years old, "I could not understand our minister to-day, he said so many hard words. I wish he would preach so that little girls could understand him. Won't he mother?" "Yes, I think so, if we ask him." Soon after, her father saw her going to the minister's. "Where are you going, Emma?" said he. "I am going to Mr. ——'s to ask him to preach small." [Christian Times.

THE APPROPRIATIONS OF CONGRESS.—The appropriations of the last session of Congress amount to forty-seven millions of dollars. The civil and diplomatic appreprintione are $8,038,000; foreign mail steamers, $1,740,000; army, $8,738,000; navy, $6,952,000; post-office transportation, $7,537,000; Indian appreprintions, $2,026,348; deficiencies, $5,500,000; indefinite appropriations, $4,500,000—total, $47,171,000.

WRONG ENDS OF KNOWLEDGE.—It is not the pleasure of curiosity, nor the quiet of resolution, nor the raising of the spirit, nor victory of wit, nor faculty of speech, nor lucre of profession, nor ambition of honor or fame, nor enablement for business, that are the true ends of Knowedge. [Lord Bacon.

SANCTIFIED KNOWLEDGE.—What a blessing is knowledge when it is sanctified! What stability can be expected without it? For let their affections be ever so lively for the present, yet what hold can you have upon a people who neither know books nor mind; neither themselves nor the Bible; neither natural nor spiritual things? THE CHURCH ONE AND THE SAME IN ALL AGES.

BRO. McTYEIRE: St. Paul tells us—Cor. 1st chapter 16th, 17th and 18th verses—that "by Him," Jesus Christ, "were all things created, that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities, or powers: All things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist." Here, the Apostle presents Jesus Christ to us, the creator of all things, and the Great Head of all created existence. This same Great Creator became man, and offered himself an atoning sacrifice for the whole family of man, and when he had "by himself purged our sins," "he ascended far above all heavens," "and forever sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on High," and now "is the head of the body, the Church.

This broad and extensive view of the relation of Christ to the whole Universe of matter and mind, and especially to his Church throughout all the ages of the world, proves clearly that there has been in all past ages, and will be in all ages to come, only one Church. This Church has for her "foundation" the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the "chief corner stone." The frame of this Church commenced with the patriarchs—was continued by the prophets, and completed by the Apostles, Jesus Christ being the Great Head, from its commencement until it becomes "fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners," or as the Psalmist represents it, "Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth."

And the Apostle Paul tells us that it is "a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing," etc. Now, let us examine the first frame-work of this Church, and we will find that all the infants where the frame was made, were constituted members of the Church; and all the members of this same Church, when passing through the Red Sea, "were baptised unto Moses, in the cloud and in the sea," and from this time until they passed over Jordan, the rite of circumcision was discontinued and baptism substituted in its place; which clearly typed the coming ages of the Church when this bloody rite should be done away, and water used in its place.

The subjects of this first baptism were believing adults and all their children. The mode was sprinkling or pouring the water from the cloud upon them. The first baptism took place in the sea, but we have good reason to believe that the same mode was attended to in the wilderness. In 68 Psalm 9th it is said: "Thou, O God, didst send a plentiful rain, whereby thou didst confirm thine inheritance," etc. This "plentiful rain" took place near Mount Sinai, and Moses, who understood this matter fully, directed and instructed the parents to bring out their children to receive baptism from the cloud, instead of circumcision by the priest. Thus, by repeating the baptism from the cloud in the wilderness, they were "confirmed" in the validity of the first baptism which took place in the sea, and that baptism was in the place of circumcision while in the wilderness.

But we who live in the gospel light can see much more clearly than they could, how it points to the time when the gospel should be preached to all the world, and when all nations should be received into the Church by baptism, and how the great head of the Church would "sprinkle many nations" by the ministers of his gospel. And we also see that, as by the rite of circumcision, under the Mosaic dispensation, the whole nation of the Jews, adults and infants, were made visible members of the Church, so by the ordinance of baptism, under the Gospel dispensation, the whole family of man, adults and infants, may be made members of the same Church, when it should become "a glorious Church without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing." But if infants are left out of the Church, and immersion substituted in the place of baptism, and all Christians denied communion in the Church, if not immersed, there would be wrinkles and spots, and blemishes, which would so deform, distort and destroy the symetry and proportion of the original glorious structure, that it would not be recognised as the same Church. Instead of being "beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth," it would become so contracted and consequently wrinkled by contraction, and often seen in ponds and places of muddy water, spotted and blemished so that we should be ready to say, "This is the Baptist Church, and not that old and beautiful Church, designed to be the "joy of the earth," which is to receive into its communion all nations and languages, by "sprinkling clean water upon them" in the ordinance of baptism, as foretold by the prophet Ezekiel.

The conclusion of the whole matter is, there never was but one Church of God on earth, and never will be, and this militant Church will finally be merged in the Church triumphant, when its Great Head shall "sit upon the throne of his glory," and say to his faithful servants, "come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." May God grant that we may be numbered with his saints in that day—thus prays a sincere lover of the Church of Christ.

CHRISTIAN SIMPLICITY.—Growth in grace manifests itself by a simplicity—that is, a greater naturalness of character. RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

In our advertising columns, the reader's attention may be arrested under the head of "Schools and Colleges." If he be one seeking an education for himself, or as a parent or guardian, responsible for the education of others, we invite him to pause and hold a consultation with those offering to take charge of this matter.

The place and the men and the means are all important items to be considered in the choice of an educational institution. Neither the nearest, or the cheapest, nor the most popular are always the best. Be at pains for a good article. The economy of education is already and widely appreciated. The woodsman had better spend an hour or two in the morning at the grind-stone than to attack the trees with a dull iron before the dawn. If a father can afford his child but a five hundred or a thousand dollar patrimony, this sum expended in education is the safest and wisest investment. It will pay the highest per centage—of profit—of money profit, if you please. This leaves out of the question the superior satisfaction and elevation of intellectual culture. These economic considerations will induce those in pursuit of education to require thoroughness and practicalness. But there is another and higher element in education—we ask attention to the religious element.

Those Schools and Colleges openly professing or justly suspected of hostility or indifference to religion, in their leading officers, will of course open their doors in vain for the children of God-fearing parents. True, they pretend not to teach religion or irreligion. But "he that is not for me is against me." The principles of good and evil are too active to remain indifferent during the term of pupillage: too insidious in their influence not to be more or less communicated in the intimate contact of instruction.

Those respectable moralists, who have no membership with any Christian Church, but stand in a position to invite the patronage of all, are hardly more worthy of that sacred trust—the education of an immortal being. The most they can consistently profess to do, in the religious department, is to bring the pupil up to their own standard. In nothing else do they pretend to carry him beyond their own attainments. Religion has never acted on them with sufficient force to give shape and decided character, and their qualifications are few. They may do their work well, in part; but it is only in part. To resist evil, to aspire after the good, the high, the pure, requires training just as much as to think, to reason. A Godless institution, a Godless education may do for a soulless being—for him only.

It falls within the scope of our schools and colleges not to make sectaries and bigots of pupils, but to educate them religiously. We are glad to see them not too modest to profess this intention, and to recognise in the most an experimental fitness to lead them beyond a frigid and self-righteous morality to the higher spiritual state of conversion of the soul and acceptance of God, through Jesus Christ.

The happy effect of religious education is being occasionally testified to in the youngest of our Southern institution. The biographies of some of their students have thus early been written up and what eulogies are writ in such sentences as these—"She was converted while at school at S—— Institute, in 184–," or, "He was a subject of the revival that visited the College last year, in which many of the students were converted."

Does not the parent whose hopeful son has come home from a Godless college, a scoffer at religion, with habits of dissipation that cast a gloomy shadow upon his future prospects, wish his son had been at that college to have shared in that revival. "Who can tell?" He reads the history of another's son and sighs and regrets too late his indifference to the RELIGIOUS EDUCATION of his own.

SAILING OF STEAMERS.

For the benit of the preachers intending this fall to go to California, we publish information derived directly from their Agents, as to the departure of steamers for California. The Mail Steamship line via Panama, sails from this port on 7th and 22d of each month. Price of through ticket $300—children under 12 years of age half price. Each passenger allowed 250 lbs. baggage.

The steamship line via Nicaragua sails on 9th and 23d of each month. Price of through ticket $300.

By the former route the transit across the Isthmus is at the expense of the passenger. By the latter that expense is included in the through ticket.

CONVERSION OR PERVERSION?—It must be true, slow as we are to believe it, that Protestantism is fast gaining ground in St. Patrick's own heritage, and this not by the reduction of Papists by emigration but conversion. Our exchanges state that no less than sixty-four clergymen now officiating in the Established Church in Ireland, were once Roman Catholic Priests or Laymen.

REV. S. J. HENDERSON, a prominent member of the Memphis Conference, died on the [illegible] after protracted illness.

A NEW COMMENTARY.

We learn, from a source reliable, that a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is at work upon a Commentary of the Bible. It is neither critical nor devotional, but simply explanatory as far as may be necessary to aid an unlearned reader to connect and comprehend the import of the Scriptures. It is designed in the simplest and clearest style to bring the meaning to the surface, without any exposition of doctrines—a sort of poor man's EXPLANATORY MANUAL. After all that has been written and printed, there is room in the world to contain such a book. The literary and religious qualifications of the person who is engaged upon it are an assurance that it will be adapted to its important place and use. We shall look for it with interest, and in the meantime "our rejoicing is this," that cultivated minds are bringing to bear their light and labor upon the elucidation of the sacred page. These things are to us among the most cheering millenial signs.

"O may those heavenly pages be
Our ever dear delight;
And still new beauties may we see,
And still increasing light!"

A GOOD EXAMPLE.

A number of the students of Oglethorpe College, Georgia, have associated themselves together into a Missionary Association, the objects of which are mainly to collect religious information and to apply the funds of the Society to the support of a Missionary Colporteur or the Education of a suitable heathen youth for the gospel ministry.

This is noble and praiseworthy in the young men of Oglethorpe College. May their example provoke others. The country and the Church have hope when those who so soon must control them, begin thus early to train themselves for their work. A much better appropriation of the "funds" this, than for College suppers and Commencement balls.

Right heartily do we cheer you on, young gentlemen of Oglethorpe Missionary Association. Already you have praise and we doubt not of your success. The copy of this journal solicited by the committee for the Association is sent, most cheerfully.

METHODIST PRESS.

GOOD FELLOWSHIP.—The Pittsburgh Advocate, noticing the collections of Rev. J. M. Hofer, in East Alabama, lately published by us, and the generous Chunnenuggee Camp-meeting missionary offering of over $2,000, adds:

This camp-meeting must have been a good one. The people certainly get to feeling deeply—in their pockets. This is devising liberal things. It looks like a people jealous of the blessing.

Our southern exchanges this week give strong evidence that the Missionary spirit among our southern brethren is on the increase. May their zeal on this subject at least, spread northward. In this spirit we will join fellowship.

STAY AT CALVARY.—The readiest and safest way for the tempted Christian to meet the accusations of Satan, is to "Tell him Thou hast died." The discovery he makes in himself of legal deficiency should not be permitted to plunge him into despondence and hopeless misery. This is Satan's device. The editor of Zion's Herald gives a HINT to tempted believers, on this subject, in his happiest style:

When the Eagle of the Alps would destroy the timid but fleet-footed Chamois, he resorts to a curious device. He makes feigned attacks, darting down toward his prey, as if to seize it. The frightened Chamois flies from its assailant, to its accustomed place of refuge from the hunter—to some jutting crag on the edge of a precipice. To so dizzy a spot no mountaineer, however bold, dare venture; and the hunted animal has often found safety there. But the same spot which protects it from man is fatal when the eagle is its pursuer. For the cunning bird now comes swooping down, in the might of his strength, and, with his huge wings beats it over the crag into the fearful gorge beneath. Dashed to pieces by its fall, it becomes food for its foe, which swiftly pouncing upon its remains, bears them in his talons to his eyrie in the top of the rocks.

Satan has a similar device for the destruction of believers. He knows that he can do nothing but annoy them so long as they receive his assaults at Calvary, in full view of a bleeding Christ. Hence, like the eagle, he drives them, if possible, to "Mount Sinai." He darts upon them with accusations of legal imperfection. He thrusts the law before them, and calls them to judge their lives and tempers by its stern demands, and by its far reaching claims on the obedience even of the thoughts and purposes of the heart. By these means he moves the unwary toward Horeb and Sinai; where, beholding nothing but the law, with its merciless terrors, hearing only voices of thunder and wrath, he sinks condemned and sorrowful to the dust. Shame covers his face. Strength departs from him, and he readily falls a victim to some new device of his malicious adversary.

INJUDICIOUS UNIONS.—Our cotemporary of the Memphis Advocate makes some sound and catholic remarks on the union of sects. It cannot be accomplished. A union of Christian hearts there may be—true fellowship: but as denominations they had better occupy distinctly their own platforms. An attempt to bring them together beyond a certain degree of proximity, defeats itself. There is either a blow out, which sets the parties farther off than before, or the union is kept up by a dealing that lacks candor. This is not the fault of religion but humanity. Union Churches, as they are called, free for all and under the control of none—Union Sabbath Schools, and such like well meant efforts, in which doctrinal peculiarities will come in conflict, prove by their history the correctness of his philosophy:

Two magnetic substances will attract, when brought into proximity at certain limits: but if passing within those limits we attempt to bring them into closer connection, they become mutually repellant. It is so with human beings. There is a limit beyond which they can not cultivate and maintain fellowship. Becoming too familiar, they become disgusted; or seeking too intimate a partnership, they must be presented with subjects on which they can not disagree; and dissension arises to terminate only with the dissolution of their injudicious union. It is so with christian denominations. There are certain limits within which they must not seek to force their intimacy, if they would not be driven wider apart than before. Each denomination has its separate and peculiar interests and views; and in uniting too closely in common enterprises, these views and interests will inevitably be brought into collision. When pure gospel truth shall be triumphant, then may individual christians come together in the closest union warranted by the teachings of Christianity; but such union can not be attained by sects, and it is useless to aim at an object so impracticable.

AM. SUNDAY S. UNION.—This Association is doing much good, especially in destitute districts. Its publications are numerous and mostly excellent. Its Sunday Schools are far better than none; but where our own people can be enlisted and our publications get, Methodists should have out and out Methodist Sunday Schools. Rev. H. S. Thrall submits, in the Texas Banner, the cost at which the A. S. S. Union is kept going: the Agency being paid $12,000 or $15,000 for that which Methodist preachers do gratuitously. It could be wished that they were all as energetic in this good cause as the "Union" agents. The itinerancy is an admirable and grand system of AGENCIES for every good thing. Mr. Thrall quotes from the last Annual Report of the Society:

From the labors of twelve persons, for various periods, amounting in the aggregate to nine whole years, we have realized the net amount of $33,327 91; their salaries and expenses ($12,270 01) being deducted from the gross receipts.

Besides these fruits of the collecting agency, we have received through our missionary agents and others, $2,471 60, through our repositories $3,961 68, from donations directly to the Society $5,137 29, making a total of receipts for our missionary objects during the year, of $34,893 48, exclusive of expenses of collecting.

This sum we have expended as follows:

For the wages (12,924 81) and traveling expenses ($1,846 91) of 140 Sunday schools missionaries for various periods, amounting in the aggregate to 36 years and ten months, $14,771 72; for the supply of destitute schools with books and other means of sustaining themselves, $15,908 58, and various appropriations stated in detail in the treasurer's report $4,218 18.

THE CONFERENCES EXTENDING.—The Western Advocate remarks with high satisfaction upon the late establishment of the French Conference, and regards it the "vanguard of the Protestant army." It is indeed proper that a check movement should be made. Rome is making demonstrations upon England. Protestantism should make vigorous ones upon its rival European power, France. The latter can do as much against true religion as the former for it.

The editor thinks the expansion of Methodism into distinct and independent bodies, separate from, yet fraternizing with the parent stock, very remarkable. He draws a glowing picture. "May the time speedily come when the sun shall never go down upon our altars:

From the English conference sprang the Irish conference, at an early day in the history of Methodism. The Methodist Episcopal Church also became independent of the parent body. Since that the Canada conference became detached from the Methodist Episcopal Church, organized independently, and stands now in a relation to the British conference similar to the Irish conference. The British conference appoints the presidents of both conferences, and exercises a controling influence over them, so as to secure their adhesion to Methodist doctrine and discipline. Now we see there are two new conferences organized by the British conference—the Australian and the French—which are to stand in the same relation to the British conference that the Irish and Canada conferences do. Then the British parent will soon have another conference in Southern Africa, and several in other portions of their extensive missionary field, as New Zealand, West Indies, Fejee Islands, etc. And then the American Methodist Episcopal Church must, in like manner, give place to the movement of Christian colonization. Already the work is begun. Indeed, the Canada conference is, properly, not British, but American in its character, as the Canada conference was planted and brought to maturity by the American Church. And though the Canada conference has sought connection with the British mother, the American mother was the natural parent; and we hope the new alliance will prove an advantageous one, as we have good reason to believe it will, though, we think, not equal to the other. And shortly the African Methodist Episcopal Church is about to be organized, which will cover a territory large enough for several annual conferences, under the control of one delegated General Conference. And then what will take place, when 100,000,000 of population will cover these United States, and foreign missions in China and South America be enlarged and extended in which to form many conferences? Who can tell what enlargement will take place? Then those who live may sing as Wesley did, when he saw the progress of his cause in Ireland:

"With this pastoral crook
I came over this brook,
And now I am turned into bands."

We may soon have the German conference; and we trust the Italian, the North African, the Palestine, the Grecian, the Egyptian conferences will, in time, spring forth into existence.

THE BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.—This question is engaging the attention of our cotemporarice East and West. The Ch. Ad. & Journal submits an able argument, contending that allowing the Romanists to be sincere in their scruples against the Bible in schools, the public authorities are not bound to exclude it for their accommodation. It is shown by reason and a powerful array of examples that it is necessary to a sound religious, social and political education. We extract a single paragraph and much desire that it take effect on some consciences about us:

It is not the purpose of the State in establishing and maintaining common schools, to make churchmen of any denomination whatever; and, therefore, those whom she charges with this interest are not to look into the various creeds and confessions of faith which have been adopted by them, in order to regulate their action. The sole object of the State is to make GOOD CITIZENS of the commonwealth, and she is therefore bound to secure to our children such instruction as will best secure this end, without reference to Papist or Protestant opinions or prejudices. And hence, if the State should find that the Bible is the best book for this purpose, she has the right to make it a school book, much more if it be found that all other books are inadequate to her great purpose, without the Bible. If there be those whose conscientious scruples will not allow them to participate in the privilege offered by the State, it is their misfortune, and may be a misfortune to the community, but the great purpose of giving such an education to the rising generation as will make them good citizens, prepared to appreciate and sustain our free political institutions, is not to be abandoned because a small minority of the people refuse to avail themselves of the common privilege.

Randolph Macon College has added to its other claims to public consideration and patronage, an Analytical Laboratory, for the analysis of soils, marls, plaster, guano, minerals, etc., and for instruction in agricultural chemistry generally. Prof. Stewart, who has charge of the chair of experimental sciences, is ably assisted by a very competent associate.

REVIVALS.—The Nashville Advocate says:

Our hearts are cheered by revival intelligence coming from almost every portion of the southwest. Specially do we rejoice in the wonderful displays of divine power in portions of Kentucky.

CAN'T TAKE THE PAPER.—Will any say so after reading the fair estimate of the cost of the paper, made up by the St. Louis Advocate:

See here friend Grumblestonious, you are always grumbling—a real grumble—a true son of the old Grumblestonian family. What's the matter now? "Can't take the paper." Why not? "Too high." Fudge—two dollars a year too high for a weekly newspaper the size of the Advocate! "You can get books cheaper." Mistake—no such thing. Let's see that book in your hand. What did it cost? "Fifty cents." Well, now let's examine it. One hundred and twenty-five pages, in small pica type, with pretty thick leads. Each page contains something less than six hundred ems. This multiplied by the number of pages, gives us a product of seventy-five thousand ems, as the amount of reading matter you get for fifty cents. Now, sir, do you knew that the whole matter of that book might be copied into one number of the Advocate, and then lack three full columns of filling it? "Say!" Truth, every word of it. Fifty-two numbers, or one volume of the Advocate, which you get postage and all, for five cents a number, contain matter enough to make near SIXTY such books as that? For these sixty books you would have to pay, at the rates at which you get that one thirty dollars: and yet the Advocate is too high at two dollars!

There friend, take those facts and ponder them, and if you be too stingy to take the Advocate, say so, but quit grumbling.

HERE THEY GO.—The Genesee Conference, in addition to those (North) before mentioned, has enlisted in the four years' war on the Slavery question. As the NewYork organ has hinted, we see nothing left for the Conference taking such ground but secession from the Northern Connexion if the Connexion can not be reduced to conformity with them. The resolutions are published in Northern Advocate—where they find an able advocate. We give the vim of them:

Resolved, That the Discipline of our church should be so amended as to make non-slaveholding a condition of membership.

Resolved, That the modified slave-holding which has been tolerated in the church has done evil, and only evil, to our Zion; and that its longer continuance among us is wholly unwarranted.

Resolved, That slavery is a sin, and as such has no place in the church, and that it is not legitimately within the power of any ecclesiastical body to give it a place in the church.

WESTERN BOOK CONCERN.—The annual report of the Book Committee of the Western Book Concern read on the 8th ult., before one of the Northern Conferences. The concern is represented as being in a healthy and prosperous condition, and that it is managed with great care and diligence. The profits for the year are stated at $17,162,58.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Talladega Circuit, Ala. Conf.

At three of the six appointments contained in the Circuit, there have been revivals. At Auticeh, commencing with the quarterly meeting, fifty whites and ten blacks were converted, and sixty whites and twelve blacks joined the church. At Pine Grove, near forty found pardon and forty-four whites joined the church. At Talladega, twenty-three whites have been converted and six or seven blacks, and twenty-two whites and several blacks have joined the church. This meeting is still in progress. There have been, moreover, conversions at a fourth appointment, and we have good hope that the revival will be universal.

In mere justice, I must say, our efficient Elder (W. H. McDaniel) is battling manfully for the "faith once delivered to the saints," and we find Theology to be highly nutritious, soul-food.

Our local ministers are also doing full-hearted and valuable service for Methodism as it is. Such men as Tarrant, Scales, Patton, Palmer Swope, Seay, and others, with our promising young itinerant, Ellis, solve the problem of the destiny of Methodism by glorious and successful action. In truth, our Zion here hath honor before God and all the people. Yours, in Christ,

E. J. HAMMILL.

Donaldsonville and P. P. Mission, La. Conf.

Allow me to say to the President and proper authorities of Missionary Department, that this work is in a moderately prosperous state, and rather on the ascending scale, some parts of it at least.

Since my last notice there has been a great deal of sickness on the Mission. During the most part of the month of August, the estates of Messrs. Preston and Maning numbered over 200 on the sick report. This was a proportion to the whole number as one is to five or thereabout. But the proportion of the sick to the whole number of effective hands, was greater than this, the complaint being mostly fever, and in many cases chills and fever, but few deaths followed. But returning health has quite changed the aspect. The hospital is well nigh vacated, business resumed in its various departments, moves on briskly, and the church, which had been almost deserted, is made to ring again with the musical voice of the negroes, hymning God's praise for his goodness and "for his wonderful works to the children of men."

The time is at hand when the service of the sanctuary must be suspended and the Lord's day otherwise appropriated until angar making is over. This is said to be the great "ox" from which they all get their beef, and if he truly be in the ditch, it is a religious duty to pull him out, even on the Sabbath.

But several planters in the limits of my acquaintance observe the fourth Commandment as strictly in the "rolling season," as any of the ten at any time. In it, they do no work, neither they nor theirs. Nor do they fall behind their neighbors in good crops; nor in taking them off in the ordinary length of time. Nevertheless, the question of observing the Sabbath being one for which men (individually) must account to God, to whom they must stand or fall, I rest the matter there, and will not judge another man's servant, but will rather judge this, that I put not a stumbling block in the way of any; for there are many things among professors of Christianity which are hard to be reconciled either to its letter or spirit, and yet hard to put from them. There is a right arm, or a right eye sin, which is very precious to the flesh; and in a country like this where opposition is so strong and assumes such a variety of shapes, it is not only difficult to have Christ in every act, but it requires an effort to retain him in any. We contend not with flesh and blood only, but with the power of spiritual wickedness in high places. St. Peter's prayer, "Lord, save or I perish," comes in place often, and may be appropriately used when the waves of opposition roll as high and as strong as they do in this, and in many other parts of the sea of life. The tide is great. Truly, there is need to "be strong in the Lord."

In the village of D., there are some omens of good. The congregation increases; and all are more or less interested so far as to want regular preaching in the Methodist church. The ladies (who are always first in a good work) united and caused some neat repairs to be done on the church.

I speak of the village of D., because it is as properly a mission as any other part of the work. The time is coming when things will wear a different aspect. Faithful preaching of the Word will take effect, for "Truth is mighty and must prevail."

THIBODAUX, LA. CONF.—The Thibodaux Minerva of 25th ult., contains the following item:

Religion.—Our friends of the Methodist denomination commenced a protracted meeting at the Methodist Episcopal Church in this place, on Saturday last, which will be continued up to the close of the ensuing week. The Rev. Mr. Keener, of NewOrleans, the Presiding Elder of this ecclesiastical district, is in attendance. A number of our citizens have renounced the vanity of the world and espoused the cause of the Saviour. Yesterday evening five adults received the holy ordinance of baptism.

TEXAS CORRESPONDENCE.

BASTROP, Texas, Sept. 10, 1852.

BROTHER M'TYEIRE: For my friends, many of whom I promised to write to, but for want of time have failed to do so, and for public information I send you a few more items. I wrote you a few days ago, at the same time intending in my next to say something about temporal matters.

On my arrival here I was not very well pleased with the country, but now am becoming more and more delighted with it every day. The lands are mostly prairie, and very rich. The average crop of cotton this year in this part of the country, will be a good 500 pound bale to the acre. Many acres will make more. Corn will yield 50 bushels per acre, and some acres will make 75 bushels. Wheat is also good, above this, and sugar-cane is raised to perfection below. Improved lands on the Colorado river are very high priced, say from $5 to $50 per acre. The common price for rent here is from $5 to $10 per acre. Just as good lands as these, however, can be had a little way off, (unimproved of course) at $1 per acre. The country abounds in fine, large prairies, stretching out often, much farther than the eye can see. There is of course a scarcity of timber where this is the case. But in most parts of Western Texas there are large cedar brakes, from which timber for rails and building purposes is obtained. And, notwithstanding, in some instances rails are hauled the distance of from 10 to 15 miles, to fence in a farm; yet in the long run, I do not know but that the opening of a prairie farm is cheaper than clearing and keeping in order one in the timbered countries; for in the first instance, our cedar rails will last a life-time, and besides this, we have no clearing away of logs and brush every year.

In addition to farming, which I believe can be carried on here very profitably, stock raising is a great business; particularly the raising of cattle. Full 33 per cent can be realized at it annually: so say those, at least, who are engaged in it, and I have not the right to doubt it, for many of them are getting rich fast. Many persons are also raising horses and mules as well as cattle: mules pay the best I am told.

In regard to the health of the country, I must say that this year it has proved to be very sickly, particularly on or near large creeks or rivers. Scarcely any part of the southern country has escaped this year. I see in almost every paper I get accounts of much sickness in some of the older States. Places in Alabama, Georgia, and Mississippi, that have hitherto been considered healthy, have, I learn, been infested with disease and death to an alarming extent this year. Upon the whole I would just as soon risk health in Texas as in any of them.

We have poor rivers for navigation in this part of Texas, and I fear the condition of them will not be bettered soon.

The railroad mania is raging now. I think it won't be long until a road is built, either directly from Austin city to NewOrleans, or else to some point on the coast. In the absence of steamboats and railroads, however, there are substitutes: hundreds of ox wagons running at all times of the year; and with their teams of from 10 to 20 large steers hitched to one wagon they haul enormous loads. I have been informed that wagons have been known here to carry from 8000 to 9000 pounds at a load; and what may astonish some, those large teams of oxen are driven without a line. The whip alone is used, and that, too, very frequently, by a boy.

Bastrop is a flourishing little town, situated immediately on the east bank of the Colorado river, and about midway between Austin and Lagrange; say about 30 miles from either. It is built in a hog-wallow prairie, and of course, in wet weather, is a muddy place. Its inhabitants have suffered greatly this year; I suppose from 75 to 100 persons have died, that is, in the town and its vicinity. I hope, however, that this may not be the case hereafter; and in fact from what physicians tell me, this has been its worst year of sickness, and I suppose I may say the same in relation to the State at large; yet as before mentioned, I still think this should be no discouragement to emigrants, seeing that almost every State has in like manner suffered this year.

In relation to Austin city, I am not well advised, as I only pass through it occasionally on my rounds, and therefore can not say much about it. This much I will say, however—it is a pretty place, and growing very rapidly. Its inhabitants number between 2000 and 3000. A new and magnificent State House is being erected there, almost entirely of stone.

But a word to emigrants and I close. The land route is by all means preferable; first, because it is less dangerous and more healthy than to be pent up in a steamboat, or rather, in a steamship, almost all the way; and secondly, because it is by half the cheapest way of moving; and it will be so now, more especially, from the fact that there is an abundance of corn on the way, at 25 cents per bushel. It can be had in any quantity here at that price, and even at 20 cents, hence it is an auspicious time for persons wishing to come to Texas. Just here I would remark, that good horses, mules, wagons and carriages are in great demand, consequently emigrants need have no fears of losing on these things, for if, after getting here, they have more than they want for their own use, they can very readily sell them at a good price.

I would here give it as my opinion, that if persons, in selecting a home here, would not get too near a creek or river, but on a ridge, far from malerious matter, or if, when they do settle near a stream, they would build on the south or west side of it, see that the fine summer breezes with which this country above all others, is blessed, coming as they do, most generally, from the south or southwest, instead of bringing the miasma to them would almost invariably drive it further from them, they might in most instances enjoy good health. This much I have said from information derived from close personal observation this year, and I have been in the midst of the affliction and in the heart of the sickly region, traveling for sixty miles up and down the Colorado river, on both sides of it.

And now, Mr. Editor, lest I weary the patience of you and your readers, I close by saying, that Texas is emphatically a great country, particularly the western portion of it.

Yours, as ever,

A. M. BEX.

P. S.—Since my last we have had a good meeting; 10 or 12 conversions and as many joined the church—also $85 more missionary collection. Thank God! A. M. B.

OAK BOWERY—RESIGNATION.

REV. T. B. RUSSELL.

—MR. EDITOR: Last Thursday will long be remembered by our citizens. On that day the Rev. Thomas B. Russell resigned the office of President of Oak Bowery Female College, Ala., which he had, during the last three years, filled with distinguished ability. The young ladies of the College, entertaining for him the highest esteem and deeply regreting his departure, determined to present him a copy of the Bible as a testimonial of their gratitude and regard. Our people generally assembled to witness the ceremonies and to hear the speeches of the occasion. Miss Laura J. Sneller, in behalf of the ladies, presented a large and beautiful Bible, accompanying the presentation with a chaste, elegant and appropriate address, to which President Russell replied in his happiest style. The strict attention and deep silence that pervaded the assembly during the delivery of the speeches, clearly evinced the interest each one felt in what was transpiring. All seemed to have a personal concern in the occasion, and to feel that it was of no ordinary character.

After the addresses the parting scene was indeed affecting. I have witnessed many similar scenes, but never saw anything that surpassed or equalled this in intensity of feeling. It is customary, I believe, on such occasions, for pupils to manifest regret at parting with their teachers by expressions of gratitude, &c., and a full flow of tears. The intimate relation of teacher and pupil very naturally engender these feelings. But it is rarely the case that pupils give to their teachers such marked and unmistakable evidences of their regard as was given to President Russell, and it is still more rare that a whole community will unite with a set of students in these tokens of esteem.

During the exercises there was scarcely a tearless eye in the house. Our oldest and best citizens of both sexes, appeared as deeply affected as any pupil of the college. Every one seemed to feel that he or she too was losing a dear invaluable friend, and that our community was losing one of its brightest ornaments.

Whatever may have been President Russells feeling on the occasion, he must at least have been gratified by this spontaneous outburst of affectionate regard from both his pupils and patrons, and with the reflection that his residence in Oak Bowery had procured for him the lasting best wishes of a large circle of devoted friends.

Now that he is gone, allow me to say that in all the elements of the true Christian gentleman and scholar, he has but few if any superiors. With a mind naturally vigorous and highly cultivated, and a heart which, as I have often heard it remarked, knows not how to do wrong, he certainly is a man capable of enlarged usefulness and of making himself agreeable and instructive in any circle of life. He leaves us with a character above reproach—in fact, as unspotted as untarnished gold. We can, therefore, cordially commend him to any community which may be so fortunate as to have him among them, as a gentleman of polished manners, a scholar of the highest attainments, and a Christian of the purest character.

By a unanimous resolution of our citizens enclosed I send you the addresses for publication in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

GERMAN MISSION CHURCH.

RUSSELL Co., Ala., Sept. 21, 18[illegible]

MY DEAR BROTHER: I snatch a few moments to write you again. On Friday, 2d, I left with my kind host, Dr. C. [illegible], in his carriage, for the Salem camp-ground, which we reached by 10 o'clock A. M. 8 o'clock services had just closed. This lovely spot for a camp-ground, a good [illegible] shed on a slope, surrounded with board [illegible] well roofed. The tent-holders were all on the ground, ready to receive guests, no matter how many. Here I met again with the brethren in the ministry, with whom I already made acquaintance at other [illegible]. Brother Neal, the preacher in charge of Crawford Circuit, conducted the meeting. I was glad to meet this amiable servant of God again.

The meeting progressed orderly, and well attended. The preaching was good and adapted to the occasion. At every call many were at the altar; a number got converted, and some united themselves to the church.

On Sunday, at 11 o'clock, an opportunity was given me to present our German cause. After having endeavored to set forth our Missions in Orleans, Brother Neal added some impressive remarks, and a collection in subscriptions and money was taken up to the amount of $240 for our German Mission Church. The meeting wound up on Sunday morning with the best of feelings.

According to the kind invitation of Brother John Ardis, a local preacher at Salem, I put up my lodging in his house and rested one night. An appointment having been given out for me to preach in Salem, I filled it on Tuesday evening, hearse as I was. The next morning, after day-break, in the midst of a thunder storm, took the mail-coach and started for Tuskegee.

Saturday morning repaired to the camp-ground, which is four miles from Tuskegee, and found the meeting in exercise. Brother Tichenor, preacher in charge of Tuskegee Circuit, had charge of the meeting. Met Dr. Fisk, of the Missionary of California, (not Dr. Hamilton, as in my former letter). He was appointed to preach a missionary sermon on Sunday at 11 o'clock, after which I was to make a short speech. The Doctor preached a most excellent sermon, in which he set forth the importance of our German Missions in glowing colors, and also the California cause. He done the thing so well that I deemed it unnecessary to speak at all. A collection in money and subscriptions was taken up, to which the people were encouraged by Brother Gillespie, preacher in charge of Tuskegee Station, which amounted to $160, of which $32 95 go to our German Mission Church. But I must remark that Brother Miller had held missionary meeting some months previous, and taken up collections for that purpose. Some of the brethren promised that they would direct their subscriptions to us.

Also here, on this camp-ground, I met those dear brethren again, with whom I spent several days at other places in the service of our Divine Master. We had good preaching on the ground; the [illegible] also were attentive and hospitable. Brother Armstrong, the P. Elder of Eufaula District, attended for several days and assisted in the meeting. Having formed his acquaintance at Enon, at which place he resides, as above very unfavorable circumstances of Tuskenaugee camp-meeting. He had no [illegible] at all to persuade me to go back with him to his District.

We left the camp-ground on Tuesday for Enon. Took up at the same house with Banks. Feel quite comfortable here, like at home, in this quiet and lovely family. The next morning planned for my further action. Brother Banks had a spare horse which is at my service as long as I have for it; so I start with the P. Elder to a quarterly meeting on Glenville Circuit [illegible] meeting-house, the name of it is not known to me—only I heard a brother say, Pinehurst Meeting-house; we will call it so. I met with little encouragement, as the Society of the number about twenty-five members, and they net wealthy. The leading brethren have to me that I must not set my expectations high, that I could not expect much. I committed my cause to the Lord and kept awaiting for Sunday morning. At nine we assembled for prayer-meeting, at the close of which, the Lord's Supper was administered. The P. Elder preached at 11 o'clock, as he said, his farewell sermon, and a happy time it was, on the [illegible] resurrection of Christ. He followed him with a missionary speech, at the close of which, we raised in subscriptions $120—$50 for our German Mission Church and between $70 and $80 for colored Mission. The house was filled to overflowing, with attentive hearers. So you see that my expectations were not only not set too high, but more than realized. The brethren congratulated me of having done much better than they had expected.

At evening service the house was crowded again. There seems to be a fair prospect for a revival. I must not forget to mention that Brother Williams, the preacher in charge of the Circuit, presented a resolution to the Quarterly Meeting Conference, inviting me to that Circuit, and recommending my mission to the kind regard of the circuit, which was adopted unanimously. May God bless the people at Pine-knot Meeting-house, with their excellent preachers, traveling and local.

I am now at the house of Rev. Wiley Ardis, a local preacher in Crawford Circuit; and here with this kind family I mean to stay until Thursday or Friday, and then go to Columbus, and spend the Sabbath there.

Yours, affectionately,

JOHN M. HOPE.

NEVER SAY FAIL.—The Buffalo Express gives the following account of a German's passage from the city of Albany to Buffalo: "A few days since our attention was called, at the Michigan Central Railroad, to a robust, jovial-looking German, happily puffing away at his meerschaum, as he walked up and down the track followed by his brood and kinder. Landed in Albany without a dime, there was no such word as fail to him; instead of giving up, without friends in a strange land and among strangers, with a cheerful face he told his story, received an encouraging word, and started on foot for his Western home, with hope and expectation high. The journey from Albany here had been accomplished on foot, in four weeks, and on his arrival here he had eight dollars that he had earned by working on the road at different places, with which he purchased tickets for Wisconsin. Years hence this same man will be possessor of a fine farm in the Badger State. These are the men for a new country."

MODEST PAIN TO INDIANS.—At a recent meeting of the American Board of Missions, it was stated that since 1789 the United States had paid to the Indians in money $35,274,877; in lands $71,041,723, making an aggregate of $106,000,000; so that the whites have not, as is generally charged, robbed them of their lands, and driven them from their homes, without some equivalent.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Obituary.

Sister L. M. Hamill, the daughter of Robert and Keziah Williamson, and the consort of Rev. R. G. Hamill, was born in Greene county, Alabama, in the year 1819—made a public profession of religion in 1846—and died in Greensborough, August 29, 1852.

When she died, there passed from the earth one of the most amiable and goodly spirits I have ever known. With an unruffled nature and an intense conscientiousness, she discharged all her duties in all the relations of life. As a friend, she was disinterested and sincere. Her attachments were of a very ardent character. The writer of this feels his own heart grow sad and lonely when he thinks he shall never enjoy on earth again, a friendship he so highly prized, and fears he shall never look upon her like again. As a wife, she was tender and dutiful. Her deep solicitude for all the interests of her husband, was a prominent trait in her character. As a step-mother, there was a nobleness, prudence and affection not often witnessed in the discharge of the arduous duties of this office. With the tenderness and firmness of an own mother, did she guide her husband's little ones in the path of wisdom and virture. We deem it high praise, yet not too high for her, when we say, she was the best step-mother we ever knew. As a Christian, she was an example well worthy of study and imitation. Religious principle was the granite formation on which her whole character was builded.—That character was compact, regular, symmetrical—yet there was nothing of the ascetic about her. In her, suavity and firmness were remarkably blended. Hers was a very quiet spirit; serene and tranquil as a lake embosomed in the mountains, the image of God mirrored itself deep in her heart and reflected a sweet and joyous light over her whole outward life. As a member of the Church, she was devoted to its interests, and regular in her attendance upon the means of grace. Three times each day did she regularly attend to her closet duties. As she moved on in her unpretending course, neither seeking nor shunning contact with the world, while all loved and admired, few knew what a beautiful nature lay hid in that fragile form. As her life was holy, her death was triumphant; as it approached she spoke of it calmly and expressed her entire readiness and willingless to depart. She selected as the text for her funeral, Romans I, 16. With a prospect unclouded, her spirit gently loosed its hold upon the clay, like the hand of a mother gently detaching itself from her sleeping babe, and went to take its place before the throne. We sorrow for the Church for the loss of so rich an ornament—for ourself, for the loss of so dear a friend—for the husband, for the loss of so estimable a companion—for the little ones, for a loss which leaves them a second time orphans. But, while we sorrow, we rejoice in the precious remembrances of her gentle and pious life, and in the sweet assurance that she dwells with the angels.

Demopolis, Sept. 1852.

The deceased was born in Peterburg, Va., Oct. 7, 1802, and emigrated to this State in the early settlement of the country.—For many years previous to his removal to Mobile, he resided in this place, and was extensively engaged in mercantile pursuits. During this time he formed a very numerous and extensive acquaintance, and acquired a reputation for probity of conduct and integrity in business, that will long endear his memory to those who only knew him in the ordinary transactions of comaercial life.

He embraced religion and joined the M. E. Church, in 1836. His character as a Christian was not unlike the man in whatever else he undertook. Unpretending and humble, but active, upright and even. He was more actuated by principle than impulse, yet not without those gracious emotions of soul that impart vigor to principle, prefer to devotion and consolation under the trial and duties of our probationary existence. The writer of this brief notice served the church in Mobilo (1845) to which the deceased belonged, and one thing he distinctly recollects of him as worthy of special notice; that is, that Bro. E. not only found time to attend to the services of the sanctuary on the Sabbath, but the week-night lecture, prayer and class-meetings, always received a due sharo of his attention, even amidst the pressing engagements of the business season of the yerr.

It is scarcely necessary here to add any thing respecting the deceased as husband, parent and friend. In all these relations, we are led to believo, from what we know and learn, that he was as near blameless as falls to the lot of mankind; and so irreproachable has been his life, that we may with consistency and propriety refer to him as an example worthy of our imitation.

Of his last moments we have but few particulars, save that he suffored with perfect resignation to the will of God, and his end was peace. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, from henceforth: Yea saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow."

Columbus, Miss., Sept. 20, 1852.

Died, Auguet 11th, Wm. Lewis, son of L. A. McCarty, nged two years and seven months.

This beautiful and interesting boy was the pride and joy of his parents and their friends. How glad and joyous was his nature, that a ray of sunshine seemed to follow him every where. But before his sky was darkened by single sorrow, God took him to that land where sorrow never comes.

State and its Churches.—The Spanish Government is exhibiting symptoms of a longing to lay their hands on the wealth of the church in that country. An order has been issued by the Minister of Justice and Ecclesiastical affairs, directed to the bishops and heads of dioceses of Spain, demanding a complete inventory of all the property and articles of value in the various churches. The sorts of guesses are current as to the object of this. It is believed by some that nothing else is intended than to keep up the artificial credit of the State by an estimate of the wealth of the church. When it is considered that the cathedral at Toledo, for instance, has $500,000, it would be no matter of surprise if the grand total in the kingdom should reach $125,000,000.

The Orleans Family.—An agent of the Orleans family is in Hungary, buying anonymous properties. It is known in this unhappy country almost all the great lords have been obliged to throw their lands into the market—to sell their lands! They are broad provinces in extent. The Orleans family is making there very important acquisitions, and at little cost; for just at this moment in Hungary lands are most profitably invested in these feudal domains. The family is thus about to remake a colossal fortune with the spoils of the Hungarian nobility.

New Orleans and Jackson Railroad.—Messrs. Coleman and O'Shaughuessy, commence, on next Monday, the opening of the New Orleans and Jackson Railroad. They are determined to carry through faithfully their portion of the contracts.

Death of the Duke of Wellington.—It will be noticed that "the Iron Duke," after all the great battles he has fought, in India, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, etc., has, at last, as announced per telegraph, found a mightier conqueror than himself in Death.

Red River.—The Louisiana (Alexandria) Democrat of the 20th ult. says: The river at this point is in fine boating order, large boats being able to pass over the falls. The prospect now is, that we will not be troubled with low water this season.

The Line of Battle Ship Pennsylvania.—This ship, which cost the nation $600,000, built at Philadelphia in 1835, is now lying at the Norfolk Navy Yard, and has recently been converted into a hall-room for the entertainment of the officers of that station. She is the largest ship in the American Navy, and the most costly. She carries 140 guns, and the only voyage she ever made was from Philadelphia to Norfolk. A correspondent of the Otich Oazette, in writing from Norfolk, Sept. 10, speaks of the ship as follows: The narrow inlet which is her present quarters, not allowing her to swing at anchor with the tide, and exposing constantly the same side to the rays of the sun, her timbers have decayed, and would require an immense outlay to replace. The sand has formed bars around her, the oysters taken up their beds beside her, and fastened her to the bottom, and if she over moves again, it will be done by carrying the country with her.

Wrecks on the Florida Coast.—The number of vessels wrecked on the Florida coast for the last eight years, is 279. Amount awarded for salvage $789,911 47. Amount of expenses $631,766 65. Total amount of salvage and expenses $1,321,678 03. Value of vessels and cargo $7,018,217 77. The total number of vessels wrecked or injured on the Florida coast and reefs since Key West was first inhabited (in 1823) is es estimated to exceed 1200; and the value of said vessels, their cargoes, etc., not less than $40,000,000.

The Case of Gardiner.—"Ion," of the Baltimore Sun, in referring to the Gardiner case, says: "I have had some doubt whether a commission would be sent to Mexico, as proposed by Mr. Soule's Committee, to examine the mines indicated by Dr. Gardiner as those which he worked, and the title deeds which he produced. But I now learn that a commission will certainly be sent out for that purpose. This will bring the matter to a satisfactory test, without the trouble of any more examinations and cross-examinations."

Sickness.—The Lafeyette (Ala.) Tribune of the 24th says: For two months past, there has been more sickness in this vicinity than has been known since the settlement of the county. The fatality has not been proportionately great, but still there has been quite a number of deaths. Typhoid fever and bilious dysentery are the chief scourges.

Arrival of the Steamship Falcon.

LATER FROM CALIFORNIA.

The steamship Falcon, Lieut. Henry Rodgers, U. S. Navy, commanding, arrived Thursday morning from Aspinwall, which place she left on the 23d ult. She brings San Francisco dates to the 1st of September and Panama to the 18th. She brings the mail from California to the 1st ult., and the passengers of the California and Winfield Scott; a list of which we give below.

The Ohio left Navy Bay via Kingston, for New York, on the evening of the 21st. The steamer United States left Navy Bay on the 23d for New York. The Ohio had three hundred passengers, and two millions of dollars in freight.

The California beat the Winfield Scott thirty-six hours on her passage down.

The news from California is not of a very interesting character.

A Slave Case.—Judges Murray and Anderson, of San Francisco, have rendered the decision of the Supreme Court in the matter of the three slaves, whose case has been under consideration in that court for some time past. Their names are Carter Perkins, Robert Perkins and Sandy Jones. Mr. C. C. Perkins, of Bollvar county, Miss., is the claimant, and arrived in October, 1849, with the first named slave. The other two arrived afterwards. They had been at work in the mines until the 31st of May last, when they were arrested at Dubir, Placer county, on the complaint of Mr. Perkins, who seeks to re-convey them to Mississippi, under the provisions of the act of the Legislature "respecting fugitives from labor, and slaves brought to the State prior to her admission into the Union," passed April 15, 1852. They were taken thence to Sacramento City, and, before Judge H. Fry, instead of the Prince, where proof was addduced of their being the property of Mr. Perkins, and they were ordered into his custody. They then sought for a release under a writ of habeas corpus, before Judge Aldrich, of the District Court of that Judicial District, who held that they were legally restrined of their liberty, and remanded them in custody. Mr. Perkins then brought them down to San Francisco, for the purpose of putting them on a steamer, when they obtained from Justice Wells, then holding a temporary appointment as one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, a second writ of habeas corpus, which brought their case before that tribunal.

The case was argued there some two months since, by Messrs. E. Norton, C. Cole and H. S. Brown, on behalf of the slaves, and by Judge Todd Robinson for the owner. Judge Wells's term having expired, by reason of the return of Judge Heydenfeldt, the decision of the case was left in the hands of Judges Murray and Anderson, each of whom delivered opinions coming to the same conclusion. Both of the opinions are very lengthy, and are devoted exclusively to the constitutionality of the law of the Legislature, and both Justices concur in the opinion that the law is constitutional and valid. An order was accordingly made that the negroes be re-delivered into the custody of the claimant.

Parker H. French Turned up Again.—The celebrated Parker H. French, whose extensive forgeries on the Rio Grande and desperate exploits in Northern Mexico have given him a wide-spread notoriety, and who was supposed to be dead, has turned up again, as will be seen from the following, which we copy from the San Francisco Herald of the 2nth of August:

In a late number of El Registro Official, published at Durango, we find an address in Spanish of the notorious Parker H. French, to Jose Mariano del Regato, the Governor of that State, soliciting authority to raise a force of American warriors, to rid the country of its relentless enemies, the Apaches. He opens modestly by saying:

"I am aware that I appear before you excellency under most unfavorable auspices since I have just come forth from imprisonment with a reputation much defamed, without friends and without influence to recommend me, but t venture of myself to take this step, blindly trusting in the wisdom of your excellency, which I am fully convinced illustrates a judgment entirely impartial and upright. I am not the first innocent victim that malice has calumniated, or the rude prejudices of an ignorant multitude borne down."

After this half exculpatory—have flattering exordium, French enters into a short autobiography. From this it appears that he was in Mazatlan in January, 1851, where he learned that the Governar of Durango was desirous of employing a body of guerillas, familiar with the Indian mode of warfare, against the Apaches and Camanches, who were ravaging the country.

"Fond of an active life," he continues, "it was agreed by myself, and a number of my countrymen, to go to Durango and offer our services to your Excellency, but on the road we had an unfortunate affair with some rancheros, the result of which was a long imprisonment for me, which has at last terminated. My companions have already started for California, while for myself, assured of success in my undertaking, I have determined to direct this communication to your Excellency. Your Excellency's wisdom will conceive that in this country, foreign to our habits and customs, energy and firmness of character are necessary to accomplish any difficult undertaking, but much more one which lacks advantages of every kind, than another which possesses some conveniences at least for furnishing, even at the risk of life, proper recourse to obtain subsistence."

French here describes the Seminoles of Florida, and says they have waged a bloody war against the United States for sixteen years, costing the Government about eighty million dollars.

"Of late years, however, the United States have made peace with them, and transported several thousand to the Western frontier of Arkansas, but shortly after, disgusted by the non-fulfillment of the conditions stipulated, upwards of a thousand, including their chiefs, warriors, passed over into the State of Texas, in search of new homes in that Republic. Now this people resides in the neighborhood of Santa Rosa—Laguna de Jaco, and on the banks of the Rio Bravo. Many of them are already familiar with this mechanic arts, and others have a semi-civilized education, speaking with perfection the English, Spanish and French dialects. They are all extremely courageous, for from childhood they have been accustomed to the dangers of war, and many a time have fought with the American troops, and have defeated them by their superiority in battle. They use with admirable precision the death-dealing rifle and the revolving pistol. They are cool in danger, constant under privations, and dogged under every species of cruel punishment, and you may rest assured they are more skilled for a war of extermination against savage tribes, than any other kind of soldiers in the world, since they possess, besides the acuteness and sagacity of their barbarous brothers, without their sanguinary ferocity, that discernment and comprehension which are the sure marks of the white man. In this view, your Excellency will perceive that they are the most proper to pursue constantly the savages even to their most secret retreats in the mountains—wrest from them the fruits of their depredations, destroy their rancherias, and by this means give entire security to the State.

"I believe I have sufficient influence with the Seminoles, and I therefore propose to your Excellency to conduct to this city one hundred and fifty or two hundred of them, mounted and perfectly armed, and in their own expense, in six weeks from the day a contract is made with me, and to have them ready, the moment they arrive here, to rush to the point of daeger, serving your Excellency with the greatest fidelity, on the single condition that they may be granted with every security the pay provided for their enlistment in the propositions which I shall have the honor to submit to your Excellency, if you should deem proper to grant me a private conference for the purpose of explaining more fully my enterprise.

"In command of this little force, I can certain I can save the people of the State half a million of dollars annually at least, without counting the protection which will result to agriculture, mining and commerce. Trusting that your Excellency will excuse the language of this communication, both in the awkwardness of the Spanish idiom, with which I am not familiar, and in the neglect of those rules which may have been provided by the laws of this country for the preparation of an application of this kind, I entreat you graciously to accept my humble services and respects, and to believe me God and Liberty,

"Parker H. French.

"To his Excellency, Don Jose Maria del Regato, Gov. of the State of Durango."

The San Francisco Herald of the 28th ult. says:

We are pleased to announce that all fears of an extensive Indian outbreek in the Four Creek country have been removed by the prompt action of General Hitchcock, in sending such a force to the spot as completely to overawe the savages. The result of the Grand Council was entirely satisfactory, and the most earnest promises were made by the chiefs to preserve the peace towards the whites. The whole community will feel grateful to General Hitchcock and his officers for their intelligent exertions in saving the country from an impending Indian war.

The Sacramento Journal has the following intelligence:

A party of thirty-five Kentuckians, residents of Madison and Clark counties, arrived in town yesterday, having left Fort Independence on the 6th May. They started with seven wagons and thirty mules, all of which were brought through in good order. There was considerable cholera prevailing among the trains, but they suffered no loss by this disease. A daughter of Dr. Cooper, who was one of the party, was buried at Fort Kearney.

The emigrants on the way appear to be suffering more from sickness than from scarcity of provisions, as nearly all of the companies this year have an abundant supply of the necessaries of life. This company found grass very scant for about forty miles up Carson river, but on the Humboldt there was sufficient for their stock.

There have been numerous rumors here of the great destruction of stock upon the Humboldt; but we are informed by this company that they saw but two or three dead animals upon the desert, and that the stock generally along the entire route were in good condition. From observation and information, this party are of the opinion that their train was in the middle of the emigration of the present year, nearly the same number of teams having arrived as were left in their rear. The train came through "Sublette's Cut-off," and arrived at Carson Valley a week ago last Monday. They met the relief train at Carson River Canon, and from it obtained some provisions. The following is the list of persons composing the company: From Madison county, Kentucky—Edward Tiley, Harrison Helfenstein and family, J. Helfenstein and family, O. F. McIntosh and family, J. W. Payden and family. From Clark county—J. W. McIntosh, Mrs. A. H. Cooper and family; and Mrs. Fugett, from Missouri also accompanied this train.

The following items of news are from the San Francisco Whig of the 1st ult:

We learn from gentlemen residing at Contra Costa, the causes inducing, and the result of, the riot at Oakland, which occurred on Friday last. It seems that about two years ago, Justice Harper, whose property has been destroyed by fire, settled near the present site of Oakland, upon land claimed by Peralta, but being desirous of respecting any claim Peralta might have under Mexican grant, he entered into an agreement with him, by the terms of which he was to occupy the land (some 160 acres) until the decision of the case by the land commissioners. Moon, Carpentier and Adams, (the latter of whom is also a Justice of the Peace) made claim to the land occupied by Harper, as well as to a large tract situated adjacent to it.

Difficulties have arisen between these parties several times. A few weeks since, Harper's house was torn down, but another was constructed on the same spot. About this time the Sheriff of Contra Costa was killed, and a man by the name of Hardy was charged with his murder, but the grand jury ignored the bill. The parties before referred to had both been more or less engaged in this affair, and bitter feelings were excited between them. Adams was indicted for perjury, and an officer came up from Martinez some days since to serve the warrant. It is said that he was resisted, and failed to make the arrest. The warrant was left with the marshal of Contra Costa some days since, who has also failed to make the arrest, although Adams is in Oakland.

On Friday last, a set of men whose names are known, probably led on by the series of excitements growing out of these adverse claims, the death of the Sheriff, etc., went to the house of Justice Harper, in his absence, and after removing a portion of his goods to another part of the town, destroyed the house and the remaining goods by fire. Some of the judicial records of Justice Harper were among the properly destroyed.

Three murders are recorded as having taken place this week, one at San Jose, one at Almaden mines, and the third at Santa Clara Mission.

The editor of the Register has been presented with a bunch of wheat which contained eighty heads, grown in that vicinity.

The Bark Sarmiento.—We have conversed with some of the passengers who arrived by this bark on Thursday last from Panama, via San Blas and Sandwich Islands. Although she is said to be only 300 tons burthen, she started from Panama with 213 passengers. Notwithstanding the length of the passage and the short allowance the passengers were put upon, it is surprising that only eight of them died, one being hung and one shot. We understand that legal proceedings are about being instituted against the ship.

Discovery of an Island.—Captain Morrille, of the brig Argyle, arrived at this port yesterday from Hong Kong, reports having discovered an island about one mile in length, in latitude 24 deg 23 min. north, and longitude 131 east. It was covered with green bushes, but presented an iron-bound shore. A reef of about a mile in extent projected from the northern side, while on the eastern and near the shore was a rock.

San Francisco Markets.

San Francisco, Tuesday, August 31.—Business for the past fortnight has decidedly improved on the previous two weeks. There has been several heavy speculative movements. With a few exceptions, prices generally are up to last steamer's rates.

Agricultural Implements.—Dull, with large stock.

Boots and Shoes.—Prices unstained, with the exception of fine boots, which are lower.

Bricks.—Demand fully up to supply.

Business says been doing better.

Coffee has been all bought up, and holders ask a large advance on previous rates.

Candles are lower. Stock ample, with large shipments expected.

Cigars are in better supply, with consequent decline in prices.

Coals.—The market is bountifully supplied with all kinds. Prices hardly sustained.

Drugs and Medicines.—No change.

Flour has largely advanced, with several large sales, to arrive.

Grain.—Prices have been fluctuating, with a slightly downward tendency.

Provisions.—Pork has been in brisk demand, and prices fully sustained.

Lard has suffered a still further decline.

Hams are in demand at our quotations.

Butter during the fortnight has been greatly depressed. Sales as low as 32 cents for prime. For the past day or two a reaction has taken place, and it is largely in demand at our quotations.

Rice.—The price of this article has greatly advanced, selling at 2½ to 3c cents.

Sugars remain as before, except refined, which have advanced on speculative movements.

The prospect for business for the ensuing two weeks is good. It we have no arrivals during that time. There will no doubt be quite an advance in a number of the staple articles.

We find the following notice of a marriage in the San Francisco Whig:

In this city, August 26, in Grace Church, by the Rev. Dr. Ver Mehr, Edward Visher, of Hatisbon, Bavaria, to Sophia Prince Smith, of London; previously united by proxy at the American Consulate, Hamburg, the 10th of May last.

We have files at Panama papers to the 18th ult.

Lieut. D. French Dulany, U. S. N., bearer of dispatches from Bailie-Peyton, Minister of the U. S. at Chili, passed through Panama to take the NewYork mail steamer. Lieut. Reid Warden, lately married at Valparaise, and resigned his office in the navy, took passage with his lady, also on the NewYork steamer.

The Star of the 11th says: "Every day the people through Panama appear to become more and more excited about the recent discoveries of gold made in the neighborhood, and the lethargic natives are bestirring themselves, and seem to prepare an interest in any company that may be formed to explore the mines.

"The parties who have made the discovery, tell a very straightforward story relative thereto, and the samples of gold which they have produced, with letters which they have brought from respectable natives in the neighborhood, removes all doubt as to the existence of the precious metal in abundance, not far from this city.

"One or two projects are on foot for the establishment of companies to proceed to the mines immediately, but the probability is that in a day or two a goodly number of speculators will be on their way to this new Eldorado.

The new steamer Brother Jonathan, for the safety of which serious apprehensions have been entertained for some time, arrived at Panama on the 3d inst., from New York, having made the trip from Valparaiso in the short space of twelve days. She belongs to the Vanderbilt line, and is intended to run on the Pacific from San Juan del Sur to San Francisco, in connection with the NewOrleans steamers for that route.

Later from China.

Dates from Kong Kong to the 21th have been received at San Francisco.

Accounts from the interior of China represent great overflows of the rice fields and thousands of persons drowned.

The revolution appears to be gaining ground steadily, but reports are so confused that little dependence is placed on them by the papers. Wulautai, the Tartar commander in China, who was shot in an engagement near Kwei-lin-fu—had died of his wounds, or in other language, "gone to his wanderings among the gentl." The Imperialists are stated to have been worsted in the encounter last reported to send Kweilin to be in rebel possession. The suburbs of the city were destroyed by fire. The imperial Commissioner, Sen, has been superseded by Yeh, and has proceeded towards Kwei-liafu. The principal rebel-quelling Commissioner Sae-shang-ha, has been recalled to Pekin.

The Friend of China has a letter which speaks of the capture of Wa-chin, one of the rebel chiefs, "and the very man who styled himself King Tien-teh last year"—and who gave the throne over to Foog-wing-sau, contenting himself with the position of second King. "This," the writer says, "is the most meritorious action the Imperialist troops have ever performed in Kwangsi. Wachin will be sent to Pekin for trial and execution; this news is very true—there is no mistake about it."

The same journal regards affairs as bearing an alarming aspect, and deems it impossible to tell what may come next. A history of previous risings in the Kingdom is given, to show that the one now progressing is by far the most serious.

Manila.—Accounts to the 17th June describe the royal festivities, which came off on the 13th, 14th and 15th. On the first of these days commenced the processions from the different villages. Indians dressed as Moorish chiefs, conducting the car to the palace, filled with gaily dressed females representing the Queen and her maids. In the afternoon were pony races, feats of horsemanship, etc. Second and third days the same, with addition of canoe races, and at night brilliant displays of fire-works and illuminations—the whole concluding with a grand ball in a pagoda, built by Chinese expressly for the occasion, which is said to have gone off very well, and was attended by the elite of the place.

Dinner by the Boston Merchants

TO HON. THOMAS BARING, M. P.

The dinner given at Boston on Tuesday, the 21st ult., by about two hundred of the leading merchants of Boston, to the Hon. Thomas Baring, of the firm of Baring Brothers, of London, took place at the Revere House, and is said, to have been a most elegant affair. The Hon. Samuel A. Elliott presided, and the Germania Society enlivened the occasion by their excellent music. Mr. Webster and Gen. Pierce were expected to be present, but did not make their appearance.

Mr. Elliott, after the removal of the cloth, rose and spoke of the great services rendered the mercantile community of this country by the eminent house of which Mr. Baring was a member. He lauded the high and strict integrity of the firm, and stated that they had met here to show their respect for these noble qualities, and to their representative present. Mr. Elliott next spoke of the true basis of mercantile reputation as being epitomized in the conduct and management of the house of Baring Brothers. Allusion was made to the rumors current concerning the mission of the respected guest of the evening—if it was one of diplomacy, he kept his secret well. Mr. Elliott wound up by paying a very high compliment to Mr. Baring, whose health he proposed. A perfect storm of cheers greeted the toast.

Mr. Baring rose to reply, when the cheering was continued long and loud.

He said he did not know how to express what he felt at meeting with such a reception; nor could he imagine that they ought to greet him, an humble individual, in such a very marked and kindly manner. As the feelings and his humble ability would permit him, he would endeavor to make some reply to their greeting, but regretted that he had not words at command suitable to use in performing that duty; he, however, relied on the kindness of which a flattering demonstration had just been made, for an excuse for short comings.

He felt, when he looked around him, he might assuredly rely on the strength of their feelings towards him. He had thought when he came here that it would not be necessary on his part to allude to the object of his mission to this country, and he felt surprised when their worthy Chairman made the remark that perhaps it might involve a political or diplomatic purpose. Surely when it was known—as it would soon be—that his humble talents were unsuited to any diplomatic task, the more especially unsuited because of the many other most pressing eminent qualifications for such duties being left behind him—no such opinion would be hazarded. Agents were generally chosen for diplomatic purposes who had some qualifications for the task, which he confessed he had not.

If any reason existed in addition why the gentlemen assembled ought to be convinced that diplomacy was not the object of his mission, that reason would be found in a contrast of his own with the splendid abilities of his friend, the Hon. Edward Everett, who, during his mission to England, was none more distinguished by his ability than by his urbanity and high-mindedness. Thus knowing what a real and a competent diplomatist was, he considered it strange that such suggestions should be entertained. He had not come to meddle with the fishery question, or to take care of the Lobos Islands. He could not dive so deep, nor look so far, and was happy in coming here to be divested of all such incumbrances. Some twenty-three years ago he was his good fortune to visit this country and spend a brief period in it. At that time he was received with a courtesy and kindness that could not and had not failed to make a deep impression on his gratitude. A yeomanry had been allotted to him to see and admire the rising institutions of this great country, which had been altogether insufficient for that purpose, or even to note in any considerable intimate degree all that was remarkable and praiseworthy to be seen and understood. What he had then seen had begot gratification and interest to know more; and for many years—ever since his last visit—he had desired, earnestly desired, to go back and renew old friendships, and become more acquainted with what was so full of interest to him.

The interval had been spent by him in pleasing and intimate relations with the commercial men of the United States, and his wish had been enhanced by the deep desire to meet them personally, and realize to sight what mutual transactions had fully and satisfactorily proved to his mind, that they enjoyed a prosperity which was the deserved sequence to upright, honorable and high-minded practices. It happened most untimely for him, that a very few weeks remained at his disposal—some seven or so—of which two had already been spent, and pleasantly spent, in this city. Here he had seen some change, and more improvement. The hot fever of youthful commercial energy had not exhibited the slightest indications of approaching decay; everything showed the contrary. Telegraphic communication, railroads, canals, and other aids to commerce were enumerated by Mr. Baring as having been liberally recognized as the strength of the national welfare, and, as having combined to open up roads for cultivation, and enterprise inexhaustible in their riches and usefulness.

Alluding to certain observations made by the chairman, relative to the value and necessity of peace to the prosperity of commerce, Mr. Baring said he hoped no temporary excitement would operate to roar the kindly feelings now existing between America and Great Britain, or that any present cause of umbrage should beget effects which would militate against the welfare of the future.

He was not at all afraid of the discernments of the two nations involving themselves in such a way, with the prospect of such consequences before them. To multiply power was in work through the means of such peaceful and mind-cultivating institutions as were so markedly furnished in this State, and not the much any such means as might be the result of a war among friends.

Mr. Baring then paid a very flattering compliment to the educational charitable and other institutions of this country; and continued to allege the motives of the party present in inviting him to such a high honor as that of being their guest. He attributed the main cause of their party fity to arise from their feelings towards the firm with which he was connected, and especially their sentiments of respect towards its local representatives, to whose character he paid a very beautiful compliment, concluding with the belief that the respect they had gained from the commercial community could not have been engendered in the breasts of men whose stern integrity and unflinching honesty did not assimilate to those they so highly respected. This noble reputation, the commercial men of Boston possessed every where, and hence their prosperity and credit came.

In conclusion, he approved of the remarks of the chairman relative to the value of peace to America and Great Britain. Every additional year of its continuance added another link to the chain of prosperity, and another series of blessings through which wealth and national comfort could be best promoted. The purpose of both Governments, he assured gentlemen, in his estimation, was to maintain peace, as such was their only true line of policy. Cabinets and political parties might rise and fall, and changes might arise which involved important results; but whatever alteration might take place, there could be no doubt that the welfare of the people and Governments of both countries was for peace. Commerce was the mighty girder of peace, and whatever tended to break the bond would be destructive of the interest of nations. Looking at the questions which now and then arose, rubra were slow to understand each other, and they were properly so. Misunderstandings might arise; but with reference to Great Britain, the people of that country were to spread of the position and welfare of America—the origin of whose welfare they somewhat claimed—to desire or countenance other than the most friendly relations.

Mr. Baring concluded by expressing his gratitude anew for an honor he felt constrained to divide with his associates. He sat down after giving the following toast:

"Friendship—May it not be national or sectional, but universal."

The sentiment was received with repeated cheers. Speeches were made by the Hon Wm Appleton, the Hon. Edward Everett, and several other eloquent gentlemen.

Lake Nicaragua.—The following description of Lake Nicaragua is from a work published in London by John Baily, long a resident in Nicaragua:

"The Lake of Nicaragua is a fine expanse of water, extending about ninety miles from one extremity to the other; the greatest breadth being about forty, and the mean thirty miles. Near the shores, that is by say, about the distance of one hundred yards from the beach, there is generally a depth of two fathoms of water; in other parts, between five and fifteen fathoms are found.

"Several groups of islets and some islands diversify the surface; of the latter, Zapatera, Omotepet, and Madera are the largest, being several miles in circuit. Zapatera is mountainous, rising nearly 2,000 feet in height, and uninhabited. Omotepet is inhabited by an industrious race of Indians, who raise maize, etc., and possess

TALES OF THE SLAVE SQUADRON.

Lieutenant Armstrong was commander (acting) of the Curlew for some months after the occurrence of the incidents related in a former paper; and a more zealous or successful officer has never, in my belief, been engaged in hazardous and difficult service on the slave coast. In four months, we had made three captures—irrespective of the Fair Rosamond—the name of one of which, El Reyna, a clipper brig that had long eluded the vigilance and outstripped the speed of our cruisers, as well as the ingenious mode by which she was finally made captive, must have attracted the notice of many newspaper readers of those days. But although a first-rate seaman and dashing commander, there was a defect—perhaps I should say an exaggeration of character—in Lieutenant Armstrong, which, in a considerable degree, marred his high qualities, and gave a tone of harshness to his demeanor, under certain circumstances, quite foreign, I am sure, to his real disposition. He was, in a word—as I believe I have previously hinted—an iron disciplinarian, and this entirely from a conviction that only by the stern, relentless application of the maritime code of punishment could the supremacy of the navy be permanently maintained. Peremptory, irresponsible power, such as then existed in the service, is pretty sure, at one time or other, to lead an officer who indulges in it to the commission of serious wrong and injustice. This, at all events, was once the case, during his professional life, with Lieutenant Armstrong, and the consequences of that grave error were, by a remarkable fatality, visited upon him and others, at a time and in a manner equally unexpected and terrible. This omitted but instructive passage in our naval history I am now about to place before the reader.

We took El Reyna into Sierra Leone, and while there, news was brought that Le Requin (The Shark,) a fifty-named, notorious, and successful clayer, was on the coast. This vessel, the property of a French Brazilian Creole, was commanded by a skillful and active desperado of the English name of Harrison, and once a petty officer in the royal navy. His assumed designation, however, was borrowed from the fine craft he commanded—Captain Le Requin—and he was reported to have under his orders a motley crew of some of the most reckless ruffians that could be picked out of the refuse of half a dozen civilized nations. It was, moreover, well known that Le Requin, when the "black" market was slack, overstocked, or more than usually hazardous, did a little in the way of ordinary, admitted piracy; and stringent orders had consequently been issued to the officers of the squadron to use their utmost efforts to sink or capture so daring and unscrupulous a rover.

It was manifest that Lieutenant Armstrong listened to the many rumors afloat relative to the probable whereabouts of Le Requin with a far deeper than merely professional interest. His inquiries as to the appearance of the vessel, and the hands she chiefly frequented, were earnest and incessant; and it was whispered among us that Harrison had served in the same ship with the commander of the Curlew, and that circumstances of an unusual character had occurred in connection with them both. However this might be, there was evidently some strong private motive at the bottom of the lieutenant's desperate anxiety to get away in search of the piratical slaver, and so quickly did he dispatch his official business relative to the Curlew's last important capture, that we were at sea again in half the time we had reckoned upon remaining at Sierra Leone. Our course was to the south and east, and as the winds proved favorable, the Curlew rapidly swept the African sea-board from Sierra Leone to the Bight of Biafra, looking as we passed into every inlet that might afford shelter or concealment to the object of our search. A sharp, wearying look-out was at length rewarded by a passing gleam of success. We were in about thirty leagues of Cape Lopez, when the look-out at the mast-head announced first one and then two sail on the weather-bow. They rose quickly out of the water, and no wonder, for they had had a gale of wind on the quarter, and it was not long before we could guess very accurately at the character of both. The headmost was a square-rigged ship, of about four hundred tons burthen, pursued by an armed schooner of half that tonnage, coming up with her hand over hand. Commander Armstrong immediately pronounced the schooner to be Le Requin,—an opinion confirmed by several old salts who had obtained a passing glimpse of the celebrated craft upon one or two occasions. As the Curlew, in anticipation of a dirty night, had been made very snug, and did not show much top-hamper, it was hoped she might not be seen until Le Requin was within reach of her guns. For upwards of an hour this appeared likely enough; but at last the anxious men, whose eyes swept the horizon in all directions from the merchantman's decks, caught sight of us, and unable to restrain their exultation at the glad vision of a man-of-war creeping up to the rescue, instantly let off a piece of pop-gun artillery, ran up the union-jack, and set up a tiny shout in derision of the pursuer, which the direction of the wind just enabled us to hear and echo with sundry very hearty maledictions of their stupid throats. Le Requin quickly hauled her wind, and at once recognizing the character of her new customer, got, with all possible speed, upon the same tack as ourselves, and being a remarkably fine weatherly vessel, went off full half a point closer to the wind than the Curlew, thus showing from the first moment the well nigh hopeless aspect of the chase.

Night fell—black as the inside of a tar-barrel—with a gale of wind that by midnight had increased to a tempest, accompanied by flashes of lightning and peals of thunder which those acquainted only with the electrical phenomena of temperate regions can form but a faint conception of. Frequently, during the night, a more than usually brilliant coruscation showed us Le Requin upon the white crest of a huge wave, far away to windward; but when the cold gray morning dawned, the schooner had utterly disappeared, leaving us miserably cold, wet, disappointed and savage. One thing, at all events, our night's chase had taught us—that the Curlew was no match for Le Requin in point of speed, and that if we ever should succeed in putting salt upon his tail, it must be by some cleverer expedient than that of running after him at the rate of five feet to his six.

Captain Armstrong looked considerably bluer than the bluest of us, and did not reappear on deck till five or six hours after the ascertained disappearance of the schooner. He then ordered the Curlew's course to be changed to the north-west till further orders. The further orders were not issued till about noon on the morrow, when the sloop's head was pointed nearly due south; and whilst cracking under a stiff breeze in that direction, the commander's new "dodge" for entrapping the coveted prey developed itself. The broad white ribbon along the gun-line was painted black; our No. 1. man-of-war canvas was exchanged for some worn, and here and there patched, merchant-sails, fished up from the hold; the shiny brass fittings of the deck, and the glittering figure-head, were smudged brown; the brass swivel-gun amidships was unshipped and sent below; the carpenter and his crew manufactured a lot of wooden gun-muzzles, (Quakers,) and these, when painted, were protruded from the port-holes in place of the real barkers, which were carefully concealed beneath tarpaulin, sails, hencoops, gratings and other lumber; and so ostentatiously warlike were the "Quakers" fashioned, that their harmless character could be detected by half an eye at half a league's distance. Many other minor changes and disguises were effected, and the Curlew's transmogrification was complete.

We now gradually edged away to the eastward, and as soon as we reached about nine degrees south latitude and five degrees east longitude, the Curlew's bows once more pointed northward, and we crept slowly enough along in the day, whilst during the night we generally lay to, in order not to get along too rapidly. By the commander's orders all the officers—himself included—replaced their epaulettes and laced uniforms and cocked hats by round jackets and hats, and not more than twenty men were allowed to be on deck during daylight. All these twigs being carefully limed, we made way at an average rate of not more than three or four knots an hour, and for as latterly a fashion—considering the but recent practice of the crew in that line—as could be expected. Time crept on as lazily as we did, and doubts whether our Captain's clever contrivance would not end in ample were beginning to be entertained, when we spoke a brig bound for the Cape, a little north of the equator, which gave us the pleasant information that a large bark she had fallen in with, laden with ivory, palm oil and gold dust, had been plundered the previous evening by a piratical schooner, supposed to be Le Requin. The crew, it was further stated, had not been personally maltreated, and the bark had proceeded on her course.

This was great news, and so well did it sharpen the optics of many of us, that an almost simultaneous hail, from half a dozen voices, at daybreak the next morning, announced a strange sail, hull down astern, and steering westward. Every glass in the sloop was quickly directed towards the stranger, whose white sails—unmistakably those of a schooner—glanced brilliantly in the newly-risen, unclouded sun. Every body felt, or affected to be sure, it was Le Requin; and when the schooner—which did not for some time appear to see us—turned her bowsprit towards the Curlew and crowded sail, avidcatly in pursuit, the last lingering doubt vanished, and we, of course, zealously busied ourselves with ostentatious efforts to effect our escape from the suspicious looking craft.

But spite of all we could do, so miserably was our ship handled and steered—terror-stricken man could do nothing well—that we could hardly get five knots out of her; and the ferocious schooner would, it was quite certain, be up with us in less than no time. The commander's face was deathly pale from over-excitement, I supposed; and, as for the crew, they were in an ecstasy of uncontrollable mirth. The notion of a sloop-of-war running away from, and being chased by, a slaver or pirate, was a joke so exquisite as to defy all ordinary modes of expression; and the astounding capers the men cut—the grimly comical squints and winks, and quiet grins (silence being strictly enforced) they exchanged with each other and the advancing schooner, were irresistibly droll. Once it was feared that a misgiving as to whom it was he was so eagerly pursuing, had seized our friend, for when not more than half a league astern, he suddenly luffed, and stood across our wake, apparently in keen scrutinizing observation. His hesitation was but momentary—the fierce aspect of the "Quakers," I think, re-assured him—and the chase was resumed. In about half an hour he ranged fiercely up on our weather-beam, and as the red flash and white smoke which heralded a shot across the Curlew's bows broke out of the schooner's side, a hoarse, powerful voice roared through a trumpet from the after part of the deck—"Heave to or I'll sink you!"

The commander of the Curlew leaped upon a gun-carriage, lifted his round glazed hat, and rejoined, in as loud and fierce, but mocking tone—"That will we, Captain Le Requin, and in a hurry, too." At the same instant the seamen concealed about the deck sprang to their feet, the rest of the crew tumbled with loud shouts up the hatchways, the "Quakers" were shoved overboard, and before the astounded captors well comprehended what had happened, they were confronted by the frowning, double-shotted battery of the Curlew, and flight or resistance was out of the question. As soon, however, as the wild, confused yell of rage and terror which arose from the motley crowd that crowded the slave pirate's deck had sufficiently subsided to permit of her captain's voice being heard, a desperate, but of course futile effort to escape, was made. We were in no trim or humor for another chase, and at a wave from Captain Armstrong's hand, gun after gun belched forth its iron shower upon the ill-starred schooner, and with such a terrible havoc to her spars and rigging, that in a few minutes she was a helpless log upon the water.

The pirate carried no colors, but in this strait some of the crew ran up a Brazilian flag, and instantly hauled it down again, in token of surrender. The firing at once ceased, and the schooner was hailed to send her captain on board the Curlew immediately. In a minute or so, it was replied that the captain had been carried below, mortally wounded, was rapidly bleeding to death, and could not therefore be removed. I was standing close by Commander Armstrong at the moment, and noticed that a hot, swarthy flush passed over his pale, exciting features. After a moment's thought, he said hastily, "Sutcliffe,—have a boat alongside, manned and armed, as quickly as you can. I must see this fellow myself, and without delay, it seems." So saying he left the deck. By the time the boat was ready he reappeared, in full uniform, and was swiftly rowed on board the prize.

After briefly directing the men to disarm and secure the crew, he hurried below, motioning as he did so that I should accompany him. The captain of Le Requin—a tall, gaunt, but not, I should think, originally ill-looking man—was unquestionably dying. His right leg had been carried away above the knee by a round shot, and although a rude tourniquet had been applied, the loss of blood had previously been so great that life, as we entered, fluttered but feebly in his veins, and there was scant breath left, it struck me, in the mutilated, panting frame, to answer much questioning, if that were, as I supposed, Lieutenant Armstrong's purpose there. This was my first impression; but the ferociously-triumphant scowl that broke from his darkening eyes at the sound of his visitor's voice, (he had not seemed to recognize him by sight,) testified to the still untamed energy of will which could thus force back retreating life to the citadel it had all but finally abandoned. He partially raised himself, and glared at the lieutenant, as if in fearful doubt that his falling eye-sight and hearing had deceived him. "You here—Lieutenant Armstrong here!" he hoarsely gasped, as he fell back—"then is death welcome as a bride!"

"I am sorry to see you thus, Harrison," said the lieutenant, in a compassionate tone. "I would much rather have met you alive and well."

"You could never have captured me alive," retorted Harrison. "That I am always provided against. And sorry, are you?" he went on, relapsing into feebleness. "The time is past when that might have availed. You have been my rock ahead through life—always. El Reyna and her dusky cargo were partly mine—and now Le Requin's gone. Yes—over my triumphant foe—oppressor! But," he added, again with kindling ferocity, "the last stake is the crowning one, and that, that—Lieutenant Armstrong—I win."

"I once did you grievous wrong, Harrison," replied the lieutenant, heedless of this idle menace—"unintentionally so. It was a mistake—a blunder which I regret—although—"

"It was a murder!" screamed the dying seaman—"murder of soul and body. For another's fault—not mine—you lascerated my flesh and brutified my spirit. I was a lost man from that hour! I, gently born, to be—but no matter. Well, I ran—was caught—again flayed by your order; yet I escaped at last, and now—now!"

The savagely-exultant tone of these words not only startled me, but also for a moment the steel-nerved commander of the Curlew. It seemed a vain alarm. There was no other person in the cabin save a colored lad about nine years of age. Harrison himself was lying helplessly upon a locker in front of his open sleeping-berth, in which hung a short bell-pull, the tassel of which his right hand fingers clutched convulsively; but what help could he summon? The crew, we know from the quiet overhead, had been secured. He was, no doubt, I concluded, partially delirious, and fancied himself still in command of the Le Requin. The lad, whose bright, glistening eyes had been intently fixed upon us, (he was Harrison's son,) handed his father a cordial of some sort. It greatly revived him, and the expiring lamp of life played up with momentary brightness in the socket.

"You well know, Harrison," urged the commander of the Curlew, "what I wish to be informed—assured of."

"Ay, to be sure I do. Did the beautiful Bermudan Creole live, die, or marry? To be sure. Ay, and I will tell you," added Harrison, quickly, as if suddenly warned that but a few moments more remained to him. "You alone—in no one else's hearing. Johnny," he went on rapidly, addressing his son, "I dropped a pocket-book near the fore hatchway—the fore hatchway, mind: fetch it me at once. And you, sir?" he looked at me. Lieutenant Armstrong nodded affirmatively, and I followed the lad up the companion-stairs. The boy went forward, but I, prompted by curiosity, remained about midships, where, unobserved myself, could discern through the long open skylight, what was going on at the further end of the cabin, and pretty well hear what passed. I missed some words, either of anger or remonstrance, they seemed, and then Lieutenant Armstrong exclaimed passionately—

"Will you answer me, or not? Say yes or no!"

"Yes—yes," shouted Harrison, fiercely grasping what I had taken for a bell-rope. "This—this, a tracious tyrant—this is my answer!"

A terrible volume of bright flame, accompanied by the roar as of a thousand thunders, instantly burst forth. I felt caught and whirled into the air by a fiery whirlwind, and I remember nothing more till several days afterwards, when I awoke to turning consciousness in an hospital at Cape Coast Castle. I had been frightfully bruised and burnt, and fever had supervened; but the loss of two left hand fingers was the only permanent injury I sustained. The lad Johnny had been also picked up, scarcely hurt; and from him, and others of Le Requin's crew, the mode by which the explosion, which blew the after-part of the schooner into fragments, had been effected, was pretty accurately ascertained. It was Harrison's fixed resolve—especially after he had added piracy to his less hazardous trade of man-stealing—never to be taken alive. With this view, a barrel of gunpowder was placed beneath his cabin floor, into which, when about to engage in any perilous enterprise, a flint gun-lock was inserted, the trigger of which was attached to the bell-rope hanging in his sleeping herth. Both himself and Lieutenant Armstrong must have been blown to atoms—a sad fate to befall so zealous and promising an officer, more especially just as the well earned honors and rewards of his profession were within his reach, and time had begun to sensibly mellow and soften an unfortunate rigidity of temperament to which, as we have seen, the sudden and melancholy catastrophe was mainly owing.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival on Sunday of the steamer James L. Day Capt. Talbot, we have received Galveston papers to the 24th inst., and a few of our exchanges from the interior. The Galveston papers are rather barren of news.

OPERATIONS OF JUDGE LYNCH.—The San Antonio Western Texan of the 10th says:

A short time since the body of a dead man was found in the road, below the rancho of J. W. Gray, Esq., by some Mexicans. A day or so previous to the finding of the body, a man on horseback was seen passing in that direction. Shortly afterwards four others, on horseback, passed the same way. They had not been long gone when the report of a gun was heard, and soon afterwards the four men returned with a led horse. The inference is that the first was a horse thief, and that the four men were in pursuit. Coming up with him, they concluded to rid the county of the expense of his board until the next session of our District Court. The parties were all Americans, and the four men returned towards San Antonio.

In the same neighborhood a Mexican stabbed an American, who, he had good reason for believing, was on rather too intimate terms with his better half. As soon as the American was able, he made tracks. Knowing from practical experience that our jail is not the most pleasant place in the world, he did not wish to prosecute the men whom he had so basely injured. It appears, too, that he had no very strong desire to visit this city.

ICE.—The San Antonio Ledger says that some inexpe-rienced individual imported a lot of ice into that city, and it compares the operation to "carrying coals to Newcastle," as the numerous springs and wells there furnish water as cold as could be made with ice.

DEATH OF JUDGE MARTIN.—The S. W. American says official advices have been received at the Executive Department, announcing the death of Hon. Bennett H. Martin, Judge of the Sixth Judicial District of the State.

CROPS.—The Lagrange Monument informs us that the crops in the interior are too far advanced to be greatly injured any way.

The Marshall Patriot says that Indian corn is ready to harvest and very abundant, and will not command more than from thirty to forty cents per bushel.

Cotton will go beyond an average, being too late for any ordinary disaster. Many planters are making good progress picking.

MORE INDIAN INFLUENCE.—The Austin Gazette states that the Irain which left that city, a short time since, for Phantom Hill, with supplies, was visited beyond Fort Gates, by Yellow Wolf, and a party under him. He came into camp with a portion of his force, which altogether is said to have amounted to eighty or ninety, and asked to be supplied with provisions in such a manner that it was thought best by those in charge of the train to accede to his request.

Indian Fight.

THE MAIL CARRIER ATTACKED—One American wounded and three Indians killed.—The San Antonio (Texas) Ledger has sent us an extra dated the 10th inst., containing the following account of an attack by Indians on the party of Mr. Wallace, the mail carrier between San Antonio and El Paso. It was furnished by Mr. W. himself.

SEPT. 15, 1852.

Dear Sir:—I now write to inform you of the misfortune which happened me on my way to El Paso with the mail. At Big Bluff, five miles below the California Springs and about seven miles above the Painted Caves, on the evening of the 9th, about 3 o'clock, a party of Indians, 32 in number, charged my camp, whilst in the act of harnessing the animals for the march. I ran out in front of the Indians and asked them what they wanted, and to halt or I would fire on them. I received no answer other than the war whoop and the flourish of arms. We raised our rifles to fire on them at the distances of one hundred yards. Tom Rife only fired, but without any effect. The Indians then fell back, circling around us, took possession of the top of Big Bluff, directly over our camp, and then the fandango opened, which continued until dark, the termination being on my part. Rodolph Fric slightly wounded in the left shoulder and hand; one mule badly wounded, one mule and one horse killed. On the part of the Indians, three killed that we know of, one doubtful, but badly wounded. Before sunset the Indians reinforced seven or eight in number, and before dark took their stand around us. I put the three ambulances in triangular shape near the water hole, which was the only one within five miles. All quietness during the night. Before daybreak Tom Rife and myself climbed to the top of the bluffs, determined to hurt somebody or be killed, but found no Indians there. At day-break I discovered eleven Indians within 300 yards of camp. I hailed them, and told them that we were ready for the day fight.

The commander came close to camp, and asked why we did not travel the road and come out and fight them. I replied that I was in no hurry, that I had plenty of provisions and ammunition, and could whip them on any part of the road. The commander, finding we were all in camp, returned with his party on the road towards the California Springs. As the sun rose, I discovered, at about half a mile distant, a party of thirty-one Indians, leaving a gully near the road, which it was evident that they expected us to pass in the night, and intended to have a secret shot at us. After collecting on the hill they placed sentinels at three different points, two on each hill. During the time, seven Indians came in from towards the Rio Grande, and from appearances, a general council was held on the hill. Three different smokes were raised. One was answered west of the Rio Grande. After this, the whole party marched on the road. I came to the conclusion to return to Fort Clark for an escort to pass the head of Devils river, and if no escort could be furnished there, to go to Fort Inge.

In the first place, my answer was that they had no animals, which I did not much expect. I then started to Fort Inge, and found hut one commissioned officer. He remarked that he would like very much to go himself with an escort, but being the only commissioned officer at the post, he could not furnish one. That the non-commissioned officers and men he could not trust so far from the post, as several had deserted a short time previous. I wish you to state to the Postmaster at San Antonio that I could not by any means pass the Indians with the mail on mule back, for the number which kept around us. After they struck camp, I retreated for the Las Moras. They followed us as far as the crossing of Devils river, and then stopped. I will return to-day with three hired men, which makes our number nine, and if we cannot clear the road, we shall fight it out with them, and if any are left, to make their way to El Paso for the return mail.

W. A. WALLACE.

A MAN BURIED ALIVE.—An Irishman who died suddenly on the railroad, was buried at Wheeling on Tuesday, 14th inst. Those who attended the funeral, after lowering the coffin into the grave, returned to their homes, leaving a man to fill up the grave. It appears that after throwing in a few shovels full of earth, he was alarmed by a singular noise as of one kicking and struggling in the coffin, so that he ran away. Coming up with Mr. Fitzsimmone he told what he had heard, and both immediately returned, raised and opened the coffin, and found the man turned on his face and his person warm. The Gazette says that if the coffin had been opened when the commotion was first heard, the man might have been saved, and that he died solely from suffocation.

MANUFACTURING SHOE-STRINGS.—Mechanical ingenuity finds nothing too insignificant not to improve upon, if it supplies a want of humanity in a better or cheaper manner. Among the enterprises in Georgetown, Mass., is that of manufacturing shoe-strings. The process is simple, yet requiring quite a number of workmen to meet the demand for the article. The strings are made from calf-skin and sole-leather; the former costing $20 per thousand, and the latter $10 per thousand—the quality of stock ranging the prices. They are made for the Southern and Western market, and used with brogan shoes, which are so extensively manufactured throughout New England, in exchange for the breadstuffs of the South and West. The proprietor has acquired quite a competency within a few years from his enterprise.

EXPEDITION TO LIBERIA.—The New York State Colonization Society have chartered the brig Oriole, Captain Brandt, for a voyage to Liberia, with colored emigrants, to sail on the first day of next month from New York. It is stated that upwards of fifty emigrants are already engaged for this vessel, and others are applying daily. All but one, whose applications have been accepted, thus far, are from the non-slaveholding States. It is also said that more than five hundred have applied to the Parent Society for a passage in vessels to sail from other ports, between this and January.

DAMAGE BY RAIN.—The rain has done, it is said, much damage to the crops in the neighborhood of Havana. The streams have overflowed their banks, and the canals, formed for the purpose of irrigation, have carried with smaller inundations into the fields. Houses situated near the water channels have been half submerged, and the dwellers obliged to abandon them till the water subsided. If they could only get rid of the reign of Spain's sovereign, they might well afford to suffer a little by the rain which descends from the clouds.

THE SLAVE TRADE IN CUBA.—A letter from Havana says: "That you may not be mistaken with regard to our new Captain General, I inform you of the fact that about five hundred negroes, from Africa, have been landed at Ortigoss. In this island, and two ounces (thirty-four dollars) per head were paid for winking at the business."

SEPTEMBER.... By ANNIE BRADFORD.

She is standing on a hill-side.
This fair September morn,
Watching the slanting sunbeams
Dart over the ripening corn.
Up in the dark-plumed sumach
The finest is singing loud,
And with crimson and golden apples
The orchard trees are bowed.

Down from the fading locusts
Float lightly the yellow leaves,
And busily in the hedgerows
The skillful spider weaves;
Timid white morning-glories
Are peeping the fences o'er—
There's beauty in all around her.
But her spirit asketh more.

She is thinking of one, who, with her.
Hath watched the spider spin,
And talked of the wondrous beauty
Concealed his web within;
Of the beautiful, holy meanings
That float with the winds along,
That bloom in the humble blossom,
And breathe in the wild bird's song.

She had walked in a silent sorrow,
Heart-broken, till they met;
She had sought communion of mind and heart,
And found but vain regret;
And when o'er her darkened spirit
The light of his high soul fell,
It heaved with a blessed gladness,
As waves neath the moonbeams swell.

She dared not tell him her sorrow,
For what was she to him?
Between them Fate's fierce river
Dashed foaming to the brim.
But in his charmed presence
Her wild woes found surcease,
And her soul a season rested
On the sunny slopes of peace.

She is thinking of their parting,
A few brief days ago,
When her calm features gave not
A trace of her heavy wo;
But in a clear, low accent,
Her farewell words she gave;
He went to the world's wild tumult,
And she to a living grave.

* * * * * * *

Softly doth Evening's frail bark
Pushed off from the sunset shore,
And high in the night air shivers
The ghostly sycamore.
Far in the north-west crouching,
The Bear and the Dragon lie,
And the trembling, frightened Pleiads,
Are climbing the eastern sky.

She sits in the sombre shadows,
And thinks of the lapsing years—
Of her young life, seared and blasted
By grief too deep for tears.
In her pale hand she holdeth
Wild blossoms, dim and dead.
The parting gift he gave her,
Ere the parting words were said.

She hath suffered, since they severed.
Long years of grief and wrong.
With no one to give her counsel
And bid her heart be strong;
And now in her desolation
She yearneth but to hear
One word of his wonted kindness,
Her stricken soul to cheer.

Where is he now? She seeketh
Into the silent sky,
And her strained eyes search the shadows,
But they yield her no reply.
Then to the only Solace
She looketh up in prayer,
For strength to lift her spirit
From the valley of despair.

Oh, Infinite and holy!
Sustain her sinking feet,
Up to the clear, pure summits,
Where Peace and Reason meet!
So, from her gleaning fortress,
Serenely she may gaze
Down on the clouds that darken
Her young and troubled days!

Speak through the fruits and blossoms
That blush in the glowing noon.
Or slumber in peaceful beauty
'Neath the holy Harvest moon,
Of the time when, reunited,
They'll ramble hand in hand,
And gather a happy harvest
In the fair September land.

THE DECREE AGAINST WM. SMITH.—The following is the fierce and formal manifesto published by his Gascoon Excellency, the Captain-General of Cuba, against William Smith, Purser of the steamship Crescent City. It is addressed to the Agents of the steamer:

PALACE, Office of Political Secretary.

To the Firm of Drake & Co., of this City:

An individual named William Smith, who, it seems, is employed on board the steamship Crescent City, published, on his last arrival at the port of New York, the grossest calumnies against the Government of this island, and to give a semblance of truth to his impostures, he has availed himself of the hospitality which is so fully extended to strangers visiting Cuba.

This act, which the whole world will know how to qualify, has seriously attracted the attention of the Captain General, who, though the superior authority with which he is clothed, elevates him above replying to ridiculous sallies against his Government, nevertheless deems it a duty to signify to the author of such aspersions, that they will not be tolerated with impunity by the Government of Her Majesty, should others, of a similar nature, be reproduced.

It has, therefore, been ordered, that immediately on the arrival of the Crescent City, a police officer repair on board that vessel, for the sole and exclusive purpose of preventing the said Smith from landing.

Of this order of His Excellency it is my duty to apprise you, and I would add that, if, in future, the individual should return on board of any steamer belonging to the Company, or should any person employed on board any such steamers allow himself to abuse, in a similar manner, the courtesy extended by the Spanish authority to those entering the harbor of Cuba, this fact alone will be sufficient to exclude such vessel as may convey him, from entering the port—he the disadvantages thereby accruing to the company what they may, for if it be not in the hands of the latter to prevent the occurrence of such abuses on the part of the employees, a due regard for its honor and interest must compel it to withdraw its confidence from those who would basely compromise them.

God preserve you a thousand years.

[Signed,] MARTIN GALIANO, Political Secretary.

Havana, September 4, 1852.

LIEUT. PORTER AND THE AUTHORITIES AT HAVANA.—The following is the letter of Lieut. Porter, of the U. S. steamship Crescent City, written in reply to a communication from the Cuban authorities prohibiting the landing of Mr. Smith, purser of that steamer:

HAVANA, Sept. 14, 1852.

GENTLEMEN—I have received a communication from you to-day, enclosing one from the Spanish Government in which Mr. Wm. Smith, purser of this ship, is accused of writing infamous reports for the newspapers, and prohibiting Mr. Smith from going on shore, as if the said Mr. Smith had committed some criminal act.

The injustice and absurdity of this order will be apparent to you, when I assure you, upon the honor of an officer, that Mr. Smith has never written or composed any article for the newspapers, and it was due to the gentleman in question, first to inquire if he had written anything injurious to the Government.

Citizens of the United States are not afraid to express their opinions on foreign political matters, especially in their own territory, where freedom of speech is allowed to the meanest individual. The shortness of my stay here will not permit me go into a discussion of this matter. I merely wish to state to you that an indignity has been offered to the American flag, through the old I command, as an officer of the United States Government, in placing on board police officers to take charge of Wm. Smith. I moreover inform you that I will not permit the police officers to stay on board under the circumstances. That I intend to sail at 4 o'clock, and if any attempts are made to prevent me, the Spanish authorities will have to answer to the United States for the result. Your obedient servant,

LIEUT. D. D. PORTER, U. S. Navy.

At 4 o'clock, accordingly, the vessel left the harbor without molestation—the prompt and decisive conduct of her commander apparently having shown the Captain General the impropriety of his conduct.

MEMPHIS COTTON FACTORY.—The Eagle and Enquirer says: A large amount of machinery for the Memphis Cotton Manufacturing Company was landed from the L. M. Kennet yesterday, and is now being hauled out to the cotton factory. A number of hands, direct from the Northern factories, also arrived yesterday, and will commence operations immediately. It is the intention of the company to increase their capacity for manufacturing in every particular, and go ahead upon a much greater scale. We shall take pleasure in noticing their establishment more at length, so soon as they get their additional machinery and force in successful operation.

AN AFRICAN SHIP COMING.—The Havana Diario de la Marina has the following:

A singular arrival occurred lately at this port, being a large merchant vessel, purporting to be of Austrian build, and having been intended for one of the Italian governments, but the contract not having been fulfilled, she is stated to be in search of a purchaser. The vessel sails from Jamaica for New Orleans, and is said to have touched at Cuba for the purpose of taking in water. Her manifest enumerates, among other things on board, twenty guns—24-pounders; five small pieces, twenty-four muskets, twenty-four pistols, twenty-four swords, and one hundred weight of powder.

A correspondent of the New York Courier and Enquier, in noticing the recent State Fair at Utica, says:

"One of our inventive fellow-citizens put forward a novel idea in the department of fixtures on locomotives. His design is for a cow-catcher, and differs materially from those now in use. It is a round plate, directly in front of the engine, placed horizontally, and as near the track as possible, and is kept turning by gearing moved by the engine—so that any unfortunate animal in the way of the locomotive is caught in it, and as upon thrown aside and out of the way. It has a touch of the guillotine about it, on a large scale."

Louisiana Interior.

SAD.—The Plaquemine Gazette of the 25th says: On Thursday evening last our quiet little village was thrown into consternation by a report that a young man had been shot within the suburbs of the town. The report created considerable excitement, and many hastened to the house of the wounded man to learn the extent of his wounds, and the name of the individual who committed the foul deed. Stretched upon a bed we found Mr. Louis Rivet, elder son of widow Rivet, who was bending over her bleeding boy dressing his wounds. We inquired into the particulars and found that young Rivet in company with another young men, had gone to a sugar plantation near his house to get a sugar cane. He succeeded in cutting one and while in the act of pealing it was shot by some person concealed. The gun must have been very heavy loaded with No. 6 shot, the charge took effect in the right arm, side and neck, which was badly lacerated, scattering shot pierced the back and legs, and the print of the gun wadding is still visible on his neck.

ODD FELLOWS.—On Wednesday, the 22d inst., the members of Clinton Lodge No. 27 I. O. O. F., celebrated their anniversary. Rev. Isaac Wall was the orator of the day.

The Louisiana (Alexandria) Democrat of the 22d, says: We are rejoiced to inform the Brotherhood throughout the State and Union, that the members of the Order here will in a short time have erected a fine hall, suitable to their wants, and, at the same time promising a goodly return for the money expended in its erection. A lot has been purchased, a contract for brick made, and contracts with workmen in a state of forwardness. The building will be fire proof, the hall twenty-five feet by fifty, with an entrance on front.

A commodious and splendid brick edifice has just been completed—ninety-seven by forty-seven feet, three stories—which for stability, convenience of arrangement, and for number, size and comfort of private and school rooms, is not surpassed by any similar one in the country. The Principal resides in the building, and with his lady and competent female assistance, superintends the Boarding Department. A lady will reside in the Seminary, who faithfully discharges the duties of Matron, Nurse and Governess, so that at all times, pupils will find the comforts, kindness and attentions of home. The Principal, with the aid of female teachers, who also live in the Seminary, diligently guard and form their morals, manners and habits of the pupils. Being under his charge at all times, they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations, respecting neatness, order, punctuality, economy and regularity, calculated to give a safe and vigorous development to character. The appliances of home and family are not removed by this arrangement, but perpetuated and strengthened.

The ensuing scholastic year will commence on Thursday the 23d of September, 1852. Pupils can enter at any time during the year, chargeable from the time of entrance. No deduction will be made but by special arrangement with the Principal.

Boarders study at night under a teacher. They are required to retire 9 o'clock at night, and rise early in the morning at a given signal, and to take frequent and wholesome exercise.

Private rooms are large, conveniently and comfortably furnished. Pupils are required to keep their wardrobes and private apartments in neatness and order. A proper officer weekly takes charge of their clothing, inspects its condition, and every Saturday morning instructs them in plain sewing and necessary repairs of clothing. Every article of clothing must be marked with the owner's name.

Ill-monthly reports are sent to patrons, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and deportment of pupils.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, or any amusement calculated to interfere with their studies.

Visitors are not received by pupils, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The Principal must have certain information respecting every correspondent. Pupils are required to attend Church and Sunday School on Sabbath.

No accounts will be opened in Marion but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, the lady of the Principal must approve the purchase (who superintends their trading), and thus expenditures will be controlled. Patrons should anticipate and destroy all wants of pupils as far as is practicable.

Dentist operations will not be performed but by special permission from patrons.

Patrons are earnestly requested to encourage economy in all the expenditures of pupils—clothing, pocket money and jewelry.

The institution has graduated forty-four young ladies since its organization, and arrangements are being made for furnishing, improving and increasing its Library, Apparatus, Cabinet and Herbarium.

The Professors of Music, Drawing, Painting and Modern Languages have been engaged in this Institution for the last five years, with decided acceptability—are superior Musicians and splendid performers on Piano, Harp, Guitar, Organ, Melodeon, Violin, etc., and highly accomplished in other departments.

As to rates of Board and Tuition, $147 will pay the Board, Tuition and incidental fees of a Young Lady for the whole year in the collegiate course; $177 will embr

DR. KING—AMERICAN MISSIONARY TO GREECE.

The recent dealings of the Court of Athens in regard to Dr. King, have placed him conspicuously before the Christian world. He is the subject of a paragraph in almost every newspaper, political and religious, that we have looked at for some time past. The following notice of him condensed from the Pacific (Californin) will not be unacceptable to our readers. [Ed.

His entrance upon missionary life was peculiar. Having been elected to a Professorship in Amherst College, he had gone to Paris to pursue a course of study preparatory to his professional duties. While there he received a letter from his friend, Rev. Pliny Fisk, then at Malta, inviting his company and assistance on certain projected missionary tours in Egypt and Palestine. This was in 1822. This invitation he immediately submitted to his friends and patrons, who advised its acceptance. Several friends on the Continent united in his support for the first year, and he lost no time in offering his services to the American Board as with Mr. Fisk. That offer was immediately gladly accepted. But Mr. King anticipating the answer, did not wait for it, but set his face at once towards Malta. After an interesting journey through the south of France, doing good all along his route, he embarked from Marseilles, reaching Malta early in 1823. Being at last fully prepared for long and perilous travels, he and his friend set out together on their mission work. They ascended the Nile as far as Thebes, making such observations and collecting such facts as bore on the object they had in view. The good they did was confined to the English, European and American residents, sojourning principally at Alexandria and Cairo. Thence they proceeded to Palestine, from which land their letters long instructed and delighted the church they represented.

Two or three years they were thus gathering knowledge for the churches, and, by the information thus imparted, and by their quiet usefulness all the while, preparing the way of the Lord in lands once consecrated by the labors, travels, teachings, and sufferings of Jesus Christ and the Apostles.

At the end of this period, the term of service for which he had engaged with the Board of Missions having expired, Mr. King embarked for the United States. His correspondence introduced him widely and favorably to the American people.

In 1829, when the sympathy of the American people for the struggling Greeks was at its height, Mr. King was chosen by American ladies as the almoner of the bounties sent by them for the relief of that suffering nation.—He the agent of an association formed for their relief, his introduction to the Greeks was one well calculated to make a favorable impression. That impression was made. At the same time, the very nature of his errand enlisted strongly his own sympathy and love for them. Being a ripe scholar, as well as a man of strong sense, he was admirably adapted to the missionary work then opening in that field. He was, therefore, the man chosen to undertake it. The same Board of Missions to whom he had eight years before offered his services, now in their turn applied to him.

But he had not waited for such an invitation to enter upon the great work to which he has ever since devoted his life. While distributing bread to the hungry, he at the same time had distributed bibles and tracts to all within his reach. But on accepting the "call" of the Board to become their missionary to Greece, he soon removed from Tenos to Athens and opened a school. Then were seen and appreciated the great advantages of his thorough classical education. He prepared school-books of great value to the nation, and soon made himself widely and usefully known.

But he was a missionary preacher as well as teacher, and in this capacity he early excited the jealousy of a corrupt and despotic priesthood. Forbidden by law to openly proselyte, he did what he could to influence, in other ways, the public mind. Having married a Greek lady, he began in the course of time to open his own house for the simple exposition of the scriptures to such as might choose to come in. This he had a right to do. He moreover employed his pen in the translations of the works of the early Greek Fathers, (men venerated and canonized in the Greek Church) but whose works most plainly condemned as heretical, the most absurd tenets of the modern faith. In this Mr. King did nothing contrary to law, inasmuch as he confined himself to the very writings held by them to be so sacred. But the contrast between the writings of the Fathers and the teachings and practices of their children was too apparent. Anger on the part of the priests produced hatred toward the proposer, and both finally provoked violence. The people were drawing too many plain inferences from these writings of acknowledged Fathers, to allow them to be circulated. Even their own ancient preachers raised up from the dead by the touch of a heretic pen, and made to speak the truth, as of old, were silenced.

"Jonas King" was henceforth a dangerous man. Moreover, because it was known that he entertained sentiments opposed to the sentiments of the established Church, it was presumed, but never proved, that in his Scriptural expositions in his own house on the Sabbath, he openly attacked and ridiculed their doctrines and rites. He was, therefore, accused as a reviler also. Besides this, recourse was had to certain books he had published in the United States, in which certain sentiments were found hostile to their own, and which they also presumed lie in the same way promulged among the people.

For these reasons Mr. King was arraigned before the criminal court of Athens, as a reviler of the national religion, and a dangerous man. The priests had long desired to get rid of him. But he was as wise and prudent as he was bold and firm. He had been careful to keep within the limits prescribed by law. But as the priests under Pilate, so the priests under the magistrates and judges of Greece, found some pretext for his arrest. In 1845, the Greek Synod had excommunicated him. About two years after he had been obliged to take refuge in Europe to escape the popular fury stirred up against him. But now he has been banished forever from the field he has occupied for twenty years. The trial that issued in this sentence was one of the most partial and unjust on record. From beginning to end there seemed to be the most obstinate determination on the part of the President of the Court to condemn him. The injustice of the trial and sentence is so apparent, that it is boldly condemned by the leading lawyers of Athens, as well as by the ablest portion of the press. Nothing else was proved on trial but that he had preached the gospel as held by Protestants. It was not proved, and could not be proved (because untrue) that he had either proselyted or reviled.

The constitution of Greece tolerates under certain restrictions, religions opposed to the established Church; and yet Dr. King, preaching in his own house, has been imprisoned and banished, while Don Constantine, the Roman priest, preaching boldly in a Roman Chapel, has been undisturbed. The journals of Athens are justly severe on this gross inconsistency.

During this whole trial Dr. King exhibited a martyr spirit worthy of the early days. On no occasion during his whole life at Athens, have his characteristic prudence, firmness and piety been so pleasingly developed. He reminds us more of the Apostle Paul than any man of modern times. Without coveting it, as has been most falsely and basely insinuated of late, he occupied that position of dignity and honor to which persecution always exalts a prominent victim.

But the end is not yet. We have not yet heard of his leaving Athens. Indeed, owing to some official relation he sustained to the U. S. Government at the court of Greece (employed, probably, for convenience's sake, on account of his position, experience, ability and known integrity,) a ship of war is said to have been ordered to Athens to institute an investigation of the case. In due time the result will be known. Nor will his labors be lost. Precious seed has there fallen from his hand, the fruit of which will surely be gathered. Even he, though nearly sixty, may remain or return, to unite in the song of the reaper. This prolonging of the old night of Europe will not keep back the dawning day.

ONE SIN TOO MANY.

A FACT FOR HALF AWAKENED SINNERS.

There is an old Grecian legend, which teaches that there was once a diver, who boasted of his skill to bring up treasures from the sea. To test his powers, the people threw many a silver cup and many a golden coin into water nine fathoms deep. And the bold diver brought them to the surface with triumph. But one day a disguised fiend threw a tinsel crown into a whirlpool, and challenged the confident diver to bring it up, promising him if he succeeded, the power to wear it and to transmit it to his children. In he sprang after the bauble; but the Ne-Dereids of the sea hearing the clangor of the crown as it fell upon their grottoes, closed around him as he was grasping the prize, and held him fast until he perished.

Thus reads the legend. Its moral teaches that the most daring may dare once too often—that folly though long successful will plunge its victim into ruin at last. A lesson worthy of the careful study of partially awakened sinners, as may be seen by the following fact:

A young man, of fine talents, was present one evening at the house of God in ——— during an interesting revival. Several of his companions had already given their hearts to Christ, and he had been deeply moved by their experiences. He was, therefore, prepared to receive strong impressions, and he did. The truth went home to his conscience. He wept to see himself so vile, as he now beheld himself mirrored in the word of God. He felt a motion—almost irresistible—to submit to Christ, and to join the band of penitents who bowed before the altar. But the pride of his heart revolted at so public and humiliating an avowal of his sinfulness. He dreaded the scorn of the worldly! He kept his seat, therefore; soothing his conscience by a resolve—firm and irrevocable as he persuaded himself—to return home at the close of the service and seek the pardon of his sins alone, in the solitude of his chamber. With this purpose he left his pew at the close of the services, and passed with the thronging but grave multitude out of the church.

On the door-steps, he found some gay friends awaiting him. They had planned a scheme of pleasure for an hour or two that night; they begged him to join them.

"No," said he faintly, "I think not, to-night."

They gazed in his face earnestly, and one of them, detecting an unusual seriousness in his aspect, which was discernible even in the pale moonlight of that beautiful evening, exclaimed in a taunting tone of voice, "What! are you going to be religious too!"

The speaker was his fiend in disguise. In that speech he threw the bauble of human approbation into the whirlpool, and the half-awakened youth plunged in desperately to seize it. Throwing off his gravity, he burst into a loud laugh, assured them he was not serious, accepted their invitation, and lost his convictions. Henceforth his sins held him in bondage and in chains. In a few months he died an impenitent sinner!

How fatal was his one act of resistence to the Holy Spirit. Had he yielded and taken his place at the altar, the invitation of his sinful friends at the door would have been powerless to attract him. But he resisted once too often. The tinsel crown of human approval led him like the diver, to a fatal leap, and he perished. Awakened sinner, beware! You, too, may sin once too often. [Zion's Herald.

ADDRESS

Of Miss Laura J. Saddler, presenting a Bible in behalf of herself and sister Pupils, to the Rev. Thos. B. Russell, on the resignation of his office as President of Oak Bowery Female College, Sept. 16th, 1852.

Through the kindness of my sister pupils, I have been selected on this interesting occasion to express to you, dear Teacher, our knowledge of your worth, our sense of obligation to you, our regret at your leaving us, and to present to you this Bible, as a token of our attachment and merited respect towards you.

You have been our faithful friend, and have manifested an untiring perseverance in your efforts to promote both our moral and intellectual improvement. During the three years that you have been with us, we acknowledge with gratification that, in the relative capacities of minister, teacher and citizen, your duties have been discharged as a Christian and a gentleman.

We would have fain hoped that, like "the particular few" * of our more fortunate and beloved sisters, the inexpressible gratification of finishing our education under your supervision, would have been granted us; but, since your interest requires it, we acquiesce—not cheerfully, for we shall be deprived of beneficial instruction and a profitable example, but, in consideration of the enhancement of your interest, we are forced to speak that painful word, Farewell.

In making this selection, as a parting gift, we have endeavored, (and I know succeeded) to make it in conformity to your preference: since, it has ever seemed your especial desire to instill lastingly into our minds and hearts the principles of its sacred pages. Jealousy and discord have not tarnished with their unhallowed touch our efforts to make this offering unanimous and peaceful; and now with one joyous voice of concord, we reiterate—Accept, dear Preceptor, our gift of love as the incense of grateful hearts.

In conclusion, dear Teacher, we with one accord implore Heaven's protection on you and all dear to you. May your life be long and useful, its pathway be adorned with prosperity's roses, fanned by the gentle zephyr of peace, and refreshed by the vivifying influence of Religion's sweetest dews.

And, finally, when your labors shall have ended, may your spirit pass away sweetly and gently as the last low murmurs of the Eolian harp, and, rise on pinions of light to purer joys and more perfect bliss in the consecrated realms of God's upper kingdom—where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest.

REPLY OF THE REV. T. B. RUSSELL.

Miss Saddler and Young Ladies:

Believe me, when I tell you that, the emotions which I now feel I possess no language adequately to express. Your expressions of confidence, respect and affection—your regret at parting with me—the beauty and propriety of this sacred Token of your kindness—the sincerity, generosity and spontaneity of good will, and the unexpectedness which characterize this whole exhibition of your respect and friendship overwhelm me. Whatever may have been my labors, my dangers, my trials, difficulties, sorrows—this moment of noble, of magnanimous sentiment is, in feeling at least, a happy compensation. A distinguished orator and philosopher of the Ancients has said, "virtue desires no other reward of her labors and dangers, than that of praise and glory." This sentiment for a heathen was lofty and laudable. Our better religion, and inspired and higher and more enlightened philosophy informs us, that the first great object and motive of our souls should be to conform to the approbation of Heaven, in all our enterprises and performances. Next to this, however, and in due subordination to it, the praise, the esteem of the wise, the good, the innocent, and the pure is the most ennobling standard of action and the highest meed of human gratification. When I remember, young ladies, that you have seen me from day to day, and from hour to hour, during the lapse of many months together—that you have had most ample opportunities to observe me closely—that the association of the teacher with his pupils is intimate and peculiar—that the openings for criticism are frequent, varied and severe—when I think of the even awful responsibilities which rest upon the teacher—when I recollect how delicate and skillful must be the hand that should manipulate and ply the refined and complicated machinery of education—and contemplate the difficulty of gaining the satisfaction and good will not only of parents and guardians, but especially of one's pupils, I repeat, I am overpowered with the sense of the high, the distinguished honor which you have done me.

You are aware—of which your practical manifestation on this occasion is a proof—that I believe the relation of teacher and pupil ought to be one of the highest confidence, respect and affection. All the legitimate and useful relations of life, indeed, are intended to elevate and refine their parties. If this be so in all, it must appertain with emphasis to that whose professed aim and appointment are to cultivate and to ennoble. I feel, young ladies, that this is a moment dedicated to the highest and best sentiments of our nature. I feel, too, that it is a moment devoted to the most sacred and holy associations and reflections. To me it is especially so.

You have been pleased to refer to the fact of the prominence which I have always given to the Bible and its principles, in my inculcations to you. I feel on this occasion as if I were commissioned anew from Heaven, to seek to the extent of my feeble ability to promulgate and to impress its glorious teachings upon the minds and hearts of my fellow beings, and especially upon those of the young. When I look upon you, my own pupils,—my scholars, in whose tender souls I have endeavored to implant the seeds of truth and knowledge—when I behold you in your innocency, loveliness and unaffectedness, returning to me after all my efforts, and presenting the very highest evidences of your docility, and of the practical truthfulness of the principles upon which I have endeavored to act, I feel it to be the very highest encouragement. I regard it, too, as a most pious and heavenly incitement to the faithful and continued discharge, in the best measure of my humble capacities, of all those duties which are incident to the holy and noble calling of the Teacher.

The loveliness and sanctity of your gift reminds me of that High and Holy Being in whose presence we continually stand—to whose all-seeing eyes the hearts and actions of all are revealed, and without whose sanction no calling can be permissible and truly useful and prosperous.

The profession of the teacher, however, we know and feel is approved in this Holy Book. Upon it the blessing and the smile of God have set their seals. When properly conducted it must redound to the improvement and happiness of those for whom especially it has been established. It is most gratifying to me to be made to feel, by your present felicitous indication, that my humble efforts and labors for your advantage have not been without some guerdon and signature of success.

I reciprocate your expressions of pleasure at the thought which we once in common anticipation indulged, that I should have been permitted to finish for you your mental training and education, in that prescribed course of study which was accomplished by—as you have chosen to style them—"the particular few" of your more fortunate and beloved sisters. I trust, however, it may be your good fortune to fall into the association and instruction of more eminent powers than those with which it is your regretted lot at this time to part. If you do justice to yourselves—and that you will who can doubt—you will do honor to any instructor.

Young Ladies—our life is sometimes pictured as a weary, a thorny and a lengthened pilgrimage—sometimes as a desert—then, as a night of storms and cloud—and anon, as a voyage o'er ocean's wild and dreary waste. Whatever it be—whether one or all of these, it is probably in no case a season without periods and spots of illumination. If it be a weary road—then here, I feel I have found a pleasant point of refuge and a sweet outspread landscape of peace. If it be a desert—then here to me is an oasis with verdant bowers and pleasant fountains, and thrilling songs of gentle birds—and here for a brief period at least, the saddened heart may find a welcome place of gladness and repose. If it be a night of darkness and tempest—'tis not all so—for here I find the fierce winds are hushed—the storm-king for a moment withdraws his black banners and forces, while the sweet smiling moon and the laughing, gentle stars appear, and the soft zephyrs breathe words of affection and truth: if it be indeed an ocean, 'tis not devoid of its glorious isles. And, here I may be permitted to feel that the long lost mariner beholds one of the joyous Hesperides—and a glimpse of universal and eternal spring. A sweet and holy calm broods upon the waters, and the spirit-halcyon flits on happy wing from glassy wave to tranquil shore.

In short, I shall ever regard this as one of the most happy and honored periods of my life—one of the brightest pictures that shall be reflected in the recollections of future years.

Farewell my young friends. From my heart I thank you for all your kindness—and especially for this, your parting gift, the Holy Book of God. You have bestowed upon me as a talisman the jewel of Heaven to earth. I shall ever remember you and yours in my best wishes and prayers. May God bless you and crown you with his love in time and in eternity.

SEVERAL THINGS.

Dear Brother: Think not that I do not appreciate the NewOrleans Advocate or have been a careless looker-on, or an indifferent reader of what is being published now-a-days in regard to the interests of our beloved Zion. Although I have not written a line for any of the Advocates, for some months, except officially or by special request, I still feel, as I have done for twenty years past, an unfailing interest in all that pertains to the welfare of the Church in general and Methodist Church in particular.

There is the mammoth scheme of Brother Abby, for publishing a great General Conference paper, for circulation in ever Methodist family in our communion, at one dollar per annum, too—a capital idea. We certainly need something of the kind, for verily, our so called General Conference papers now published, only serve a limited section and would be of but little use beyond a limited circulation. These, too, are multiplying upon us, and doubtless will continue to increase until every Annual Conference will have its own organ. You can't put down the rage for papers. Conferences will have them; may, perhaps, 'tis best they should, for even the mammoth paper could not meet all the local wants of all the Conferences. But for general purposes and as a valuable religious family newspaper, at such a low price, it certainly would accomplish great things. Our people are getting to be a reading people, the young'er tribe especially; they will read, and if we don't supply them with reading matter, other people will, for they will read. I am willing, individually, to pledge myself from and after the next General Conference, for ten dollars annually, for the support of such a paper. We have about 2000 traveling preachers in the Church South, and as I am among the poor of that number, I think it perfectly safe to say that that amount on the average could be raised by them all. This would do for a beginning, to say nothing of the thousands of our Israel in the laity who would give as much or more. I go for the mammoth paper

The subject of a modification of our Circuits, so as to give "Sunday preaching" to all our congregations, has for months past, through the Southern Christian Advocate, engaged some of the oldest and wisest heads, as well as the pens of some of the younger preachers in Georgia and South Carolina. The venerable Dr. L. Pierce, the mover of this question, was decently choked off from the discussion of the question sometime since: very improperly I think.

In regard to this whole question, it may be said in truth that the time has been in all this country, when Methodism roved unmolested through all the woods. That day has passed now. The Baptists, Presbyterians and Episcopalians have established their Sunday congregations all over the land. The people can be served by a respectable and influential ministry on the Sabbath, and thousands of them you can't get to church on the week days, try it when and by whom you will. This emergency I hold we are bound to meet by preaching to the people on Sunday as others do. This can be done without the least change whatever in doctrine or discipline. We are the same—no change in any thing, only so arranging that we may attend strictly to all the growing interests of church and people. It can be done without injury to any interests, and I think it ought to be done, not at once and universally, but gradually, and as the people may see the importance of it and desire it. I go for Saturday and Sunday preaching, not to get clear of work. Let me preach Saturday, attend to Church business, hold class-meetings, &c., and then Sunday have a fair shot at the crowd. If need be, again Sunday night. A good impression is made—protract on Monday and so continue, and great good must be the result.

The circulation of our books is another theme upon which we have frequent lectures through the Advocates, and not among the least of these, is a recent article from the working Bishop Andrew, in the Nashville Advocate—well timed and from the right source. One objection I have to the Book Concern: our books are priced too high; the preachers can't sell enough of them to pay for the trouble, let it is a trouble and at some risk that preachers buy and sell books. If our books were sold from the Concern at cost it would be better for all the interests to be served by the establishment. Cost price or no price, I go for selling the books. I have been a "book peddler" for 19 years, and have not lost money by it. Sometimes I buy books from private publishers, because I can do more good for myself and others; for example: "Methodism in Earnest," "Revival Miscellanies," and many such good books, I can buy from the publishers cheaper than I can from the Methodist Book Concern, for they have them to buy and must be paid for the treuble.

Preachers sometimes say they have no turn or tact for the business. Well, generally you will find that such preachers have but little tact for any thing else but a merely put up sermon, and not always even that. This said, well nigh all is said for them as itinerant preachers. We ought to circulate the books.

Methodism is spreading herself far and wide; her soul is as large as "the whole world;" she has set on foot great and growing enterprises, such as look to the ends of the earth. She longs to shed her light upon all nations, and he who enters her ministry should feel as did the immortal Wesley: "The world is my parish," and with a soul full of life, full of love, should enter upon the great duties of his work, determined to conquer.

Tradition and Scripture.—The talented author of "Cautions for the Times," illustrates the uncertainty of tradition compared with Scripture, by putting this familiar case: "A footman brings you a letter from a friend upon whose word you can perfectly rely, giving an account of something that has happened to himself, and the exact account of which you are greatly concerned to know. While you are reading and answering the letter, the footman goes into the kitchen and there gives your cook an account of the same thing, which he says he heard the upper servants talking over, as related to them by the valet, who said he had it from your friend's son's own lips. The cook retails the story to your groom, and he, in turn, tells you. Would you judge of that story by the letter?" The Bible shows how rapidly tradition becomes untruthful from that passage in St. John, where Jesus Christ says to Peter, in answer to his question, what John should do, (xxi. 22) "If I will that he tarry till I he come, what is that to thee! Then went this saying abroad among the brethren," (oral tradition) "that that disciple should not die." Christ also says, "Thus have ye made the commandment of God of none effect by your traditions." God makes no Mistake.—The following I heard yesterday of a young man in this town and as the expression struck me, I send it in a few lines:

In a Massachusetts town there is a young man of about thirty, of fine talents and capabilities for active life, but for years a cripple, paralytic and helpless. He would starve if left alone. A friend was commiserating his condition, when, with deep earnestness, he exclaimed, as he slowly raised his withered hand, "God makes no mistakes." How noble the sentiment! "Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? This is piety. Only a heart divinely taught could thus exclaim, "He giveth his beloved sleep."

A student of theology at Bonn, lately went, in a fit of religious insanity, to a neighboring wood with hammer and nails, and finding a tree in the form of a cross, actually crucified himself. He was found in a state of insensibility by some peasants, who, not having tools for drawing the nails, felled the tree, and carried him with it to the next village. The young man is now in the hospital at Bonn, and out of danger.

REMINISCENCES.

Looking out at the hot sunshine sends my memory back to an old wood in which I played in life's "young day." This wood rises up in my memory as the coolest of all cool places. Stillness and quiet seemed to have made their home there, and contentment to have fenced it in, and to have shut out all the jaring elements of life. The tall trees rose up like the columns of a temple, the green branches rendered it impervious to the sun's beams. On the ground was always a carpet of brown leaves, which "echoed to the eddying gust and to the rabbit's tread." In the depths of this wood murmured a clear stream. Many a dreamy hour have I spent looking into the cool blue water, and up into the cloudless sky, my young heart full of undefinable longings, and my imagination vainly striving to look into the mysteries of being. Now, whenever I think of this old wood, a feeling vague, of sad quietness, comes over me; I am transported back a quarter of a century, and seem to sit with my schoolmates on the banks of that little stream. The same yearning comes over me that I felt then, to pierce the curtain of mortality and read the problem of our spiritual existence."

Some of my school-mates who sat with me within the shadows of that old wood are now battling with life; perchance their hearts are heavier now, than when we sat beneath the old bench tree, or waded in the little brook.

Has life fulfilled the promises that we made for it to ourselves! Alas! no. The blossoms of hope have not yielded the fruits of happiness, but many of the gay band have plucked the apples of Sodom from the tree of expectation. Some of those who were full of life then, now lie beneath the "clods of the valley." One, I remember, who was my chosen companion in every woodland ramble—she was fair as the lily; her long silken ringlets floated round her like a bright cloud—her mild blue eyes realized the poet's dream of beauty: they had that touching look that is sometimes seen in the "eyes of blue," as if they said, "Oh, destiny, be kind to me." I stood beside her at the altar as her bridesmaid, when in the flush of womanish beauty, she stood there, full of joyous anticipations for the future. All hearts acknowledged her loveliness and wished for her the happiness she desired for herself.

Her husband took her from among us to his home in the city. We often heard of her as the gay and lovely bride. A few months passed on, when one morning a summons was sent round to the neighbors to come and attend the funeral of the lovely Ella. We assembled and laid her away to rest in her "dreamless bed," and now, none remember her except some few who recall with sadness the untimely fate of the "beauty" of ——— county.

Within the edge of the old wood stood our old church, in which our parents had worshipped for many years on the blessed Sabbath. It was a large frame building; it had never been painted, but the "suns and rains of heaven" had turned the weather-boarding brown. It was a fine church for the place and times in which it was built; it was reared by the neighbors, who were mostly emigrants from South Carolina, and there, for many years had been dispensed the Word of life. In it were often heard sermons that might have added to the fame of Massilon or Chalmers.

How friendly were the greetings of the neighbors as they met at the church door! How quietly the gentlemen seated themselves on the old logs under the trees, and talked of the crops and the weather, until the minister began to read the chapter for the day, when they all walked in and reverently took their seats. No church has ever been to me as holy as that church—none can ever be so dear!

I remember a baptism that took place in that church that affected me strangely. It was that of a young man just seventeen, the son of a neighbor. He knew that earth would not claim him long; for consumption had breathed its chill breath upon him, and he knew he must soon die. In the depths of his clear blue eye there seemed to lie a world of deep, serious thought. Though so young, he looked like one who had tried life to his own satisfaction, had found it wanting—that it did not fill his longing spirit. He seemed to be looking into the "spirit world" for his happiness; he knew he must soon die, and seemed to contemplate the last "dreamless sleep" with calm joy. Oh, it was heart-breaking to see his calmness while all around were so sad; and when he kneeled to have the consecrated water poured upon his head, mothers sobbed aloud and the tears rolled down the cheeks of young maidens; men, whose "manliness had drunk up tears," were forced to turn their faces away to hide the quivering of their muscles, and the old minister could scarcely speak the holy words: yet the very calmness and peace of the grave seemed to rest on him. It looked, to see him kneel there, that he was consecrated for the grave! In a few weeks he died, and it was as when one

"Wraps the drapery of his couch around him,
And lies down to pleasant dreams."

Children.—I delight in little children; I could spend hours in watching them. How much there is in them that the Saviour loved when he took a little child and set him in the midst. Their simplicity, their confidence in you, the fund of happiness with which their beneficent Creator has endued them, that when intelligence is less developed, and so affords less enjoyment, the natural spirits are an inexhaustible fund of infantile pleasure.

Our Debt to Society.—It is a part of every man's duty to give the weight of his influence to the correction of every evil which infects society. This, too, we owe to society for the protection which it gives us. It is a debt. Not to pay it is dishonesty.

SUNDAY SCHOOL VISITOR.

The November number of the Visitor has been issued in anticipation of the date of publication, and will in due time be followed by the December number, which will close the second volume. We are very desirous that all our subscribers should renew their subscription as soon as possible.

The policy of exacting from every scholar the account necessary to pay for the subscription and postage of his paper, is open, in our judgment, to very capital objections. Let the children be encouraged to bring their cents or dimes to cast into the treasury, both for Missionary and Sunday School purposes; but let the supply of books and papers be without money and without price. Some children have not the means of subscribing, and why should they be forced to receive the Visitors—if they get them at all—in such a way as to make them feel their poverty? This is the very way to drive them from the school. There are, furthermore, some children, and parents too, who would like well enough to have the paper, but who are too mean and miserly to subscribe 25 or 50 cents a year for it; and, generally speaking, they are the very persons who most need it. We say, therefore, let all the expenses of the school be defrayed out of a common fund, raised by collections or subscriptions in the congregation, where there is no regular Sunday School Society, whose annual revenue shall be sufficient for this purpose. The wrong time to do this is after the winter is set in. It ought to be done now. Our January subscribers should renew their subscriptions at once. The dilatoriness of so many of them last year put us to very great inconvenience; we hope this will not be repeated. If we may be allowed to do so, we would venture to suggest that a collection or subscription be set on foot in every congregation to raise money enough, at least to supply each Sunday School with as many Visitors as there are scholars and teachers, always including the pastor. Let this be done without delay.

The reduction of postage ought to improve the circulation of the Visitor. According to the new law, every newspaper or other article of printed matter, not exceeding 3 ounces in weight, may be sent to any part of the United States for one cent. The Visitor does not weigh quite one ounce and a half: it is therefore entitled to the reduction. When the postage is paid in advance it is reduced one-half. The NewYork Commercial says: "There was an important error in the new postage law as published in the Washington papers. As published, it appeared that to secure the fifty per cent deduction on the rate of one cent postage to any part of the United States, newspapers must be pre-paid at the office where mailed—whereas the law, as it passed both Houses, permits the advance payment to be made at the office where delivered." According to the foregoing it appears that the Visitor is chargeable with three cents postage per annum in the State where published, and six cents every where else in the Union. We hope we shall hear no more complaint that the Visitor can not be circulated in consequence of the demand for postage.

Grand Tour de Conscience.—We read a paragraph the other morning which spoke of a "hope rumor," that a certain or uncertain late arch-deacon, after having gone over to the Church of Rome, is expected to come over again to the Church of England. All this recantation and cantation is not very creditable to the intellects of the parties concerned, however much it may say for consciences. One hardly knows the value to either side of an individual whose position is like that of a serious pendulum, or of whom it may be said, with respect to his views on religious subjects,

There he goes backwards and forwards,
There he goes round and round.

A church dignitary leaves the Established Church—conscientiously enough, no doubt—feels unhappy in his mind, and wants to come back again, when possibly some new preferment will be joyfully bestowed upon him. There is, however, something consistent in the whole proceeding: and we hope we shall not have many cases in which we shall hear of a reverend pervert or convert being able to sigh as the arch-deacon may in the present instance:

I've been Rome-ing, I've been Rome-ing,
To a creed a la Romaine;
And I'm coming, and I'm coming,
To my living back again.

Preciousness of Time.—Coming hastily into a chamber, I had almost thrown down a crystal hour-glass; fear, lest I had, made me grieve as if I had done it: but, alas, how much precious time have I cast away without any regret! The hour-glass was but crystal, each hour a pearl; that but like to be broken, this lost outright; that but casually, this done wilfully. A better hour-glass might be bought; but time lost once, is lost ever. Thus we grieve more for toys than for treasure. Lord, give me an hour-glass, not to be by me, but to be in me. "Teach me to number my days." An hour-glass to term me, "that I may apply my heart to wisdom."

[Fuller's Good Thoughts.

When do we know Christ.—When we think as Christ thought, do as Christ did, live as he lived, when, like him, we are patient, meek and humble, about our Father's business, are heavenly minded; when, like him, our wills are lost in the will of God; when we sympathize with the suffering, raise the fallen, comfort the afflicted, forgive as we hope to be forgiven; when we feel thus, and do thus, then we know Christ; then we are united to him, as the branch is united to the vine; then we know what it is to have our lives hid with Christ in God.

PREACHING CHRIST.

"Present Christ in every Sermon," is part of his directions to preachers, whose success gave value, almost authority to his opinions. Those to whom He is precious will never weary of the theme. Things both new and old are there which experience and scripture knowledge bring forth. And by presenting Christ, something more is meant than teaching his precepts. The presentation is more personal, dwelling on his love, his power, his fellowship, his glory.

Walking away from Church, on a beautiful Sabbath, in company with a friend, the subject of conversation was the sermon just listened to: how profound, how searching, and how scriptural too. "Yes," he said, "but did you notice one thing, it lacked Jesus' name. The blessed Saviour was not mentioned once." And so it was.

A minister of the Gospel, some time since, on going into his pulpit, found a slip of paper on which were written the following words from St. John, xxi. 21. "Sir, we would see Jesus." The hint brought a consciousness of his fault, which was acknowledged the next Sabbath by an evangelical sermon from another passage: "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord."

Dr. South gave some good directions of his own on preaching Christ:

1. He is TEXT; and all preaching beside Christ, is beside the text: therefore keep to your text.

2. Christ is the very FOUNDATION AND SUBJECT-MATTER of preaching; and all preaching without Christ is building castles in the air.

3. Christ is the LIFE AND SOUL of preaching; and all preaching without him, is like a body without life and spirit.

4. Christ is the great END of preaching: preaching is to manifest his glory: and when Christ is not preached, the great end is lost.

GERMAN EVANGELISM—A SUGGESTION.

We much admire the system to which the able Missionary Secretary of the M. E. Church North, Dr. Durbin, has brought this important department. From his correspondence with various domestic and foreign missionaries, (a correspondence which centres, as it ought, in him, as the head of that department) and other sources of information he condenses a MONTHLY SUMMARY of interest and value to the Church. This is printed in slips or "struck off," and a copy sent simultaneously to the various Church papers, in which it appears about the same time. The last Monthly Summary is before us, from which we extract an item that may quicken our own efforts in behalf of a people, among whom our Northern brethren succeed so well. It may be added that the German Missionaries in this city have received several members by certificate from these American missions in the fatherland:

A Presiding Elder in the West writes us, that they had the honor of receiving 14 persons into society from Saxony, some of whom had letters from Brother Wunderlich, and all were from the field which he is cultivating in the fatherland. We have probably received into our Church in this country over 100 members by certificate from our various missions in Germany.

While on this subject, we take the liberty of making a suggestion—neither official nor semi-official, it is true. It strikes us that our popular and excellent Missionary Secretariat is entitled to more of the correspondence of our various missionaries at home and abroad. Really, we do not see how their movements can be closely supervised, gathered up as they must be, from over half a dozen newspapers, scattered through the land. Every missionary writes to whom he pleases, giving his plans, &c. Thus the initiative of the most serious measures is taken and important developments made—of which the Missionary Board and the head of that Bureau are informed at the same time with the rest of the world! They have nothing left them to do but to second the motion. A single instance: What has become of our Panama Mission? The preacher wrote to some Presiding Elder in Georgia that he was going to quit it—had quit it, perhaps. The P. Elder communicated with an editor, and that is all and the last we know about it.

For ourselves, we find it next to impossible to obtain a connective view of this whole field. We only get it once a year—in the Secretary's Report. We do not say that there is inefficiency: this could not be with so active and popular a Secretary, so capital a Treasurer, and a Board constituted of Christian men, judicious and zealous: but we do say there is confusion and lack of centralization in the missionary correspondence. We hope the Board and Secretary will draw the strings into their hands and let us look to them to know what is doing in the Missions of the M. E. Church, South.

SUNDAY SCHOOL STATISTICS.—The preachers are respectfully and earnestly requested to make full returns of Sunday School statistics, at their respective Conferences. Please state the number of schools, scholars, superintendents, volumes in Library, copies of Visitors taken, and money raised for the publication of Sunday school books, during the year. We will be obliged to the Secretaries or Committees of Conferences for full and prompt reports. THOS. O. SUMMERS.

YEARLY APPROPRIATIONS.

ANNUAL MEETING OF THE BOARD.—The annual meeting of the Missionary Board, for the purpose of making the appropriations to the various missions under the charge of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the ensuing year, took place at the Mission Room on the 10th inst. Bishops Soule and Andrew were both present. After carefully looking over the whole work, it was unanimously resolved to appropriate to this noble cause the round sum of ONE HUNDRED THOUSAND DOLLARS. And this has been done without a single surplus dollar in the treasury as a foundation to rest upon: but we have a better basis—the faith and devotion of the church. God says, "The silver is mine, and the gold is mine," "and the cattle upon a thousand hills." Let Zion respond, Amen. The large increase in the amount of missionary collections for the last year (reaching to the sum of $125,000) justifies the hope that in the order of divine Providence, this greatest work of the church is receiving now that impetus which shall cause it to sweep on triumphantly until the whole earth is evangelized, and "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The above we take, together with items of Louisville Conference, from N. L. Adv.

China Missions $10,000.

California, (upon certain contingencies) $1200.

East Division—Embracing North Carolina, South Carolina, Holston and Virginia Conferences, $34,000.

Middle Division—Embracing Western Virginia, Louisville, Kentucky, Memphis, Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences, $16,000.

Western Division—Embracing Missouri, St. Louis, Arkansas, Indian Mission, East Texas and Texas, $28,000.

Also an outfit for Bishop Soule to California, amount not designated.

Bishop Paine has written to the board, requesting liberal appropriations to Texas.

Dr. Sehon, our worthy Missionary Secretary will leave in a day or two for the St. Louis Conference. He will visit the Indian Mission, and the two Texas Conferences.

PERIODICALS.

The National Magazine has already reached 20,000 circulation and well deserves more. The October No.—with several valuable and grave papers—furnishes a facetious but mighty corrective of faulty elocution:

"Rev. Jacob Gruber, well known as an eccentric but very useful minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, desiring to correct an error in the elocution of one of his young brethren, much given to the melodious termination of each sentence with an emphatic 'ah,' wrote the following letter to him:

DEAR-AH BROTHER-AH!—When-ah you-ah go-ah to-ah preach-nh, take-ah care-nh you-ah don't-ah say-ah nh-ah! Yours-ah,

JACOB-AH GRUBER-AH."

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, October.—Clergymen get it at one-third discount—that is at $2. The postage on each number is only 3 cents.

GRAHAM'S MAGAZINE, October.—The reading matter in this monthly has improved noticeably. The "Minister's Wife" will be given in our next, at the request of certain ladies of our acquaintance.

SERMONS.—The death of Henry Clay has been the occasion of some of the best specimens of eloquent eulogy. The Rev. G. Capers, on 16th August, delivered a glowing eulogy at Milton, Fla., on the life and public services of the late statesman. A neat copy has been furnished us.

Rev. J. Lusk, P. E. of Covington District Miss. Conference, preached, in August, a sermon at the dedication of a new Methodist Church in Liberty, which the trustees have just published. It is impressive and very suitable.

CONFERENCES.

OHIO CONFERENCE.—The Ohio Conference of the M. E. Church North, recently held its session at Zanesville, Ohio, Bishop Janes presiding, aided by Bishop Simpson. The presiding Bishop directed the secretary to enter the name L. L. Hamline as a member of the Ohio Annual Conference, in accordance with the request of the ex-bishop; the Conference voted him a superannuated relation.

LOUISVILLE CONFERENCE—This body closed an eight days' pleasant session, at Louisville, on 15th ult. The following were received on trial: Artemas Brown, Wm. H. Maull, Robt. H. Trimble, (from the Iowa Conference of M. E. Church, North,) Benj. F. Alexander, Henry C. Stephens, Absalom Davis, and Jas. C. Carnes. The last named of this list was some time the successful editor of the Vicksburg Whig, and latterly the able conductor of the "Kentucky Rifle."

Among those re-admitted to the traveling connection, are the names of Francis M. English and N. N. Lasley, both former members of this conference.

There were received into full connection, John R. Hall, H. W. South, J. F. Redford, W. M. Edmonds and J. W. Emmerson.

From the statements of the preachers, the past year seems to have been one of considerable prosperity; many have been added to the church from every part of the work.

The Missionary collections of the Conference year amount to $3,400.

W. R. Babcock, transferred to the St. Louis Conference. M. Evans and J. H. Bristow, transferred to Pacific Conference. J. A. Ivey, transferred to Louisiana Conference. W. C. Atmore, transferred to Kentucky Conference. S. H. Hargiss, transferred to to Western Virginia Conference, and appointed to Coal River mission. Next Conference to be held at Owensboro'.

WICKEDNESS IN HIGH PLACES.

The sovereign citizens of this country were too ready to forgot the disgraceful scene that transpired in their highest representative hall at the close of the last Congress. But it was too scandalous—the Billingsgate there was too foul-mouthed: the foreign press will not allow it to be forgotten. We allude to the Congressional colloquy between Messrs. Polk and Collum, it which the lie was passed half a dozen times, properly interlarded with blackguardisms.

Whose cheek did not burn with shame at the time when the scene was described by the papers? There stood the honorable gentlemen, the eyes of the world on them and a hundred reporters taking down every word. They stood, representatives of a Christian people, and no doubt many of their constituents good men, holy men! But they perhaps did not believe in "mixing politics and religion," as the phrase goes! A little genteel (?) swearing, a dash of the vulgar in their candidates, was allowable on the hustings—a joke to be winked at.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people." We are plain to say that either of the parties to which these gentlemen belong could furnish candidates more creditable, and moral men, who hold votes and destinies in their hands and feel their responsibility, should demand that the right sort be presented. But we begun this paragraph to let the "London Times" speak. After describing the scene as it was the Times says:

Will our friends at Washington give us credit for sincerity when we say that the cause of representative institutions, and constitutional government, is rather too low just now to afford this unfavorable display? Parliaments ought to have a dignity of their own. The military despotism of Europe have their pageants, their reviews, their fetes, their religious ceremonies, their consecrated chiefs, their time-honored symbols, and forms. Republics, and their constitutional monarchies, are rather bare of these things. They should, therefore have something else instead. Their deliberations should be grave, decorous, courteous and firm. The representative of the people being a ruler, a chief and elder of the people, ought to bear meekly and suitably his high honor, and do justice thereby to those he represents. Are we really to conclude that Mr. Polk, bearing the name of the late President, fairly and correctly represents his constituency or the general spirit of the United States? Is it usual in that country for any dozen men assembled any where to go on giving the lie to one another for half an hour together? From this exhibition we might conclude that it was no such uncommon occurrence, and that really the American tongue is so foul, the American honor is so blunt, as to endure the free bandying backwards and forwards of this most dreadful charge for dozen times in succession. No rifles or revolvers can wipe out the disgrace of such a scene, and the stain on the honor of those who merely heard and saw without taking the trouble to stop it. Will not the Americans, for the sake of liberty itself, for the sake of civilization, provide against the recurrence of so great a political scandal?

METHODIST PRESS.

A RAP AT THE "UTTERANCES."—In a letter to the Nashville Advocate, Bishop Andrew urges upon the preachers the duty of instructing the people who wait on their ministry, in the doctrines and usages of Methodism and the Scriptural reasons for adopting them. This is to be done not only by preaching, but laying proper books within their reach. The Bishop will be so old fashioned and behind the times as to recommend those good old Methodist classics—Wesley's sermons! Instead of dooming them to the neglected shelves, he thinks they will even grace the saddle-bags. The edition just brought out by our Book Agent is pronounced "the most perfect which has been published in this country."

Bishop A. does'nt seem to fancy the new style of "utterances" from the pulpit that has come into vogue in some quarters. "The old is better."

And we find too, that even the preachers too frequently partake of this spirit; hence Wesley is too plain and dry for them; they want a better style than he presents them. They luxuriate in the dogmatical paradoxes of Carlyle, or the ethereal, unsubstantial nonsense of Emerson, and such like dreamers, and when you go to hear one of their Sunday utterances, you shall listen for an hour, and if you can find one morsel of plain, rich scriptural truth on which to feed your hungry spirit, it must come up from the memories of other days; or if there is an attempt at oxhibiting the great scriptural truths by which the theology of our church is distinguished, we are too often doomed to hear a cruel caricature of some of our cardinal doctrines, in which the metes and bounds of precious truth are so indistinctly defined that neither the preacher nor his hearers know exactly whereabouts they be.

DR. PIERCE AND THE QUAR. CONFERENCES. Dr. Pierce, as the author of "Sunday preaching," thinks the Quar. Conferences in Georgia (whose action deprecating agitation, etc., we published a fortnight ago,) covertly placed him in a bundle with others blamed, and vindicates himself in last week's S. C. Advocate. He says:

If my dear brethren did not intend to give me so conspicuous a place among the agitators and innovators of the day, they must blame themselves for the carelessness of their publication. And, for the present, in as far as I am concerned, allow me to return the document, with my veto. When I write in reference to Methodism, I write over my own name. And when I am castigated, I want it to be done openly and avowedly; no body of men—nor individual man—shall bundle me up with associations with which I have no affinity—unrebuked.

I have written some articles on Sunday preaching, the sum and substance of them has been, that there were many places where the people could not attend week-day preaching. I ask is not this true? I have recommended, in these places, the substitution of Sunday preaching by the voluntary consent and adoption of the societies, with peculiar and essential adjuncts, such as a regular Sabbath School. I ask, is this a revolutionary measure? I have contended, that wherever the congregation preferred to have their preaching on a week-day, to any alteration, they should have it just as before. Was this a wild experiment? I have said that I regretted the appearance of any such necessity, and would prefer to see our people do every where, as once they did—turn out freely to preaching on any day that it might fall to their lot. Did this show any desire or love of change! I intimated that such was the visible evidence of a desire for Sundy preaching in some places—that if we did not furnish it in order, the discontents would procure it in disorder.

For my foresight and the suggestion of the only preventive, I am classed and published in the name of my pieces, as involved in a discreditable heresy. But ao, my brethren, you are after the wrong man. Wherever Methodism is found, as I received it, and learned it, there you will find me.

THE INWARD GUSH.—A writer from Arkansas makes an excellent communication to the Memphis Advocate upon its late editorials. These go to show that the signs of the times in the Church, indicate prosperity and not decline—as some enemies insist. The growing statistics of membership and enlarged benevolent offerings, &c., are alluded to in evidence. But "Arkansas" is not so easily persuaded. He quotes Bramwell—Bramwell that holy man "who lived so much nearer the gates of heaven than most people that God told him things He did not tell to others," said in the year 1809, "In all churches till the present time, Satan has used outward splendor to darken inward glory."

Arkansas fears for this "inward glory." The "outward" is easily enough seen and readily appreciated at is full value—but he wants to know if the light of a deeper work of grace in the heart is breaking upon the Church east of the great river. There is something awakening in these sentences:

Now my dear brother change your tune.—We are so far from what we out to be that your opiate is not needed. Cry aloud, spare not, wake up the church. May God help you. And to assist you in changing the current of your thoughts, I will ask you a few questions.

1. When did you hear one of our distinguished preachers take such a text as this. "Let us go on unto perfection," and explain the doctrine of christian perfection and inforce the subject by urging the christians to look for the blessing then and there? I do not mean to touch the subject incidentally.

2. When did you last hear a minister of a good degree of popularity, telling his experience from the pulpit, as the old preachers used to do; when and where he obtained the blessing of perfect love?

3. When did you read a communication on this subject in the papers, the writer giving his experience? Are not the communications generally on the abstract question, what is 'entire sanctification,' and are not these communications always below Wesley's "Plain Account" and "Fletchers Essay?"

4. When and where was the last meeting you attended when the people sought this great blessing and witnesses were raised up?

5. When did you see a revival notice in any of our papers, stated so many justified and so many "cleansed from all sin?" Well there was a notice in your paper a short time ago, from the P. E. of the Batesville District, Arkansas Conference, stating that at a camp meeting where many were converted, one preacher professed to obtain the blessing of "perfect love"—I have had many thoughts about that preacher. Who is he? I suppose he is a simple hearted brother, who don't know that this doctrine of christian perfection is almost a mere matter of theory amongst us, and who really believed when he stood before the Bishop that it was a matter of sober earnestness when the questions were asked him, "Are you going on to perfection?"—"Do you expect to be made perfect in love in this life?" "Are you groaning after it?" God bless the dear brother, make him faithful unto death and let him live a long time. But Bro. Owen, this is a case from a new circuit in a new conference. Now if we could hear of such things from your halls of "sanctified learning" or from your cities of refinement, we might begin to look up, But alas! alas!

WOMENS RIGHT'S CONVENTIONS:—The Buffalo Advocate has'nt a high opinion of those who figure in them. He has much daring, where he lives, to say such as this:

The sisterhood prominent in these public convocations, are generally very uneasy spirits. The crying grievances they suffer are from husbands they don't love, or whom they despise; and riddance from them is the only social remedy that will relieve their cares. Often these women have married men who are their inferiors in mind and manners, and the yoke weighs heavily upon their necks, though a yoke of their own choosing. Then, again, they are spinsters that could not captivate the hearts they desired, and therefore think ill of men's hearts and heads in general. The secret history of almost all of them would disclose some particular domestic grievance or social annoyance, and thus account for their idiosyncracies, one and all. Unhappiness exists at home, and hence these contentions abroad. The publicity the press gives them, but feeds the disorder, for to it is thus added, in the end, a sense of newspaper importance, and a rage for newspaper notoriety.

AGENTS REPORT.—Mr. Shearn, financial agent of T. W. Banner, makes an appeal or address to the preachers, and shows a very considerable difference in their agency:

I have gathered together from the published receipts all moneys remitted by our preachers to the Banner office since the last session of both Conferences. The total amount is $630 25. This comes from forty-one preachers. From Texas Conference preachers $574 25, and from East Texas Conferences $56—making $630 25. We have in East Texas Conference forty preachers, ten of which has sent the $56 before mentioned, and thirty have not sent one dollar!

Texas Conference has forty-three preachers, twelve of whom have sent us nothing; the other thirty-one sent us $574 25.

REVIVALS.—The editor of R. C. Advocate, in connection with them, lays out good work for our brethren of the local ministry:

It has been our pleasure for some weeks past to receive and publish accounts of religious revivals, in different sections of the two Conferences represented by the Advocate.—God is graciously reviving the Churches, and blessing the labor of his servants in the conversion of souls. In Virginia we learn the regret is very general that our conference year closes at so early a period as the 20th of October. It will interfere very seriously with the revivals now in progress, especially on Circuits, as it will compel the ministers to discontinue their meetings in order to collect their statistical and other reports, and close up their fiscal operations preparatory to a departure for conference. Under these circumstances now and important duties will devolve on their local ministry and laity of the Church. They may render very important aid in carrying on the good work of grace. We doubt not they will be both ready and willing to work in this good cause. In the towns and cities these obstacles do not exist, and meetings now in progress may be continued up to a few days before the opening of Conference.

LAY DELEGATION, &c.—The Philadelphia C. Advocate keeps up a steady fire on this subject, not so much by editorials as through correspondents. The boldest, nay, violent ground is assumed against the so called Conference Government. What, with "Reformers" in the editorial camp, and ultra abolitionists and higher law men—the Northern Methodist press can spare but few guns for the border war or any other.

SPIRITUAL RAPPING.

MR. EDITOR—I have recently read "the Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse," being an explanation of Modern Mystery—by Andrew Jackson Davis—author of "Nature's Divine Revelations," "The Great Harmonia," etc.

Mr. Davis is regarded, I believe, as the most prominent and voluminous exponent of the "Philosophy of Spiritual Intercourse" or "Spiritual Rapping" as it is more familiarly called. I have thought it might not be uninteresting to the readers of the Advocate to present a few extracts from the above work, setting forth the theological views of Mr. Davis.

In relation to miracles, we have on page 18 and 19 the following expression of his "impression:"

"From the foregoing reflections it will be readily inferred that I am not impressed to regard any manifestations of a supersensuous character, as being above, contrary to, or inconsistent with, nature's immutable and universal principles; that I do not believe in the existence of any miracles which are not referable to natural causes, visible or invisible, nor in the possibility of any strictly supernatural events, ancient or modern."

On the 12th page we have the following as his impression of the faith and sincerity of the clergy.

"About five-eighths of the Protestant clergy are in the secret consciousness of their own minds, perfect materialists with regard to faith in spiritual existence; and yet, they preach "life and immortality," in combination with other cardinal points in the existing theology, because preaching is their occupation, and because, also, they do not know of any thing better and more elevating to proclaim to the people."

On the 17th page we have his impression of Moses and Christ:

"Moses being educated according to the methods and tendencies of his age declared precisely what his material and spiritual organization and state of mental illumination would suggest; and so with Jesus. This was accomplished by no special action and interposition of the divine mind, but by the legitimate progressive development of their own respective constitutions."

On the 89th page we have his views of the doctrine of man's depravity.

"In this age of man's progression and development on the earth, let the oriental doctrine of "total depravity" be banished from our midst."

On the 45th page we discover that he is equally skeptical in regard to the existence and influence of Satan:

"The fear of a fabulous devil is, even at this advanced period of civilization, much stronger in timid and undeveloped minds, than the love of truth and deity."

I will close by giving your readers Mr. Davis' theory of what Christians regard as conversion. On the 94th page we have the following:

"Those very positive speakers always affirm what they pronounce; it gives weight to their words and invests them with "seeming authority." And what is the consequence of the psychological result? It is simply this—that good man, that impressible and affectionate mind, is thrown into a frenzied state of "moral contrition." He has hitherto been superior to the uttering of what was untrue; but now he rapturously pronounces falsehood after falsehood. He says, "I am under divine condemnation," which is not true. He says, "I am inwardly depraved," which is not true. He says, "I have been always a great sinner," which is not true, for he was once an innocent child, and of "such is the kingdom of heaven." He says, "God is angry with me," which is not true, for "God is love," and bitter and sweet, or love and hate can not flow from one fountain. He says, "God's spirit is striving with me," which is not true, for he is simply psychologized, by the speaker, to see every thing respecting his own state invested with awfulness, and himself as under the divine wrathe and condemnation. At last he calls aloud, "O, see the Holy Spirit," which is not true; his vision is only affected by mental delerium tremens, arising from the excessive intoxication which the powerful preaching has produced upon his nervous system. And still moved by the controling influence in the assemblage he exclaims, "Oh, I thank God I am forgiven," which is not true had he sinned, for no transgression of nature's laws can be forgiven, they can only be outgrown by personal progression and developement.

I had thought of commenting somewhat at length upon these anti-revealed and skoptical views of Mr. Davis, but upon reflection, I shall only add a few words, and let the quotations in Davis' own words, from his own philosophy, speak for themselves. Because, Mr. Davis teaches nothing practically immoral—but talks about truth, justice, benevolence and love, some seemed pleased with him not only as a spiritual rappist, but also as a moral teacher. We must express our approbension of any moral system which distinctly denies, as we have seen, so many things that are believed to be cardinal doctrines of revelation—to wit: inspiration—in saying, what Moses and Christ did, was but the result of of the developement of their times without any special action or intervention of the divine mind—miracles, whose existence he positively denies—the depravity of man which he calls an oriental myth. So he treats the divinity of Christ; calling him merely a developement of his times. The bible doctrine of Satan and Satanic influence a fable, and scriptural conversion ridiculed as the result of psychology.

With spiritual rapping and rappist I have no words, pro or con; I merely present Mr. Davis' theological views in his own words, and leave readers to form their own conclusions.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Camp-Meeting near Greensboro, Ala. Conf.

I have just reached home from a camp-meeting, held eight miles north-east from this place—a camp-meeting long to be remembered, because of the mighty displays of Divine Power and Goodness. True, we were very badly supplied with preachers; there were only four, and some of these worn down with previous labors, but so soon as the services commenced the people, male and female, turned preachers, and their labors were not in vain. The congregations were very large, and I must say (though in the habit of attending such occasions for above thirty years) I have never seen so good behaviour. There was no cause for the slightest reproof during the whole time—no exhibition of levity, for there seemed to be no one who did not feel the deepest interest. At the close of every sermon the altar would be crowded by penitents, and some two or three times it was impossible to occupy the pulpit at mid-day, because of the great work in the altar. Several laymen of the Baptist brethren rendered efficient service by singing, praying and instructing the mourners. We closed the services with an addition of 106 to the Church, and a missionary collection of above $100.

There is one fact I would notice, with a view to have it imitated by others. The community entered into written resolutions to avoid all show, so we had no feasting, no exhibition of gay apparel, no gossipping circles—all seemed to regard it as a place and a time set apart to the worship of God. Hence the congregation at the pulpit and the families in their tents were blessed, for the presence of God was every where. It was indeed a revival of the primitive camp-meetings. Oh, may we have many such, when the people will be blessed and God be glorified.

E. V. LEVERT.

September 30th.

Palestine Ct., E. Texas Conf.

Since June we have had occasional showers of divine grace and encouragement to labor. We are holding a succession of two day's meetings, with a view of protracting them if necessary, and thus far God has smiled upon us. Many souls have been converted and added to the Church.

Sept. 24th. E. F. THWING.

Glennville Ct., Ala. Conf.

As soon as circumstances would justify it I appointed a round of protracted meetings on this Circuit, commencing at Smyrna Church, which resulted in a few conversions, many backsliders reclaimed, the Church generally revived and two accessions. Our next meeting was at Midway Church. On account of inclement weather we had not much more than got under way before we had to leave for our next appointment at Glennville, where we had a glorious meeting, which resulted in at least forty conversions and fifty-five accessions. At this meeting our local brethren labored efficiently and zealously, at Anthony Chapel, where we had a most excellent meeting, enlisting the almost entire community, which resulted in the conversion of 35 or 40 persons, 38 accessions, to our Church, and in all probability many will join other Churches. We have two other meetings appointed. May the Lord still be with us.

Sept. 28th. J. WILLIAMSON.

Gainesville Ct., Ala. Conf.

Our third Quarterly Meeting for this work commenced at Sumpterville, 11th Sept., and closed the 24th. The result was good; some 16 or 18 professed saving faith; 17 united with the M. E. Church. The Church is greatly stirred up.

There was something remarkable in this revival. Out of the number converted there was but one female; the rest all young men, save two. The work was deep and genuine; all the conversions seemed to be clear and sound. This revival will long be remembered about Sumpterville. The benefits were felt all through the neighborhood. Thank God for revival influence. T. MOODY.

DOMESTIC MISSIONS.

Greenville and Upper Deer Creek, Miss. Conf.

BRO. MCTEIRE: We have thought it advisable to publish some account of our operations on this Missionary Circuit. We call it a Circuit, because, in our regular rounds we preach to all the church-going persons in our bounds; and we call it a Missionary Circuit because our work is a self-supporting mission to the colored people of this region.

To the former Greenville charge we added early this year, two neighborhoods on Deer Creek, which occupy us two Sabbaths, and make our work a four week's Circuit, which we accomplish by preaching three and four times on the Sabbath only. Our general plan of catechising is to catechise at each place on a night of the week. But circumstances often render it necessary for us to catechise on Sabbath, in addition to preaching. This makes our Sabbath work very laborious, whilst our week days afford us rather too little to do—unless we were more studious and a little more zealous and diligent to search out work.

The part of our work lying around Greenville, extends from the plantation of Mr. A. G. Cartor, at the foot of Miller's Bend, to those of Bro. W. P. and Mr. A. B. Montgomery, on Rattlesnake Bayou, near the head of American Bend. That part which lies on Deer Creek extends from the plantations of Bro. Robert M. Cartor and Dr. Dunn, which are the extreme upper settlements on the creek, to that of Major Lee; which is the lowest point on Deer Creek, to which our labors extend. Within this whole scope of country, which contains some of the finest lands in the great valley, there are not fewer than 2000 colored persons susceptible of religious instruction, and about 160 white persons. The number of the colored population, to whom we actually have access for the purposes of religious instruction, by the means of stated preaching and catechising, is about 1000. The aggregate number of colored persons now connected with the church, as members and probationers, is about 440. We have this year received on trial about 200, of whom a considerable number, if not a majority, have professed a change of heart. Our principal success has been on Deer Creek and especially on the plantation of Judge Rucks. Here the people of the adjoining plantations have attended regularly, and here we have seen the most visible effects of our preaching—accompanied, as we trust, has been, by the spirit of truth and grace.

There has been at least this evidence of the utility of preaching to the black people, that out of 11 who recently died of cholera on the plantation of Mr. G. A. Bowen, 9 had joined us at Judge Rucks, and having previously made a profession of religion, died in great peace.

We have catechised regularly about the children. They have generally manifested much interest in the exercise, and have learned the answers remarkably well. Many of them can repeat with readiness the whole of the Creed, the Ten Commandments, and many of the selected passages of Scripture, as well as several of the hymns. O, may our bread thus cast "upon the waters be gathered after many days."

We preach regularly every two weeks in Greenville. Here we have a fine and sufficiently commodious house of worship, (wanting lacking but a bell) and a white membership of the number of 18. Two persons, a lady and a gentleman, joined our Church in the spring.

—With feelings of earnest solicitude for the best interests of this increasingly interesting community, we look forward in the prayerful faith and hope, to our approaching last Quarterly Meeting, to be held on the last Sabbath of this month, humbly beseeching God to look in mercy to favor us with his gracious presence and blessing.

We are decidedly of opinion that a suitable number of commodious chapels, and a good parsonage, would greatly conduce to the interests of this Circuit. When the Lord shall have effectually stirred up the citizens of this wealthy region to a due appreciation of these important measures, then may we hope to see this moral "wilderness bud and blossom as the rose." May He hasten the time.

Under, we trust, a due sense of our own unworthiness, we delight to express our thankful acknowledgements to this generous people for their uniformly kind and hospitable attentions to us, their servants for Christ's sake.

R. H. HERBERT,
JNO. B. BOWEN.

REV. T. B. RUSSELL has taken charge of the Dallas Female Academy, Selma, Ala. The "particular few" mentioned in the next appropriate address of his parting pupils refers to the four young ladies who graduated last summer—the first and only graduates under the retiring President. This should have been added in a note.

DO GOOD WHILE YOU LIVE.—This is a matter that cannot safely be left to will and imposed upon Executors. It may not be free in the minds of our readers that a miser (M'Donogh) of large posthumous benevolence died in this city a few years since. He had lived niggardly toward all charities. Before dying, left large legacies to two cities for Public Schools and benefactions to the poor. His heirs have contested the matter, and we give this week the decision of the first Court. So true is it of the miser, the covetous—he heapeth up riches and knoweth not who shall gather them:

THE MCDONOGH WILL CASE—U. S. Circuit Court, Judge McCaleb—Mary Murdock et al. vs. Executors of John McDonogh et al—Judge McCaleb yesterday rendered his decision in this important case. As it is lengthy for our limits, we give an abstract of it:

On the part of the complainants, it is contended that the provisions of the will can not be executed, because—

1st. The attempt to devote the property in perpetual accumulation, and to render it inalienable, is ruinous to commerce, dangerous to the State, and contrary to law and public policy.

2d. That the title conferred by the will is unknown to the law, which requires that all property shall have a owner.

3d That the dispositions in favor of the cities are substitutions and fidei commiss, which are both expressly forbidden by law.

4th. That the legacies are upon impossible conditions, and to persons and corporations incapable of receiving them—and

5th. The legacies being void, all the annuities dependent on them must fall.

On the part of the cities, it is contended—

1st. That they are the universal legatees under the will, and were owners, and in possession by law, from the decease of the testator.

2d. That the will contains no substitutions, or fidei commiss reprobated by law.

3d That all impossible and illegal conditions in the will, and those which are contrary to public policy, are to be reputed not written, and the title to the property has become vested in the cities.

We discover, at a glance, the prominent characteristics in the will of John McDonogh. The first is an almost total indifference and insensibility to the sacred ties of blood; the other is an ostentatious display of the most anxious solicitude for the application of his long-hoarded wealth to the establishment of institutions designed for the benefit of strangers to his own blood. The first is sufficiently exhibited in the utterances bequeathed to his widowed sister and her fatherless children, and in the declaration contained in the will, that if he had any children, and fortune to leave behind him at his death, he would give a very small amount to each—merely enough to start them in habits of industry and frugality, and no more. His solicitude for others is the constant theme of his regularly verbose and minute directions to those through whose agency the complicated machinery he had devised for the execution of his purposes was to be put in operation. The orphan children of his deceased brothers and sisters, now complainants before this tribunal, have not, except in the single instance alluded to, received even a cold respect of a passing glance, while leagues were made to go to the to disclose the depth and breadth of his philanthropy for the welfare of the orphan poor of every clime and caste of color, in the cities which claim to be considered the universal legatees of his accumulated millions. While I find it difficult to comprehend these discordant and unnatural elements in the character of one who often and so solemnly invokes the principles of religion and morality as inseparable to the proper education of the youth of the country, it is, perhaps, unnecessary to notice them further than to say, that in my mind, they raise the strongest doubts of the genuineness of that charity and philanthropy of the testator, which were the fruitful themes of the eloquent encomia of counsel, and the chief of the cause. It is apparent that one of the prominent objects of the testator in his last will and testament, was to deprive his heirs and nearest of kin of the vast wealth to which, in the event of his dying intestate, they would be entitled in the legal order of succession; it is equally certain that, in default of heirs in the descending and descending line, he reposed a perfect right in law, to deprive them of the inheritance, and to bestow it upon strangers. Whether he has accomplished his design in the first place, and exercised his right in the latter, in a manner to receive the sanction of the laws of the land, are questions now to be determined.

We have seen that by the will, the property of that testator is to remain together forever, as one estate, to be designated as his "general estate," and to become a permanent fund, on interest, to be managed by certain commissioners and agents, who are to be annually appointed by the cities of New Orleans and Baltimore. We have seen that these commissioners and agents are to form a perpetual board, and to have perpetual succession. To the board thus constituted, the perpetual administration of the estate is given, without the power of alienation, and the rents and revenues only are ordered to be invested and to the purposes and objects contemplated by the will.

An insurmountable objection to the execution of the provisions of the will relating to the administration of the "general estate," through the agency of the Board of Commissioners and Agents, arises from the fact that they contain substitutions and fidei commiss which are expressly prohibited by law.

The decision contains many learned quotations of authorities, which we are unable to do justice to in our limited space—and concludes with the following decree:

This cause came to be heard during the last term of this Circuit Court, and after full argument, was taken into consideration with the consent of counsel of the parties, that the decree should be pronounced at chambers, and entered of record, and executed as in term time; and upon consideration thereof and for the reasons contained in the written opinion now filed, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed as follows:

That all that part of the olographic will of John McDonogh, beginning with the second paragraph with the words: "It is my will, and I direct my executors hereinafter named, immediately after my death, to correspond, &c." on the second page, numbered as the sixth page of the printed copy of the will on file, and ending with the words "or otherways, and held and owned by said corporation," on the thirty-second page of the said printed copy of said will, relative to the city of New Orleans, the city of Baltimore, the State of Louisiana, and the State of Maryland, the "general estate," the Colonization Society, for the projected Asylum of New Orleans, the Society for the Relief of destitute orphan boys, a projected school farm in Maryland, free public schools in New Orleans and Baltimore, and the appointment of various boards of commissioners, agents, directors, etc., and for the investment and accumulation of the estate; be, and all said provisions are declared illegal, null, and of no force and effect whatever, and that, as to all the estate of said deceased, except such as is disposed of in the first paragraph of said will. The deceased died intestate, and his estate fell by his death to his heirs at law.

That the complainants are heirs at law of the deceased John McDonogh in the following proportions, to-wit: [Here follow the names of the heirs and the proportion allotted to each. The estate is divided into seventy parts, sixty-seventieths of which are adjudged to belong to complainants. The remaining ten-seventieths are reserved to the heirs of the half-bloods, when they shall make themselves parties and prove their relationship.]

That the said complainants recover of the defendants, executors of the will of the deceased, all and singular the property real and personal, corporeal and incorporeal, composing the estate of the deceased, and especially all and singular the property comprised in the inventory of the succession prepared by Thomas Layton and Adolphe Mazureau, Notaries Public, a copy of which is in evidence, and that said complainants have execution and be put in possession of the same in conformity with law and the rules of the Court.

That reference be made to the master in Chancery for an account of the administration of said executors, from the death of the deceased to the execution of this decree, and that said executors account to said master in the premises, and that said master report to the Court: And so much of the said bill as demands said account and the recovery of any moneys in the hands of said executors, is retained for further decree.

That any other person or persons, not now parties to the proceedings, claiming title to the estate of the deceased, or any part thereof, be allowed to present their claims respectively before this Court, to make due proofs thereof and to become parties in the proceedings for the same established and adjudication thereof.

That the costs of the complainants and the executors be paid out of the succession of said deceased, and the costs of the other parties defendant, by themselves respectively.

Obituary.

Miss Isabella Elder, died in Greensboro, Ala., on the first of Octebor. She had been a member of the M. E. Church for eighteen years, mostly in connexion with the Franklin Church, Mobile. Very retiring in manners and disposition, the depth and earnestness of her religious experience, were only known to those who knew her intimntely. She rests in hope. S.

I append a couplo of extracts from her diary, which you can attach to this brief notice if you think them of sufficient interest.

July 4th, 1834. I joined the M. E. Church in Mobile; was desireus to becomo a Christian, but did not understand the plan of salvation. I attended class-meeting regularly, though it was a great cross to express my feelings. There I learned from the experience of others, that it was my privilege to have a sense of pardoned sin, and the favor of God. I saw, also, these blessings promised in the scriptures, which I read with great attention. I felt myself a guilty sinner with the wrath of God abiding on me. In Febrnary 1835, the Rev. J. N. Maffitt visited Mobile, we had meeting every night, and the house was crowded with penitents. I felt my burden of guilt insupportable; the cry of my heart was "Lord what will thou have me do!" I felt willing to do any thing.) Feb. 14th. While kneeling at the altar, it came into my mind to give myself away to the Savior, and the words 'him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out,' were powerfully applied to my mind. I laid hold hold on this promise of faith, and immediately felt my load of sin removed, though I did not feel that joy which I expected. I saw the way of life clearly, and felt penco in believing, but I had not received the "witness of the spirit." One day, sitting alone reflecting on the change that had taken place in my seul, and wondering that I did not feel the joy that others ex-perienced, I thoughtlessly picked up a torn leaf of a book that was lying near me, and fouad to be a fragment of a sermon by the Rev. John Wesley on "The Witness of the Spirit." It is important subject was new to me, but as my mind was all athirst for knowledge with regard to my spiritual state, I caught eagerly at any thing that was likely to impart light to me. I soon discovered that this witness was what I wanted and pryed earnestly for. A few days after this, while at secret prayer, pleading the promises of God, I received a satisfactory evidence of my acceptance through Christ. I could with confidency cry "Abba Father," and knew myself a child of God. I new saw it was my privilego to go on unto perfection." I received much light and encouragement from Wesley's Sermon. My soul hungered and thirsted after holiness and true holiness.

June 20, 1836. After I retired to my room at night, deeply impressed with the necessity of the blessing, I felt my total inability to do any thing for myself and that the work was purely the Lord's. I kaelt down believing that the Lord was ready there to accomplish the work. As I continued to pray, my views became more clear, aad my faith increased. I said now O Lord I disclaim all that I have been, and I take Theo as my wisdom and righteousness, my sanctification and redemption. I believe Thou dost now sanctify me, body, sad spirit, nad according to my faith it was done unto me." I felt myself sink into nothing—Christ was all in all. I closed the bible which lay by me, and I felt that every promiso contained therein was mine. These words, especially, I felt, as the message of the Saviour addressed to me: "Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you, abido in mo and I in you." I thought I could almost realize the full sense of rejoicing angels and ministering spirits, and the Saviour had full possession of my heart, yet I felt no disposition to shout aloud, but my soul and all that was within me raised tho Lord. I lay down to sleep, and felt like the beloved disciple, reposing on the bosom of my Lord."

Thus this faith our sister lived, and in this faith she died, though from the influence of powerful opiates she was unable to utter any testimony, which doubtless under other circumstances she would have borne to the truth and faithfulness of Jesus.

T. J. Kdger.

Died, Sept. 2d, 1852, at his residence near Greensville, Ala., Maj. Everard Cureton, in the 71st year of his age. He was a native of Virginia, but from early life resided in South Carolina, where he is extensively known and much beloved; many relatives and friends in that State will mourn his decease. In the fall of 1834, he emigrated to this State. Perhaps few men have lived so long and made as few enemies. The writer of this has had his acquaintance more than 20 years ago, and from an intimate personal knowledge of him in all the relations of life, is fully prepared to say, that few, very few, if any men in his opinion ever lived or died. He was a kind, attortive husband, it fond dotting father, a humane indulgent master, a sincere friend. He was a worthy member of the M. E. Church, and as a Christian humble and modest. For some time before his death it gave him pain to converse, and he spoke but little. When asked as to the statu of his mind, he informed me that his confidence and trust were firm in the Redeemer as the Saviour of the world. He expressed a willingness to go, and spoke of the many relatives and friends who had gone before. He had no stranger on reaching that happy shore.

A farewell dear father; thy welcome pres-

once will no more gladen the dwellings of thy sorrowing children, thy smiles will no more cheer and light up their earthly pathway. One of the strongest ties that houud us to earth has been parted, but we how in humble submission. Undisturbed be the nbode of thy dust, till the great rising day, while thy spirit husks in the brightness of uncreated light forever.

Record of Rascality—Curious Calculation.—From the monthly report of Captain Youeues, Chief of Police, we make up the following sum mary of arrests throughout the city during the month of September last: Arrests in the First District, 634; Second do, 605; Third do, 308; Fourth do, 20d—totnl, 1843.

Of this number, 16 were arrested for assaults with dangerous weapons, and 6 for murder. About three-fourths of the offences charged were committed under the influence of intoxication, making the entire nnmber of outrages caused by drunkenness near 1400.

This shows that on an nverage, daily, about 45 persons stagger off to the Watch-house under what is commonly called "a load" of "red-eye," nll for offences which they would not have committed but for that burn ing thirst peculiar to the Anglo Saxon-Celtic-Danish-Nox man race.

Cotton in Texas.—The San Augustine (Texas) Herald, of the 25th ult., says: "We regret to learn that the dry rot, as it is termed, is destroying a large portion of the the crop of our county. We hear of several planters who say that their crops have been injured from 30 to 50 per cent. within the last ten days or two weeks. A small black speck is seen upon the point of the boll before it opens. Open the boll, and the cotton is entirely rotten. This disease—though appearing in Texas now for the first time—was common in Alabama a few years ago.

Dr. King and Consul Ruck.—"Ion," of the Baltimore Sun, writing from Washington, says: "It now appears, from authentic information, the American Missionary in Greece, has been most tyrannically and unjustly treated by that Government, and under nn abuss of law; that our Minister at Constnntinople, Mr. Marsh, has investigated the case, and come to the opinion that Dr. King has been oppressed, and is entitled to the protection of his Government, and that this Governnsent will, in due time, interfere in Dr. King's behalf, with an energetic remonstrance, and nothing more. In the case of Consul Rice, who was also barbarously treated by the Mexican authorities, our Government, it is said, made a remonstrance, and submitted to the indignity."

Health of Cities.—The following statement comprises the deaths in some of the Atlantic cities for the week ending September 25, and their proportion to the population:

	Deaths.	Population.	Proportion.

The Lobos Islands.—The Portland Advertiser states that several of the ship owners of that port are deeply interested in the Lobos Island controversy, from the fact that on the strength of Mr. Webster's letter to Captain Jewett, they chartered their vessels to load guano. They look to our tlovernment for indemnity.

The Darien Ship Canal.—It is said the proposed ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien, will cost £12,000,000, and that the London parties concerned in it desire to receive the co-operation of several leading capitalists in New York Point Escoses, in the tiutf of Uarien, where the terminus of the canal is to be, is about 125 miles east of Panama, and on the same parnlel of latitude.

For Liberia.—We have already announced that the brig Orjolo, Captain Brnndt, was to sail from NewYork for Monrovin on the first of October.

On the first of November the brig Ralph Cross will sail from Baltimore for Liberia, with freight, cabin passengers and emigrants. The prospect is that about two hundred emigrants will go out in the vessel. They are nearly all from Virginia and North Carolina. A number of Missionaries are expected to embark in the Ralph Cross, with whom will be the Rev. Bishop Scott, of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The Rev. Jnoies Cerry expects to go out in the same vessel. He received his appointment as general superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Liberia some weeks ago.

It is intended to send another vessel from NewOrleans about the first of December.

The desire for emigration was never so great as at the present time, and we have no doubt that it will increase. The report of those who have been sent out to examine the country and report thereon is highly satisfactory.

An Abolition Anniversary Nipped in the Bud.—For some time past, calls for a meeting to be held at Syracuse, NewYork, have been advertised in the papers published in that vicinity, for the purpose of celebrating the anniversary of the rescue of the fugitive Jerry, which event created such an excitement a year ago. We see, however, that the Mayor and Aldermen of Syracuse have adopted resolutions declaring such celebration as disreputable to the city and dangerous in its tendency, recommending the citizens to desist from participating in it, and advising the projectors to abandon it.

Arrival of the Crescent City.

Important from Havana.

The Crescent City Ordered out of Port in a Gale.

The U. S. mail steamship Crescent City, Lieut. D. D. Porter, U. S. Navy, commanding, arrived the 6th inst. in eight days from NewYork, via Havana, with 120 passengers, 55 of whom took passage for Havana. The Crescent City also brought the mails intended for Havana, not having been allowed any communication with the shore. It has already been announced that Mr Smith, the Purser of the Crescent City, had made himself obnoxious to the Cuban authorities, and threats had been made that the ship would not be allowed in the harbor if he was on board. This threat was carried into effect, as will be seen by the following statement, furnished by Mr. S. himself:

As the Crescent City approached the port, the Captain of the Port met her at the mouth of the harbor, and made motions not to enter the port, which order was disregarded by the Captain, and he stood in. The Captain of the Port then ordered him verbally to heave-to at the mouth of the harbor, which order Captain Porter refused to obey, as it was blowing half a gale of wind at the time, and moreover, not having any intention of remaining outside the harbor, he thought it a useless waste of time. The Crescent City accordingly proceeded to her anchorage, having refused to take a pilot, the wind blowing too hard to stop the ship.

After the vessel was anchored, the Captain of the Port came alongside and demanded why the Crescent City had not stopped outside the harbor when he had given the order. The Captain informed him that it was not a proper place to stop a ship under the circumstances, and he would be risking his ship by so doing—he had accordingly refused to obey the order. Captain Porter was then asked for the ship's articles, and when the Captain of the Port ascertained that Mr. Smith's name was on them, he told the Captain that the Captain General's order was for the Crescent City to go to sea immediately, which order Captain Porter refused to obey until his mail and passengers were landed, or the responsibility of not landing them was fixed on the Spanish authorities.

He was told by the Captain of the Port that the passengers would have to go to sea with the ship; that the Officer of the Port said he would take the mails, when the Captain refused to deliver them, until it was settled whether the ship was to proceed to sea or not. Captain Porter informed the Captain of the Port that he would not move his anchor until he had made a formal protest against such conduct before the Captain General, which protest the Captain of the Port consented to take on shore to the Captain General. In the space of half an hour it was returned. The Captain General refused to receive any communication direct from Captain Porter, but would receive it through the Consul. The protest was accordingly sent to the acting Consul, Mr. Modrian. All this time, the boats from shore and the official boats were hovering around the ship at a distance, waiting the result. After sunset, the Captain of the Port came alongside, and informed Captain Porter that as the protest had been sent a long distance to the Consul, it was too late to answer it that night, and that the ship was ordered to proceed to sea. "You refuse, then, to receive the mails and passengers?" said the Captain. "No communication of any kind allowed," said the Captain of the Port.

Captain Porter having done all that was necessary on the occasion, and finding no prospect of getting rid of his passengers, having laid his protest before the Government, and left with them the responsibility of this outrageous proceeding, put to sea. The Government sent him a pilot, which he refused to receive, and at 7 o'clock the ship passed the Moro. The Spanish officer who conducted the business of sending the Crescent City to sea, Don Emiliano Chacon, behaved throughout with great courtesy and politeness, exhibiting no feeling on the occasion, but evidently showing that he had an unpleasant duty to perform. There was no feeling or rudeness exhibited on either side, and on the whole no complaint is made against the authorities of Cuba. The matter is one how which concerns the Government of the United States, and with which companies and individuals have nothing to do.

The following is the protest made by Captain Porter, and laid before the Captain General:

Whereas, The Spanish authorities in Cuba have issued an ordered to prevent the entrance of the U. S. Mail steamship Crescent City into the port of Havana, to which the said steamship is bound in the pursuit of her legitimate business, no offence having been committed on the coast of Cuba against the laws of Spain by the officers or crew of said vessel, and the said order being direct contravention of the treaty stipulations between the two nations; I do therefore strongly protest in the name of the of the United States Mail steamship Company, whose interest I represent, and also in the nnme of the tlovernment of the United States, whose officer I am, against a provision so nrbitrary.

The Spanish authorities in Cuba for the extraordinary course taken by them profess to hold the United States Mail Steamship Company responsible for newspaper articles published in the United States, and which are alleged to have been written by the Purser of the Crescent City. It has been distinctly declared by me (though no such declnration was called for on my part) that Mr. Smith, the Purser, has no sgency in composing or publishing any such articles. I protest nganist the United States Mail Steamship Company being held responsible for the publication of any articles in the newspapers of the United States, as such matters, are wholly beyond the control of the said company as well as of the officers of the ship connected therewith.

The Press of the United States nckneowledges no direct censorship from any quarter whatsoever, and is answerable only to the laws of the tlovernment. I protest against an American citizen, and an officer of the ship, being held responsible for such publications, and being treated with personal disrespect. Such conduct is unworthy of a nation that professes to have attained the highest degree of civilisation. I protest against the non-admission of this ship into the harbor of Havana, as it is a deep injury to the United States Mail Steamship Company, who are thereby disabled from complying with their contract to the Government of the United States, and which company have nlready received most serious injuries from the hands of the Spanish Government, by having their ships driven out of the harbor of Havnna.

Respectfully submitted.

David D. Porter,
Lieut. U. S. Navy and Commanding
U. S. Mail Steamship Crescent City.

To the Authorities of Cuba.

A meeting of the passengers was held on board the steamer while she was coming up the river yesterday, and resolutions were adopted returning thanks to Capt. Porter for his attentions to their comfort throughout the passage, and cordially approving of his course at Havnna.

The following dispatch was received Wednesday evening by Mr. Jennings, in reply to a uiessage sent by him in the morning asking instructions:

National Telegraph Office,
NewYork, Oct. 0, 1852.

To James R. Jennings, Agent:

If the authorities at Havann refused to let Capt. Porter enter the port, tell him to bring the Cuba mail and freight back to NewYork, unless the Post-master at NewOrleans orders the former left in NewOrleans. If the passengers for Havana desire it, they can also return to NewYork free. Will refer the matter to the United States Government. Don't detain the Falcon. M. O. Roberts.

On the above news an indignation meeting, very large and enthusiastic was held at Bank Arcade on Thursday night. Several popular and eminent speakers addressed the meeting, and the following resolutions were passed:

Resolved, That the citizens of NewOrleans regard the recent action of the Government of Cuba, in refusing to admit the Crescent City, an American ship, bearing the American mail, and having on board a number of American citizens, into the port of Havana, for statements reported to have been made by the Purser of said ship, with/o the United States, as a high-handed act, a violation of the treaty of Amity and Commerce between Spain and the United States, an insult to our flag, and an outrage upon the rights of our citizens.

Resolved, That our Government will be expected to demand and enforce indemnity for the past, and security for the future, in regard to this and other violations of the rights of our flag and our citizens, perpetrated by the Government of Spain.

Resolved, That the conduct of Captain Porter, under the trying circumstances of the recent outrage of the Crescent City, commands our warmest admiration and respect.

Resolved, That this assembly adjourn, to meet on Monday evening next, on Lafayette square, and that a committee of five be appointed to make arrangements for the same. [Signed.]

D. L. Richards,
J. K. Rathers,
Wm. Scott Haines,
Wm. Monaghan.

The hotel keepers of Niagara, who generally close in September, resolved to prolong the season to the end of October, in consequence of the increased trade arising from the facilities afforded by the Rochester, Lockport and Niagara railroads.

A New Kind of "Pocket Pistol."—The Portland (Me.) Advertiser says that at the camp meeting at Bethel last week, it was noticed that some "New Testaments," which were hawked about near the camp-ground, sold rapidly, especially to the unconverted; and it turned out that they were "earthen vessels," in the form of books, filled with liquor! Two persons who were engaged in the business were arrested, and fined $10 and costs each.

From Texas.

By the arrival yesterday of the steamship Yacht, Capt Thompson, we have received Galveston papers to the 1st inst and our exchanges from the interior, but we find very little news of interest.

The Indiana.—The Henston Telegraph says "The hostilities of the Indians seem to have broken out afresh. Every mail from the West brings accounts of some new depredations. A band of nine or ten Indians attacked a party of three mustang, or a short time since about forty miles from Corpus Christi, and killed one of them on the spot. Another was severely wounded, but made his way into Corpus Christi and gave the above account to the Valley. The same paper says a sergeant arrived from Las Quices and reported that he found the mail rider from that place to Laredo lying in the road, about fifty miles from Corpus Christi, severely wounded with arrows."

An Extra Session.—The question of an extra session of the Legislature is still being discussed by the press, and the public generally.

Fatal Affray.—The Lavaca Commercial says "We learn, by a private letter from the neighborhood of Mrs. Kerr's, on the Lavaca river, that Robert Swain and Wm. Cohan, while engaged at a game of cards at a groggery in that neighborhood, got into a dispute, when the former stabbed the latter several times with a pocket-knife, killing him almost instantly. It is stated that Cohan had no weapons to defend himself. A coroner's inquest was held over the body of Cohan, and pronounced it willful murder.

From Santa Fe.—The St. Louis Republican has received the Santa Fe Gazette of the 31st August. It contains a few items of interest. Judge Mower, who seems to have performed his duty most acceptably to the people, was about leaving for the States, intending to return home in March or April next. Gov. Lane was expected in two or three days, and a hospitable reception was promised to him. The appointment of Mr. Grehner as Secretary of the Territory was favorably received. Mr. Grehner had returned from Fort Webster, near the Copper Mines, where he had held an interview with some of the Apaches. They professed to be for "peace." An American, by the name of Conp. an old settler, with a Mexican and his wife, were murdered in one house, and in one night, near Santa Fe. The murderers were supposed to be a Mexican and a Pueblo Indian. Two Mexicans entered the store of Major Vaughn, at Taos, on pretext of buying something, when, at an unguarded moment, they made an attack upon him, and one of them, with a knife, made a cut which severed his hat-brim, and slightly wounded him in the neck, near the jugular vein, and also in the breast. But they found the Major, we presume, rather a hard bargain, and made good their retreat. The death of Judge Hermann Von Grehman is announced. The Free Masons of the Montezuma Lodge passed appropriate resolutions.

News from the Plains.—The Independence, Mo., Messenger of the 18th ult., says:

The following items of news, we learn from Mr. Hochstadter, who arrived here Wednesday last. Mr. H. left Santa Fe on the 6th of August:

Business was very dull and money scarce; large quantities of goods in Santa Fe, and but little demand for them. The crops are better in New Mexico this season than they have been for ten years past.

Additional by the Canada.

We have the following additional details of foreign news, to the 18th September, brought by the steamer Canada:

ENGLAND.

The English papers by this arrival are filled almost exclusively with biographies of the late Duke of Wellington. He died suddenly, from an apoplectic fit, at Walmer Castle, on the 14th inst. The public are calling for a national funeral and the extension of the patent of nobility to the female heirs. Lord Melton is understood to be his literary executor. A number of valuable offices fall into the gift of the Ministry by his death. The office of Commander-in-Chief military men would rather see bestowed upon Lord Hardinge or some other soldier.

The recent high dividend of the Submarine Telegraph Company has given an impetus to telegraph enterprise Among the projects it has brought into prominence is Messrs. Harrisons' proposal to unite Europe and America via Orkney, Shetland and Faroe Islands to Iceland and Greenland. They have now obtained an exclusive right from the Danish Government to Labrador and Quebec. Stations are proposed at Kirkwall, Orkney, Lerwick, Shetland, Thorshaven, Faroe, Reik Jarrik, Iceland, Julliana's Hope, Greenland, and at one of the most eligible of the English settlements on the Labrador coast. Surveys have shown that the bed of the sea is favorable, and that the greatest length of submarine wire would not exceed 5030 miles.

A letter in the Dublin Evening Mail, from Mr. Russell, of Limerick, to the Chambers of Commerce, intimates that the Government Commission have reported in favor of "Fogus ess," as a transatlantic station

The committee appointed by Government to inquire and report on the capabilities of the mercantile steam marine for war purposes have proceeded to the Clyde to make inquiries, and will next visit Liverpool.

All steamships of war are henceforth to be built with full, instead of auxiliary steam power. The screw frigates Dauntless and Highflyer are ordered to Jamaica, there to await orders from Admiral Seymour.

Favorable replies have been received to the circular of the International Cheap Postage Association from the Ministers at London of the United States, Austria, Spain, Brazil, Sardinia and Portugal.

Sixty-nine bales of Barbadoes Cotton have just been received at London.

Mr. Pugin, the eminent architect, is dead.

FRANCE.

Louis Napoleon left Paris on Tuesday, on his promised tour South and West. The papers contain little else than accounts of his receptions, which have all the resemblance at least of being enthusiastic. Along the whole route he was received with cries of "Vive l'Empereur," with which it is stated, he appeared much pleased. When last heard of, the President was at Nevns.

During the past year the trade of France with the United States has been: Imports 110.000.000 francs, exports 145 000.000; with England, imports 60.000.000 francs, exports 2?3.000.000 francs.

A decree of the President, dated St. Cloud, September 13, orders a collection of the bntind poetry of France, under the title of "Recnlel General Des Poesier Papulairs."

The "Akabar Algerian" paper has an article, evidently put forth as a feeler, respecting the liberation of Abdel Kader, on condition that he shall reside at Mecca. The "Akabar" insinuates that it would be dangerous to liberate him at all.

ITALY.

The intrigues of Sir Henry Bulwer in Italy caused the Austrian Government some anxiety.

The garrisons of Florence and Bologna are to be reinforced.

It is announced in the Italic Espata that the Democratic Azgimium Committees of Tuscany and the Roman States have formally united.

SICILY.

Letters from Castina of the 30th ult., describe the damage done by the eruption of Etna. One stream of lava had flowed towards Zafforoni, 15 miles from the crater and another towards Milia, devastating the vineyards in both directions. Prayers had been offered in all the churches by way of averting the evil.

TURKEY.

Corrnspondents of the Daily News state that the Porte is exerting itself with much earnestness to procure a modification of the jurisdiction now exercised by foreign Consuls in Constantinople over citizens of their respective nations.

From the Indian Territory.—A correspondent of the Fort Smith (Ark.) Herald, writing from the Council Ground, Creek Nation, under date of the 8th ult., gives some interesting intelligence from the convention of delegates from the Indian tribes on the frontier, belonging to the social compact:

These delegates were invited to meet their brethren, the Creeks, at the Council Ground, on the first day of September, for the purpose of taking into consideration an infraction of the social compact, or peace treaty, by one or more of the tribes belonging to the National Fraternity. Accordingly, delegates from several of said tribes met at the time and place appointed, to take into consideration the course to be pursued in relation to the recent disturbance and unfriendly manifestations by the prairie Indians. Their deliberations came to a close on the evening of the 8th instant, and resulted in the adoption of pacific measures, which were once more to renew overtures of peace and amity to the Camanches, and other tribes who have violated the peace treaty heretofore existing between them. For which purpose, Mr. Jesse Chisholm has been instructed and requested to select a few men from the Kee-chi tribe living on our border, who are to see and confer with the Camanches, and to request them to name a time and place to meet a Creek delegation, who will then propose, and if possible, set a time and place for a general council of all the Western tribes; the object of which shall be to establish peace permanently by universal consent, or ascertain what tribes are determined to remain outsiders.

Speeches were made by Tuck-a-batch-e-micco, Governor of the Canadian District of the Creek Nation, who opened the Council in a dignified manner, and by Mr. Wm. King, the delegate from the Seneeas, detailing the evils which war and discord would bring upon them.

Several other speeches of like import; abounding, doubtless with graphic "arope and metaphor," were delivered, but were lost to effect by the succession of interpreters through which they must pass to reach our comprehension, degenerating into something like the following:

"Mayhy-so. Ingin light heap mity-bad. Maby-so, him by white man-mud; kill it lugun all—take it land; eat it—buffalo; all."

The Shawnee Indians.—The Shawnee Indians, who have been in Washington since last winter, have concluded their business with the Indian Bureau, and have received $33,630, to be distributed among their people at home.

Another Earthquake.—Private letters from St. Jago, received via Havana, state that another earthquake occurred at that place on the 20th ult. The inhabitants were so terrified that they built tamporary huts on the beach.

France—Louis Napoleon's Policy.—In replying to an address at Lyons, Louis Napoleon said that the cry of "Vive l'Empereur" affected his heart more than his pride. His only object was the good of his country and the establishment of order and prosperity—in effecting which he was the servant of the people. Whether this object could be best attained under the title of President or Emperor, he could not say. If under the former, he did not wish any change.

The man proved to be an old convict from the United States, having been convicted of robbery while residing in Philadelphia some time ago. He is also known to have lived in Baltimore, where he also appeared about the time of the great robbery of the Bank of Portsmouth. He is supposed to have been concerned in that robbery, and the medal found with him is believed to be the celebrated Clay medal which was stolen in NewYork.

The Shoe and Leather Trade.—The Philadelphia North American having taken issue with the Boston Shipping List, with regard to the great trade and immense manufacture of boots and shoes, as connected with the Commonwealth, the latter replies in the following correct and sensible remarks:

"In every town and city in Massachusetts the manufacture of boots and shoes is carried on to a considerable extent. The statistics of our population show that one-twelfth of them are engaged in this business. It is emphatically the leading branch of our industry, the value of the goods manufactured exceeding by several millions the value of the cotton goods manufactured, or the product of our whole fisheries. We will not, like the North American, count our workmen by hundreds, but by thousands, the number now employed in the business being upwards of 75,000 males and females, and the yearly raine of the goods about $25,000,000. It must also be considered that our manufactures are not limit their operations to this State. They find employment for thousands of workmen in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont. We are aware of one manufacturer who alone employs about 300 persons in the State of Maine. The stock is cut up and forwarded to the workmen in these States, and comes back to us in the shape of boots, shoes and brogans; so that Boston is not only the centre of this trade in Massachusetts, but also draws largely upon the labor of neighboring States, to keep up a sufficient supply to meet the wants of her extensive market. These goods are sent in all directions, North, South, East and West, including several hundred cases, to sell, second hand, to her Southern and Western trade."

Engaging Manners.—There a thousand pretty, engaging little ways, which every person may put on without the risk of being deemed either affected or foppish. The sweet smile, the quiet, cordial bow, the earnest movement in addressing a friend, or more especially a stranger whom one may recommend to our good regards, the inspiring glance, the graceful attentions, which are captivating when united with self-possession—these will ensure us the good graces of even a churl. Above all, there is a certain softness of manner which should be cultivated, and which, in either man or woman, adds a charm that almost entirely compensates for lack of beauty. The voice may be modulated, so to intonate that it will speak directly to the heart, and from that elicit an answer; and politeness may be made an essential to our nature.

The Austrian Navy.—Instead of from 1500 to 1600 workmen being employed, as formerly, in the arsenal at Venice, there are at present upwards of 2400, who are engaged either in building new ships or rendering old ones fit for war service. Towards the end of the harvest, a new frigate of fifty guns is to be removed from the stocks. The finishing stroke is just being given to the new steamer Dustoza, of 200 horse power, and the steamer Ikontze, of 40 horse power, which is destined for navigation in shallow water, is now ready to have the engine put in. The frigate Venus, the corvettes Adria and Gretsen, and the brig Polo, are being repaired, and the preparations are making for building a new schooner. The purchase of timber, hemp and iron goss hand in hand with these works, and arrangements have been made with English shipbuilders for the building of two propeller frigates of 40 guns each. On account of the shallowness of the canals, the ships of the line will not be built at Venice, but at Pola. [London Times, Sept. 6.

"In the investigation of some claims of Americans to estates in England, lately, I have become advised of one which has an income of about thirty thousand dollars per annum, with a title of nobility attached to it. The descendants of George Browne, a lieutenant in the British army, who emigrated to this country about the year 1640, and settled at Haverhill, Mass., I am quite certain are the heirs."

Further information may be obtained by addressing Mr. Bryant, at the National Hotel, Washington. If our name was only "Mr. Browne," we certainly should not "give it up so," without looking after this smart chance of a fortune.

Destructive Fire.—A dispatch from Paris, Ky., dated the 29th ult., says: A very destructive fire occurred last night at Cynthiana, about 14 miles from this place. The town was set on fire by incendiaries, causing great consternation here among a number of the residents of the place present at the fair, who immediately started for home. The flames destroyed eight dwellings and stores two livery stables and a number of horses.

What the East Indies cost the British Government.—"Merrie England" is not altogether exempt from these difficulties ever consequent upon a struggle for the "loaves and fishes," and the spoils of office. The Select Committee on Indian Affairs, it is highly probable, will be renewed at the next session of the House of Commons; and the whig journals are exceedingly fearful that the civil patronage of India will be made over for twenty years to the Tories. This same civil list is a very alarming thing for those who are so fortunate as to be upon it. The pension list is open to all alike, after the prescribed time of service, from the small tax collector with his £300 a year up to an Indian counselor, growing hideous on £10,000

Such "spoils" as these are worth having, but the contrast between these enormous salaries paid to the English officers and those paid to the English subordinates is very great. There are 100,000,000 Indians, and in all India only about 40,000 Englishmen. There are three classes of native Judges who receive salaries amounting to £822, £366, and £134 per year. The first draws just one-tenth of the salary of an English Supreme Judge, the second one-twelfth of the salary of an English Provincial Judge, and this third less than one twentieth of what is paid to a subordinate Collector of Land Tax.

The inordinate salaries of the English officers in India were fixed at the time it was thought to be rich in mineral wealth, but it has proved poor enough, since the wages of the laboring classes are only 3d a day, and 100,000,000 of people only contribute £35,000,000 or about one half of what a quarter of the number of people contribute in Great Britain. The salaries of the Governor General and Judges were fixed eighty years ago, and some high subordinate officers sixty years since, when a voyage to India occupied six months, and was very expensive. It can now be made easily and agreeably in thirty days, and one may live in Calcutta almost as cheap as he can in London, and enjoy the same luxuries that the great metropolis affords.

An East India Director, with this enormous patronage to bestow, is certainly a man to doff one's hat to. And whose smile and favor is not to be despised. But all this goes to show that much of these possessions upon some of which the sunrise flag is being hoisted every hour out of the twenty-four, costs more than it comes to, and that it may be all very well to boast of, but it is an exceedingly expensive luxury to keep.

A Whale with the Tooth-Ache—Extract from a Whaleman's Journal.—Among the ailments to which sperm whales are subject, is the jumping tooth-ache. It operates on their nervous system as it does upon those of many kind, rendering them crabbed and fractious. Just at day break one morning, while we were drifting on the "off-shore" ground—a violent commotion in the water about a-head, resembling breakers, attracted attention. It continued unabated till within fifty rods of it, when a sperm whale (for such it proved to be) threw his entire body into the air and fell back into his native element with a tremendous report. Of course the yards were manned quick, and the boats lowered, but several minutes elapsed before it was deemed prudent to approach the monster. Finding, however, that he had no idea of becoming quiet, we advanced with caution, and succeeded in securing one iron firmly in his back, which rendered him more restless. Giving him plenty of slack line, we removed to a respectful distance, hoping he would sound or retreat, but he was not disposed to do either. So taking our oars we pulled sufficiently near to give the boat-header an opportunity to lance him. He seemed to be aware of our intention, for he turned and rushed towards us with the design of giving us a boxing, which we narrowly escaped. During the next half hour he chased us, and it was with much difficulty that we avoided him. When near us, he turned on his back and raised his jaw, bringing to view two handsome rows of ivory. Among terrible objects an enraged whale holds a prominent place.

An hour passed in unavailing attempts to accomplish the direct object, the whale becoming more furious, and the hope of capturing him growing fainter. At length, while the attention of the monster was directed to him, the mate came upon him in an opposite direction and dealt him a death wound, relieving us of a burden of anxiety, which indicated itself in the pallid countenances and nervous agitation of the boat's crew. He was very unwilling to yield, and the death struggle was long and violent. If a cat has nine lives, as is sometimes remarked, that fellow had nineteen.

Before night his blubber was in the try-pots, and his jaw was stripped of its covering. On extracting the teeth, the cause of his singular movement was revealed. The cavities it covered contained a large number of worms, an inch of inch in length. The teeth were perfectly sound, but the nerve or nerves of the tooth, which is about a inch in diameter at the lower extremity, was in many of them entirely consumed by the insects that seemed to have bred there. [Hallowell Gazette.

Another Ship Canal Project.—We have already mentioned this project, and we take from the NewYork Times the following additional particulars:

It is stated that some wealthy British capitalists have in hand an important project for the construction of a ship canal across the Isthmus of Darien, effecting a water communication between San Miguel on the Pacific, and the nearest point on the Atlantic shore, a distance of about fifty miles; of which only thirty would require to be cut, the remaining twenty being navigable by a small river which empties into the Gulf of Darien. From en article in the Post we learn that it is proposed to make the canal thirty feet deep, and to construct it without locks, which the formation of the country and the peculiar tidal currents of the two opposite waters seem to make not only practicable but preferable.

It has been ascertained that the waters in the Caribbean Sea rise and fall 24 inches, while that of the Pacific rises and falls 21 feet. This curious ordination of nature, would give to the waters of a canal communicating between the two seas, a tide each way once a day, with twelve feet head—a sufficient motive force to deliver vessels from one side to the other in a single tide without any other propulsion, thus rendering the towpath and locomotive power of all kinds, superfluous, whether for sail vessels or steamboats.

The deepest cut to be made in the whole distance is only one hundred and twenty-five feet, and the cost is estimated at £7,000,000. The prominent parties to the project in London are Messrs. Fox & Henderson, the architects of the Crystal Palace. They have procured a survey to be made by Mr. Gisborne, an eminent English engineer, from whose report we gather most of the following particulars. Abbott Lawrence, our late Minister to England, also is understood to have an interest in the enterprise. From the character of the parties, and the encouraging tenor of Mr. Gisborne's report, there is reason to hope that a ship canal is destined finally to be opened between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans in New Granada.

From the Fishing Grounds.—We learn from the Gloucester Telegraph, that Mr. Addison Merchant, of the firm of A. Merchant & Co. of that town, returned home on Saturday from Prince Edward Island, where he has been to attend to the schooner Florida, which was seized and carried into Charlottetown. The vessel was condemned, and ordered to be sold at auction Mr. Merchant was put to a good deal of trouble in recovering his property. Instead of selling the vessel as she came into port, she was stripped, and almost every article was sold separately The vessel was knocked off at about $1000, and the other articles brought $500 more. These, with the expenses attending, make the whole amount which it has cost the owners to obtain her release, about $1700. The Telegraph says: There have been several arrivals from the Bay since Saturday morning, all of them with meagre fare. Watters from them that the mackerel are scarce, and most of the fleet lay within three miles of the shore. The prospect now is that the American vessels will obtain poor fares this Fall.

We learn that Captain Domings, of the schooner Leonard McKenzie, of this port, when passing through the Gut, bound in, hauled down his jib for the purpose of waiting for a vessel which was in company with him to come up. While laying to, he was boarded by an officer from the cutter Daring, who told Captain D. that he should seize him.

Capt. Domings said, in reply, that his vessel was not to be taken, as he was not violating the treaty, and if the officer attempted to do so he should resist to the last. After some words had passed between them, the officer got into his boat and went off, telling the crew of another vessel near by that he was going after more force. Captain Domings, however, had received no further trouble when the William Nelson left.

We also learn that the lieutenant who was in command of the Telegraph the first of the season, has been removed and another put in his place, who does not disguise his views, but hoops his flag flying all the time.

The Antiquities of America.—The NewYork Dutchman has been informed by Dr. Salsbury, geologist to the State, that within the last three weeks, a surveying party in Ness county, N. Y., have stumbled upon the remains of a city, which must once have contained 15,000 or 20,000 inhabitants. It is located in the forest, a few miles back of Tippecanoe, and was evidently the home of a people considerably advanced in the arts and comforts of civilization. In proof of this, he mentions that the ruins of more than ten hundred chimneys are yet in a state of good preservation. As no such city has ever been mentioned by our historians and gazetteers, a question arises about its original builders, which will keep the Historical Society in first class wrangling materials for the next fifty years. The idea that such a city should have existed within four hours' ride of Albany for centuries, and yet never discovered till July, 1852, is one of those singular facts which excite astonishment.

Bill Dixing in Lake Erie.—It will be remembered that Mr. Mallefert, so distinguished in sub-marine cuginery, has undertaken to raise the Express Company's safe in the steamer Atlantic, sunk upwards of one hundred and fifty feet below the surface at the bottom of Lake Erie. The first attempt was unsuccessful, from some fault in the diving apparatus. The second attempt was made and the vessel was reached, but from other circumstances nothing was accomplished towards commencing operations on the wreck. The Buffalo Commercial has been furnished with the following account of this essay. This is, the deepest dive on record, and will be read with interest:

Notwithstanding the somewhat unfavorable condition of the weather and the roughness of the water, it was determined to make an attempt to reach the wreck on Saturday morning, 18th September, in order to test the capacity of the new boss.

Mr. Green, therefore, arrayed himself in the marine armor, and started on a second trip to the bottom of Lake Erie. He descended without any difficulty, and landed directly in the interior of the steamer's smoke pipe, the top and sides of which he felt with his feet and hands. He was then elevated again some little distance and alighted the second time on the braces, following down until he got on to the cross braces. He did not, however, succeed in making a firm footing on deck, owing to the nasteadiness of the small steamer used on the occasion, which communicated too much motion to the hose and ropes.

There was much risk of the intrepid diver getting entangled in the ropes and wood work so as to be unable to extricate himself, or to tear the dress, and being again elevated he descended a third time alongside and clear of the wreck. He now went down fourteen feet below the upper deck and even with the guards. His head being one hundred and thirty-nine feet, and his feet one hundred and forty-four feet below the surface of Lake Erie. This is the deepest dive ever made, one hundred and seventy-six feet being the greatest depth ever before reached. The new hose was found to be perfectly successful—the diver felt quite at ease, and went down and up without the slightest injury to dress, pipes, or hose.

The marine armor consists of a perfectly air-tight India rubber dress, topped by a copper helmet, with a clear, thick plate of glass in front. The pipe which supply and exhaust the air, lead from the top of this helmet. The pumping requires much labor; four and some times six men being employed upon it at the same time, and compelled to work hard at that. A great pressure of air is experienced by the diver upon his lungs, equal to 75 lbs. to the inch, and a very few individuals could bear it for any length of time.

When first going into the dress, the sensation of oppression is very overcoming, but passes away in a great measure after entering the water. When a depth of ten feet is reached in the descent, the dress becomes entirely emptied of air and collapsed to the body, causing a pressure all over the diver equal to the heft of a ten pound weight, excepting as to the head, which is protected by the proper helmet. The difficulty in breathing now becomes great, a painful sensation is experienced by the diver, the jaws become distended, and the head seemingly splitting. This continues until after descending another ten or twelve feet, then the pain is relieved, the diver feels comfortable, and experiences no further inconvenience.

When about sixty feet below the surface, hundreds of the legitimate inhabitants of the water surround the diver, nibbling at their strange visitor as though he was "food for the fishes." After reaching seventy-five feet, all is perfectly dark—a black, impenetrable darkness—and an electric flame plays around the inside of the helmet, caused by the friction of the pump. At about one hundred and sixty feet the water is very cold, being in the present season within four or five degrees of freezing.

Mr. Mallefert has returned in order to obtain a larger steamer, and to wait for settled and calm weather before making another attempt. He has not the slightest doubt that the next effort will be crowned with success. Mr. Green the diver, has proved himself capable of doing the work effectually, and must rank as one of the first and most useful "under-water" men in the country. Two most excellent divers besides Mr. Green are in company with Mr. Mallefort. We shall look with much interest for the result of the next trial, but that it will be successful we have no doubt.

Telegraph Between England and America.—The The London correspondent of the National Intelligencer gives the following description of the new project for a submarine telegraph between Great Britain and America. The writer considers this new plan by far the most feasible yet proposed.

We stated, a few weeks ago, that a project had been formed for constructing a submarine telegraph between Great Britain and the United States, by a route not before thought of, which would very naturally shorten the line of water transit. While the transmission of intelligence much less liable to interruption, and most materially diminish the cost of construction and working, we have now the map of the proposed submarine lines before us. They commence at the most northwardly point of Scotland, run thence to the Orkney Islands, and thence by short water lines, to the Shetland and the Ferroe Islands. From the latter water line of 200 to 300 miles nonducts the telegraph to Iceland; from the western coast of Iceland another submarine line conveys it to Kioge Bay, on the eastern coast of Greenland; it then crosses Greenland to Jullane's Hope, on the western coast of that continent, in latitude 60 deg 42 min; and is conducted without interruption by a water line of about 500 miles, across Davie's Straits to Byron Bay, on the coast of Labrador. From this point the line is to be conducted to Quebec.

The entire length of the line is approximately estimated at 2500 miles, and the submarine portions of it at from 14,000 to 70,000 miles. The peculiar advantages of the line being divided into several submarine portions, is, that if a fracture should at any time occur, the defective part could be very readily discovered and repaired promptly, and at a comparatively trifling expense. From the Shetland Islands it is proposed to carry a branch to Bergen in Norway, connecting it there with a line to Christiana, Stockholm, Gottenburg and Copenhagen; from Stockholm a line may easily cross the Gulf of Bothnia to St. Petersburg. The whole expense of this great international work is estimated considerably below £2500,000, but to cover contingencies, it is proposed to raise that sum by 25,000 shares of £20 each." We confess that we consider this plan as by far the most feasible one which has been yet produced for connecting Europe and America by the electric telegraph.

A Singular Case of Suffering from an Accident.—Miss Ann M. Clark, who brought suit to recover $20,000 damages from the city of Boston, for injuries sustained in falling into a cellar, at the time of the great railroad jubilee in that city, obtained a verdict for $8,500, on the 25th ult. The Traveler says that the testimony of the Massachusetts General Hospital physician, where Miss Clark has remained for nearly the whole time since the accident, discloses the following singular result:

Miss Clark is about 19 years of age; previous to the accident she was employed as a worsted worker at Malden, and enjoyed good health. On the last evening of the railroad jubilee, she proceeded with some friends to witness the fire-works in Bowdoin Square. On their return home they passed through Charden and Hawkins street, where she fell through a cellar-way, which had been accidentally left open after the grade of the street and sidewalk had been altered. As she was taken out she complained of a feeling as if she had been struck in the stomach. The next day she proceeded to her work at Malden, was there seized with vomiting, and violent pains in the stomach; she returned to Boston, was conveyed to the Massachusetts General Hospital, where she has remained ever since. The physicians say that in her fall she received an injury to her spine, and the result is, that she cannot keep upon her stomach but a very small quantity of food, an amount barely sufficient to sustain life, but not enough to stay the cravings of appetite. Her chief ailment is molasses and water, and if any amount above two ounces is given to her, her stomach soon rejects it. Various expedients have been devised by the physicians to administer nourishment. Among others, blisters have been applied and then cod liver oil rubbed on the scarified surface, and thus absorbed into the system. The unfortunate young woman is little better than a skeleton, and her sufferings are, no doubt, very severe. The physicians state that there is recorded in the books but one similar case.

Billy Bowlegs at the Mayor's Office in NewYork.—On Saturday morning the 25th ult., previous to his departure from NewYork for Savannah, Billy Bowlegs visited the City Hall, and was introduced to the Mayor, and, in reply to a question from Mr. Kingsland, he said, with such an air of satisfaction, "I whipped old Taylor," that every body laughed.

Mayor—If you could only whip old Pierce for us now in the same way. (Great laughter.)

Billy (correcting the Mayor)—I don't want to whip Pierce—General Scott you mean. I whipped him before. (Renewed laughter.)

Billy seemed quite delighted with the pictures, and on being brought opposite to that of the late Gen. Taylor, he gazed at it silently, and on being asked if he knew the old fellow, said, "Yes. I knew the old fellow very well. I licked him, too?" (Roars of laughter.) Billy made this observation with evident satisfaction, and accompanied it with a hearty laugh, and immediately after, he proceeded to give an account of the battle, but the English language failed him in expressing his ideas. He was then brought to see the likeness of Gen. Scott, at the other end of the room, and on being asked if he knew him, he replied, "Yes. I ought to know him. I licked him." (Laughter.) He was next shown the fine portrait of Washington, and was told that he was "the big father." He fixed his eyes upon it for some moments, and appeared hurled in a profound reverey. In them asked how many years was it since he went to the Great Spirit, and how many Presidents had succeeded Washington.

Billy, in taking leave of his NewYork friends at the wharf, showed a good deal of feeling; and said, in shaking hands with some, "Bless you! thank you; thank you!" The steamer left the wharf amid loud cheers for Billy Bowlegs. It is said that he has two wives and four children.

The Congressional Library.—The library room in the Capitol, which was destroyed by fire during the last session of Congress, together with a large portion of its valuable contents, is, as we learn from the Baltimore Clipper, now being constructed in New York, both floor and roof, galleries and book-shelves, all of cast and wrought iron. Forty enormous brackets of iron, weighing nearly three quarters of a ton each, will support the roof of the apartment about forty feet above the floor. The design is of great beauty and richness, and presents much variety of form, scrolls, mouldings, rich and fine foliage, flowers and fruits.

Singular Discovery.—It is stated in one of our English papers, that the work of draining the Lake of Haarlem has led to the discovery of an immense mass of human remains, deeply imbedded in the mud, and placed precisely over the spot where, according to a topographic chart laid down in 1511, and which has always been considered as perfectly accurate, the unfortunate village of Nieuwerkirk was situated, and which in 1530, was swallowed up by one of those eruptions of the North Sea which formed the immense Lake of Haarlem.

"Revolutionary Soldiers."—We saw the other day, in a Canadian paper, a pretty fair hit at Yankeedom. It had reference to our Revolutionary chronology; the tendency with us to make our "Soldiers of the Revolution" hold too long. The Canadian editor despaired of ever hearing of the last of them.

Boys were, to be sure, physically men, in those days, earlier than now; but they could not have been very efficient soldiers before they had arrived at the full age of sixteen. The man who was of that age, at the period of the battle of Lexington, must now, if alive, be 98 years old. The man who was of that age, the year of the declaration of Independence, if now alive, must be 91 years old. The man who served during the last year of the war, if 15 years of age then, must now be 87 years old. The man who served the last year of the war, if 21 years old then, must now, if alive, be 91 years old. A man who was born before the close of the war, must now be 70 years old.

The Supposed Galvanic Explosion in Steam-Boilers.—A Remedy Suggested.—Lieut. Wm. D. Porter, of the United States Navy, publishes in the Sillimanian Intelligencer a communication on the causes of the explosion of steam boilers, which he attributes to hydrogen gas. Formed by the decomposition of the water. When the water is low, and the tubes or flues are exposed above the water line and acquire a red heat, the vapor of water (steam) is decomposed, and hydrogen is rapidly formed. Of all gases this is the lightest and most explosive. Its effects are more terrific than that of gunpowder of the strongest detonating compounds. It is only necessary to combine with it about one-third of oxygen gas to make it explosive:

The question now arises, how can the decomposition of water in steam boilers be prevented, the formation of hydrogen gas stopped, and a remedy invented by which boilers will not burst? Nearly all boilers explode on opening the safety valve; the steam rushes out in a conical form, the base of the cone uppermost; this leaves a space in the centre of the cone through which the circumambient atmosphere rushes, supplying, of course, oxygen. If, then, the water is low, and the vapor decomposed, and hydrogen gas is formed, the supply of oxygen causes an instantaneous explosion. The method, then, to prevent the oxydation of the tubes or flues is to plate them with silver.

Every engineer is well aware that when the steam from the upper cock has a blue appearance there is danger; but every one does not know that this blue appearance is caused by hydrogen gas; in fact it is hydrogen gas, and in a state of inflammability. The flame of this gas is light blue, and only burns when in contact or supplied with oxygen. As it is the lightest of all gases, and rises to the upper part of the steam-jacket, a pipe could be introduced into the upper part of the steam-jacket, and conducted to the fire or engine-room, where the firemen or engineer could occasionally try the cock, and ascertain the formation of hydrogen by the color of the steam or jet. Should the jet appear of a blue cast, by having this pipe continued outboard and under the water line, the gas could be allowed to escape through this tube, and steam would then take its place in the boiler. With this safety-pipe well attended, and the upper tubes plated, but few explosions could possibly take place.

As we say in claims for patents, I do not claim having discovered the method herein mentioned in making hydrogen gas, but only the safety-tube and the plated flues and tubes.

The engineer should never open his safety-valve until he has tried the upper cock in the boiler. Should the steam appear blue and indicate hydrogen, then he should certainly keep his safety-valve shut, and work off the gas through his cylinder. This will, if strictly attended to, save not only his own life, but that of many others.

Quite a scene was exhibited on Tuesday at the Smithsonian Institution, not the less interesting because unanticipated. Expectation had not been exhausted upon it. It was the introduction of the Seminole Indians to the beautiful collection of pictures in the Western Gallery. They are chiefly portraits of the various Indian chiefs who have attained celebrity among their tribes—have been been valiant in war or wise and skilful in peace and its negotiations. It is indeed a brilliant collection, conveniently disposed, and happily framed. Of all games this is the highest and most explosive. Its effects are more terrific than that of gunpowder of the strongest detonating compounds. It is only necessary to combine with it about one-third of oxygen gas to make it explosive:

The NewYork Post gives the following account of this queer "customer:"

Nield was a barrister at law, and died in Chelsea, aged 72 years. He was possessed of an immense fortune, but was of very eccentric and penurious habits. At the death of his father, thirty years since, he came into possession of about £250,000, which sum had not been touched up to the period of his death The deceased was never known to wear a great coat. He usually dressed in a blue coat, with metal buttons, which he prohibited being brushed, as it would take off the nap and deteriorate its value. He held considerable landed property in Kent and in Bucks, and was always happy to receive an invitation from his tenantry to visit them, which he occasionally did, often remaining a month at a time, as he was thus enabled to add to his savings. His appearance and manners led strangers to imagine that he was in the lowest verge of penury, and their compassion was excited in his behalf, an instance of which may be mentioned

At the funeral of Mr. Nield, the solitary system of travelling, the deceased had been on a visit to some of his estates, and was returning to London, when the coach stopped at Farningham. With the exception of our miser, the passengers all retired to the inn. Missing their coach companion, and recollecting his decayed appearance, they conceived he was in distressed circumstances, and accordingly a sum was subscribed, and a humping glass of brandy and water kindly sent to the "poor" gentleman, which he thankfully accepted. Many instances of a similar character might be related. A few days before his death the deceased told one of his executors that he had made a most singular will, but as the property was in the power he had done as he pleased with it. The executors are the Keeper of the Privy Purse for the time being, Dr. Tattan, and Mr. J. Stevens, of Willesborough

After bequeathing a very few trifling legacies, the deceased has left the whole of his immense fortune to "Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, begging her Majesty's most gracious acceptance of the same, for her sole use and benefit, and of her heirs, etc." The property is estimated at upwards of £500,000. For some years before his death, Mr. Nield scarcely allowed himself the common necessaries and comforts of life, and has left a poor old housekeeper, who was with him for more than twenty-six years, without the smallest provision or acknowledgment for her protracted and far from agreeable or remunerative service.

A Costly Rescue.—A Paris letter describes a gallant exploit for the rescue of an article, which, we think, might have been named para agua. Instead of para sol:

"The papers are making merry over an adventure that occurred at Dieppe a few days ago. Just when the promenade on the terrace was at its fullest, a little gem of a parasol belonging to the beautiful Countess de W. was garfied off by the wind, and went gambolling away over the surface of the water. The Countess uttered a cry of despair at seeing her pet parasol escape her, as the ivory shaft of this precious parasol was so exquisitely carved that it was considered as a veritable chef d'œuvre. Amidst a chorus of laughter, lamentations, and interjections, a young dandy sprang over the terrace, and a scam out to the rescue of the parasol; and the smiles and thanks of the Countess were so expressive that two others of her adorers at once sprang after him. All three were good swimmers, but the wind was blowing stiffy from the shore, and whenever the swimmers thought they had the prize, the provoking parasol would dart away again out of their reach.

"The three swimmers wore broad-brimmed straw hats, bound, trimmed and fastened under the chin with colored ribbon, common at watering places, and betting went on briskly among the spectators, some declaring for the hat with the black ribbon, others for the yellow, and others again for the green. At length the black hat, by a stroke of good luck, caught the runaway, and tying it to the ribbon of his hat, swam back to the shore, where the whole society of Dieppe was assembled, and kneeling, all dripping, before the Countess, he restored to her the last treasure, amid the acclamations of the company. But the thing was not fated to end so easily The yellow hat had scarcely regained the shore when he fainted away, and had to be carried back to his hotel, where he is now extremely ill, having plunged into the water without remembering that he had just eaten a hearty lunch, and that a cold bath is a very dangerous accompaniment to digestion. As to the green ribbon, he, poor fellow, discovered that the action of swimming had loosened the clasp of his watch-chain, which, with a superb gold watch, and a dozen louis-d'ors in his breast pocket, had all gone to the bottom. Judge of the value which the pretty little parasol will now have in the bright eyes of its beautiful owner!"

Rotary Steam-Plough.—This is the name of a new plough just introduced among the agriculturists of Scotland. It is got up on a new plan. The ploughs, or rather the iron horns, which act as ploughs, revolve on a shaft like a water wheel. It cuts a furrow three feet of earth at once, and so scatters and pulverizes it so as to make it look like the work of a spade. It moves at a good pace, being no less a velocity than twenty-five hundred yards per hour, ploughing about six acres in one day. The price of it is £300 or $1455. It requires an engineer and two laborers to attend it. Altogether this plough is a very useful, and a decided improvement on all former steam ploughs. It will never be introduced into America, for the reason that it is too large and expensive. But while it will not become domesticated with us, it will be a production of much good. It will show our farmers what is doing in other parts of the world to make steam-power subservient to man in tilling the earth. It will, no doubt, also afford many good hints to some of our inventors, for steam power will yet be employed more extensively for agricultural purposes than it is at present, especially in the West and South-west regions. This plough, when not tilling, can be thrown out of gear with the engine, which can then be made by pully and belt to drive a thrashing machine and many other machines. [Scientific American.

The Thames River.—The London Times gives a far from agreeable description of the purity of the stream which runs by that great metropolis. It says that "within the metropolitan limits, and even beyond it, is nothing but a reeking compound of all the filth and abomination which a population of two millions of people can cast forth. All the corruption that the sewers, gas-works, shambles and shaudleries of London can contribute is poured into the Thames in a highly concentrated state. There it is decomposed by the action of the tide, and rolled backward under the noses of the Londoners. For six hours and upwards this seething broth is slowly rolled towards a sea it can never reach; for a similar period, or a little less, it is vomited back upon the persons who dwell on either bank of the Thames within the limits named."

A New Locomotive.—Mr. William O. Arnell, of Iowa has made certain improvements in the locomotive, by which it is adapted to running on plank or macadamized roads. As far as the Washington National Intelligencer can judge from an examination of his plan, its chief novelty appears to consist in the arrangement of the driving wheels, and in connection therewith a rotating platform, which receives its motion from the driving wheels, and operates in such manner as, to a considerable extent, to increase the speed of the locomotive, by increasing the tractile power of its driving wheels, and also to operate as to prevent them from cutting or otherwise injuring the road. The locomotive is form resembles those in common use, having a steam-boiler, cylinders, and other necessary appendages. It has a steering apparatus of novel construction, by which the pilot can, by the turning of a whollar, give any desired direction to the locomotive in the shortest possible time. The design of this locomotive is to draw any suitable number of conveniently constructed vehicles, and to connect with a railroad to receive passengers or freight and convey them to distant towns or villages, where it is not only impracticable to construct a railroad, but where travelling and business are not sufficient to support such. This improvement seems admirably fitted for the Western portions of this country, and especially the immense prairies which are now being laid with plank roads. It would seem also to be adaptable to agricultural purposes, by simply connecting therewith a line of plows; or for driving machinery for various purposes; by supporting the locomotive upon a pair of wheels situated on either side of the driving wheels, and using one or both of the latter to communicate the power of the engine, through a band or otherwise, to the machine to be driven.

Fortune Telling Developments.—The trial of a singular case was commenced in the Court of Quarter Sessions in Philadelphia, on the 24th ult., and was continued throughout Saturday. The North American says the details prove the existence of as much ignorance as was exhibited in the days of Salem witchcraft. The defendants were Mary Clinton and Susan Spearing, who were charged with conspiring to cheat and defraud George F. Elliott, a tavern keeper, by means of fortune telling and conjurations, which so influenced the mind of the prosecutor's wife, that they thereby extorted money indirectly from Mr. Elliott. The conjurations practiced as alleged by the Commonwealth, were, giving Mrs. Elliott a bottle containing some portions of Mr. Elliott's clothing, and telling her that as the clothing decayed, so Mr. Elliott would moulder away, until he would finally die by virtue of the spell—that one of the defendants first poisoned the wife's mind, by telling her that Mr. E. was paying attentions to other females. This story had so strong an effect upon her as to make her wish for his death. Another ordeal of witchcraft was for Mrs. Elliott to take her husband's clothes, tear them to pieces, and fill the bottle with them, then to boil the contents nine times, and this would give him such extreme pain as to cause his death. This advice was paid for by Mrs. Elliott. Some of the disclosures brought out on this trial were of the most ridiculous character. The case was given to the jury late on Saturday. Up to the time of the adjournment of the court, they had not agreed upon a verdict.

Origin of the Sack or Paletot.—Count d'Orsay, who, while he resided in London, was as much the leader of fashion as Beau Nash in his day, or Brummell in his, and whose fiat in dress was potential, is not generally known as the inventor of that fashionable article of dress, the sack or paletot, under the following amusing circumstances, though neither is the name of the garment in question. Count d'Orsay called it Chesterfield, in honor of his friend, the present Earl of Chesterfield, the great racing nobleman, who owns the finest stud in England. "Count d'Orsay was returning from a steple chase, when being surprised by a heavy rain, he ordered his coachman, who always carried his coat strapped on the saddle, that it might be ready to protect the Count in the event of an accident like the present—he ordered his out-rider to bring him his cloak. The servant stammered out some excuse about having forgotten it. No house was near; the ordinary overcoat worn by the Count was getting quite wet; suddenly a turn in the road discovered to the impatient rider a low drinking shop, and a sailor, covered with a sort of large and long roundabout, which covered him nicely from his throat to below his thighs.

"I say, there, my good friend," said the Count to him, "what, say ye to a seat by yon coaster, and a cheece at drinking my health until it clears up?"

"I should like nothing better."

"Good! Then, off with your roundabout and sell it to me. You won't want it while ye're drinking, and after the rain is over you can buy another."

"Oh, I am agreed."

Thereupon the sailor took off his coat, Count d'Orsay gave him ten guineas, put on the thick roundabout over his coat, and entered London in this costume. The rain had ceased; the sun looked as bright as it can look in the loaden sky of England; it was the time of day when everybody went to the Park; Count d'Orsay rode down the fashionable avenue, lined with exquisites and belles, his sailor's jacket still over his coat. It took at once, and before a week every body in London was decked.

Canadian Ministerial Appointment.—The "Toronto Colonist" has a special dispatch from Montreal, which states that on Thursday evening, the 23d ult., the Hon. Jean Chabot was sworn Chief Commissioner of Public Works, in the place of the Hon. John Young, resigned. Mr. Chabot previously held the same office.

Brazil.—We make the following extract from the Rio Janeiro correspondence of the NewYork Herald: "The Brazilines are very fond of foreigners, more particularly Americans, and numerous high families have sent their sons to the United States to be educated. They have a seeming repugnance to their ancestors, and would rapidly resent any insinuation to them that they were of Portuguese origin. The ladies, when they arrive at the age of twenty, etc., grow extremely corpulent and voluptuous, yet I cannot say handsome. This climate soon removes the rosy tint which we see on our fair females at home. Before they arrive at the age of maturity they are exceedingly puny, and you would almost imagine them in a decline with some lingering consumption. The climate has a remarkable effect in rapidly developing the female form; and you frequently meet with a young lady perfectly matured at the age of eleven years, resembling, in a great measure, the precocious development of the female in the mild climes of Italy.

Canadian Affairs—Difficulty in the Cabinet.—The Commissioner of the Board of Public Works has resigned because the Government has resolved to put on American vessels passing the Welland Canal, only the same tolls as paid by British vessels passing both the Welland and St. Lawrence Canals, and to restore defeautful duties against direct American trade, by placing higher duties on goods coming that way than on those coming by the St. Lawrence

Mr. Hincks, on behalf of the remaining members of the Cabinet, explained the object to be to induce the United States to grant reciprocity.

The Government have issued notices calling for plans and estimates for a vice-regal residence at Toronto, on the site of the old Government House. The square upon which the new residence will be erected exceeds five acres, and is handsomely planted with trees—some of them by the hand of a former Governor, Sir Peregrine Maitland. This indicates the settled purposes of the Government to redeem its pledge to Upper Canada to return to Toronto in four years.

A Venerable Law Suit.—The London Observer reports the settlement of a law suit, which was begun in the English Court of Chancery more than a hundred years ago "The original plaintiff was Thomas Beckford, executor of one James Pope, a merchant, and defendant Edward Jasper, also a merchant, was the original defendant. Jasper died, Pope £10,000, and Pope died in 1743, and in 1748 Beckford, his executor, filed this bill against Jasper, who died before he could put in his answer. The suit was revived against Jasper's executors, and in 1753 the case was heard before Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, and referred to the Master to take accounts. In 1764 and 1772, further proceedings were taken, and £2300 in bank stock, and £555 were lodged to the credit of the cause, which then slept until 1851, when Mr. J. D. Waltham obtained administration to Pope, the original testator, and revived the bill against Jasper's representatives. The funds to the credit of the cause had, by accumulation of dividends, bonuses, etc., amounted to £70,000. Waltham had to take out administration to five intermediate estates, and to pay £778 for stamp duties. The case is now wound up by an order to pay the costs of all parties out of the funds in court, and to share the remainder according to the respective rights of the claimants.

Real Statistics.—The Louisville Courier of the 24th ult. gives the following:

A short time ago we published a statement, as prepared by Thomas S. Page, Esq., Auditor of the State of Kentucky, of the number of hogs six months old on the first of January, in this State. The list was incomplete, as eight counties had not sent in their assessments. We now subjoin full returns from every county in the State, except Trimble:

Last report	1,611,961
Madison county	27,462
Estill county	5,918
Mason county	11,294
Bracken county	21,788
Union county	15,643
Woodford county	8,826
Jefferson county	20,352
Total	1,123,225

The prospects that the approaching packing season will show a large increase over last year are very flattering. We understand that very extensive preparations have been made by our city packers, and that Messrs. Jackson, Owsley & Co. have already engaged forty thousand hogs to be slaughtered at their establishment this winter. The prices for hogs are fluctuating, and have a downward tendency, as we have heretofore remarked, and we quote a sale of fifteen hundred head in Woodford county, to be delivered on the railroad, at four cents gross, on time.

The Norwegian Settlement.—It is stated that already 1000 emigrants from Norway have settled upon the lands purchased by Ole Rull in Western Pennsylvania. Many improvements have already been made, and the new country has been cleared and covered with comfortable habitations. A town, named Oleana, has been laid out in compliment to its founder. He intends to add many thousand acres to those already obtained, for the purpose of accommodating his countrymen. The object is their benefit, and not speculation, as the lands are disposed of to the settlers at moderate rates. Mr. D. remains in Philadelphia, completing his plans and operations.

Billy Bowlegs in an Indian Picture Gallery.—The Washington correspondent of the NewYork Commercial Advertiser writes an interesting notice of a visit by Billy Bowlegs and his companions to one of the picture galleries in the Smithsonian Institute:

Parallel Line Railroads.—A company has been organized to run a parallel railroad in opposition to the present Utica and Syracuse line, in New York, to be called the Utica and Syracuse Straight Line Railroad Company. This will be the first fair test in the United States as to whether there be business enough to support two lines on one great thoroughfare. The capital of the company is to be $1,000,000, of which $350,000 is now subscribed, and the whole amount is expected to be taken in a few days. The road will be forty-six miles long, eight miles less than the present one, and the surveys will soon be made.

St. Paul's.—St. Paul's Cathedral in London, cost $7,000,000. The clock in the tower has a pendulum 14 feet long, the weight at the end 112 pounds, the minute hands 44 pounds each, and 5½ feet long. The dials are 10 feet in diameter. The figures are 2½ feet long. The bell that strikes the hours is heard 20 miles in clear days, being 10 feet diameter, and 4½ tons in weight. It is tolled on the death of the Dean, the Mayor, Bishop of London, or a member of the royal family.

A Miserable Old Miser.—We have already mentioned in a paragraph that a man named Nield had died at Ashford, Kent county, England, leaving by will £1000 to his relatives and £500,000 to Queen Victoria. So there is no danger of Her Majesty starving yet awhile.

UNITY OF CONFESSIONS.

OF THE HOLY TRINITY.

"Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and wast, and shalt be. Even so, Lord God Almighty; true and righteous are thy judgments."—Rev. xvi. 5, 7.

Catena Patrum.

TE DEUM.

The Holy Church throughout all the world doth acknowledge thee;
The Father of an infinite Majesty:
Thine honorable, true and only Son;
Also the Holy Ghost, the Comforter.

ATHANASIAN CREED.

We worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity.
Such as the Father is, such is the Son, and such is the Holy Spirit.
Uncreate, incomprehensible and eternal!
And in this Trinity none is afore or after other; none is greater, or less than another:
But the whole three Persons are co-eternal together, and co-equal.
So that in all things, as is aforesaid, the Unity in Trinity, and the Trinity in Unity, is to be worshipped.

NICENE CREED.

I believe in one God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, and of all things visible and invisible; and in one Lord Jesus Christ, the only Son of God: God of God, Light of Light, Very God of very God. And I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Giver of Life, Who, with the Father and the Son is worshipped and glorified. Who spake by the Prophets.

APOSTLES' CREED.

I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ His only Son our Lord. I believe in the Holy Ghost.

Conf. of Saxony. Melancthon.

We use these forms of invocation: "I call upon thee, O Almighty God, Eternal Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, Maker of heaven and earth, together with thy Son our Lord Jesus Christ, and thy Holy Spirit, O wise: most good, righteous, most free, chaste, and merciful God; have mercy upon me, and for Jesus Christ's sake, thy Son, crucified for us, and raised up again, hear and sanctify me with thy Holy Spirit. I call upon thee, O Jesus Christ, the Son of God, crucified for us, and raised up again, have mercy on me, pray for me unto the everlasting Father, and sanctify me with thy Holy Spirit."—Art. 22.

Conf. of Augsburgh.

The Churches, with common consent among us do teach, that the decree of the Nicene Council, concerning the unity of the Divine essence, and of the three persons, is true, and without doubt to be believed: to wit, that there is one Divine essence, which is called and is God, eternal, without body, indivisible, of infinite power, wisdom, goodness, the Creator and Preserver of all things, visible and invisible; and that there be three persons of the same essence and power, which also are coeternal—the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.—Art. 1.

Conf. of Swevland.

Since sermons begun with us to be taken out of the Holy Scriptures of God, and those godly contentions ceased, so many as were with any desire of true godliness, have gained a far more certain knowledge of Christ's doctrines, and far more fervently expressed it in the conversation of their life. And even as they declined from those things which had perversely crept into the doctrine of Christ, so they were more and more confirmed to those things which are altogether agreeable thereunto. Of which sort are the articles which the Christian Church hath hitherto steadfastly believed touching the Holy Trinity, to wit: that God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, are three distinct person: but in essence, only one, true, divine, eternal, almighty, and incomprehensible God, of one equal indivisible Divine essence: "of whom, through whom, and in whom are all things" (Rom. xi. 36): who loveth and rewardeth righteousness and virtue, but hateth and punisheth all iniquity and sin.

This true and absolute faith, and difficult knowledge of God.... hath everlasting and sure grounds on which it relieth, and most mighty reasons by which it is out of the Holy Scriptures convinced to be true. As by that manifestation wherein the whole Trinity showeth itself, when Christ was baptized in Jordan. Chap. 3.

Conf. of France.

The Holy Scriptures teacheth us, that in that one and simple Divine essence, there be three persons subsisting, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. We thus think of God: that he is the one in substance, three in persons, and almighty, who, as he hath by the Word, that is, His Son, made all things of nothing: so by His Spirit and providence, He doth justly, truly, and most wisely govern, preserve and cherish all things.—Art. 6.

Religious worship is to be given to God the Father. Son and Holy Ghost: and to Him alone: not to angels, saints or any other creature: and since the fall, not without a mediator, nor in the mediation of any other but of Christ alone. Prayer, with thanksgiving being one special part of religion, is by God required of all men, and that it may be accepted, it is to be made in the name of the Son by the help of the Spirit, according to His will, with understanding, reverence, humility, fervency, faith, love and perseverance. Conf. of English and Welsh Baptists. 1689.

In this Divine and infinite Being there are three subsistences, the Father, the Word or Son, and Holy Spirit, of one substance, power and eternity, each having the whole Divine essence, yet the essence undivided..... All infinite, without beginning, one God, who is not to be divided in nature and being, but distinguished by several peculiar, relative properties, and personal relations: which doctrine of the Trinity is the foundation of all our communion with God, and comfortable dependence on Him. Chap. 2: 3.

Conf. of the Welsh Methodists. 1823.

Though there is but one true God, and it can not be otherwise, yet the Holy Scriptures testify, that there are in God three persons, the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost: and these three are co-eternal and co-equal; neither being before or after the other: but they are one God. Each of the persons is a true God, and yet one person is not the other, yet are they but one God. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, are neither names, offices nor attributes—but Divine persons; the Father is an eternal person, the Son is an eternal person—yet one eternal God. And though different offices and operations pertain to one person rather than to the other, in the scheme of salvation, yet have they the same Divine attributes—eternity, omniscience, omnipresency, omnipotency, &c., in each Divine person, as in the other: in like manner, also, the same holiness, goodness, and love, etc., in the three persons: the objects of the love of the three persons are likewise the same: and the purpose of the Trinity is the eternal purpose.

Though we cannot comprehend the Doctrine of the Trinity, yet we ought to believe it, because that thus God has testified of Himself, who knows himself perfectly, and who is the God of truth. Therefore it is our duty firmly to believe the testimony which He has given of Himself.—Art. 4.

We believe that there is one certain nature and Divine power, which we call God: and that the same is divided into three equal persons, into the Father, into the Son, and into the Holy Ghost: and that they do all of one power, of one majesty, of one eternity, of one Godhead, and of one substance; and although these three persons be so divided, that neither the Father is the Son, nor the Son is the Holy Ghost, or the Father, yet, nevertheless, we believe that there is but one very God, and that the same one God hath created heaven and earth, and all things contained under heaven. THE MINISTER'S WIFE.

BY ELIZA RODMAN.

The Rev. Sydney Saybrook preached his first sermon to an admiring congregation. The people of L—— were astonished; old men dwelt on the expedient home-truths introduced, as it were, amid a bed of flowers—young men admired the eloquence and frank bearing of the speaker—and young ladies, ah! that was the thing. They, disdaining the matter-of-fact admiration of the rougher sex, looked forward into futurity, and, as the young minister was reported free of encumbrances, they thought of putting an end to his season of bliss by providing him with one as soon as possible.

This, however, is in strict confidence—they would not have acknowledged it for the world, and yet many of the brains pertaining to these attentive faces were busily at work within the pretty parsonage, altering, remodeling, arranging things to their own particular tastes. One would have that rose-vine taken away—it obscured the view: another would not only leave the rose, but would add a honey-suckle, too—it looked pretty and romantic: while a third had re-carpeted the stairs to the last flight by the time that Mr. Saybrook arrived at "thirteenthly."

Milly Ellsworth was a very pretty girl, and, therefore, what might perhaps have been vanity in one more plain, was with her only a pleasant consciousness of her own charms; as, in apparent forgetfulness of the saying that it takes two to make a bargain, she exclaimed:

"I have made up my mind to captivate Mr. Saybrook—it must be so beautiful to be a minister's wife."

The last remark was intended as a sort of compliment to their visitor, who enjoyed the enviable distinction, but Mrs. S—— merely smiled as Milly's earnest face was raised toward her.

"Only think of it," continued the young enthusiast.

"I do think of it," replied Mrs. S——, quietly; "but the thought to me brings up some scenes that are anything but agreeable. If I cannot tell 'tales that would freeze your very blood,' I can relate some that would freeze a little of that enthusiasm. A minister's wife! You little know what is comprised in that title."

"Of course," replied Milly, with a demure face, "it is a station of great responsibility, and has its peculiar duties. A minister's wife, too, is a sort of pattern, and I should be a—a—in short, just the thing."

"Exactly," returned Mrs. S——, smiling at this very satisfactory explanation, "but for 'pattern' read 'mirror'—a reflection of every body's own particular ideas: in which, of course, no two agree. But let me hear your ideas on the subject. Milly—I wish to know what you consider just the thing."

"Why," continued Milly, warming with her subject, "her dress, in the first place, should be scrupulously plain—not an article of jewelry—a simple straw hat, perhaps, tied down with a single ribbon—and a white dress, with no ornament but natural flowers."

"Very good," said Mrs. S——, "as far as it goes; but the beauty of this 'simple straw hat' is, of course, to consist in its shape and style, upon country villages are no proverbial exception in this respect. It would never do for a minister's wife to spend her time in searching for a tasty bonnet, and with a limited purse this is no light labor. Then, too, she is obliged to encourage the manufactures of the town in which she resides. If you could have seen some of the hats I had to wear!"

Milly shuddered; she could have borne the reverses of fortune, could even have stood at the stake unflinchingly, supported by the glories of martyrdom; but an unbecoming bonnet is one of those petty trials for which one gains no credit but that of bad taste.

"As to the white dress," continued Mrs. S——, "you must intend it to be made of some material from which dirt will glance harmlessly off on one side. Or perhaps you have one already—a legacy from one of those everlastingly white-robed heroines in the old novels. Those must assuredly have been spectre woods that they wandered in, for in our days brambles and underwood leave their marks. I was obliged to give up white dresses."

Milly looked thoughtful.

"Oh, well," said she after a short pause, "dress is very little, after all. I should like the idea of being a minister's wife; you are so looked up to by the congregation; and then they bring you presents, and think so much of you."

"Yes," replied Mrs. S——, "there is something in that; I had seven thimbles given to me once."

"Well, that must have been pleasant, I am sure."

"It would have done very well, had they not expected me to use the whole seven at once. Don't look so frightened, Milly; I don't mean in a literal sense; but I was certainly expected to accomplish as much work as would have kept the seven well employed. This, with my household affairs, was somewhat impossible."

Milly sighed; she was not fond of work, and had vague visions of meals of fruit and milk, and interminable seams accomplishing themselves with neatness and dispatch.

"Now, that you look more rational," said Mrs. S——, with a smile, "I will give you a little of my own experience, that you may not walk into these responsibilities with your eyes half shut, as I did. My ideas upon the subject of minister's wives, were very much like your own, and when I left my father's house in the city to accompany Mr. S—— to his home in a distant country village, it was with the impression that I was to become a sort of queen—over a small territory, it is true, but filled with adoring subjects. Mr. S—— is not very communicative, and as he did not pull down my castles-in-the-air with any description of realities, I was rather disappointed to find no roses or honeysuckles; but a very substantial looking house, with an immense corn-field on one side and a kitchen-garden on the other. I could scarcely repress my tears; but Mr. S——, who had been accustomed to the prospect all his life, welcomed me to my future home as though it were all that could be desired.

"The congregation soon flocked, not 'to pay their respects,' but to take an inventory of my person and manners. I was quite young and naturally lively, and old people shook their heads disapprovingly at the minister's choice, while grave spinsters, disappointed ones perhaps, tossed their heads at the idea of 'such a child.' The very rigid ones black-balled me from their community as unworthy to enter, while the gay ones regarded me as a sort of amphibious animal, neither one thing nor the other.

"Before long, the gifts of which you speak thronged in. I was pleased at the attention—not dreaming, in my innocence, that twice as much would be required of me in return. My ignorance on a great many subjects excited the contempt, and often the indignation of my country neighbors; they made not the least allowance for my city education.

"I was standing in the kitchen one day, with a delusive notion of making cake—for my attempts in the cookery line always placed me in a state of delightful uncertainty as to the end, it was quite a puzzle what things would turn out—when a middle-aged woman made her appearance, and, without being invited, seated herself near me. A basket accompanied her; and, after remarking it was 'awful hot!' she asked me 'if I wouldn't like some turnpike-cakes?'

"Previous unpalatable messes had been sent in to the table, and afraid that I might be drawn in to taste some nauseous compound, I replied rather hastily, 'No, I thank you—I do not think that I am very fond of them.'

"Mrs. Badger, for that was my visitor's name, plunged a hand on each hip, and shook, but fell in the fire, burst forth into a laugh that would have done credit to a backwoodsman. I trembled, and felt myself coloring to the tips of my ears. To this day I have a vivid recollection of the impression made upon me by that woman's contempt.

"'Well, wherever was you brought up,' said my visitor at length, 'to suppose that turnpike-cakes was meant to eat? Why, bless your heart, child! they're to make bread with!'

"I caught eagerly at the idea: Mr. S. was partial to home-made bread—Mrs. Badger, who was by no means ill-natured, willingly left the turnpike-cakes, and I was soon plunged up to the elbows in my labor of love. I had very mistaken ideas though upon the subject of bread, and its manipulation, I supposed that a very minute piece of dough would bake into a pretty loaf, and was extremely surprised when I beheld only an extensive tea-cake. Mr. S—— laughed good-naturedly at my baking, and pronounced it very well, what there was of it. Anxious to distinguish myself in his eyes as a good housekeeper, I cooled over pies, cake and every thing eatable that I could think of; but, alas! the marvel of praise always fell short of my expectations. He dispatched the pies with a mournful air, as he assured me that 'he never expected to taste any equal to his mother's;' and after trying in vain to reach this standard of perfection, I gave up in despair. This, I have since found, is merely a delusion peculiar to men, to be classed in the same scale with the fancy that sermons were longer and winters severer in childhood than they are now.

"My experience of ministers has convinced me that, with respect to worldly matters, they are an extremely thoughtless, improvident race; and the machinery of hearts, indispensable to the producing of comforts, always contrives to get on the 'blind side' of them. Mr. S—— seemed to imagine that shining shirt-bosoms and spotless cravats grew on trees, or were fished up, unbarmed, from the depths of the sea, for every week his astonishment at Biddy's failures was indescribable.

"Anxious to put an end to this perpetual state of surprise, I went into the kitchen to oversee the girl's performances—knowing about as much of the matter as she did. Her request, 'and would ye plaze, ma'am, to be afther showin' me,' just meant to do it myself. The sensations that Mr. S—— experienced on finding me thus employed were almost too deep to vent themselves in words, but he positively forbade my doing it again: so, whenever I knew that he was off on some lengthy visit, I continued my mysterious occupation unsuspected; while he rejoiced at Biddy's improvement, and in the innocence of his heart exclaimed:

"'Don't tell me, my dear, that these Irish cannot be taught—look at Biddy!'

"I did look at her, and encountered so hopelessly vacant a visage that I laughed to myself at his credulity.

"I was invited, rather commanded, to join 'The Dorcas Society for the Relief of Indigent Females,' which met every week, and where the members always sewed on unbleached muslin and sixpenny calico; they made me president, and in consequence I was expected, at each meeting, to take home the unfinished work and do it up during the week. I was collector for the poor—and in my rounds some gave me six-pence, some nothing, and some impudence. I was superintendent of the Sunday-school, besides teacher of a Bible-class of middle-aged young ladies who were not quite grown up. I was member of a 'Society for the Diffusion of Useful Reading,' which also met every week; and where, had I not been a minister's wife, I should certainly have frozen among over the 'Sybarites, 'Helps,' 'Aids,' and 'Addresses,' that were showered upon us poor women: while I wondered that nobody took the trouble to write to men.

"You must acknowledge that my time was pretty well employed; but, besides all this, I was expected to entertain innumerable visitors. Travelling clergymen always made our house their stopping-place: and it must have been convenient to the route to almost every place in the Union: for some were going North, some East, and some West, but that was always the halting-place. Their hours of arriving were various and unexpected; but I was expected to furnish banquets at the shortest notice—to drag forth inexhaustible stores of linen and bedding—and throw open airy apartments that had hitherto been concealed by secret springs. Mr. S—— was firmly convinced that the house possessed the elastic properties of India-rubber, and mildly disregarded my ignorance when I asserted that it would not stretch to any extent.

"A convention of ministers was to meet in the village, for some purpose or other, and the visitors, like British soldiers during the revolution, were to be quartered upon the inhabitants—with only this difference, they were to be invited before they entered a house. I was seated in Mr. S——'s study when he mentioned the ministers.

"'I spoke for you, too, my dear,' said he coolly, and said I that we could accommodate six.'

"'Mr. S——!' I exclaimed, roused past all endurance; 'are you really crazy!'

"'Anna!' replied my husband, as he turned his eyes upon me. Mr. S—— was usually very mild, and appeared to think that a look was sufficient to subdue refractory spirits. He now undertook to look me into reason; while I, fairly boiling at the idea of being treated like a naughty child, and yet struggling with a sense of right and wrong, sat with downcast eyes trying in vain to get cool.

"'I hope,' continued Mr. S——, 'that my wife has not forgotten the rules of hospitality, or the precepts of the Bible?'

"'But it is so impossible!' I pleaded. 'Neither beds nor anything else will hold out under such an inundation.'

"'Remember the widow's cruse of oil,' replied my husband.

"'Yes,' said I, for I felt just the least bit termagantish, 'but such things do not happen nowa-days.'

"Mr. S—— looked again, and I was quieted, though I felt very much like laughing.

"'One can sleep on the sofa,' continued my husband, after a pause.

"It was the nearest approach toward calculating probabilities that I had ever known him to make; but I took somewhat of a wicked pleasure in replying.

"'Not if he is very tall—and then he would probably roll out, it is so narrow: and, after all, that is only one.'

"'Chairs' suggested Mr. S——.

"'Don't you think,' said I, rather hesitatingly, 'that they would rather go where they could be better accommodated.'

"'Anna,' said Mr. S——, as he deliberately laid down his pen, 'I am really sorry to see you so unwilling to contribute your mite toward entertaining those who should be welcome guests in every house.'

"'Mite, indeed!' thought I; but that sounded better in a sentence than 'superhuman efforts.'

"'Mr. S——,' said I, in a sort of frantic hope of reducing him to reason, 'there are exactly two spare beds in the house—and these divided among six full grown men are not very extensive accommodations.'

"My husband turned upon me a look, 'more in sorrow than in anger,' and left the room, as I imagined, to examine our stock of blankets and counterpanes. But not he; he only went to look for a book of reference, and soon was writing again, as calmly as though six ministers were not hovering over us in perspective.

"I sat like one bewildered, and thought. Mr. S—— would not imagine the possibility of our not being able to accommodate them; and I foresaw that all the blame of a failure would fall upon me. Had they only been girls, I could have disposed of them somehow; but the idea of packing away six grave ministers, like so many bundles, was quite repugnant to my feelings of reverence. I thought, however, in vain—there was no conclusion to come to, nothing left for me but inglorious retreat. In spite of having taken him 'for better or for worse'—notwithstanding that I had vowed to cling to him through every thing—I deserted him in his hour of need. Yes, I thought that a good, practical lesson might be a benefit both to him and me; so I went on on a visit, ostensibly to spend the day, but I contrived to be gone all night—the very night that the ministers were to arrive.

"I learned the particulars of their visit from Mr. S——.

"They arrived about dinner-time, and rather disconcerted at my absence, Mr. S—— did the honors of the house with all the egregious mistakes that usually fall to the lot of absent-minded people. No extra provision had been made for the six guests—and Mr. S—— helped the oldest minister so liberally that the others were in danger of falling short. As he proceeded in his employment the alarming scantiness of the viands struck even his eye; and, in his first feelings of embarrassment, he abruptly left the room, and dashing into a closet near by, he soon returned with a dish, which he presented to one of the unfortunate fates, saying:

"'Miss S—— is quite famous for her—her'—

"What name he would have bestowed upon it he does not exactly know himself; but his visitor's optical organs being more on the alert, he indignantly declined the feast of soft-soap with which Mr. S—— was about to favor him. 'My husband asserts that his feelings were indescribable; and to this day, he has scarcely forgiven my desertion. He was taking his first lesson in house-keeping; and saw, with some surprise, that a dinner provided for three or four persons would not answer for six more. He sent to the neighbors', and soon supplied deficiencies; but conversation rather flagged, and his visitors evidently looked upon him with some distrust. At tea-time Biddy made so many ridiculous mistakes that he was obliged to set the table himself, and expressly forbid her entering the room.

"The hour for retiring approached, and then, indeed, came the 'tug of war.' Mr. S—— examined the accommodations again and again, but no more beds grew beneath his eye; and at length, in despair, he concluded to marshal them up stairs in the order of precedence, and see how things turned out. Brother A—— took the light from his hand, and bade him 'good night' in an imposing manner, but without a single hint that the company of Brother B—— or Brother C—— would be acceptable; and somewhat despairingly he descended to his other visitors. Brother B——, being of a convenient size, was bestowed upon the sofa; but there now remained four others for one bed and a half, for Mr. S—— had concluded to take one in with him. Two were dispatched to the remaining room; one was invited to share his apartment, and, after giving brother A—— abundance of time to establish himself comfortably, Mr. S—— presented himself at his door with the remaining visitor, and aroused him from a sound sleep with a request to take him in. No wonder that Brother A—— looked dignified at this miserable management, or that Mr. S—— began to think that I might be half right, after all.

"The next morning matters drew to a crisis. The coffee, manufactured by Mr. S——, was execrable; and this, with a bouquet of burned beef and something that Biddy termed 'short cake,' lumps of dough, scorched without and raw within, utterly failed to satisfy the appetites of the six visitors, who were going upon a long journey; and they departed with a conviction that my husband's invitation had been extremely ill-timed, and prevented them from accepting others that might have proved pleasant.

"'My dear,' said Mr. S—— to me one day, after I had been home some little time, 'are you not making an uncommon quantity of cake? Do you expect any visitors?'

"'I do not expect any,' I replied. 'But they may come without expecting. Perhaps the ministers may meet here on their return.'

"Mr. S—— gave me a look, but it was only to smile at the expression of my eyes, which I felt, were fairly dancing; and he replied quite meekly:

"'It was very foolish of me to be unreasonable—but I have had a lesson that will not be soon forgotten.'

"I could have thrown my arms around him in ecstacy, but they were full of flour, and as I had a respect for the cloth,' I desisted. He never again volunteered to take in six ministers at once; how truly they had been 'taken in,' they could probably testify."

"Well," said Milly, with a sigh, "were you not sorry that you had married Mr. S——?"

"Not at all," replied the visitor, with a smile at this detriment to her advice, "I would do this same thing again to-morrow."

Milly was surprised; she had seen Mr. S——, a grave, mild-looking gentleman, in a white cravat, but, while she regarded him with the greatest reverence, and trembled whenever she encountered him on the stairs, she could not realize the possibility of his compensating for all these trials—even Mr. Saybrook failed there.

The next Sunday the young minister was as eloquent and fascinating as ever; but Milly glanced at his white cravat and thought of sewing societies—and, like the things in "The Philosopher's Scales," Mr. Saybrook went up with a bound, while these stern realities pressed heavily down in the balance. Her eyes were opened, and the young minister fell to the lot of some competitor who had not been favored with "a peep behind the scenes."

CHILDHOOD.—There are some children left! At least I met one the other day. It was a little fellow of five years. He had come with his father into the country to see one of my friends. As soon as he left the carriage, he ran to the kennel of a large watch-dog that was chained in the court yard.

"Don't touch the dog," I cried, "he'll bite you."

"Why will he bite me?"

"Because he doesn't know you."

"Oh, if that's all," he replied, "I will tell him that I am Henry." [Carpet Bag.

A preacher who attended the sermon of another one, was asked his opinion of the discourse.

"I see," replied the critic, "that clear waters are not deep."

The perspicuous orator some time after became an auditor of his learned brother's oration.

"I see," said the former preacher, "that deep waters are not clear."

TRUST IN PROVIDENCE.—When I would beget content and increase confidence in the power, and the wisdom, and providence of Almighty God, I will walk the meadows by some gliding stream, and then contemplate the lilies that take no care, and these very many other various little living creatures that are not only created but fed, man knows not how, by the goodness of the God of nature, and therefore trust in him. Let everything that has breath praise the Lord.

I have had six children, and I bless God that they are either with Christ or in Christ; and my mind is now at rest concerning them. My desire was that they should have served Christ on earth; but if God will rather choose to have them serve him in heaven, I have nothing to object to it. [Elliot.

THAT SERMON AT THE SPRINGS.

MR. EDITOR: A strange article in your last issue, with the caption, "A Sermon at the Springs," has attracted my attention, and suggests a few thoughts upon that unlucky sermon and on a common mistake, which the writer of the article in question, and many others, have fallen into, with reference to the preaching of the day. That this writer was well qualified to criticise the pulpit, is evident, from his attributing the words of the text to Paul, when they belong to Peter. The text was one so common and so noted, that the merest Sunday school scholar ought to have known better. Now see into what a position his mistake places him. He says the minister did not follow the style of the author of the text, "the great apostle of the Gentiles." To be sure he did not, for the simple reason that Peter, the true author of the text, did not see fit to do so himself.

Says he, "The subject admitted of display, and the privilege was not disregarded." That is to say, the subject suggested solemn and impressive thoughts, and the speaker sought to present them in such a way as would most effectually attract and profit his congregation. This is all the attempt at display the speaker seemed conscious of. But the sermon "lacked power." That is, the preacher did not get up an amusement, and kick up a dust in the ball-room. He sought to make a deep religious impression on the minds of his hearers, such as would manifest itself in their after life. Considering the place, the time, the circumstances, he did not think proper to attempt any thing more. He may have failed to do this: no one knows.

The leading point in the sermon was a contrast between the mutability of the present and the immutability of the future. The preacher sought to impress his hearers with a sense of the vanity of all earthly things, from their mutable character, and the great importance of future things from their immutable character. He especially sought to present the connection between the two in enforcing the exhortation, "What manner of persons ye to be!" This was about the substance of the sermon.

What M. meant by "seemingly studied conformity to the conventional notions of the day," we can not for the life of us imagine. There was nothing in the sermon suggesting such a thing. We therefore dismiss it, without further remarks.

As to the absence of any thing with reference to human depravity, we should consider that, if his ideal of a sermon requires this, in every one, he is alone; and must therefore pardon the ministry for not consulting his individual preference in the expruse of that of every body else. There are sermons of Mr. Wesley in which this same defect (?) exists. Perhaps if M. had heard his sermon on the use of money, he would have taken him to task for not preaching on "depravity," rather than on this subject.

But, the clause in M.'s article which more particularly attracted our attention and excited our risibilities and calls for rather more extended remarks, was the following: "It had not the characteristics of what I conceived to be the style of the author of the text—nor of Mr. Wesley, whom we regard as our great example."

Now, the rhetoric of the schools, as well that of common sense, teaches that it is improper to copy the style of any man, however excellent that style may be—that whoever attempts it will copy the defects rather than the excellences of the style, and will inevitably make himself a fool. Mr. Wesley was well aware of this and formed a style of his own, not copying even after the sacred writers. Had M. lived in his day, he would have censured him for not copying after Ambrose, or Chrysostom, or Jeremy Taylor, or John Bunyan, or some other favorite writer whom he considered a model. Why does M. require that we should copy after Paul rather than Peter, or John?—for, we can hardly imagine styles to be more dissimilar than these. And why does he require us to copy the "characteristics" of the style of Wesley rather than those of Fletcher and Watson? for where is a greater difference than between the styles of these three men? Wesley's style was plain, terse and nervous; Watson's smooth, clear, chastely ornamented, and Fletcher's ornate, poetic, highly wrought. Now, they were all good and successful preachers, and deeply pious men. Why, Mr. Editor, this idea of preaching like this, that or any other man, is supremely ridiculous. Mr. Wesley's style was most excellent—a magnificent style. There was a directness and power in it seldom equalled. Yet, what a fool a man would make of himself to copy its "characteristics." I verily believe there is a great deal of formal cant among us on the subject of Wesley's preaching. This preaching is made the grand model by which all sermons are to be tested. If Mr. Wesley himself could come back he would rebuke some of his professed followers, most sharply, for their unnatural requirements. We have nothing to say against Mr. Wesley's sermons. We think no sermons, fully their equal, have been written since. But, can every one present truth successfully in this way? Watson nor Fetcher thought best to attempt it. Why then saddle it upon this generation?—Then, we verily believe that all this cant about preaching like Mr. Wesley is one of the most capital humbugs amongst us. Wesley himself, if living, would so regard it.

And then, M. speaks of a kind of preaching of the essay order, and intimates that of the "Springs" was a specimen. Will he please read Mr. Wesley's sermon on "The Reformation of Manners," another on "Knowledge," and that strange one on the immortality of brutes? What of the essential features of the gospel is there in these and in a number of others which we might mention. M. had better study Mr. Wesley a little more before he presumes to censure this kind of preaching. We are not contending that the Church should be turned into the lecture room. No minister can well discharge his duty who does not make the essential features of the gospel the burden of his preaching. But must he never preach the duties and relations of common life? If he follows the example of Mr. Wesley and preaches as the Saviour in his sermon on the Mount, he certainly will; and yet when he does he is liable to have some creaker like M. publish and abuse him through the public newspapers.

M. bemoans very pathetically over the departing glories of Methodism. He need be under no alarm; she is as strong and glorious as ever; and she will flourish while she continues to possess an intelligent, pious and judicious ministry and membership. In the face of all the prognostications of croakerdom.

We bid M. farewell, and hope the next time he takes the "itch scribendi," he will be more cautious in his undeserved attacks upon young ministers who have their hands full without being censured in newspapers.

HOW THEY WERE CONVERTED.

MR. EDITOR: The following account of a revival of religion will no doubt be interesting to many of your readers, and encouraging to those who are in a measure destitute of pastoral labors.

In the spring of 1838, there was a Quarterly Meeting held by the Rev. W. H. N. in a newly settled neighborhood, East Alabama, which, in its circumstances and results, will never be forgotten by those who were present on that occasion. It was held, if I mistake not, on Tuesday and Wednesday, in the absence of the preacher in charge. The congregation was small owing to the sparseness of the settlements, and the house of worship was a newly built academy, in which a school was then in progress. The first day of the meeting passed away without any visible results. The exercises of the next day progressed with no more than ordinary interest, till near the close, when the minister was about to bid the congregation a long adieu. He proposed, however, before closing, to open the door of the Church for the reception of members: a strange notion doubtless, to the major portion of the congregation for no one here has any idea of joining the Church, was the silent response probably of every one present. The minister, however, prefaced his invitation by a few appropriate remarks, and then struck up his favorite marshal chorus, "Die in the field of battle," etc. The first notes of that chorus—struck so full and clear—sent a thrill to almost every heart and to the wonder and astonishment of all present, a young lady rose from her seat, came forward and gave her hand to the Church. She was soon followed by her younger sister, then by a brother, and then by others, one after another, until no less than ten had suddenly deserted the ranks of the enemy, and enlisted as probationers under the banner of the Cross.

The exercise now closed, and the P. E. left. The newly constituted little band, with four or five old members, were left with no other religious privilegen than the occasional visits of the Circuit preacher, and the ministrations of a local preacher, who lived in the neighborhood.

Upon more mature reflection, some of these young persons felt much dissatisfied with their new condition, for they found themselves now enclosed by the walls of the Church, and not one of them professing a spark of religion. They consulted together as to the best course to be pursued. To live in the Church without religion was a hard task, and besides it would not save them. To quit the Church, they could not think of being so inconsistent, or of losing the victory they had already gained; the question was, What could they do?

Well, at length the following plan was resolved upon: That they would appoint a weekly prayer-meeting, and meet together for the purpose of praying for the conversion of their souls; and further, that those who had families should immediately erect the family altar and bow around that with their families morning and evening.

The little prayer-meeting commenced and was well attended—by some doubtless out of curiosity, and by others out of courtesy to the parties concerned. It continued about twelve months without much visible effect. At length three of the principal attendants were converted at a meeting some distance away. They returned full of the spirit of revival and redoubled their energies in the little prayer-meeting. In a short time two more of the principal leaders were converted in the prayer-meeting; then another and another until the whole ten were converted, and a great many more. At the close of the revival 26 converts were numbered as the fruits of that little prayer-meeting.

One of the principal actors in that prayer-meeting has passed triumphantly to heaven. Another is now a member of the Alabama Conference, while another of the converts is a member of the Florida Conference. All the rest of the converts that I have any knowledge of at present, are still members of the Church, and I trust are trying to get to heaven. MINIMUS ITINERANT.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, October 16.

MEETINGS OF THIS WEEK.

Two mass meetings, of very different character and of mterial interest, have been held in our city this week. On Tuesday night the Lyceum Hall was crowded with an audience of gentlemen and ladies, representing the most influential and respectable portion of citizens. The Reform League, a large and strong association for the suppression of the liquor license system, had called the meeting. Messrs. Duncan and Purvis and Rev's Dr. Clapp, Walker and Harmon, made effective speeches. There was a little difference among the speakers. Dr. Clapp regarded the teetotallers as going too far. Wine and Scotch Ale might be allowed moderately, and yet the users thereof should not be classed with the intemperate. Mr. Harmon followed, and in a very incidental way, gave strong and telling reasons for total abstinence. The audience gave attention to a late hour and the speakers bore down mightily upon the point that society had the right and power to protect itself against this evil and that its suppression was now called for by every consideration of expediency and humanity and morality, and that those who did not actively co-operate in its suppression would be justly chargeable with its consequences.

On Monday night the other meeting was held, and as there is no telling "whereunto thisthing may grow," we, as chroniclers of the times, give on fourth page a pretty full sketch from one of the daily papers, substantially agreeing with that of the others of same date. Of course the speakers are not chargeable with the violence of parenthetical expressions by the crowd; neither are we chargeable with what the speakers say.

Much of the enthusiasm was doubtless due to a pure patriotism, outraged and chafed by insult upon our flag. But a fair portion may be set down to the nearness of the Presidential election—each party being determined that the other shall not get the start in making political capital out of the case.

THE CONFERENCES.

St. Louis Conference met in Lexington, Mo., 22nd September, Bishop Paine presiding. Twelve preachers were admitted on trial, two re-admitted, one discontinued at his own request, one (Rev. C. Penny,) died, one superannated, three located, one withdrawn. A letter was received from Rev. D. W. Pollock, stating that the state of his health required a transfer to a more southern climate, whereupon a resolution of sympathy and recommendation was passed by the Conference.

The following action very favorably affecting their excellent Conference paper, (from which our information is taken) was had:

WHEREAS, we have heard that some friends of the Church, in St. Louis, have started a proposition to raise a fund, say ten thousand dollars as a Conference Fund for the whole Church in Missouri—the proceeds of which to be appropriated to the relief of the "St. Louis Christian Advocate," until it shall no longer need such aid, and then to be appropriated to such other object in connection with the operations of the Church in Missouri, as may be selected by the Annual Conferences in said State; therefore,

Resolved, That we hear with pleasure of the magnanimous proposition of our brethren in St. Louis, to raise ten thousand dollars as a Conference Fund, as set forth in the preamble.

Resolved, That we will co-operate in this effort to raise ten thousand dollars for this object in shares of ten dollars each.

On motion, T. Polk, Esq., Rev. J. Hogan, Ed. S. Gay, W. T. Christy and John Burd, Esq., were appointed a Board of Trustees, and requested by this Conference to act in that capacity in reference to the object contemplated in the foregoing resolutions.

Note.—Upon the adoption of the report of the Committee on the Book Depository, the preachers of the Conference subscribed between five and six hundred dollars for that object—a part of which was paid in.

After a week's session, Conference adjourned to meet next year in St. Louis, at Centenary Church.

EUTHANASIA.—The record and the only one under "Obituary" head, will be read with interest and profit, especially by the young. A fuller and more extended notice of the death of Miss Evelyn Vaughan, who died in Marengo co., Ala., Sept. 14, will appear next week.

The report of Commissioner Nelson (son of the Judge) occupies our columns to the exclusion of much other matter, both editorial and correspondent. The Commercial Advertiser of 2nd Oct., says the Court will "in ten or fifteen days" give decision upon the exceptions taken and argued.

JOHN EARLY, Agent.

Dr. Stevenson, Assistant Book Agent at at Louisville, Ky., submits a statement of the affairs under his immediate direction, upon which Dr. Parsons, (from whose columns we get our items) congratulates the General Conference on the selection of Louisville as the site of the main branch of the Book Concern. It is doubtless a good place, but we think the man at the Western Branch of the Concern has had very much to do with its success. We extract from his statement:

"From the commencement of our operations in this city, during the fall of 1846, up to the present time, our business transactions have been constantly increasing on our hands. Beginning without capital, and contending, from first to last, with the formidable obstacles our success has greatly exceeded our most sanguine expectations. From the annual exhibit of the General Agent, the Rev. Dr. Early, it will be seen that, in January last, the assets of this establishment exceeded its liabilities by upwards of twenty-five thousand dollars!

It should, however, be known to all concerned, that the heavy drafts which have been made on our funds, for the purpose of liquidating the debts of the "Expositor and True Issue," assumed by the last General Conference, and in meeting the expenses of our "Church Suit," have greatly diminished the amount of our active capital, and to a very serious extent, hindered the successful prosecution of the prime objects of our agency. Still, amid all these embarrassments, we have lived and prospered.

Our present stock of Methodist books, and valuable miscellaneous publications, including Sabbath School Books and Tracts, in all their variety, is unusually large: and we are now fully persuaded that from henceforth we shall be able to supply the entire demand of the Church for Theological Literature, in all its different forms throughout the whole South-Western range of the connection.

METHODISM AND LIBERIA.

MR. EDITOR: I learned recently, from a private source which I consider perfectly reliable, that it was lately determined by the Mission Board of the Northern Church, to dissolve all connection between the Church in Liberia and itself, except that of friendly intercourse and fraternal aid: thus giving the African Church an entirely independent organization, a Bishop of its own, etc. This was looked for by some as a harbinger of great good to the Church and the country; especially as such a step would fully open the way for the Church, South, to do something for the people and cause in that country, a thing very desirable to all. But just as persons were felicitating themselves upon this movement, a strong counter current arose from some quarters, and the whole scheme was abandoned. And in its place, steps were taken to cement more firmly the union now existing between that branch and the parent body. To carry this purpose out, it has been reported that Rev. J. H. Perry, of the Bethel Church, New York, had been selected and clothed with full power in the premises, and that he was soon to proceed to Africa. Now upon the heel of these reports, which reached us from the very mission room itself, comes the statement that Bishop Scott is about to sail for Liberia to perform episcopal functions. This vacillating policy, or more than half authentic rumors of it, seem to us clearly to indicate, what we saw still more clearly at the session of the late General Conference, viz., that the Northern Church, like the man who won an elephant in a raffle, have something on their hands—in the African Church—they do not know exactly what to do with. It is, however, to be hoped that amid all this backing and filling, that they will not make so many false moves as to disgust and throw off from them the Church in Liberia, in a state of confusion and disorganization. They want a regularly ordained Bishop of their own in Liberia. Dr. Bond, in a leader of Sept. 30, favors the idea of their selecting one of their own number, and setting him apart themselves! Something must be done soon to place the Church there in a different position, or the cause must suffer. In the mean time every consideration of reason and duty—duty to the world, the Church and God, call upon the Southern Church to establish a mission there. Such a step would of itself add $10,000 per annum to our missionary revenue.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Thibodaux, La. Conf.

DEAR BROTHER: There is a fine work of the Lord going on here. Bro. Harp and the members of the Church are much encouraged, and there is a deep religious feeling enjoyed by the members. The meeting has been protracted three weeks, twenty-four have joined the Church, and about the same number have experienced religion. The congregations good; interest does not diminish. I hope it will not stop until this community shall be converted. Ministerial help is much needed. This is the first "revival" that has ever been in these parts, and with proper zeal and the blessing of God, there is no telling where it will stop. Yours,

Oct. 7, 1852. LEWIS A. REED.

Demopolis, Ala. Conf.

DEAR BROTHER: We are having a blessed meeting here. Little or no help, but God is with us. There have been twenty-five or thirty persons at the altar, half a dozen conversions, and as many accessions. As you no doubt feel interested in your old charge, remember us in prayer. The meeting has just begun. Yours, in Christ,

Sept. 30, 1852. THOS. H. FOSTER.

Demopolis District, Ala. Conf.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: You will be glad to hear that the Church, in many places through this District, is blessed with revival influence. We have had twenty-six conversions in one night.

The meeting in Butler was continued several days after I wrote you, and closed on the night of the 5th Sept. In addition to the thirty-nine reported, there were twenty-one others reported, making sixty unmistakable conversions in nine days. The meeting closed with a large number of convicted sinners at the altar.

One afternoon during the meeting was devoted to the cause of Temperance. We had the pleasure, that evening, to receive the names of thirteen gentlemen who desired to join the "Sons," and eighteen ladies who desired to join the "Union"—I need not tell you that their application was hailed with delight by the friends of the cause in Butler.

Our next meeting commenced Sept. 4, at Ebenezer, on Bucketoanic Circuit, supplied by Dr. Dunlap, a local preacher. It was continued nine days, and increased in interest to the last. There were about thirty conversions and forty-one additions to our Church.

The next Friday, Sept. 10, we commenced a camp meeting on the Gaston Circuit. Bro. Linfield's work. Up to the time I left, there were thirteen conversions. The next Friday our camp meeting at Linden camp ground commenced. This is the first meeting ever held at this place. It is on the Marengo Circuit. Bros. Duncan and Huckabee are the preachers this year. We had only seven tents—one of them the circuit preacher's, and two others occupied by local preachers. Here we had a glorious meeting—fifty-three whites converted, and a number of blacks. Thirty-two whites and nine colored persons joined on probation at this meeting, and fifteen others during the quarter, at other points on the Circuit. The last night, at a late hour, twenty-six came forward and gave me their hands as having been converted that night. We broke up the next morning, after getting eleven tents pledged for next year, and several who were not there at the close.

Turnersville, Ala. Conf.

The good Lord has blest us with a gracious revival of religion at Turnersville. This is a small village springing up on the Mobile and Ohio railroad, four miles from Mobile, and is connected with the Toulminville charge. We have had 17 conversions and 16 accessions to the church, etc. W. K. N.

Big Sandy Ct., Ala. Conf.

MR. EDITOR: We have had two hundred conversions on Big Sandy Circuit, since the 25th of July last, and one hundred and seventy-one accessions to the M. E. Church, South. J. M. WELLS.

Oct. 5, 1852.

Homar and Bayou Black Mis'n, La. Conf.

At our third Quarterly Meeting, at Tigerville, 23th Sept., and closing the 3d of Oct., we had a good work in reviving the members and in convincing and converting sinners. The result was, 14 embraced religion and 16 joined the Church. The old members are greatly stirred up; the work was deep and genuine. I do not think I ever saw conviction more powerful and conversion more clear. The meeting will long be remembered on Bayou Black. What shall we render to the Lord for all his benefits toward us? The untiring labor of our Presiding Elder, Brother Keener, has secured for him a place in the affection of the people that will live when he is gone. We are also indebted to Bros. Rolls and Knight, local preachers, for the labors they bestowed.

This work is not confined to the young, for at the altar were seen the father and the son on one side, and on the other the mother and the daughter: the planter and the manager praying together for pardon. The most obdurate were compelled to acknowledge that it was the work of the Lord. Interest is yet manifest in the neighborhood.

A HOPEFUL SIGN.

MR. EDITOR: It is announced in the public prints that Dr. Hawks has been elected successor to Bishop Henshaw, in the diocese of Rhode Island. This is a cheering sign. The occupants of the Episcopal office generally, in this country, are thoroughly Puseyite in their notions. The Doctor is far from having been inoculated by this virus respecting the succession dogma. A friend of mine informs me, that in a conversation which he had with him, he remarked that he supposed that he—my friend—supposed that he—the Doctor—did not consider Methodist ministers as true ministers of Christ; but that this was not the case, for he considered them as fully authorized to preach and administer the sacraments as himself. Such instances of common sense and religion are so rare, that they are refreshing when met with. It will be a great mercy if Providence continues enough of the leaven of the Gospel in that Church to counteract the corrupting influence of the Onderdonks, Doanes, etc. But there is great ground to fear.

WATCHMAN.

LETTER FROM CALIFORNIA

[The following letter will be interesting to many of our readers, notwithstanding it dated back a few months behind these fast times. It is furnished to our columns through the kindness of Dr. M. Ed.]

SONOMA CITY, July 30, 1852.

REV. DR. MITCHELL: Your very interesting letter has just come to hand, and as I have to leave this place to-morrow to hold a meeting in the country, I hasten to reply.

In reference to myself, I would say that I am still in the field, and, to the best of my ability, preaching the Gospel. My field of usefulness is large and interesting. I have established quite a number of large societies and five Sabbath Schools. We have just closed a very interesting camp meeting in this vicinity, at which we had quite a number of conversions. Indeed, I have a very pleasant work: more so than any that I ever had. I enjoy fine health and good spirits—perfectly satisfied with this country. I expect to live and die in this State. I am now able to speak the Spanish language tolerably well. I think some of the Spaniards, in the bounds of my charge, will before long renounce Romanism. Let me say to you, my friend, that Southern Methodism is quite popular in California. Our preachers are doing very well, working for the spread of holiness. Will you pray for us? I have in all my acts and doing, whether in the pulpit or out of it, been very jealous for the honor of the noble Conference that sent me here.

I have more to say in reference to the politics of this State than I have time to say. One thing I may say—this country is strongly Southern. There is great political excitement. Politics are merged into North and South.

Since writing the above, I have heard of the arrival of another preacher from the Church, North. It is very strange that we are left, to a great extent, unassisted by our Church, while the country is being inundated with Northern men. All we want is more men; men to fill our stations and circuits. We want a few able men to take charge of our literary institutions. O that I had a voice loud enough to wake up the giants of our Israel, and a tongue eloquent enough to persuade them to this field. I deem myself fortunate in being permitted to exercise my ministry in this country, where men's souls are tried. Our wants are not known to our brethren. They have no idea of the importance of this country. The people are remarkably intelligent. California is large enough for three States as large as your own. The soil is fertile, the scenery is beautiful and grand. Nothing that I have ever seen can equal it. A man can have just as good society here as in the old States—can make more money here than in Alabama—do more good as a preacher in one sermon, than by a year's labor in the old States. Four good preachers are wanted at this moment, to fill four vacant stations. The work is suffering now for want of them. I hope you will prevail with our brethren to come. Tell them that we have fine congregations. The country now is filling to overflowing with Yankee girls and Western women.

I would advise the young preachers, especially, to come unmarried, for this reason—a Southern lady can not stand so well the fare here—I mean to cook and wash. Goods of every kind are now about as cheap in San Francisco as they are in New York. So a man coming here need not bring any thing but himself. The Isthmus route has been much improved in the last year; it is now perfectly safe. There is a great good feeling and harmony among our preachers—no strife—all working together.

It has not rained here for five months; it don't rain here in summer. The ground, however, is moist, the air cool, and very pleasant. The crops are very good; wheat, fifty bushels per acre; the average yield of potatoes, per acre, seven hundred bushels; barley seventy-five bushels, five cents per pound; corn twenty bushels, two dollars per bushel; beans, peas, pumpkins, peaches, pears and water melons, any quantity.

The gold mines yield a larger quantity than ever. Gold is plentiful in California. We often get a hundred dollars at a collection. A man would hardly think of giving less than forty or fifty dollars quarterage. Bro. Mitchell, come to California and take charge of our Conference school at San Jose. Do all you can to get some of our strong young brethren to come. The immigrants across the Plains, and by the Isthmus route, have filled the valleys of California with permanent and intelligent settlers. I would say to every preacher that intends to come, to burn up all the bridges behind him; have no possibility of a retreat. Come untrammeled in every respect. I bid you farewell.

CENTENARY COLLEGE, LOUISIANA.

This Institution, after its summer vacation, opened its doors for the reception of students on last Monday morning. At the end of the second day ninety-two students had entered the several College classes, and as many as usual, had entered the Preparatory School. This is much in advance of preceding years, for the same time.

The prospects before the Institution have never been better than at the present time. The Trustees of the Institution, the patrons, the liberal donors; indeed, all of the friends of the Institution, may congratulate themselves on its continued, growing prosperity, and the prospect of its permanent usefulness. All will be pleased to see that the citizens of this section of country have confidence in their own institutions and are likely to support them. [Sou. Mirror, Oct. 7.

NATURE.—The St. Louis Times has the following trait of Indian character:

An Indian named Pish-che-to-win, of the Potawattamie tribe, was some months ago indicted in the U. S. Circuit Court, for introducing liquor into the Indian country without license. He was discharged. But in an examination of the case first had in the office of the acting District Attorney, an interesting scene occurred. The prisoner had come from his country, not under bail, but simply on the promise of the head chief of the nation. That head chief, the second chief, the prisoner, and an interpreter strictly fulfilled the promise given. All were present at the time referred to. The attorney asked the interpreter to inquire of the chiefs if they knew the nature of an oath. The answer was they did. It was an appeal to the Great Spirit; but if they were called on to tell the truth, their word was sufficient. If it was found that one told an untruth in their nation, a council of the tribe would be held; and on the fact being manifest, he would be executed by the tribe, and the injured person would kill him justifiably. If they told truth, they would, at death, go to where the sun sets, and be always happy. If an untruth was told, they would go down in the earth to a place of fire. They further added, that an Indian always told the truth, but they had heard it was not always so with the white faces.

The Indian, in this case, was evidently innocent, and was discharged. His voluntary presence, with that of the chiefs, speaks well of the integrity of the nation.

Their simple estimate of truth might well be appreciated by many to whom it is commended.

METHODIST CHURCH CASE.

REPORT.

The undersigned, to whom by the decretal order of the above Court of the 26th day of November, 1851, the said cause was referred with directions to ascertain and report what was the amount and value of the property and fund mentioned in the pleadings in said cause, and called the "Book Concern of New York," at and immediately before division and organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in May, 1845, and of what specific property and effects the same consisted, and what has since been the increase thereof, and what the same now consists, specifying the profits derived from the Book Concern from the time of the General Conference of May, 1844, as reported thereto (if so reported) up to the time of the said division, and also specifying the profits from the last-mentioned time to the date of this report, and also to ascertain and report what part, if any, of such profits has been applied to the use of the beneficiaries of the said fund in connection with, or who became connected with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, or to the annual conferences composing the same, and to the other beneficiaries of the said fund, specifying the amounts to each class, and the times of the application thereof respectively. And further, to ascertain and report the numbers and proportions of beneficiaries qualified according to the usage and discipline of the Methodist Episcopal Church, before and at the time of the said division, to receive the benefit of the said trust fund, taking the proportion which the number of traveling preachers in the annual conferences which formed themselves into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, bears to the number of all the traveling preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church before the division thereof, as such members appear in the minutes intended as the "forthcoming minutes" in the resolutions of June, 1844, such minutes to be taken as correct as far as the same extends; and also to ascertain and report in what form as to specific property, funds, money or assets, the transfer of the shares to be set over to the trustees, agents, or appointees of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, may, with most convenience and advantage to both parties, be made, with such suggestions in relation thereto, from each party as he may see fit to report:

Begs leave most respectfully to report that, in pursuance to the said decretal order, he has proceeded to investigate the matters which he is therein directed to ascertain and report; and that in said investigation he was attended by the counsel and parties respectively, and received such proofs and evidences as was deemed requisite by the counsel of the respective parties to be produced before him, which proof and evidence are herewith returned with this report; and that the said defendants, in obedience to the requirements of the said decretal order, did produce under oath all deeds, account books of accounts, etc., as was called for by the counsel for the complainants.

That having heard the evidence of the parties and the arguments of counsel, he has proceeded to make up his report of the matters referred to him, the details of which will more particularly appear in the tabular statement thereto annexed; and in order that the Court may be informed of the reasons and principles which guide him in the statement of the said account, he craves leave to embody the same, and submit them with this report.

It was contended by the counsel for the complainants that as the trustees or agents for the Book Concern have, since the division of the Church, neglected and refused to allow the beneficiaries South to receive their share of the profits of the Book Concern, and denied their right to receive the same, that they must be regarded from time as misconducting and defaulting trustees, and must be charged in the account upon principles applicable to unfaithful trustees who have violated and repudiated their trust; or, as it was stated by the counsel in another form, as if they were defendants in action of trover and conversion.

To this I would remark—

1. That trustees are only, as a general rule, to be charged with reasonable care and diligence, together with perfect good faith; that mere errors of judgment in the honest administration of their trust, are not to entail upon them the consequences of a fraud; that the trustees in this case have violated their trust in denying to the Southern beneficiaries a participation in the fund, is settled by the decree of the Court; but that it was done fraudulently, or through dishonest motives, nowhere appears, either in the decree or in the proofs. On the contrary, it appears, that in doing as they did in a case of extraordinary embarrassment and difficulty, they supposed they were acting as the faithful guardians of the trust, and preventing its being wasted upon persons who had voluntarily thrown themselves beyond the pale of the charity.

They erred in point of law, but I do not think that they should be charged as misconducting trustees, when they were honestly, though mistakenly, endeavoring to conduct themselves as faithful conservators of the funds.

2. Even admitting they are to be charged as misconducting and fraudulent trustees, it does not follow that the beneficiaries should be so charged. The consequence of fraudulent conduct on the part of trustees, falls upon them personally, and not upon the fund or beneficiaries. I do not see that the share of the Northern beneficiaries can any more be charged with the misconduct or fraud of the trustees, than the beneficiaries themselves could be personally charged. If the Northern beneficiaries have received more than they are entitled to, which does not appear, the only consequence that I can perceive is, that they must refund.

3. Admitting, not only that the trustees have been guilty of misconduct and fraud, but that the Northern beneficiaries—preachers, widows and orphans—have connived, colluded or encouraged them in the fraud, would that alter the case? The trustees of this charity have the sole legal title and control of the fund, the beneficiaries, as such, are mere passive recipients of their periodical shares, having no more control over the trustees or their conduct, than the most entire stranger to the church and religion, whether Jew or Gentile. Though the trustees, therefore, may have approved and applauded it, their approbation or disapprobation being accompanied by no legal power, should be visited with no legal consequences; provided such approbation or disapprobation be not of conduct of such a nature as to deprive them of the character of beneficiaries, which could only be done I suppose according to the discipline of the Church, by expulsion or degradation. Besides the rights of the beneficiaries are not made by the founders or foundation of the charity dependent upon any approval or disapproval of the conduct of the trustees, the charity must be administered as it was founded, and even the court could have no power to interpolate or fabricate any conditions which would restrict or qualify either the number of the beneficiaries, or the amounts of their shares in the fund.

4. Again to state this account on the principles contended for, or as in action of trover and conversion, would, of course, (and such result is claimed) throw upon the Northern beneficiaries the entire responsibilities of this fund from the time of the division down to the date of this report, so that if by losses of trade, or casualties by fire, one-half of the entire fund (assuming that proportion for the present) had been destroyed, that half so destroyed would be regarded as the half belonging to the Northern beneficiaries. The South would then take the remaining half, and the North would be left destitute. The Northern traveling preacher must then go back to staff and scrip, and as a way-faring pilgrim go forth on the great mission of the church. Such would be a result plainly at war with the objects for which this charity was instituted, for it was intended to be a perpetual fund not only for the traveling preachers, etc., of the present time, but for their successors in all time to come, and whether greater or less, whether swelled by profits, or diminished by losses, was to be divided in due proportions to the beneficiaries of the whole church, whether North or South: and while the trustees of the present time can do nothing to impair the rights of the present beneficiaries, the present trustees and beneficiaries together can do nothing to impair or alienate the rights of successors, for that would be to concede to them the power of altering the very foundation of the charity.

5. Admitting that the account is to be stated on the principles claimed, and that the share of the Northern beneficiaries is to be charged as contended for, I do not see how the state of the account could be materially varied. What is the share of the beneficiaries? Merely a share in the profits, to be periodically divided, not a share in the capital—that is a fund consecrated to the Church, and the whole Church, North and South, not the Church of to-day, but of all time to come, and must be left as intact and intangible as was contemplated by the foundation of the charity.

Having thus settled the general principles upon which the said account is stated, I proceed to consider the evidence by which it was sustained.

In the management of the said Book Concern, it was the duty of the trustees to render a particular account and estimate of value of the property and effects of the Book Concern, and the net profits thereof, to the annual conferences. The accounts so rendered to the conferences since the division of the Church, were produced before me, and are hereto annexed and marked as exhibits. These accounts and estimates so rendered, the counsel for the complainants contend if not conclusive, at least most forcible evidence of the property and books of the Book Concern as against the defendants in the case, and is not to be rebutted except upon the most complete and undoubted testimony. The trustees and agents of the Concern who made up and reported those accounts and estimates, now swear that they are erroneous: altogether too high, and the alleged excess amounts to a very large sum, which makes the question as to the character and effect of that evidence one of some importance. The counsel for complainants contend that the declarations of the trustees, especially in this apparently formal and considerate manner, being the declarations of common agents in the course of their business, is not only evidence, but evidence of binding force against the defendant or beneficiaries—that the declaration of an agent made in the course of, and in the scope of his business, is binding upon the principal, and is not to be questioned or doubted: but this, I conceive, relates to what he says when dealing with third parties. What an agent says to his principal when giving him an account of his proceedings, or favoring him with his opinion or estimates of the value of his estate, if any evidence at all, is of but comparatively little force—(see Taunt 4, R. 511, ib. 565, 563)—and it seems to me that the reports made by the book agents to the annual conferences are to be regarded in the light of declarations made by agent to his principal, while giving an account of his actings and doings. As these agents, therefore, who make those estimates, and who of course know how and what they estimated, I have taken their testimony on oath before me, instead of their unsworn statements to the conferences, as the evidence of value—no other or better having been produced before me.

It was also contended by the counsel for defendants that there should be a further deduction from the value of the Book Concern as estimated in the reports to the annual conferences, on the ground that the stereotype plates had been twice estimated first, as stereotype plates; second, that they were again included in the estimates of the sheet stock. This seems to be contended upon the principle that after the plates have been printed from they are reduced to a certain extent in value, and that the diminished value of the plates has passed into the bound stock. Such undoubtedly is the case, but the evidence appears to be that all due allowance were made; and the account therefore stated without making the deduction claimed.

In stating the said account, I have considered that the annual dividends due and unpaid to the Southern beneficiaries, etc., be much added annually to the capital stock of the Concern, upon which annual dividends from the time they respectively become due interest at the rate of 7 per cent is allowed down to the date of this report; that the aggregate of said dividends, and the interest thereon, is said to be deducted from the general fund, for the benefit of the Southern beneficiaries: and that the entire balance of the Book Concern is to form the subject of the ultimate division according to the proportions of the traveling preachers.

In determining the number of traveling preachers, I have included the probationers or those preachers who have not traveled four years as beneficiaries of the fund, they having been regarded as such by the Church, and being allowed to participate in it, at least to a certain extent, and if they were not within the meaning of the charity they had no right to participate in it all, and in point of fact they are literally traveling preachers.

In fixing the dates when the number of traveling preachers is to be estimated, I have taken the minutes of 1844, instead of 1845, considering from the "forthcoming minutes" referred to in the resolutions and in the decree of the Court, and also as being the most equitable, for the reason that it appears to have been considered by the General Conference of 1844, and it seems with great justice that if, in pursuance of their resolutions, the Church should be divided, the division should for this purpose date back to 1844, and should be made upon the basis of matters as they stood at that time—that if their recommendation should be adopted, there being no intermediate General Conference, nor any intermediate general action or co-operation, but each party acting separately and disconnectedly, through its annual conferences, all connection might be regarded as having ceased in 1844, and that the subsequent proceedings should be regarded merely as the formal organization of a division or disconnection which, in point of fact, dated from 1844.

Upon the foregoing principles the account contained in tabular statement before referred to, and hereby annexed, is settled and adjusted.

ACCOUNT.

In the account furnished, the value in property in January, 1845, was $562,235 76.

Of which the real estate, with steam engine and water works, was $102,141 98.

The printing office, stereotype plates and engravings, and metal and wood cuts was $77,690 77.

Foundry materials $6,245; bindery, with presses, etc., $6,246 67.

Notes $54,825; book accounts $17,[illegible]; deduct bad debts, $58,751.

Merchandise, books, etc., $74,650; sheet stock, $53,933; paper and furniture in office, $4,198.

Cash in hand, $1,333; available funds, $27,000.

Due on periodical books, $43,450; deduct liabilities on book account, $4,506.

Deduct twenty per cent. for bad debts, $46,880.

Net profits for the year, $44,231.

Annual profits, viz: 1845, (this shared by South) $32,913; 1846, $23,462; 1847, $38,900; 1848, $37,583; 1849, ($1,102 paid to delegate and counsel fee) $17,733; 1850, $7,911 52; 1851, $68,656.

Value of property of Book Concern on 1st January, 1852, $608,413; of which real estate (being buildings and lots in Crosby and Mulberry streets, and a house and lot in Havana) $131,277.

Cash, etc., $43,316; due on periodicals, $10,000; merchandise, being books, etc., $179,541; printing office, stereotype plates, etc., $98,088; foundry, $589; bindery, $1,957; notes, $54,503; book accounts, $[illegible],073; deduct $38,505 (being 20 per cent. for bad debts: owes on book account $17,[illegible]; deduct the bad debts, already stated, $60,[illegible].

The increase of the value of the Concern since 1845, $46,177.

Amounts of annual profits since 1845 paid to the Northern beneficiaries including bishops, which latter was $4,360 two first, and $4,[illegible] three latter years—1846, $18,350; 1847, $15,250; 1848, $17,051; 1849, $10,850; 1850, $24,450; 1851, $26,950.

The case now comes up on exceptions to the report of referee. Mr. Lord appearing for plaintiffs, and Mr. Fancher for defendants. It is contended for plaintiffs that the value as presented to the conference in 1845 should be considered as the real value, which is $870,000 more than reported by the referee—$185,000 active property. It is also contended that plaintiffs are entitled to the option of taking interest or profits since—and also that they should receive their shares in money. On the other hand it is contended that the report of the referee (J. W. Nelson, Esq., Clerk of the Court) is correct, and the sum due the Southern Church is $36,486 50, deducting $10,184 10 interest on the value of three Southern newspapers, all the profits of which the South have retained—leaving the South for dividends and interest to Oct. 1, 1852, $46,302 20.

It is stated that the number of traveling preachers entitled to the benefit of the fund is 3,303 belonging to the Church North, and 1,320 belonging to the Church South.

In relation to the payments of the widow of Bishop Heddling, it was stated, that the Bishop bequeathed $10,000 to the Book Concern, subject to an annuity of $700 a year to his widow, which has been paid and should be deducted from the share of profits due the South.

THE RAPIDS OF THE ST. LAWRENCE.

Only a few years have passed since the first attempt was made to "run the Long Sault" by a steamer. Now all the Rapids from Dickinson's Landing, about forty miles below Cornwall, to Montreal, are passed over by the daily lines of steamers; and we think we can assert without fear of contradiction, that the passage of the St. Lawrence from Kingston to Quebec is the most interesting of any known to the traveler. Those who have passed through the Lachine Rapids will bear testimony to the terrible fulness of the following description, especially to the appearance of the Indian pilot, while the boat is dashing through the troubled waters:

SHOOTING THE RAPIDS.—But the rapids—or what is technically called "shooting the rapids," i. e., going through them in the steamboats, will be ample compensation for the trip; at least, when you have once got safely through with the shooting. One or two of these rapids are from nine to twelve miles long, the current descending with great rapidity—in some of them it is said, at the rate of twenty-five miles an hour—so that the water is broken into quite a white-capped sea, and pitching as it does over ledges of rocks, makes a novel and not altogether comfortable sort of river steamboat navigation. Whenever we approached one of them, four men were stationed at the wheel in the

Obituary.

DIED—At four o'clock this morning, at the residence of her father, on Bayou Black, Terrebonne, La. after three days' sickness, Lou..., second daughter of Michael Knighl, Esq., aged 12 years and 6 months.

The writer regrets her inefficiency to do justice to the subject of this memoir, for never has it been her privilege, until this instance, to stand by the dying couch of a spirit triumphing, with exulting boldness, over death and the grave, unshaken in a holy and sanctified hope, of a full salvation by faith in Christ. At the beginning of the recent protracted meeting at Tigerville, by the invitation of the itinerant ministers, Louisa, with many others, went day after day to the altar, seeking the Saviour. Often she rmised up from prayer, joined in the singing, whilst a sweet calm, like "the gentle dew upon the mown grass," suffused her countenance, assuring the bystander that she had found a peace the world knows nothing of. Sickness prevented her from attending the close of the meeting, on Lord yesterday, whilst alone with her parents and sister, He who formed the soul, and gave to it its capacities for enjoyment, poured into her waiting, trusting and prayerful heart, such a flood of light and love as to make her rejoice in anticipation of death, and her death-bed, the very gate of heaven to the souls of Christians around her. Her reason continued clear and vigorous, she talked unceasingly of the bliss of heaven, which her soul then had such a foretaste of, pleading with attending and weeping friends not to try to detain her spirit—not to weep. Once she piteously exclaimed "Poor sinners," and sang "Come yo sinners, poor and needy," etc. She exhorted all near, and had called around her many families on the bayou, and exacted from each a promise, that they too, would come home." To her teachers, and classmates she left a message. "To die!" she exclaimed repeatedly, "why I am going home, Christ is with me." To some expressions of anxiety to go, her father gently whispered, "but my daughter you must await the Lord's will;" and she calmly rested with closed eyes a few moments, then exclaiming, "oh, pa, what a blessed thing for me it is, that those ministers came among us, or my soul would have been lost; tell them pa, that I have gone home."

She sang several hyms, felt her pulse and whispered to a lady near, "how long will it be before I go?" then clasped her little hands and praised God for our redemption and salvation through Christ. Near the dissolution of soul and body she sang "When I can read my title clear," &c., bursting into a laugh, and raising her hands to heaven her spirit struggled to burst the confines of its clay tenement, whilst a halo of glory illuminated her countenance; and as her spirit was departing, she whispered to her weeping sister, "Sis, come home." A Thomas could at this instant have reached hither his finger and thrust it into the Saviour's side, and believed.

We have wept, not tears of sorrow: they were offerings of prayer and praise to Him, "who hath purchased our pardon." We receive the dispensation [as another hallowed seal upon the truths of the new covenant, another message of love from the Father, an owning of His Church and people, a manifestation of mercy, a building up of our faith, a link binding the followers of the meek and lowly Saviour more firmly to the Great Head of the Church. What an encouragement to those ministers of that Church, of which, this child so recently became a member, to continue their toils along the high-ways of the wilderness, calling sinners to repentence, brooking self-denial, and the opposition of man "whose breath is in his nostrils." "Thanks be to God, who has given us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.

General Intelligence.

Arrival of the Daniel Webster.

The steamship Daniel Webster, Captain O. J. Graffam, arrived Monday evening, in five days from San Juan. She brings dates from San Francisco to the 15th ult. only, and consequently her news was anticipated by the El Dorado

The steamship Star of the West—the new ship of the Vanderbilt line—sailed in company with the Webster, with 170 passengers, for New York. The Pacific connection was made with the S. S. Lewis, which left San Francisco on the 15th ult.

The vessels left at San Juan are as follows, viz: Metropolis, from New York; Sylphide, New Orleans and Navy Bay; Italian brig, Marseilles; Brunaen brig, Bremen; schooner Eagle, New Orleans; Jessie Hinefields, brig Ada, New Orleans; bark Martha Clark, from New York.

The following are the principal items of California news: The mining season has commenced, with every prospect of a successful harvest.

A very important ordinance has been introduced into the Board of Aldermen of San Francisco by Alderman Britton. The main features of which are, protection to the permanent trade and a material reduction of taxes on the laboring classes. By it transient traders, those who have no fixed place of business, who sell their wares on sidewalks, from carts and street cars, double the tax is to be imposed than now exists. Supercargos of ships, or Captains who collect freight monies or sell cargoes, are required to pay a heavy license. The license on carmen is reduced one half, that on boatmen stricken out entirely.

On the 10th ult., the thermometer ranged from 74 degrees to 100 degrees in San Francisco

Messrs. F. Soule, G. W. Shaw, D. M. Chauncey, Lieut. Governer Purdy and Mayor Selby were robbed at Cruces while crossing the Isthmus.

Judge Root, of San Joaquin, died suddenly, at his residence at Stockton.

Messrs. J. W. Wiley and T. F. McElroy are about to establish a newspaper at Olympia, Oregon, to be called the Columbian.

According to the last advices from the overland immigrant route, the Indians do not trouble the trains, their depredations not extending beyond isolated wagons or individuals.

We learn from the Deseret News of August 20, that the health of Salt Lake was good, and a great immigration passing through. Brother Platt was translating the book of the Mormons into Spanish. Great damage had resulted to the grain crop in the Valley from a terrible hail.

RETURN OF THE PAMPERO—Spring a Leak.—The steam ship Pampero left this port on the morning of the 7th inst. for San Juan, and at about half-past 11 o'clock, on the night of the 9th, when about 200 miles out from the South West Pass, she encountered a violent gale, causing her to spring a leak. It was soon ascertained that the vessel was making water freely, and the engine, with the pumps attached, was set at work to free her. The water however, continued to gain, and all hands, including the passengers, were put to work, but with the heavy cross-sea which was running, all their efforts could not master the leak. As a last resource, the bilge injection was worked by the engine, and by this means the ship was kept afloat. The captain deemed it advisable to return to port, and he arrived here yesterday morning. It is said that the damage to the vessel is but trifling. She is lying at Hewes' ship yard, Algiers. The cause of the leak is not yet known.

HEAVY RECEIPTS OF COTTON. The receipts of cotton at this port from 0 o'clock Sunday evening up to 7 o'clock Monday evening, amount to 21,120 bales, as follows: Bales.

RAILROAD TAX.—We learn from the Aberdeen Democrat that the proposition for taxing the citizens of Monroe, (Miss.) county for the benefit of the Mobile and Ohio and the New Orleans and Nashville railroads, was carried by a large majority. The vote stood, 613 for and 426 against it.

MEMPHIS AND CHARLESTON RAILROAD.—That portion of this road between Tuscumbia and Decatur is progressing finely, and it is expected that it will be completed between these two points by the middle of December or the first of January.

The last English papers say that the will of Nield, the miner, who left all his property to queen Victoria, will be contested by the heirs, on the ground that he was insane when he made it. The papers also mention that Victoria had determined upon building a new castle for herself out of the money so bequeathed to her. The castle would cost about £100,000.

THE CANE CROP.—The Franklin (La.) Banner of the 9th says: The cane crop of our parish was never more promising than at the present time, and our planters anticipate a better yield than they have had for seven years past. The late rain was not of sufficient duration to materially affect the cane, but a much longer continuance of it might have caused irreparable injury. At the present, appearances promise a fine yield, both in quantity and quality, and a comparison of our crops with those of Iberville and other parishes, will be found greatly in favor of St. Mary. Our grinding season is now drawing near. Mr. F. D. Richardson will commence next week, Mr. Hord, of Bayou Sale, on the 18th, and many others about the same time. The weather is now favorable, and if no killing frost intervenes, there is no doubt this will prove a profitable year for the planters of St. Mary.

Madame Pulszky, since her return to Europe, has completed an account of the residence and travels of Kossuth and his companions in the United States.

ARRIVAL EXTRAORDINARY.—The Mobile Herald of Thursday says: "We understand that by a vessel which arrived here on Tuesday from Boston, came forty huxom lasses, who are to constitute a part of the menage of the Belle House."

CRUEL.—An exchange makes the following ungallant assertion: "Many ladies have two faces; one face to sleep in, and another to show in company. The first is generally reserved for the husband and family at home, the other to put on to please strangers."

A TRAVELING CHICKEN COOP.—A new system of taking chickens to market has been put in practice. It is simply a railroad car, on the principle of a refrigerator, the sides, bottom, etc., filled with some non-conductor of heat, and attached to the axle by an ingenuous gearing, which drives a bellows pump or other cooling machine, which expels the hot air and keeps the contents cool. Such a car was loaded with chickens and other dixin's at Watertown, a few days ago, and passed over the several railroads to New York. [Rome (N. Y.) Sentinel.

AN IMMENSE CLAIM.—All the papers for a claim of land, have lately been filed with the Land Commissioner in California, covering four hundred square leagues of land, (1,600 square miles) to be located on the west bank of the Sacramento river, extending from Puta Creek to a point above Shasta city, and reaching back to Clear Lake and the Coast Range. The tract specified includes nearly all of Shasta, Colusi, and Yolo counties. The claimants are the heirs of Augustin de Hurbide, the first Emperor of Mexico, who was once banished, returned with a military expedition, was taken prisoner, and shot.

VINEYARDS AROUND CINCINNATI.—A committee was appointed last spring by the Cincinnati Horticultural Society to obtain statistics in regard to the vineyards and wine-making in Hamilton county, and from their report we learn that in 1845 there were 88 vineyards near that city, covering 150 acres, and the number commenced since will swell the aggregate amount to 1,200 acres. The business gives employment to 600 laborers, at a cost of $120,000 per year: and the annual yield is about 240,000 gallons of wine, estimated to be worth about the same number of dollars. Besides the cultivators and wine dressers, employment is also given to wood coopers, equal to the making of 6000 barrels, estimated at $8000.

THE LIQUOR LAW IN MAINE.—The Boston Chronicle relates the following instance of the enforcement of the Liquor Law in Maine: "A case occurred in Maine, under the Maine law. A man was brought up on a warrant, tried, and fined $10, which he paid. He was tried on the same warrant, at the same time, and met by the same witnesses, for a second offence, and fined $20, which he paid. He then and there was tried on a third offence, and fined $20. He could not pay that fine: he had expended all his means. The Justice said he should send him to jail. His wife interceded on the behalf of her husband; she said he was sick, and could not live long at best, and would die in jail. The Justice was inexorable. He sent him to the house of correction. In four weeks the town had notice to send for his dead body and bury it."

THE RICE CROP.—"The last week has been," says the Georgetown (S. C.) Winyah Observer, of the 6th inst., "favorable to the planters for gathering in their crops. The harvest is progressing rapidly, and in ten or twelve days the greater portion of the rice crop will be stacked in the yards. We cannot, until the harvest is over, form a correct idea as regards the present yield."

"We learn from a planter," says the Wilmington (N. C.) Herald of the 6th inst., "that the rice crop this season is fully equal, if not superior, to the best average crop of former years. The yield is abundant, and but little damage has been done by freshets or birds. One or two plantations have suffered from the ravages of the latter, but as a general thing the injury has been slight. The planters have been busy in harvesting for some time past, though the entire crop is not yet in."

THE U. S. MARINE HOSPITAL AT NATCHEZ.—The Concordia Intelligencer says: "This splendid edifice has been so far finished and furnished as to be now open for the reception of all such patties as are entitled to its accommodations; and there consist of such seamen and river boatmen as have paid hospital commutation money, which is a sum of two dimes per month; provided they shall have paid such hospital due not any time within four months of the time at which they shall make application for admission into the Hospital.

"The edifice is the most imposing one in Natchez or its environs; stands on the highest elevation in the county of Adams, half a mile north of the compact part of the city of Natchez, and commands a view from the cupola of the Mississippi river for some eighteen miles, the entire circuit of the county, and a large portion of the parish of Concordia on the Louisiana shore."

FROST.—The Missouri Brunswicker, of the 2d inst., says that the first frost, worth noticing, occurred on the previous Saturday night, and was severe enough in the low bottoms and on the high prairies to injure the tobacco very much, which was standing exposed. Fortunately, most of the tobacco was cut, and we hope that the loss will not be great. Here in Brunswick the tenderest plants were scarcely nipped, and the weather has turned off delightfully warm to mature the unripe vegetation which escaped the frost. We hear various suppositions relative to the amount of tobacco which has been injured by the frost in this part of the State—some estimating it at one-eighth of the crop, and others at more. The injured tobacco will generally be cut and sold green from present appearances; ug tobacco will be in demand at remunerating prices."

A LOST CHILD FOUND.—The St. John (N. B.) Freeman gives an account of the finding of a boy, aged five years, after being lost for nine days. The little fellow, when found, it is said, appeared perfectly unconcerned; said he had lost his way, and had been living on berries. He cried the first day, but not afterwards. The first night he slept in a tree, but he said he was afraid he would fall when asleep, and on the other nights he slept on the ground.

A WARNING TO MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES.—A Miss Maria E. Mason has recovered a judgment of $203 against the town of Springfield, Mass., for injuries sustained by her owing to the upsetting of a sleigh. The accident was caused by obstructions placed on the road by the town authorities. The obstructions consisted of sticks of timber placed there for the purpose of being used on a bridge a few rods distant, then undergoing repairs.

EMIGRATION TO CALIFORNIA.—The steamer Georgia sailed from New York, on Tuesday, the 5th last, for Aspinwall, with 700 passengers, including 100 mechanics and laborers for the Panama Railroad.

THE BRITISH ARMY IN THE COLONIES.—From a parliamentary paper just issued, it appears that the amount of the British regular troops employed in the colonies in 1847–8, was 1055 officers and 39,501 non-commissioned officers and men. The cost for pay was £1,404,854. In 1848–9, the amount was 1712 officers and 59,100 non-commissioned officers and men. The cost for pay was £2,136,709; while in 1849–50 the amount was 1675 officers and 38,752 non-commissioned officers and men; and the cost of pay was £1,329,559.

STOLEN MONEY RECOVERED.—Over $10,000 of the money which was stolen from the Mount Vernon Bank, at Foster, R. I., has been discovered. It was found under the floor of the old church at Coventry. Two men, named Christopher C. Place and James Boughton, have been arrested, charged with stealing the same.

BUTTER.—The California demand for butter is so great that in Boston the price has advanced from five to ten cents per pound. One firm has received an order to ship one hundred and twenty-five thousand pounds; and probably in all a quarter of a million pounds have been ordered from that State within a short time.

HIDDEN TREASURE.—The Boston Herald states that on the 2d inst., among other articles offered for sale at one of the auction stores in that city was an antique desk. While a lad was examining its curious and intricate apartments, his finger came in contact with a secret spring, and a door flew open, revealing $100 in gold and $25 in silver coin, all bright as if new from the mint.

CHOLERA ON THE RIVER.—The Louisville Courier of the 6th says, that on the Saturday previous, six persons, some named Bohanon and the others Bridges, bound down the river on a moving boat, on their way to Texas or Arkansas, landed at Concordia in this State, to get medical aid for one of their number who had the cholera. He died on that day, and three of the rest died of the same disease yesterday morning, and the only two survivors were dying yesterday when the Fawn came up. Any friends they may have left in the city are requested to go down and take charge of the boat and property.

AN ACCOMPLISHED SWINDLER.—The St. Louis Union says: "The accomplished swindler who passed himself off as a Spanish or Mexican officer, and who is now in jail at Cleveland, Ohio, charged with robbing Meikle of $49,000, is a German by birth, and is well known in this city. A few years ago, during a brief visit among us, he was received in the best society, and contracted a matrimonial alliance with a lady who is very respectably connected in this city and in Illinois. While here he became "unpopular" on account of the eccentricity of his manners, and because of his frequent attempts to examine the contents of his neighbors' trunks and money boxes. He got in several scrapes, but he was invariably screened, from the fact that his father occupied a very high position in Europe."

INGENIOUS SCHEME.—A London paper informs us that a large number of companies have been formed in England in aid of emigration to Australia. One of these, which rejoices in the title of the "Great Australian Emigration Company," proposes to send out emigrants at £30 per head, the money to be advanced to them on the security of a friend, resident in England. This sum to be repaid by installments, through the company's agents in the colony to which the emigrant is bound. For the use of this £30, he gives his bond to the company to pay to their agents one-fourth of his earnings for two years. The friend acting as security is required either to make a deposit equal in amount, or to take an equivalent number of shares—the money being returned to him at the end of the two years if the emigrant fulfills his contract with the company.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.—On Tuesday week, at the plantation of Mr. Thomas Jones, near Carrollton, Miss., Mr. Hiram Duncan went into the well for the purpose of cleaning it out, when it caved in upon him to the extent to nearly bury him. Mr. Jones and a negro man endeavored to draw him out, but could not do it without violent injury to Mr. Duncan. The negro man went into the well then to take the dirt off of him, when a perfect avalanche of caving took place, filling the well to the depth of some fifteen feet, and entirely covering them both several feet. Assistance was immediately procured, and all hands made to get them out—late that evening they were taken out, dead beyond the physician's skill to resuscitate. Mr. Duncan was a poor man, and leaves a wife and several little children quite dependent. The negro belonged to Mr. Jones.

A MELANCHOLY CASE.—The St. Louis Union of the 9th says: Among the passengers on the Banner State were the three Miss Stunts, who are just in from the Plains. These ladies formerly resided in Ripley county, Indiana, and in the month of April last, in company with some seven or eight members of their family, passed through this city en route for California. They had not made any considerable progress in their journey across the plains, before the cholera in its most malignant form, made its appearance among them, and when they reached the city of Salt Lake, every male member of the party had fallen victims to the awful scourge. Thus left alone, and without their natural protectors, the ladies determined to return home, and performed the return trip without encountering any extraordinary gyrations. This is a very remarkable and painfully interesting case.

A LONG EXILE.—On the 9th instant, says the New Prussian Gazette, a small carriage, drawn by two small ponies, stopped at a hotel in Klosterstrasse, at Berlin. In it were an old man, meanly dressed, with a beard reaching to his breast, and a female nearly as aged as himself. The innkeeper, not pleased with their appearance, and not understanding the language in which the old man addressed him, refused to receive them. The old man then spoke in French to an officer who was passing, and requested him to speak to the innkeeper. the informed the officer that he came from Siberia, where he was transported in 1812 as a prisoner, he being at the time a sergeant in the French army. After marrying, and living in Siberia forty years, he had suddenly felt a strong desire to visit his native country, and with the aid of the Russian authorities had set out for Nancy, the place of his birth.

GONE TO INDIA.—Father Mathew, and five other Roman Catholic Priests, have sailed for Calcutta. Their business in India is, it is reported, the foundation of a Romish see at Hyderabad.

GOOD FEE.—It is said that in the case of Goodyear vs. Day, Mr. Webster, as Goodyear's counsel, received a retainer of $10,000 the day he took his seat at the table to try the case.

LARGE LAND SALE.—A tract of land containing 35,000 acres is to be sold at the Court-house in Natchez, on the first of November next. It is land granted by the Legislature for the improvement of the navigation of the Homochitto river

A BAD SPECULATION.—At Pittsfield, Mass., a few nights since, Dr. Root heard somebody trespassing upon his pear tree, and running out suddenly surprised the rogue, who ran off without so much as bidding the doctor good night, leaving a gold watch hanging on a twig of the tree. He made good time going, and left valuable fruit hanging.

From Peru and Chili.

EXCITEMENT ABOUT THE LOBOS ISLANDS.—The intelligence from Peru is of a very interesting character. A correspondent of the New York Herald writes from Valparaiso, Chili, that the utmost excitement or awhile existed in consequence of information received from the Chilian Minister at Washington, announcing that Com. McKinley had been instructed not only to look after American interests, but actually to take possession of the Lobos Islands, belonging to Peru as is claimed. The Valparaiso papers denounce the measure as unjust and piratical in the extreme, and charge that the next step in aggression will be the pursuing down on the Juan Fernandez Islands by the piratical Americans. This perturbation was somewhat quelled, however, by the quiet entrance of the flag ship Raritan into the harbor of Valparaiso, on the 19th of August, where she dropped anchor. Nevertheless, the Peruvians, as hitherto stated, took the precaution to garrison the islands, and at last accounts were still busily preparing to prevent foreign aggression. They had placed on the barren and desert Isle a governor and armed force, with its entire navy, (two small steamers) and Congress had authorized the purchase of three more, and then, Dustin was to take command. They have not been very careful, are the some of the vessels which left New York to load with the precious manure, in accordance with Secretary Webster's advice, have met with a very warm reception.

The Valparaiso letter says:

"Such vessels would not be friendly met with a warm reception at this time, unless protected by a manned war, as Peru is determined to all hazards to protect her interests in that quarter. And well she may make the attempt at least for without the revenue derived by the sale of the Lobos guano she would soon be without the credit or means to keep in motion the wheels of her dilapidated government."

We make the following other Chilian items as follows:

The down fall in the mining districts is highly flattering, and the exportation of silver from Copiapo large.

The different vessels of the Flores expedition have been disarmed in Paita; the principal leaders, the[illegible] Wright and Guerra, have received notice to leave the country, and a few hundred Americans and Chilians are thrown fruitlessly into the chapels of Peru.

The advance in flour at San Francisco has caused this article to advance at Valparaiso. Freights have also materially advanced—a vessel having been chartered to load with flour at $18 per ton for San Francisco. Coal sold at $22@24 per ton; Chilli coal, $15.

THINGS IN OREGON.—The St. Louis Republican publishes the following interesting letter from Oregon:

JUNCTION CITY, Benton Co., O. T., Aug. 17, 1852.

This year's emigration is beginning to drop in upon us. They report great distress on the last end of the route, from the lack of grass, teams giving out, and depredations committed by the Snake Indians, west of Fort Hall, etc. What the poor emigrant will do this year for food, after he gets in, God only knows. Now, flour sells quick at $20 per bbl., and just after harvest, when it is generally at its lowest price. We cannot get bought for bread or seed for less than $2 00 per bushel. Some say it will be $4 per bushel, and say they won't sell until they get that. The emigrant can't pay such prices. He will not have the means to do so, and therefore must suffer. You may ask, has your wheat crop failed in Oregon? No, sirs; there is no such thing as crops of any kind failing here.

But unless disposition to work has failed, hardly raising enough for themselves, of either bread or seed—making their living, and having something left to "salt down" out of their stock, butter, cheese, pork, bacon, eggs, and chickens. Cows readily bring $75; beef cattle $10 per 100 pounds on foot. American horses and mules, $150 to $300; butter 20c.; cheese 50c per lb.; pork this year will be worth 35c.; bacon about 50c; eggs quick at $1 per dozen; chickens at the farmer's door, $12 per dozen, all which accumulates on and around the farm without labor. All old Oregonians, (in before 1850) are rich, and say they would rather buy wheat at $3 per bushel than raise it. Why? Because they don't like to work. Oregon this year, will have to get bread from Missouri, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and Ohio, and flour will be worth $30 per bbl. before next crop comes in. It is said that the wheat crop in Chili is short this year. If so, your Western farmers may expect good prices for their produce this year.

From present prices, any one can see the great inducement for farmers here in Oregon, to off coats and go to ploughing, and let the gold mines alone. All can't be miners; if we are we must starve before relief gets to us from the States."

The Oregon gold mines in Canyon, Rogue River and Shasta have paid this summer, on an average, one ounce to the hand.

FURTHER BY THE AMERICA—FRENCH EMPIRE—SHIPWRECK.—New York, October 13.—The general news brought by the America embraces but few items of striking interest.

THE MISSISSIPPI LEGISLATURE.—The Southern Star, of Jackson, Miss., of the 5th inst., says:

The Legislature met at the Capitol in extraordinary session yesterday. The two Houses were appropriately saluted by their presiding officers, and duly organized. Mr. E. P. Russell was elected Clerk of the House of Representatives, upon the first ballot, vice Mr. F. L. Swann, resigned. Several notices were given in the House, for the introduction of bills for a future day. Hon. Jas. H. R. Taylor, of Marshall, announced his purpose to introduce a bill, postponing the time for submitting to the people the question of the payment of the bonds of the State, given to enable her to take stock in the Planter's Bank, until Nov. 1853.

The Message of the Governor is pronounced in good taste, etc.

MCNAB'S LEDGE.—It has been found impracticable to build a light-house on Minot's ledge, Boston Harbor, which could withstand the action of the waves. It is but a year or two since the light-keeper on the ledge lost his life by the destruction of an iron structure which had been erected on it. At the last session of Congress $80,000 was appropriated for the erection of a new light-house, and it is proposed to securely place upon the ledge a hollow iron shaft, rising to the desired height, provided upon the outside with means by which access could be had to the top. Within the shaft, entering at the base, let a pipe of gutta percha, metal, or other material, suitable for the conveyence of an illuminating gas, pass to the top, where are burners securely protected from injury by storm and tempest. By the side of the pipe, and communicating with the shore, let electrodes of copper pass up to the burner. By a very simple apparatus, a continuance could be made, by which gas could be let on and off at pleasure by a person upon the shore, in the most tempestuous hours; and by an equally simple apparatus, with some platinum wire this jet of gas could be ignited at pleasure by the same person.

LATEST FROM THE AFRICAN.—Mr Wells, of the American Express Company, returned from the wreck of the Atlantic this morning, accompanied by M. Maillefert and the assistants. Mr. Wells reached the vicinity of the wreck on Friday morning last, on the Columbia, with every thing necessary to raise the wreck. The preparations were ample and perfect. It was found that the buoys attached to the wreck had been removed nearly half a mile from the spot where they were originally placed. This was supposed to be owing to the heavy winds that had prevailed for several preceding days. The wreck was found after a day's search. On Saturday, John Green, the famous diver, went down to the Atlantic four times. The time required to reach the wreck is four minutes, and it is impossible for the diver to remain more than three minutes. It is safe to stay under water from nine to twelve minutes. On the following day four more descents were made. But he was unable to find the state room in which the Express Company's safe is lodged, nor could he determine his exact position on the boat, except that he was aft of the gallows frame. The water was thick and muddy, and the vessel covered with slime. [Buffalo Commercial, 4th.

Great Indignation Meeting.

ON LAFAYETTE SQUARE

It having been announced at the great meeting at the Arcade on Thursday night last, that a similar meeting would take place Monday night on Lafayette Square, for the purpose of giving another testimony of the deep indignation felt by the community at the late high handed and insane outrage perpetrated by the slaves of Spanish Royalty in Havana towards the U. S. Mail Ship Crescent City, great preparations were made for the event. Stands were erected in the middle of the square, on North street, next to the American Theatre, and meetings were also organized fronting the square under the portico of the Presbyterian Church and of the City Hall.

Long before the appointed hour, all the avenues leading to the places of meeting were thronged by excited thousands. Soon, from the crowds that surrounded them, the approach to the stands became a labor of perseverance and strength.

The meeting was announced by the firing of thirty-two guns, and rockets were let off, illuminating with their gorgeous colors the city far and wide. The interior of the square and the bordering streets were filled to such a degree as to become almost impassable. The numbers present were variously estimated at from fifteen to twenty-five thousand. No eye could take in the vast sea of restless, billowing, excited masses. The meeting around the main stand, in the centre of the square, was called to order by Col. Wm. Monaghan, who nominated the following officers:

PRESIDENT—Col. Wm. Christy.

VICE-PRESIDENTS—Hon A D Crossman, Gen John L. COMMITTEE OF RESOLUTIONS.—Judge Alex Walker, Wm Scott Haynes, Wm Monaghan, D I Ricardo, J K Hayman

The band then played "Hail Columbia," "The Star-Spangled Banner," and "Yankee Doodle," at the first notes of which last there was a deep, general and prolonged shout!

Col. Wm. Christy, on assuming the Chair, said, that he had nothing to add to what he had said at the meeting on Thursday night, at the Arcade. He had this to say—that our flag had been most wantonly insulted, and that we must have an apology, or we must retaliate (Cries of "War! war! give us war!") The President made some further unanimated remarks, and introduced to the meeting Needler R. Jennings, who came forward.

Mr. Jennings said that it was not necessary that he should say he felt embarrassment at being called on to address this multitudinous assemblage. He had been selected to speak to them because he was a passenger in the steamer Crescent City, during the voyage on which she had been refused admittance into the port of Havana, and that being a witness to this unprecedented outrage, he had been called on for his testimony, and he would give it. He spoke of the repeated outrages perpetrated upon our flag by the besotted minions of Spain, and said that, although justice had not already been visited upon them by the bloody hand of war, it was not because our Government was unable to inflict it. He alluded to the laurels which had been won by our gallant Navy—of the exploits of Decatur, and other great Captains upon the deep, and said it needed not the humiliation of the Spanish power to add one laurel to the glorious wreath that encircled the brows of our naval and military heroes. The present assemblage, he said, was an evidence of that feeling that reigned throughout the length and breadth of the land—from the St. Lawrence to the Gulf, and from the Gulf to the Pacific—of that martial spirit which tells that the national honor shall not be insulted with impunity. He was on board the Crescent City and had heard of the order of the Captain General for her exclusion from the port of Havana. The order had been transmitted from the Captain General to the Spanish Minister at Washington, which refused admission to the Crescent City with Mr. Purser Smith on board of her. Captain Porter, on hearing of this order, declared to the Spanish Minister that Mr. Purser Smith had had nothing to do with the publication in the New York papers of the unwelcome reports as to the state of affairs in Cuba, and he had thought thor the Minister would inform the government of Havana of the true state of the facts, and that the obnoxious order would be rescinded. It was not done, and all know what followed. Our flag had been wantonly insulted. We claimed now, retribution for the indignity, and he would say, that as we were in the right, all we had to do was to "go ahead!" We had a treaty with Spain that stipulated mutual advantages. Spain received the benefits, but declined to render an equivalent. She had accepted our courtesies and paid them off with indignities. He mentioned the cases of the El Dorado and of the Philadelphia, and of the assistance that had been denied them in times of distress. The speaker here introduced a letter from Captain Porter to the United States Consul on the occasion of the Crescent City being driven out of the port of Havana.

The latter stated that on the arrival of his vessel, he had received an order from the Captain of the Port to come to anchor alongside of the Guard Ship. In a few minutes he heard a noise as of some one ascending the sides of his vessel. It was a soldier, who had been ordered to post himself on the quarter-deck. The soldier said that he had been sent by the Captain of the Port. Captain Porter ordered him off, gave him two minutes to leave, and threatened that if he did not obey, he (Captain Porter) would fire into the Guard Ship. He (Captain Porter) was there, without water, without provisions, and asked permission to remain long enough to obtain them. The Captain of the Port announced that unless soldiers were allowed to be stationed on the deck, he and his passengers might starve! He preferred to starve rather than submit to such an indignity, and he did not submit! He knew the authority of the Captain of the Port, and sent this letter to the acting American Consul as a protest against such outrageous proceedings. The consequence, said Mr Jennings, was, that the steamer was infamously driven out—kicked out of the port, (laughter and cheers.) He would say in the language of the late lamented S. S. Prentiss—of that all eloquent, half angel man!—that if our country was to submit to such indignities, it were better that the stars were blotted out from our glorious flag, and that the Eagle should be cast forth to the jeers of a scoffing world as an emblem of our imbecility and degradation! A committee was then appointed to draft resolutions expressive of the sense of the meeting, composed of Col. Wm. Monaghan, Judge Alex. Wallace, J. K. Rayburn, Col. Wm. Scott Haynes and D. I. Ricardo. The resolutions were read by Mr. Haynes and adopted by acclamation:

Whereas, The Spanish authorities of the Island of Cuba have, in the expulsion of the steamer Crescent City and its passengers from the port of Havana, been guilty of a flagrant breach, with unprecedented contempt, of the existing amicable relations between the Government of Spain and that of the United States, committed a most gross and flagrant outrage upon American citizens and the American flag, alike repugnant to the faith of treaties, the laws of nations and the enlightened sense of the civilized world, calling for prompt redress and ample satisfaction on the part of an insulted people; therefore be it

Resolved, That the first duty of Government is the protection of its citizens and the commerce covered by its flag, wherever, wherever, and by whomsoever menaced and violated; that this meeting expects with abiding confidence that our Government will peremptorily demand and enforce full, prompt and immediate satisfaction for this most gross and flagrant outrage upon the rights of American citizens, and this wanton insult to the American flag.

Resolved, That in the prompt vindication of the outraged honor and insulted dignity of the American people, and in the enforcement of our just demands, even, if need be, to the declaration of war against Spain, the citizens here assembled pledge themselves to our Government and to each other, to support and sustain all measures to attain those patriotic and national results.

Resolved, That the President of this meeting and the Committee on Resolutions be requested to forward forthwith a copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States.

The Hon. John C. Larue, Judge of the 1st District Court, was then introduced to the meeting. He said, that he would not appear, were this any ordinary occasion, for, to do so would be inconsistent with his judicial station, but that here, when whig and democrat were joined together with one heart and one soul, and where the American spirit, animated every bosom, he could not refuse to lend his voice to the general remonstrance which arose from every part of this nation. We had borne long with Spanish injustice and Spanish insolence, but things had now come to a point at which no Government could refuse to call for satisfaction. (Immense cheering.) He believed in the principle, that if a mosquito should annoy him by buzzing around his face, he should knock it off! (Laughter and cheers.) Cuba was a source of annoyance to the United States. The United States wants Cuba, and wanting it, we should take it. (Applause.) We should take possession of it immediately—peaceably and by purchase, if we could, but if not, we should take it anyhow! (cries of good—lick 'em up like salt!) The Island was geographically ours, (cheers) and a part of our territory as much as the town of Algiers on the other side of the river was a part of New Orleans! (Great laughter.) The tides and the winds ascertained it, and the narrow strips of water between Key West and the Island and Cape San Antonia and Yucatan were parts and continuations of the great father of waters—the Mississippi! (Renowned laughter and applause). Cuba must belong to the United States. In the nature of things it ought to belong to us! (Great cheering). In the first place it was necessary to our safety, and necessity was the supreme law. The government of Cuba was a despotic one, and in the present position of things no freedom of thought or action was allowed, and dissatisfaction reigned throughout the Island. When the people had cried out against their oppressors and had striven to shake off the shackles that galled them, Spain had turned a deaf ear to their sufferings and threatened to arm the blacks against the natives, and to make the Island a second St. Domingo, with a population of negroes and a negro government. The bare possibility of such an outrageous proceeding justified the United States to take it under her protection. (Cheers.) Would we, submit to have a black Emperor on the other side of the Mississippi? (Cries of "No!" and "Shame on them!") Algiers was on the right bank of the Mississippi, and Cuba was on the right bank of the United States! (Loud laughter.) We must have Cuba, to put a stop to the annoyances to which we are subjected by it, and the sooner we take it the better. (Applause.) It had been said that such a proceeding would be contrary to the law of nations. The law of nations! We don't know what is the law of nations! An old gentleman named Vattell had written about the law of nations—and Grotius, and Burlemaque, and Montesque, and Bynkershoek, and others—but no nation paid the slightest attention to it. And saying no attention to this law, so often invoked, they say that we must not approach Cuba! When England appropriated province after province of the East India Empire, did she care for the opinion of Vatell? When she laid violent hands on Borneo, because it was contiguous to some of her possessions and interfered with her government of them, did she quote Grotius? When the powers of Europe laid their paws on Cracovia and partitioned it among their greedy monarchs, did they invoke the authority of Burlemaque? Do they, when they push their conquests and do all manner of injustice, disturb the spirits of Montesque and Bynkershock? No! The law of nations must be taken from the practice of nations, not from the opinions of philosophers shut up in cob-webbed closets, nor from the opinions of blue stocking ladies who write novels on the evils of slavery. There was a Providence that shaped our ends, and that same Providence would guide us in extending the dominion of the American flag over this continent in its length and breadth. The desire was general, and our boys aspired to it. The doctrines of old, black-letter tomes were not according to the spirit of the age, and whoever invoked them was like him who would run his go-cart against an engine! (Laughter and applause.) This government had a destiny to fill and must run its course until its laws and institutions were spread over the land, from the icy pole to the Isthmus of Darien—from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The proposition he would make was, that we should have immediate possession of Cuba. Save us, if possible, from the horrors of war—let us buy it if we can; but if not, let us have it any how! (Great cheering and cries of war! war!) It was, he said, his religious faith that we should have Cuba! Spain should apologise or fight. He did not believe she would apologise, but that as sure as the Lord hardened the heart of Pharoah to the lamentations of the Children of Israel; so that he would not hearken to Him, so sure would pride and arrogance harden the heart of Captain General Canedo, so that he would not listen to our demands of satisfaction. He did not expect an apology (we don't want it, from several voices—give us the Island!) The Government of Spain was a despicable sarcasm on all governments! One man was employed to tie the Queen's shoe; one to see her go to bed, and others to do like small services. It was an arrogant people, and had never recovered from that arrogance engendered at the conquest of Grenada, when the last Moor turned with sorrowing eye to gaze on the gorgeous towers of the Alhambra. The judgement day of Spain's dominations was at hand, when the last vestige of her power in the Caribbean sea would be gone, and nothing should be left of her but the memories of the past! America would wrest from her the best of her discoveries and her conquests. It was the will of God and the will of the people, (laughter) and was as certain as the coming on of doom. The American Continent should be possessed by one people and guided by one government, the model of the world to come. Judge Larue concluded amid great cheering.

The Hon. J. P. Benjamin, U. S. Senator elect, then came forward and made a masterly and brilliant effort, which for want of space we are unable to give—in which he advised the people to be calm and dignified, but determined, and suggested that the government should demand satisfaction of the Crown of Spain and enforce it at the point of the bayonet. He however did not believe that that arrogant country would render satisfaction, and that war and the conquest of the Island of Cuba would be the final result of the difficulty. Col. Campbell and others followed, at which time our report closed.

THE MEETING AT THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—At this point there was no regular organization, a large body of the audience in the square having moved to the spot and called for a speaker. The Cuban flag was unfurled on the steps of the church: cheers upon cheers were given for the little lone star, and soon after Mr. Lemley, a lawyer from the Fourth District, made his appearance upon the rostrum. He made a brief, but effective speech, which was well received.

He was followed by Dr. Ingru, also from the Fourth District, who spoke both in English and German. He was very enthusiastic, and allowed himself to be drawn into some expressions which we did not think well timed or judicious.

Next came Mr. B. F. Houghton, a promising young member of the bar, who made a most effective appeal to his audience. His language was moderate but forcible, and the applause which he received told how well the sentiments he expressed coincided with those of his listeners.

Dr. Lockwood was then announced, and, in a brief address, he made a very favorable impression.

Mr. E. J. Carrell having been sent for and requested to address the assemblage, which at this time was large, he appeared upon the stand, or rather the steps, and made a speech, which, though not of great length, was most effective. It was listened to with great attention.

Next came Messrs. Judson, Abbotte, Wm. Scott Haynes, White and others: all of whom were received with applause.

THE MEETING AT THE CITY HALL.—There was a tremendous gathering in and about the City Hall, and a large number of ladies present made the scene one of much interest and attraction.

Capt. Stockton was selected as President, and he made a few remarks by way of an introduction to the regular proceedings. Mr. Wyndham Robertson was the first speaker. He was followed by Mr. Carrell, and after him came Sam. C. Reed, jr. Col. Holliday, Judge Beecher, Mr. Roberts, Mr. Houghton and others succeeded, and all spoke with much effect.

MEETING AT THE THEATRE.—A large meeting was got up in St. Francis street, which runs from the square to Poydras street. A fine platform had been erected here, and Recorder Winter was called upon to preside.

The assemblage was large, and it was most enthusiastically addressed by Messrs. Haynes, Carrell, Warfield and others. We missed a full report of this meeting, which was promised to us by one of the Secretaries.

Of the whole meeting we may say that it was from fifteen to twenty-five thousand strong, and throughout there was exhibited an ardent and national spirit. It was an army in itself, and Spain may well look to the results of such a demonstration.

FANNY INDIGNANT.—Certain paragraphs to the effect that a good wife is always cheerful and smiling in the presence of her husband, have incensed Fanny Fern, and she gives vent to her indignation as follows:

"It's an ill wind that blows nobody any good! Papas will be happy to hear that twenty-five dollar pocket handkerchiefs can be dispensed with now, in the bridal trousseau. Their occupation's gone! Matrimonial tears are poison. There's no knowing what you'll do, girls, with that escape valve shut off; but that's no more to the point than—whether you have anything to smile at or not; one thing is settled, you mustn't cry! Never mind back aches and side aches, and head aches, and dropsical complaints, and smoky chimneys, and old coats and young babies! Smile! If flatters your husband. He wants to be considered the source of your happiness, whether he was baptized Nero or Moses! Your mind never being supposed to be occupied with any other subject than himself, of course a tear is a tacit reproach. Besides, you miserable little whimperer, what have you to cry for:—n-i-n-t y-o-u m-u-r-p-i-e-d! Isn't that the summum bonum—the height of feminine ambition? You can't get beyond that. It's the jumping off place! You've arriv! got to the end of your journey! Stage puts up there! You've nothing to do but retire on your laurels, and spend the rest of your life endeavoring to be thankful that you are Mrs. John Smith! Smile, you simpleton!?

WASHINGTON FACTORY.—Of this factory in Newark, N. J., a late paper from that place says:

A very interesting and curious manufacturing process is executed at the Washington factory, occupied by Mr. John Garside. It consists in turning miniature busts, statuettes and medallions, from marble and ivory, by machinery, which is similar in principle to Blanchard's patent last machine, any number of repetitions of the same pattern being possible. Busts and medallions of Clay, Webster, Washington, Victoria and others made in this manner of marble and ivory, can be furnished at a comparatively small cost. Mr. Garside is, we believe, the only person either in this country or England, who has applied the machine to the object and the superiority of these productions, in beauty and durability, to those made of the common plaster of Paris, which are so frequently seen, is obvious.

Mr. G. also carries on extensively the manufacture of fine table cutlery, with ivory, pearl, silver and other kinds of handles, which are turned out by this machinery, making a very superior article, said to be cheaper than those imported, which are made by hand, require a degree of skill and considerable labor. The handles can be made after may fanciful design, and medallions at the same time worked upon them, in solid ivory, a very novel and tasteful article being thus produced. These manufactures have received high commendations, and with the numerous other triumphs of ingenuity and energy in our city, are exceedingly creditable to us as a manufacturing community.

STEAMBOAT MANAGEMENT AND RACING ON NORTH RIVER.—The grand jury of New York city has made a presentment in which they state that the steamboats navigating the North River are in the constant habit of violating the provisions of the act of Congress which requires them to blow off steam at the landings or other stoppages on the boat, and also that they find too much evidence that the practice of racing—in the various forms of racing against rival boats racing against the railroad, and racing against time—has been of late very general and constant with many boats on the North River. Besides the immediate and terrible dangers of explosion and fires to which this reckless and prodigate practice directly leads, the grand jury consider the great hurry at landings as involving no inconsiderable loss of life and limb, and the abuse and falsehood which this vehement competition gives rise to, as evils of great magnitude. Cases not infrequently occur of boats passing their regular landings in spite of the remonstrances of passengers to such destination in order to assist or secure a victory in the through trip. They also call attention to the necessity of more carefully providing against accidents by fires and for better discipline among the officers of boats by providing them with badges so that in cases of alarm the passengers may be able to recognise said officers. In conclusion they call upon the prosecuting attorney to punish every violation of the law in relation to steamboat navigation.

The steamship El Dorado, Capt. Lockwood, arrived from San Juan del Sur on Sunday last, and reached San Francisco, on the evening of the 29th ult. The tale of sufferings endured by those who have at length arrived at their destination, is beyond all description. For the last thirteen days they had been on a pint of water only per day, and altogether without bread. In fact they have been all but famished. To complete the matter, the vessel coming into harbor got athwart the hawser of the bark Magnolia, lying off North Beach. But little damage, however, was sustained.

STEAMER LIBELLED.—The U. S. District Attorney at San Francisco, has libelled the Nicaragua steamer S. S. Lewis, the Panama steamer Columbia, and the Golden Gate, for sailing with more than two tiers of berths. The penalty claimed are against the Columbia $5,775, S. S. Lewis $2,150, and the Golden Gate $20,625—being the amount calculated upon the number of passengers brought by her on several trips from Panama to San Francisco. It is stated to be the intention of the District Attorney to enforce this policy against all vessels subject thereto, according to his interpretation of the law.

FROM THE PLAINS.—The Sacramento State Journal informs us that Gen. Bains arrived at Sacramento with the mules belonging to the relief trains. He was five days making the trip. The General states there is some sickness among the emigrants.

It is his opinion that the immigration is not more than half in; all accounts represent great numbers of women and children behind. The agents of the relief train have used every exertion to aid the destitute. Water is conveyed regularly from Truckee and Carson stations out on the desert, by which great sufferings is avoided. The train will return with provisions in a few days.

TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The Alta California Telegraph Company have gone into organization, the stock is already taken, and the work is to be commenced immediately.

The Placer Times understands that Mr Clarke Brannan intended leaving for New York on the Golden Gate, on the 15th. The object of his trip is to purchase the requisite wire and other apparatus for the San Francisco and Interior Magnetic Telegraph.

FIRE IN NEVADA.—A destructive fire had occurred in Nevada Property to the amount of thirty thousand dollars was destroyed.

SALE OF THE SUTTER PROPERTY.—We learn by the Sacramento Union that a sale has recently been made of the Sutter claim known as the second or upper grant to a large tract of land above Sacramento, in the valley. The sale was made by Messrs Gillespie, Robinson and others, to the agent of Howland, Aspinwall & Co., for the sum of $500,000. The parties are now in San Francisco for the purpose of closing the transaction with the agent of Messrs Howland, Aspinwall & Co.

THE FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.—The constitutionality of the Fugitive Slave Law of this State allowing masters to carry out of the State such negroes as they brought into California before her admission into the Union, provided they removed them within one year from the date of the law, has been affirmed by the Supreme Court.

PRESENT TO HIS PUBLIC.—Barrett & Sherwood, of San Francisco, have manufactured a rigg for Messrs. Joseph H. Eldleman, John Middleton, and others, and intended us a present to General Franklin Pierce, the nominee of the democratic party for the Presidency. The rug is made of California gold eight inches in circumference, weighs one pound and a half, and cost about $1000.

ARRESTED.—It is reported in San Francisco that John Lilly, of the firm of Cornish & Lilly, painters in that city, took a hurried leave on the steamer Winfield Scott. The firm had painted the Winfield Scott, and Lilly had collected the sum of $2000 the amount due for the work. He also collected several other bills about the city, for which he rendered no account to his partner. He took the favorable opportunity offered to abscond.

WRECKED.—The brig Eagle, Captain Wolfe, of and from San Francisco, for Oregon, was totally wrecked on the 12th of August, in California Bay, about one hundred miles north of Cape Flattery. The captain and crew, after having suffered severe privations, arrived at Puget's Sound, in their boat. They were plundered of everything they possessed by the Indians, and narrowly escaped with their lives. Five canoes loaded with the savages gave them chase for four hours, when they finally escaped in a fog.

KILLED BY A BEAR.—A Frenchman, whose occupation was that of supplying some of the restaurants of San Francisco with game, was out about fifteen miles beyond the Mission, where he fell in with a bear, which he fired upon, and was, in turn, attacked by the animal losing his life in the struggle. His remains were discovered by a companion.

FIGHT WITH INDIANS.—The latest advices from Sonora are that three hundred Apaches had attacked the new colony of Tucon, and stolen all the cattle, mules and horses; but Capt. Aug. Romano with twenty-five mounted Papogo Indians, and some citizens of Sarnz, attacked the Apaches, and defeating them, recaptured all the booty: a body of Frenchmen arrived too late on the field, and were unable to overtake the Apaches in their flight.

MINING INTELLIGENCE.—In the vicinity of Placerville, in El Dorado county, the mining has generally ceased, owing to a scarcity of water. A number of Chinese are at work in the creek with the pan and rocker, and, in some instances, are doing well. The Coloma Bar Company have been turning the water so that the bar can be worked. They have succeeded in turning the main stream, and it is expected that the bed will yield richly.

It appears that the miners of Tuolumne county were preparing for a grand convention, to be held in Jamestown, on the 18th ult. The object is to take some action in relation to the privilege of being allowed to work in the mines. The meeting is an important one, and brought with great interest to the State.

The Union learns that many of the flaming companies on the northern rivers, have filled, owing to the lessening of the water, and that the flumes were constructed. They will have to suspend operations until another season.

The treasurer of the South Fork Canal Company has received $40,957 85 since the organization of the company.

The Mountain Whig says, that a man recently took out a lump of gold from Shaw's Flat, worth $5,500.

CHOLERA IN THE MINES.—Twelve men have died of cholera, as stated in the Marysville Herald, at Horton's Bar on the American river. Their names were not given.

AFFRAYS AND MURDERS.—In an affray between two men named Stokes and Collins, in Sacramento, the latter was dangerously wounded by two balls from a revolver. Several shots were exchanged on the Union levee, in the most public place in Sacramento, in front of the El Dorado Saloon, and it was a matter of much surprise that innocent persons were not wounded.

The Express says that Mr. Donahue, on the road from Woodyear's Bar to Marysville came upon an Indian who had assaulted and robbed a Chinaman of 24 ounces of gold dust. Mr. Donahue shot the Indian dead.

An Auburn an Indian tossed a Chinaman, and after dragging him until he was senseless, robbed him of $150. The Indian was arrested and lodged in jail.

Marshal McFarlane shot a suspicious looking white man in Sonora, who refused to stand when ordered to do so. The man was not killed. He was supposed to belong to a regularly organized gang of horse-thieves and robbers, who have a rendezvous in the mountains.

COLONIZATION MEETING IN NEW YORK.—The New York Colonization Society held a meeting on Friday evening the 1st inst. which was addressed by Rev. J. W. Roberts a brother of President Roberts who has resided in Liberia for 21 years. He gave an interesting account of the country, and said:

Many of the colonists had become rich. Mr. Murray, for instance, is worth some $50,000; Mr Mcgill $30,000, and Simon Harris, $5,000. Rice is worth about a dollar a bushel. Oranges are to be had for nothing. There is abundance of timber of various kinds, all valuable wood, and used for different useful purposes. The produce of palm oil is increasing 25 percent, and the exports of it amount to 10,000 gallons. It is shipped principally to England and the United States. There are schools in every settlement, a high school in Monrovia presided over by the Rev. Mr Wilson. The average health is about the same in Liberia as it is in Virginia, his own health was improved. The people are happy, contented, and there are none who would return to America, except for the purpose of paying their friends a visit. The size of the farms range from five to fifteen acres. The land is exceedingly productive, for there are always two crops in a year. Wheat is not grown, but large quantities of Indian corn are raised. Every man, from sixteen to fifty years of age, is a soldier. There is every reason to believe that the people will always have abilities to preserve self-government.

A commodious and splendid brick edifice has just been completed—ninety-seven by forty-seven feet, three stories—which for stability, convenience of arrangement, and for number, size and comfort of private and school rooms, is not surpassed by any similar one in the country. The Principal resides in the building, and with his lady and competent female assistance, superintends the Boarding Department. A lady will reside in the Seminary who faithfully discharges the duties of Matron. Nurse and Governess, so that at all times, pupils will find the comforts, kindness and attentions of home. The Principal, with the aid of female teachers, who also live in the Seminary, diligently guard and form the their morals, manners and habits of the pupils. Being under the charge at all times, they are constantly exercised, under a wholesome system of regulations, respecting neatness, order, punctuality, economy and regularity, calculated to give a safe and vigorous development to character. The appliances of home and family are not removed by this arrangement, but perpetuated and strengthened.

The ensuing scholastic year will commence on Thursday the 23d of September, 1852. Pupils can enter at any time during the year, chargeable from the time of entrance. No deduction will be made but by special arrangement with the Principal.

Members study at night under a teacher. They are required to retire to rest at 9 o'clock at night, and rise early in the morning at a given signal, and to take frequent and wholesome exercise.

Private rooms are large, conveniently and comfortably furnished. Pupils are required to keep their wardrobes and private apartments in neatness and order. A proper officer weekly takes charge of their clothing, inspects its condition, and every Saturday morning instructs them in plain sewing and necessary repairs of clothing. Every article of clothing must be marked with the owner's name.

Bi-monthly reports are sent to patrons, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and department of pupils.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, or any amusement calculated to interfere with their studies.

Visitors are not received by pupils except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The Principal must have certain information respecting every correspondent. Pupils are required to attend Church and Sunday School on Sabbath.

No accounts will be opened in Marion but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, the lady of the Principal must approve the purchase (who superintends their trading), and thus expenditures will be controlled. Patrons should send pocket and supply the wants of pupils as far as is practicable.

Dental operations will not be performed but by special permission from patrons.

Patrons are earnestly requested to encourage economy in all the expenditures of pupils—clothing, pocket money and jewelry.

The Institution has graduated forty-four young ladies since its organization, and arrangements are being made for furnishing, improving and increasing its Library, Apparatus, Cabinet and Herbarium.

The Professors of Music, Drawing, Painting and Modern Languages have been engaged in this Institution for the last five years, with decided acceptability—are superior Musicians and splendid performers on Piano, Harp, Guitar, Cream Melodeon, Violin, etc., and highly accomplished in other departments.

MISSIONARY ASSOCIATIONS AMONG THE YOUNG.

Mr. Editor: I was pleased to see in your issue of October 2, your commendatory notice of the missionary movement among the students of Oglethorpe University, of this State. An association of the kind referred to as existing there, we have had in active and efficient operation among the students of Emory College for more than twelve months. Of the importance of such associations among the young, and especially those who are to be the educated men of the country, no one who rightly estimates their legitimate tendency can fail to see. Hence the Faculty of Emory College have felt, and have taken pains to manifest, a deep interest in behalf of this enterprise.

Our plan is as follows: Each of the various mission fields scattered over the whole earth, whether occupied by our own Church, or other evangelical churches, is assigned to a separate standing committee. Once a month we have a public meeting in the church, at one of the hours for regular service, at which time we have an address on the general subject of missions, by some one previously appointed, and a report from one of the standing committees, in reference to some missionary field. Our plan likewise contemplates the taking up collections at each of these monthly meetings, the maintenance between a corresponding committee, appointed for that purpose, and honorary members, chosen from different quarters of the earth, with reference to their locality and the interest they would likely feel in the enterprise of a regular correspondence, securing thereby the most recent and reliable information in regard to the whole sphere of the missionary operations, and a perpetuation of zeal and interest among the members themselves; and as an important feature, a constant circulation among the members of such missionary journals, reports and notices, and all else in the way of reading matter calculated to foster the missionary spirit, which, either by gratuitous contribution from without, or by regular subscription, the association may be able to command.

The whole plan has succeeded admirably thus far. We have had many addresses, and as many reports from the various standing committees. We have, adding together the contributions of various times, collected a very respectable sum of money. This we did expect to contribute to some one specific object, thinking thereby to infuse and maintain a livelier missionary spirit. But after consultation, this idea was abandoned as somewhat impracticable at this time, and the amounts have been turned over to the general missionary treasury. The students are interested in the enterprise, and continue to co-operate in the prosecution of its plans understandingly and zealously.

The immediate results upon the cause of missions secured by the mere pecuniary contributions, we regard important, but by no means the principal object of the association. The imparting to youthful mind an extended knowledge of the religious state of the various nations of the earth, views of missionary obligation, and the most practicable modes for furthering missionary enterprise, making indeed an indoctrination into the knowledge and principles of missions a part of the great system of general education, is one of the chief objects sought to be secured by this association. It proceeds upon the principle that this knowledge, when thus gained in early life, will not only be more potential as furnishing the proper incentive to rightly directed missionary enterprise in after life, but that unless gained at that period, it can never have more than a fitful, imperfect bearing in respect of the full measure of responsibility. Moreover, as the mere knowledge of the obligations of missionary enterprise, and any amount of missionary zeal, are not enough in themselves, but are, to a large extent, important only as they open the way to another step, the training its members to habits of systematic and liberal pecuniary contribution, so that in future life to give to missions may not only be habitual, but a habit demonstrated by experience to be entirely compatible with pecuniary prosperity, constitutes another leading object of the society. These two objects, therefore, the diffusion of missionary knowledge and the establishment of habits of pecuniary liberality, at a period of life when these objects may be most effectually secured, are mainly looked to in our missionary association.

Indeed, there can be no doubt that the principle here recognized is the only one whose operation can make the Church fully and systematically missionary. From the very nature of the mind's constitution, unless the missionary spirit is fully infused in early life, it will never be so prominent and abiding in its influence as to make the Church, the entire Church, uniformly and habitually alive to its missionary obligations. Commensurate, therefore, with the operations of the Church to afford Sabbath School instruction to the rising generation, ought to be its efforts to impart to the same class the knowledge and spirit of missions. Our Sunday Schools ought likewise to be juvenile missionary societies, having their regular meetings, addresses, reports and collections, and employing every legitimate means to infuse missionary ideas and facts, and to discipline the young to pecuniary liberality. Our Sabbath School newspaper should be devoted in part professedly to the missionary interest, and special efforts should be made to circulate missionary information among the young. The whole Sabbath School scheme is imperfect, in so far as it fails to recognise and embody some element of missionary instruction and training as an essential part of its ordinary operations.

The Church generally has never been sufficiently conscious of the great truth that the features of a full and perfect Christianity can be impressed upon men, so as to exhibit themselves at all times in their just proportions, only when the process is begun in youth, so that in addition to the influences of grace, the auxiliaries are enjoyed of early culture and natural aptitude. And that consequently a just missionary spirit, the most matured fruit, the highest ornament of a well trained and properly developed Christianity, will never exhibit itself commensurately with the obligations of the Church, until the youth of the country are embraced in a well digested system of missionary training.

A LETTER TO DELINQUENT CHURCH MEMBERS.

TO ONE WHO TRAVELS ON THE SABBATH.

It is a subject of deep regret with many of your Christian friends, that you recently returned home from a journey on the Sabbath. It is understood, moreover, that you traveled on the Sabbath repeatedly during your absence; in short, that you have no scruples in spending God's holy day in this way, whenever your convenience may require.

There are those, I know, who deny that the Christian Sabbath has the sanction of Divine authority; and, of course, whatever they may think of its importance as a human institution, they have no idea that any respect is due to it as an ordinance of God. This lax opinion in respect to the Sabbath prevails extensively, as you are doubtless aware, on the continent of Europe; and hence American Christians who travel in those countries are often shocked at the manner in which the Sabbath is treated, even by those whose views of religious truth generally are in accordance with our own. But I have never understood that you had ever expressed any doubts as to the question whether or not the Christian Sabbath is a divine institution; and I shall take for granted, in this communication, that you do not feel any.

Is it not obvious, then, upon your own principles, that in traveling needlessly on the Sabbath, you offend directly against one of the laws of God—nay, that you do so deliberately, and with your eyes open! You profess to believe that God requires you to remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy; and yet, in the face of that command, you pervert it by needless traveling, to purposes of mere worldly gratification, or worldly profit. And are you, who have professed to be a servant of God, and have pledged yourself to walk in the way of his statutes, prepared thus to assume the attitude of a transgressor? Can you, while you thus deliberately violate one of the commandments, flatter yourself that you have really any regard to the Divine authority? Do not your Sabbath day journeys sometimes come as a most unwelcome subject of reflection at the communion table!

But you propound to me particular cases. You say you have been absent from your family for weeks, and you are impatient to see them; that you know not but that some of them may be sick, and may require your presence and aid; and you ask me whether, in such a case, you are not at liberty to press on, even through the hours of the Sabbath, that you may reach them as early as possible. I answer, that if you have heard that any of them are seriously sick, or if you have any special reason for believing that they are, doubtless you are justified in continuing your journey on the Sabbath, that you may lose no time in being with them. But the mere possibility that they may be sick, because they live in a world in which there is more or less of sickness always; this does not constitute even the semblance of a plea for your infringing on holy time. Still less is it to be admitted, as a justifying circumstance, that your affection urges you forward to meet them, and that after an absence of many days of weeks, you know not how to submit to a longer separation. The same Being who gave you your natural affections to be indulged within proper limits, has ordained the Sabbath, and required your observance of it; and he does not allow any interference between your duty to your families and your duty to himself. If the Sabbath overtakes you when on a journey, you will render far better service to your families, by pausing on your way, and commending them to God's blessing, than you will by hastening forward to meet them, in violation of God's commandment. You are safe in acting upon the presumption that the Being whom you profess to serve "will have mercy, and not sacrifice;" but you are not warranted in listening to the plea of natural affection, when natural affection would justify what God's word absolutely forbids.

You propose another case. You find yourself distant a hundred and fifty miles from home on Saturday night; and you ask whether you are not justified in spending the night in a steamboat, and reaching home early the next morning, rather than remain where you are, and perhaps spend the Sabbath in a hotel. I am constrained to say I think not. For take the best view of the case you can, you certainly pervert several hours of the Sabbath to a worldly purpose; or if you say that you do nothing worse than sleep, the answer is, that the boat in which you travel is not manned by sleepers, and that you patronize a systematic violation of God's holy day. Besides, you are not hid among your fellow passengers—many of them know you, and some, at least, know that you are a professor of religion; and there are still more who will recognize you as such, when you leave the boat in the morning. The consequence is, that your example helps to lower the standard of observance of the Sabbath. The man of the world who, nevertheless, has some reverence for holy time, in consequence, perhaps, of a religious education, will now set off on a journey on Sabbath morning, without scruple, and feel that he places himself under the wing of your example. Depend on it, in your walk from your landing place to your dwelling, you are a conspicuous object; and there are things said of you by some of the passers-by, that would make your ears tingle. I advise you, in all ordinary cases, to remain until Monday, wherever you are when Saturday night overtakes you. It will be a poor preparation for profiting by the privileges of the Sabbath, to spend its first hours in breaking God's holy law.

Let me say that as there is a blessing promised to the faithful observance of the Sabbath, so you have a right to expect a peculiar blessing when you observe it at what seems to be a manifest worldly sacrifice. One thing, at least, you are sure to accomplish—you render a testimony in favor of the Sabbath, which is of great importance, especially in this Sabbath breaking age—you help to deepen the public sentiment as to its importance, and thus to throw a wall of fire around this divine institution. I knew an individual several years ago, who was traveling in a part of one of the Middle States, in which the Sabbath was not much observed, for the benefit of his health. The stage reached a certain place late on Saturday afternoon, and his fellow passengers perceived that he was making his arrangements to stop; and as they knew he had not reached the end of his journey, they earnestly inquired for the cause. He told them that the Sabbath was just at hand, and he felt under obligation to observe it. They thought it preposterous that he should make such a sacrifice, and to induce him to proceed, they told him that he could not find in that place even decent accommodations for a man in health, much less comfortable ones for an invalid, whereas, by going on with them, he would find himself early the next morning in a large town, where every thing would be to his mind, and, withal, he would be there in time to attend church. The appeal, however, did not avail, and he stopped almost in the woods, and settled down to spend the Sabbath. The next day he met a little company of Christians in the neighborhood, and engaged with them in social worship, and the day succeeding proceeded on his journey. In all this he thought of nothing beyond keeping a conscience void of offence, in yielding to a divine requirement. But after many years had passed away, and he had even forgotten the name of the place at which he stopped, he met a gentleman who resided there at the time, and who asked him if he remembered the circumstance of his having once passed a Sabbath there. On being answered in the affirmative, the gentleman remarked to him, "You have probably never known how much good you accomplished on that day. So uncommon was it for any body in that part of the country to let the Sabbath detain them on a journey, that your example in the matter was talked about far and near; and while it came as a rebuke to the multitude, it came no less as an encouragement to the few who sympathized with you in your regard for this divine institution."

There is one effect which this loose way of treating the Sabbath must always have, which is exceedingly adverse to the general influence of the Church—it produces the impression that Christian principle is not so strong but that it can easily yield to convenience. Your doctrine is that the Sabbath is to be kept holy; and if any body were to teach a contrary doctrine, you would, perhaps, be shocked at it; nevertheless, if you have any worldly object to accomplish, you can reach home on the Sabbath, or you can leave home on the Sabbath, as if there were no divine prohibition in your way. "What sort of a religion," asks a scrutinizing and cavilling world, "is that which obeys the divine commands only when it is convenient? What sort of a conscience is that which accepts as an apology for breaking the fourth commandment, the prospect of some worldly advantage! Is it not safe to neglect a religion which sits so easily upon its professors as this?" True, there is nothing in this reasoning but falsehood and absurdity; but who would wish to give occasion for it—who would willingly be responsible for the consequences of it! [Presbyterian.

A SERVANT GIRL THE MOTHER OF QUEENS. During the reign of Charles I. of England, a country girl came to London and hired herself to carry out beer from a warehouse. The brewer, liking her looks, took her into his family as a servant, and after a short time married her. When he died, he left her the bulk of his fortune. She was recommended to Mr. Hyde, as a skillful lawyer, to arrange her husband's estate. As her fortune was large, Hyde, who was afterwards Earl of Clarenden, married her. Their daughter was the wife of James II. and mother of Mary and Anne, queens of England. [American Messenger.

ONE OF THE SECRETS.—He that has found a way to keep a child's spirit easy, active and free, yet at the same time to restrain him from many things he has a mind to, and to draw him to things that are uneasy to him: he, I say, who knows how to reconcile these seeming contradictions, has in my opinion got the true secret of education. REVENGE. — A momentary triumph, to which the satisfaction dies at once, and is succeeded by remorse; whereas forgiveness, which is the noblest of all revenge, entails a perpetual pleasure.

OLD AND NEW STYLE.—The 13th of September, this year, was the completion of a century since the introduction of the "New Style," as it is called, in the calendar. The new style differed from the old by admitting eleven days after September 1st, or calling the 2d the 13th, and by beginning the year in January 1st, and not on Annunciation, or 25th of March. The length of the legal year 1752 was therefore 282 days, or about forty weeks.

There are in the United States, of Universalist societies, 1,091; of clergymen, 640; and of churches, 828.

A BIRDE OF LOVE... G. W. E. L.

Yes, she is dead!—the splendor of her eyes
Sleeps 'neath the lids forever; on my sight
Never again shall flash their high delight,
Tender and rich with love's sweet ecstacies.

Never again, deep down from vulgar ken,
Shall the pure gushing of her soul rejoice.
And we stand silent, as to hear the voice
Of waters falling in a soundless glen.

And scarce again from other lips shall come
Such beauteous truths, such fresh imaginings,
As like the warm South wind, upon their wings
Bear off our fancy to their own bright home.

Yet am I calm: though hard it be to smooth
Waters upshaken from the deepest deep;
Though it be hard to watch, yet never weep,
The darkening eynosure of passionate youth;

Yet am I calm. The heart I had to bring
Was marred with hope-frosts and decay:
Now the free spirit, riven from the clay,
Drinks at the fountain where all love must spring.

O, passed from earthly to celestial love!
O, reft from me and from my clinging grasp,
And circled straightway by the close warm clasp
Of seraph-bosoms in the land above!

I will not weep thee more; but if I long
Too sorrowfully for thy presence here,
Not vainly on thy turf shall fall the tear,
But thy dead name shall blossom into song.

TITLES OF D. D., LL. D., AND M. D.

Though this is an age of inquiry and of investigation, in which much light has been thrown upon the world, and, by this method, great improvements have been made in the mechanical arts, as well as in all other departments of science, yet there is one subject which I have not yet seen investigated, and, as your useful life has been almost entirely devoted to research and examination of the volumes of ancient lore, I hope you will be able to give us some account, in your excellent paper, of the following:

1. Where did the appellation of D. D. first originate?

2. By what authority was it first conferred? By civil or ecclesiastical?

3. What were the qualifications necessary to be possessed before a parson was eligible to this dignity?

4. What authority have colleges, or institutions of learning, to confer these titles? and who gave them this authority?

The solution of these inquiries would be very satisfactory to many of your subscribers, and would cast a light on these subjects which, at this juncture of time, is much desired, "as the D. D.'s and LL. D.'s are so profusely showered down this season," that the world is in danger of an inundation; and if so, who will be able to divine the consequences!

According to the immortal Webster, the word doctor is derived from the word docco—I teach. A doctor is a teacher; second, one who has passed all the degrees of the faculty, and is empowered to practice and teach it; as a Doctor of Divinity, or teacher of the Gospel, a Doctor in Physics, or a Doctor in Law. Now, each of the two latter must have their diploma from the faculty appointed by law to examine and test their knowledge of the science they profess to teach, or to practice; and this is all right and as it should be. Medical schools have the right to examine all who graduate, and if found worthy, they ought to receive the testimonials of their qualifications; and so in law schools. But how happens it that no minister can be dubbed with the title of his profession but by some institution of learning where theology is not taught, and there is no examination of the candidate in reference to his qualification to preach or teach the Gospel of Christ! This is the question: this is the mystery. This title of efficiency to the work of a Gospel minister is conferred upon a few without any reference to or a recommendation of the school in which they were brought up and examined as to their qualifications for their profession. Ministers are generally educated in the different branches of the Christian Church to which they belong; and they advance in their studies under their teachers till they graduate to the highest office in the Church; namely, to the order of elders; and now, Mr. Editor, after a minister has studied and labored four years—as with us—and after a proper examination into his gifts, graces, and useful qualifications for the work of a Doctor of Divinity, or teacher of the Gospel, and by the election of the Conference, he is solemnly ordained to that office, and receives his parchment from the Bishop, or the diploma of his standing as a Doctor or Teacher of Divinity, to all the intents and meaning of that word, some of us would like to know what business these schools have to do with his profession as a teacher or doctor. Do these schools mean to say to the conferences, presbyteries and synods of divines, You are too ignorant of the qualifications of your candidates for the work of the ministry, and it remains for us literary men to say who among your candidates are fit to be designated as D. D.'s. Some folks do not understand this, and think it looks like an assumption of power; that it smacks too strongly of aristocratical pride for American freemen. Why do not those schools take the same liberty with the students of medicine! Why do they not come out and confer the honorary title of M. D., as well as D. D., or as LL. D.? We hope, dear doctor, you will be able to unravel this mystery to us who are in the dark. We will be your faithful readers and humble servants if you will comply; and if you can not, perhaps some of the D. D.'s can.

The difficulty is, why schools of literature should have the only power to confer this dignity, and not the conferences, presbyteries, synods, etc. Cut this knot for us, brother Elliott, and oblige your old and abiding friend, and many others,

J. B. FINLEY.

Much as has been said and written in favor of the beauties of Christianity, those only can appreciate its blessings who properly live up to its precepts.

SHORT SERMONS.

BY A LAY-PREACHER.

I once saw a church in council assembled, to decide upon the genuineness of the professed conversion of a colored man who asked for baptism and membership with them on that ground. The candidate had not been sufficiently indoctrinated. Questions were asked to elicit the statement and hackneyed confession that he had a bad heart—a wicked heart, etc., etc., but to no purpose. The happy African was too buoyant and bright with the sense of a recent pardon—too well assured that his former guilt had been removed, to be induced, by any leading questions, to "lie against the truth," but constantly affirmed that he felt no condemnation in Christ. His application was laid over.

This religious cant is despicable; I mean that sort of "voluntary humility" which makes a merit of villifying one's self as a "great sinner"—as possessing an evil heart, and desperately wicked, when, at the time, they wish every body to understand that they are holy, harmless and undefiled!

How many of the professed "godly" say in this way of themselves things which another could not say without provoking the most sinful resentment? It is no excuse for the custom that the truth is often spoken in uttering these self-disparaging compliments; because no one supposes that the complainer wishes to be believed, but exactly the reverse.

I knew it is said "let another praise thee and not thine own lips;" but then it does not follow that you are to be always blaming yourself, much less that you are to "lie against the truth." Better be silent than to court the applause of men, by venting slanders against your own Christian experience. If you should succeed in it, success would only bring you the meanest of flattery.

I admit that we are taught to consider ourselves "unprofitable servants," and that, too, when we have done our best services. For "if thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thy hand?" A man can not be profitable to God, as he that is wise may be profitable to himself. Yet let it be remembered that the righteous judgment of God has definitely discriminated between the righteous and the wicked, and it is not fitting that good should be called evil, or evil good.

But a radical doctrine lurks behind this religious cant. Those who believe that immoral practices—as adultery and murder—are not incompatible with a "state of grace"—that sin is not imputed to men so "blessed"—may indulge in it consistently enough; but those who consider that "sin is of the devil," and that the son of God "was manifested to take away our sins," should not, while they keep his commandments, and "know that he abideth in them by the spirit which he hath given," make use of these slang phrases, but leave them to the former class of professors.

While the men of the world hear professing Christians aver that they are, in fact, no better than other men, they can but conclude that a principle so powerless is of nothing worth, and that those who embrace it are the losers instead of gainers.

LOST OPPORTUNITIES.

"Oh, if I had known she was to die so young."

I was spending a quiet afternoon in a friend's room, when a letter was handed her. It was from her distant home, and begging my indulgence for a few moments, she broke the seal. But as she hastily ran over the contents, I saw the flush of pleasure fade from her cheek, and the smile disappear from her countenance. "I hope you have heard no unpleasant news," said I, as she slowly folded the letter, and sat gazing into the fire, as if utterly unconscious of my presence. She seemed to collect her thoughts, as if roused by the sound of my voice from some painful reverie, and looking at me intently, replied, "Emma D. is dead." I still did not understand the cause of the emotion that I witnessed, as I knew the individual mentioned was no relation of hers; and from the disparity of their ages not likely to be a particular friend. "Did she die suddenly?" I asked, hoping to get some clue to the mystery. "Yes, suddenly to me," was the reply; "I knew that she was sick when I left home, and that her friends were anxious for her; but I had no idea that she would die." She then relapsed into silence, and so visibly was the anguish of her soul depicted on her countenance, that I dared not again interrupt it.

At length, with a deep sigh, she murmured, "Oh! if I had known she was to die so young!" I now thought I saw a glimpse of the true state of the case, and determined to make an effort to relieve her mind from the one idea that had oppressed it ever since she received the sad intelligence. I inquired, "Was she an intimate friend of yours?" The question seemed to arouse her to a consciousness that her conduct must appear unaccountable; and, resuming something of her usual manner, she replied, "She was my daily pupil for two years, and that, too, after she had acquired considerable maturity of intellect. How many opportunities I might have had to speak to her of her soul's concerns; and now she has died and left no sign of evidence of preparation for eternity!" I knew that my friend was by no means careless of her influence as a Christian, and that many pious mothers considered it no small privilege to place their daughters under her care; and hoping to comfort her, asked, "Did you, then, never make any effort to lead her to the Saviour?" "Oh yes," said she; "occasionally a few general remarks to the school on the importance of religion, and I did once address to her a note on the subject, but she did not answer it, and I feared individual conversation might be irksome to her, and hoped that at some future time she would be disposed to attend to the subject. But oh! if I had thought she was to die so young!" Here her feelings were too strong for control, and she hastily left the room.

Oh! thought I, as I mused alone, that I could speak in the ear of the thousands of teachers in our land, I would say to each, cast your eyes over the group of immortal beings that daily look to you for instruction; and if you can not fix upon one who you know will not die young, then watch for the souls of all as one that must give account.

CLERICAL ANECDOTES.

MINISTERIAL DANDIES.

In one of his discourses, Mr. Axley was descanting upon conformity to the world among Christians, particularly in fashionable dress and manners. To meet the pleas and excuses usually set up in behalf of these departures from the good old way, he held a sort of colloquy with an imaginary apologist, seated at the further end of the congregation, whose supposed pleas and excuses he would state on behalf of his man of straw, in an altered tone; then resuming his natural voice, he would reply and demolish the arguments of his opponent. After discussing the subject for some time, the opponent was made to say—

"But, sir, some of your Methodist preachers themselves dress in fashionable style, and in air and manner enact the dandy."

"O no, my friend, that can not be. Methodist preachers know their calling better. They are men of more sense than that, and would not stoop so low as to disgrace themselves and the sacred office they hold by such gross inconsistency of character."

"Well, sir, if you won't take my word for it, just look at those young preachers in the pulpit, behind you."

Mr. Axley turned immediately around, with seeming surprise, and facing two or three rather fashionably dressed junior divines seated in the rear of the pulpit, he surveyed each of them from head to foot for two or three minutes, while they quailed under the withering glance of his keen and penetrating eye; then turning again to the congregation, and leaning a little forward over the front of the desk, with his arm extended, and his eyes as if fixed on the apologist at the further end of the church, he said, in a subdued tone, yet distinctly enough to be heard by all present—

"If you please, sir, we'll drop the subject!"

GREEK AND HEBREW.

Peter Cartwright was once waited upon by a worthy clergyman of another church, who likewise lectured him for his alleged ignorance of Greek and Hebrew.

"And pray, sir, who informed you," said Mr. Cartwright, "that I was unacquainted with the Greek and Hebrew languages?"

"Well, I do not remember that I have been told so by any one; but presumed it was so, as Methodist preachers generally, I believe, are without classical education."

"Ah, well, sir, you should not take things on presumption, without having good grounds therefor, especially in so grave a charge as that which you have uttered against me. Yes, I suppose, understand these languages?"

"Yes; I profess to know something of them."

"Well, for aught I know, I have as good a right to doubt your knowledge of Greek and Hebrew as you have to call in question my acquaintance with them. Allow me, sir, to examine you concerning your knowledge of the Greek." Then taking up from the table by which he was seated a book about the size of a Testament, opening it and appearing to read therefrom, he uttered a few words in Dutch, of which he had a little smattering, and continued, "Will you be good enough to translate into English that verse from the Greek of the Gospel of St. John?"

"Indeed, sir," replied the clergyman, a little embarrassed by the unexpected turn to the conversation, my time has been so much occupied for many years, with professional duties, that I have no time to look into the Greek Testament, and have probably got a little rusty in the language."

"Very probable. Well, I suppose we must excuse you, as I know something of the laborious nature of the pastoral office. But, doubtless, you have been more careful of preserving your knowledge of the Hebrew;" and taking up and opening another book, about as large as a Bible, he continued, "and if you please, sir, I will thank you to translate a passage from the Hebrew Pentateuch," uttering another sentence in Dutch.

The reverend gentleman by this time became quite confused, and seeming to think he had "got into the wrong box," he abruptly arose and retired.

UNCOMMON SENSE.

Learning, like religion, has suffered heavily on account of a certain kind of scholars, who seem to lose all common sense exactly in proportion as they acquire that which is uncommon. Some of the most pitiable and senseless managers I have met with in all my life were the most literary. They had all amounts of knowledge that ever an avaricious love of letters could desire. There was not a labarynth in science, nor a problem in mathematics through which they would not have toiled. And yet they had not practical understanding enough to run an account in a dry goods and grocery store for the clothes and food of a small family, and keep out of the hands of the constables and sheriffs.

It seems strange that a man can calculate interest down through time, until a single mill in our currency would not be lost, can not be made to realize as well in the distance as he does in the doom, that if his income is one thousand dollars, and his outlay twelve hundred, that he might be sold once every ten years. And yet I have known more than a few who have proved this inexcusable ignorance true. I am prepared to allow that there may be vast phrenological differences in the mental mold and capacity of men; but that there should be a free man in this country so destitute of self-preserving sense as to see that he must live within his [illegible] if he would ever in[illegible] capital, hence the proof, clear as it [illegible] And of the appalling closes of life [illegible] by worldly embarrassments, [illegible] shameful inattention to a few [illegible] rules in business and management. [illegible] who manages badly, and who [illegible] to have been in easy [illegible] distress, perhaps in poverty, [illegible] be proud of himself or belo[illegible] there seems to be a sort [illegible] tempting like a mildew [illegible] of his [illegible] liness, of which he himself partakes. He [illegible] himself to be degraded as a [illegible] that ennobling sense of honor [illegible] man does feel, when he knows [illegible] good sense is seen by all, his [illegible] economy.

NEW METHOD OF DOING GOOD.

The Puritan Recorder has the following sensible remarks upon the [illegible] which newspapers give for the [illegible] religious reading among the people:

"There is a remarkable adaptation in the form in which divine truth [illegible] In the more substantial religious [illegible] arrest unthinking minds, and secure desired result. There are obvious reasons why few men who are estranged from religious ordinances will become subscribers to religious papers, or give them any attention, unless presented to them in the form [illegible] But there might be many causes [illegible] give such papers hold upon them [illegible] in a judicious and unobtrusive [illegible] constant attention, by [illegible] every week. The gratuitous [illegible] of temperance papers in the [illegible] the temperance enterprise, was [illegible] convenient and inoffensive way of [illegible] ose that were indifferent to that [illegible] papers of the class respected in this place would be more available.

"One correspondent, commending this kind of literature with another on [illegible] reliance is made, says, 'Persuaded I [illegible] half a dozen copies of a [illegible] untrammeled weekly religious [illegible] would be far more important to the [illegible] vital religion among us, than a [illegible] fold of the other species of literature [illegible]

"We would here remark, that [illegible] great expense or difficulty hinders the [illegible] of the utility of this plan. Those who have a little faith in it can make the [illegible] first in a small way, to an extent proportioned to their faith, and watch its operations and results. Let a few Christian friends unite and select out the families in their neighborhood which would be [illegible] to receive such a paper and profit by it, and by the gift of a few copies they may [illegible] desirableness of extending the [illegible] when that is once proved, if it can be [illegible] by facts, then the work will be sure [illegible] ited extension. For it will be [illegible] to be a way of doing good which requires [illegible] tle capital for a beginning, and which is more or less within the reach of most [illegible] If by such means we may form lines of [illegible] tion and religious communication between Christians and those who live in open [illegible] of religion, we may multiply those [illegible] and make them as numerous as [illegible] the sun."

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, October 23.

OFFICIAL BOOK DEPOSITORY.

The showing of our Southern Book Concern, last week, was flattering to the Branches. We wonder the worthy Agent does not extend some facilities in that way to New Orleans. If we are not mistaken, this matter was left open to his discretion at the last General Conference. If we are wrong, our impression is shared by many, and we should be glad to be set right. Other Branches have done well, and we would doubtless do well here—or some where about. We do not say that the fault lies in our Book Agency, but there is a fault, that our publications are not made generally and conveniently bestowed over the territory covered by the Church. They ought to be put before the preachers, if the preachers are expected to put them before the people. The last instance of inefficiency in this department that has come to our notice, is in a letter from a friend in California, September 7. He says: "When I toll you that we are still without Hymn Books and Sunday School Books, and that we are using, from necessity, the Hymn Book of the North... Church, you will be surprised, but such ...." Strange facts! We are nearer California than the Northern Church, and our ... Book came out before theirs, and yet ... not traveled to the aid and supply of ... own Church in the Pacific Conference. ... of the Northern Church must be begged, ...ht, or borrowed.

... we did not set out to represent the ... of others. For some time, the late ... Ball supplied considerable demands, and ... the Church in this and neighboring Con... great accommodation in our Cata... publications. We hope and expect ... good man may succeed to his business and carry it on. But this private and second-hand agency does not and can not meet the case. We take from Zion's Herald a paragraph, exhibiting the great difference between such an agency and a regular Book Depository:

"Our Depository in Boston.—One year has now passed since our Book Agents established a regular Book Depository in this good city of Boston. Previously to its establishment, the sale of Methodist Books, through the then agency, did not exceed $800 worth per month. Since then, it has averaged over $2000 per month, making, for the year, an aggregate for books and periodicals, of $34,000. This is great success."

THINGS BEFORE CÆSAR.

The arguments in the Western M. E. Church property case were heard in the U. S. Circuit Court for Ohio, at the Spring term, 1852, before the Hon. H. H. Levitt, District Judge. Judge McLean declined sitting on the bench, on account of his relation to the parties. The Court promised to give its decision this fall. The Picayune, of yesterday, received the following dispatch:

"Methodist Church Case.—The Methodist Church Case, at Cincinnati, has been decided against the South."

We have not heard of any action on the part of the Court in the case reported by the Referee at New York. The Judges, after the plaintiffs enter their exceptions to the report of the Clerk, will take it under examination; and report finally, so far as their jurisdiction is concerned. Whether it will go to the Supreme Court is not known.

KENTUCKY CONFERENCE.—This body met in Richmond, Ky., 22d ult., Bishop Andrew presiding, largely assisted by Bishop Soule. The editor of the N. and L. Advocate (from which our information is derived) states the health of the venerable Bishop as good. Considerable prosperity had attended the year's labors. In one district there had been over nine hundred conversions. The missionary collections are not given; they are an advance on last year. The laborers are few for the field.

R. Deering located, and Agent for American Tract Society.

J. S. McGee, W. P. Reid and J. H. Cox, transferred to Texas Conference.

A. M. Bailey, transferred to Pacific Conference.

Next Conference to be held at Versailles, Kentucky.

DR. CLAPP.—In last week's issue Dr. Clapp was represented as saying, at the meeting of the Reform League, that the "teetotallers ... too far," etc. If our readers have inferred from what was then said that Dr. C. is not himself a teetotaller, we take this earliest opportunity of correcting them. Dr. Clapp assures us that he is a teetotaller, as it is called, and has been for many years, and that he coincides with the advocates of total abstinence, but does not think it relevant to the present Reform movement.

TEMPERANCE.—The Caddo Gazette, La., of Oct. 9, says:

"The tug of war is about to come. The ... of Shreveport passed a resolution, on ... night, which provides for submitting to the citizens on the second Monday in ..., the question, whether drinking ... shall be licensed or not."

METHODIST PRESS.

REPORT OF THE REFEREE.—Our contemporary of Richmond reviews the doctrine of Mr. Nelson, the Clerk, as given in his report, last week. Dr. Lee demurs to the principles upon which he proposes to determine the amount of the New York Book Concern to be divided to the Church, South, and the mode of the division. The ground taken by the South, that the Trustees or Agents having refused to allow the beneficiaries, South, their share of the profits, and denied their right to the same, must be legally regarded and dealt with, in settlement of account, as misconducting and defaulting Trustees, is maintained, Mr. Clerk Nelson's apologetic reasoning to the contrary, notwithstanding, and the strong "supposition" he makes:

"4. The supposition that if one-half of the Book Concern had been destroyed by fire, that, upon the ground taken by the South in the suit, the loss ought to have fallen on the Northern beneficiaries, is a strong one; and we think would be a righteous decision. In the first place, these Northern beneficiaries repudiated the rights of the Southern beneficiaries, resisted their claims, and usurped the sole management of the whole. They did n't even say, "by your leave, good sirs," to the South. If, under these circumstances, one-half of the property was destroyed in their hands, it would have been a gross injustice to make the South participate in the loss. What if it did make these defaulting beneficiaries "go back to staff and scrip?" Is it not precisely what they have made the Southern beneficiaries do now for more than seven years? For the same reasons, any depreciation in the value of the Concern, while in the hands of these defaulting trustees and beneficiaries, ought to devolve exclusively upon them."

Of the apologetic whole, and, as it seemed to us, gratuitous, argument of the Clerk on this point, the editor remarks:

"It is, to our mind, very defective. Its objects are two-fold: first, to relieve the trustees and beneficiaries, or the Agents and the Conferences from the moral odium, which all the facts of the case seem to stamp upon their proceedings; and second, to prepare the Court and the public for an ascertained depreciation of the property, and to secure the Northern trustees and beneficiaries from fault in the premises, or damage in the issue."

Dr. Lee strongly demurs to the $70,000 reduction of the value of the property in May, 1845, as claimed by the defendants, and to which claim the referee agrees:

"In January, 1845, the report which succeeded the division, the amount is put down at the sum of $632,235 76. This, and the statements annually rendered to the Annual Conferences, the South insists upon as showing the actual value of the Concern. And it demands a settlement, according to these reports. But this is resisted by the Agents and their counsel, and is is approved by the Clerk. The ground of the resistance is, that these reports are 'erroneous,' that they are 'altogether too high, and the alleged excess amounts to a very large sum;' and the Agents 'now swear' that 'those accounts and estimates' are not to be taken as evidence of the value of the Concern at the time they were made. The Southern Commissioners insist that they are just and valid, and are to be made the basis of the settlement. The difference between their reports, and the amount to which they 'now swear' is about seventy thousand dollars. The Clerk prefers their present oath, to their former 'unsworn statements to the Conferences,' and reports accordingly. Beside this the Agents claimed the benefit of a further depreciation of the capital on the ground that 'the stereotype plates had been twice estimated.' But the Clerk, admitting the general value of the oath, nevertheless throws out this particular item, and refuses to allow it."

"Upon these facts and evidences we offer a few remarks:

"1. The report of 1845 was an honest report or it was not. 'If it was honest, it ought not now to be repudiated.' If it was not honest, the Agents ought to show cause why they made a dishonest report of the condition of the Book Concern to the Church. Very substantial and strong reasons ought to be given by the Agents for swearing against themselves; and the evidence has so many natural difficulties in its way, that the Court ought to be very slow in admitting it.

"2. 'The alleged excess amounts to a very large sum,' and we quite agree with the clerk that it 'makes the question as to the character and effect of the evidence one of importance.' If the oath be allowed, it affects the question to this extent. It reduces the capital of the Concern in 1845, from $632,235 76, to $561,235 76, and thereby deprives the South of so much of the distributable share of the capital. Besides, removing $70,000 from the capital deprives the South of seven years' interest on that amount, which, at seven per cent., amounts to the considerable sum of $34,300. This, added to the South's proportion of the principal, will make about $50,000. Now in these figures there are very few good reasons for a desire to reduce the report of 1845."

SUCCESS THAT IS NOT COMMON.—The Presiding Elder of Palestine District, Texas Conference, Rev. O. Fisher writes, to the Banner cheering news of revivals from that section. The following paragraph deserves record, as containing a rare testimony and valuable. How comes it that the doctrines and ordinances of the Bible may not be brought out and enforced upon the consciences of the people without a chilling, hardening, wrangling result? Is not every word of God pure and helpful to the conversion of the soul? Strife is so associated with the inculcation of doctrines and ordinances, that many deprecate their introduction into the pulpit, and some preachers who look on these subjects, admit their importance to a full faith and practice, but for peace sake, pass by on the other side. There must be, there is a way of handling them to edification and not wrath. We apprehend this way is hinted at here. In the discussion, regard is had not so much to the sides of the subject as its ends. The speaker is not taken up bantering opposition and bandying words with those who differ with him about the sign, but rather in challenging the hearts of his hearers to the great spiritual consecration signified:

"Allow me to say that I have devoted at least five hours (I suppose) to the investigation of the subject of baptism at every Quarterly Meeting on my District during the last round, and if I may believe what I see and hear, not without a signal blessing on the people at almost every place. Strange as it may sound in the ears of some, all our revivals have begun in this way! Old and hardened sinners have been awakened and powerfully converted to God right on the heels of these discourses. Our manner is always to connect the great spiritual baptism with the subject and to urge it upon the attention of all parties as "the one thing needful," and never let them lose sight of it. And then, to do all our preaching with the Holy Ghost, sent down from Heaven; and then, after all, all our work is cast down at the feet of Jesus. He is all in all; we are but dust and ashes! glory be to God."

METHODISM AS IT IS.—The S. C. Advocate rather facetiously twits the frequent and causeless use of this formula, and thus lays the alarms of those who fear for the stability and prosperity of the Church, in view of certain defections in some quarters, and the much talked about change:

"As to any 'formidable schism' in the Church, we know of none. But if a thousand have fallen off from our ranks, and died the death of deserters, ten thousand have been baptized for the dead—albeit we are not aware that in the past twelve months the tenth of a thousand have left the Church, North and South, in consequence of dissatisfaction with its doctrines and discipline. As a Church, we may be deficient in the esprit du corps, which characterizes some other religious bodies, and as already suggested, there may be some among us who would have no objection to certain non-essential modifications of our economy—hating this, we firmly believe that ninety-nine hundredths of the million and a quarter members of the M. E. Church, North and South, if called on, would show their hands for "Methodism as it is."

THE HOSMERITE MOVEMENT—So the editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal characterizes the higher law, unconditional abolitionism of the Church, North. Mr. Hosmer, editor of the Northern Christian Advocate, (Auburn, N. Y.) has become a representative man! He and Dr. Bond have had it between them, now these many weeks. It is pull Dick, pull Harry. Mr. H. is bold; Dr. B. nice on his point, and eel-like in his logical movements. The fact is, the editor of the "great official," occupying the "old Baltimore" platform, stands on a very rickety affair. His opponents have the advantage of distinctness of position. It can be seen what they mean. They please somebody. Dr. Bond, it seems to us, can please nobody. Slaveholders in the Church will certainly not thank him for the defence he sets up in their behalf. He has yielded too much, and the Hosmerites, taking advantage of his admissions, press him most unmercifully. The following, from his last editorial, of two and a half long columns, shows the status belli:

"It is assumed, then, that the whole system of slavery being a wrong, a moral wrong, the holding slaves under it is, therefore, necessarily, a crime. The assumption we admit—the 'therefore,' we contend, is a non sequitur—the conclusion does not follow from the premises. The whole system is wrong, and among the wrongs it inflicts are the legal restraints on voluntary emancipation. But he who is restrained by the law, is not culpable for such restraint, unless he approves, and sustains it by the exercise of the right of suffrage, or by otherwise countenancing and sanctioning it. He submits to the necessity imposed by the law, which obliges him to hold slaves under his own protection, or do them a cruel wrong, and violate the royal law, 'whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye also unto them.' He is conscious that under similar circumstances, he should desire his master to retain him in his own service, rather than be sold to a slave trader, and torn from his wife and children, without hope of ever seeing them again; and he obeys the law of love by acting toward his servant as he would that a master should act by him. But for this, it is insisted that he shall be cut off from Christian fellowship."

NEW CONFERENCE.—The Western Advocate gives a glowing account of the first session of the Cincinnati Conference, which adjourned 30th ult. One hundred dollars were raised to send to Dr. Cook, of France, to support a mission as near Italy as possible. The cause of education ran high. The preachers each promised one dollar to raise a monument to Bp. McKendree. As to finances, the editor says:

"From the report of the stewards, we learn that the deficiencies, in mere quarterage, was $4652, and there was only $1708, from all sources, to meet this amount, so that $2944 remains unpaid, and will remain so till the resurrection of the just. The deficiencies for table expenses must be much more. How can Christian men and women, who profess Christianity, reconcile it to their consciences to omit so pressing a duty as to leave this amount due?"

STATE OF THE CHURCHES IN CALIFORNIA.—The California C. Advocate, of 16th ultimo, speaks of fine brick churches going up here and there: some completed, some begun, to be finished in thirty or fifty days! A Seamen's Bethel, 40 by 90 feet, is being built in San Francisco, for Rev. Wm. Taylor. The Unitarians have subscribed $25,000 for a new church. The Baptists start a denominational paper—the Pacific Banner. Rev. W. R. Gober is in feeble health; has left Sacramento for Sonoma, Rev. J. Matthews supplying his place. This is a happy item:

"That part of this immigration now coming into the country, professors of religion, are generally prepared with certificates and more disposed to unite with the various churches than the same class formerly have been. So that generally the churches are receiving a considerable increase of members."

REVIEW.—The October Quarterly of the M. E. Church, North, is on our table. Two biographical articles—H. Moore and Prof. Caldwell—are all we have found leisure to read, and they have fully repaid our reading.

MAGAZINE.—Godey's Ladies' Book, for November, presents an inside view of a large printing establishment.

SPEECH.—The speech, or argument, of Judge Brien, counsel for Church, South, in Western property suit, neatly printed, has been furnished us. The case is lost.

SERMON.—On the 19th of August, Dr. Winans delivered a eulogy on Henry Clay, at Bethel Church, Wilkinson county, Miss. Text, II Chron., 14th chap., 1st and 2d verses. The Committee have published it in pamphlet form. The speaker does not praise the illustrious dead, but makes his works praise him. His connection with, and participation in, the great events of American history, is traced, and his political character and fame thereby estimated. A profound impression of greatness is made on the mind of the reader. An historical eulogy is such as Mr. Clay might have asked for.

☞ The preachers going to the Alabama Conference, will remember the invitation of the Presiding Elder of Summerfield District, to spend the Sabbath preceding at Selma and Summerfield.

FREE CHURCHES.—The Diocese of Western New York shows signs, in the following resolutions passed at their late Convention, of realizing that normal idea of a church—free, open ground for the use of the Christian community:

"Resolved, That in the judgment of this Convention, the practice of selling pews, or leasing them for any great number of years is unwise and expedient.

"Resolved, That it be recommended to all the congregations of this diocese, that whenever hereafter church edifices are proposed to be built, the parishioners be invited and encouraged to undertake their erection, without individual property in the seats."

TRIAL OF BISHOP DOANE.—The Episcopal Court which convened at Camden, New Jersey, on Thursday the 16th inst., for the trial of Bishop Doane, was organized by the appointment of Bishop Hopkins, of Vermont, as President; the Rev. Jonathan M. Wainwright, D. D., Bishop elect of New York, as Secretary, and the Rev. John H. Hopkins, Jr., as Assistant Secretary. The Court adjourned on Friday to Burlington, New Jersey, where its sittings will be held during the further progress of the trial. Nineteen Bishops, including Bishops Doane, Whittingham and Johns, are present. The New York Express says:

We hear that the assistant Bishop (Johns), of Virginia, the colleague of one of the presenters, moved that all communications from third parties should be rejected by the Court. This would exclude the proceedings of the recent Diocesan Convention of New Jersey, which were by a vote of that Convention placed in charge of a committee to be prosecuted to the Court. The motion, we learn, was lost, and these proceedings were presented and read, but no action was had thereon. The friends of Bishop Doane profess to entertain no apprehension as to the result.

Bishop Williams, of Connecticut, was taken suddenly ill at New York, while on his way to Camden to attend the trial of Bishop Doane, and compelled to return. As Bishop Brownell is also unable to attend, there will be no representation from the Diocese of Connecticut at the trial.

BISHOP DOANE'S TRIAL.—The counsel for the presenting Bishops in this case, are Richard S. Coxe, Esq., of Washington, and Mr. Davis, of Baltimore.

Resolutions, offered by Bishop McCoskey, were to have been discussed by the Court on Monday, the 11th, proposing to defer the trial of the new presentment against Bishop Doane until after the meeting of the Convention of the diocese of New Jersey, and to dismiss the old presentment, on the ground that the New Jersey convention had, at its last session, declared them not proved. The New York Times says the following scene occurred before the Court on Friday, the 8th inst:

When it was determined by the Court to remove to Burlington, Bishop Burgess hoped that no members of the Court would suffer themselves to be the guests of the accused Bishop. Bishop Doane immediately said that he presumed his Right Rev. Brother, when making the remark, could not have remembered that he (Bishop Doane) was the guest of Bishop Onderdonk during his trial. Bishop Burgess replied that he had it in his mind at the moment. Whereupon, Bishop Doane rejoined that he could not, under such circumstances, but consider the remark as a gross outrage and insult, such as he would not say no Christian Bishop, and no Christian gentleman, but no man could listen to without indignation—that he could, therefore, have nothing further to say to Bishop Burgess.

OCTOBER 21.—The Court of Bishops of the Episcopal Church adjourned sine die, after agreeing by a vote of eight to six not to try Bishop Doane.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.—A Boston correspondent of the Journal of Commerce says: "There is now quite a strong current against the book called Uncle Tom's Cabin, particularly against its morals. The "Thunderer" across the water has spoken so loud as to make even the New York Evangelist hear, and acknowledge it to be no "uncertain sound." The Transcript, of this city, has spoken through a republication of a portion of the English article. The New York Observer of this week has fired a long, loud and sberp gun at a row of errorists and errors in which the book and its authoress come in for a large share. Associations of ministers discuss its merits at dinner tables, and many of them condemn the general tone, spirit and intention of the book. All this in a few weeks, without mentioning what your own journal, and still others, have done. So much for the sober, second thought of American thinkers, and the same thought of the American people will be safe and right also. Many long ago, said in private what is now said in public, but it must be confessed, there was a time when it required some moral courage to say, 'I have now read Uncle Tom's Cabin,' and do not believe its teaching, which I am obliged to hear, and which, if I did not, I should know to be false from the general false teaching of its abolitionist writer, and all of the school when on the peculiar subject.' As a mere literary production, portions of the book are quite clever, while other portions are hardly tolerable."

REVISION OF THE ENGLISH SCRIPTURES.—The delegations from the American Bible Union and the American and Foreign Bible Society met on Saturday morning, the 9th inst., in the First Baptist Church, N. Y., for the purpose of striking out a course of action in which conflicting interests and opinions might harmonize and together unite, respecting the proposed revision of the English Scriptures, a question which has caused much diversity of opinion in the Baptist churches. The following committee was appointed to consider the questions in dispute. Dr. Sharp, of Boston; Dr. Cone, of N. York; J. O. Crozer, of Pa.; A. Wheelock, of N. Y.; Prof. M. U. Anderson, Rev. O. Kmapler, and Rev. J. M. Peck. They are to report at a subsequent meeting. A spirit of harmony prevailed among the persons who composed the convention, and it is quite probable that the existing causes of difficulty ... cably and satisfactorily adjusted.

The Convention of Congregationalists, at Albany, adjourned on Friday the 8th last. The controversy with regard to the extending of missionary aid to churches in slave-holding States was compromised by resolving that aid should be extended in cases where ministers preach and inculcate the principles of anti-slavery. On Thursday evening Lewis Tappan offered a resolution denouncing the fugitive slave law, but meeting with a great deal of opposition he withdrew it.

FATAL RESULT OF GAMBLING.—A young man in Boston, just twenty-one years of age, for the last two months has been in the habit of visiting some one of the many gambling houses in that city, and becoming infatuated with the game, lost large sums of money, and at last, in a moment of desperation, on the night of the 2d instant, went home, swallowed a dose of laudanum, and in a few hours was a corpse.

LIBERAL DONATIONS AT ST. LOUIS.—H. D. Bacon, Esq., of St. Louis, has given $20,000 to the Mercantile Library Association of that city. Col. Fallen has built a dispensary for the medical college, at a cost of over $20,000, which is designed for the benefit of the poor, and secures the perpetual annual payment of $1000 for its support. A lady has procured a subscription of $10,000 for a "Widow's Home," and Col. Fallen gives fifteen acres for the site of the institution. Three young business men gave $1000 for this object.

Seven children were baptised by Rev. Dr. Young, in Boston, on Sunday, the 10th inst. The water used by the pastor was sent to him from the river Jordan, by the late Lieut. Dale, of the U. S. Exploring Expedition.

DEATH OF A CLERGYMAN.—A dispatch from Philadelphia dated the 16th instant, says: The Rev. Samuel B. Wylie, pastor of the First Reformed Presbyterian Church, and Professor of Languages in the University of Pennsylvania, died last night.

Ralph Waldo Emerson, Esq., an old citizen of Boston, died a few days ago. He was, it is said, a confirmed infidel, and the main support of all the infidels in that city. His dying request was that no clergyman should officiate at his funeral, but that an address, written by himself, avowing his principles, should be read. The request was not complied with.

SHIP AND CREW DESTROYED BY LIGHTNING.—On Saturday, September 25th, intelligence was received at Lloyds of the total destruction of the ship Maizn, of Queenstown, Pearson master, by lightning, on the 3d of August last, when off the Island of Malta. The ship being on her passage from Ibrail to Queenstown, was overtaken by a violent storm. At half-past ten P. M. the vessel was struck by lightning, which passed down her mainmast, and striking the hull, separated into two pieces, fore and aft.

The ship instantly went down with the crew, fourteen in number, and two passengers. Captain Pearson, on rising, caught a floating spar from the wreck, on which he continued to buoy himself up and for fourteen hours afterwards he kept himself above water, when he was happily descried by a Maltese coasting vessel, and landed at Queenstown, Ireland, the whole of the crew and passengers having perished.

The Hon. Wm. H. Haywood, of North Carolina, died at Raleigh on the 7th inst.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Monroe District, La. Conf.

At a camp meeting held at Homer Circuit, commencing 24th September, and closing on the 29th, we had a gracious season; some twenty professed religion, and as many were added to the Church. Bros. E. Pennington and J. C. Blackman, local preachers, are employed on the circuit this year; they have been acceptable with the people, and the Lord has blessed their labors. They report a good state of things generally in the work.

On Jackson Circuit, also, we held a camp meeting, including the first Sabbath of this month. The meeting lasted but three days: the result was some ten conversions, with some sixteen or eighteen accessions. Bro. R. Raadle is in charge of the circuit. A good revival influence has been abroad in his work; has had conversions and accessions to the Church at different points during the year. These are cheering items, and with these before us we feel to thank God and take courage. His "word is not bound;" may it "RUN and be glorified." Amen. Yours in Christ,

P. M. GODWYN, P. E.

Oct. 12, 1852.

P. S. Father Stevenson, supernnuate of our Conference, was at the camp meeting on Jackson Circuit, in good spirits, but very feeble; has just entered his 85th year. We love to see him at our meetings. His whole theme is religion; says he does not know why he is left here so long after nearly all of his early friends and comrades have gone, unless it be that he may gather up the fragments that nothing be lost. His very presence at our meetings does good. I wish you could see him; it would do your soul good to hear the old man talk; there is a child-like simplicity and appropriateness about all his sayings and doings that one can not but admire.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: Although unknown to you, and not even a subscriber to your valuable paper, I thus undertake the agreeable task of communicating, through this medium, intelligence from this circuit, and especially from our camp meeting, which commenced at the Bardwell Springs, as announced heretofore in your paper, on the 23d ultimo, and closed on the 30th.

The hopes of the community, in this quarter, were directed to the occasion, which has just closed, with sanguine anticipations, which I am happy to say have been met. Notwithstanding ut the commencement, and for one or two days after, in addition to a copious shower which fell on the first night, we had quite unsettled weather, and the aspect of things indicted that a sad reverse would attend our hopes.

On Sunday, quite a number of persons came out, the weather being more favorable, and their attention was invoked and held by the impressive appeals of the ministry in attendance, and especially of Brother Hyer, of Aberdeen, who was there in the Spirit's power. The work commenced in good earnest on Tuesday, though previously it was progressing with some success, at which time, however, there was an extraordinary display of the power of the Almighty, and an outpouring of His spirit. Sinners were converted, backsliders reclaimed and Christians built up. Number of conversions not less than one hundred—accessions ninety-five.

I am authorized to say, that there have been on this circuit, during the past itinerant year, about one hundred and seventy-five conversions, and as many accessions to the Methodist Church. The very best order and decorum prevailed. To God be all the praise.

CHRISTIAN PERFECTION.

BRO. MCTYEIRE: Under the above caption I wish to give you a short sketch of revival intelligence, and more particularly of the out-pourings of the Holy Spirit upon the Church and people of God, at our Unity Grove camp meeting, which closed last Thursday morning. Our protracted meetings commenced the 1st of July, at this place, and seventeen professed religion and two the blessing of sanctification. We have had various protracted, and two camp meetings since, and up to this date between ninety and one hundred have professed to be born again; a number of backsliders have been reclaimed, and the churches seem to be generally fired up with fresh zeal.

Our Unity Grove camp meeting commenced on Friday night before the first Sabbath in this month, and progressed from day to day with but tolerable success up to Wednesday morning. At 8 o'clock Bro. McCutchen, the preacher in charge, requested me to preach; but he having some children to baptize, occupied so much of my appointed hour, that it was thought best to close services by a prayer meeting. Knowing that there was considerable interest manifested on the part of the Church on the subject of sanctification, (they having several times come forward to pray for the blessing when called upon by the preachers) I concluded to turn our services into a sanctification prayer meeting, and all those who desired to enjoy the blessing were invited to come into the altar. It was soon full, and earnest prayers were offered up to the Throne of Grace by several of the brethren and sisters; and one sister was enabled to seize the crown of perfect love, and testified to all that the blood of Jesus cleanses from all sin.

At 11 o'clock Bro. McCutchen preached, and having to leave immediately after preaching, myself and Bro. Brown were left to close the services. At 3 o'clock Brother Brown preached on the subject of sanctification, and I closed by exhortation, and again invited the seekers of the blessing into the altar. I have seldom or never seen such a rush, and mighty and wrestling prayer was made; but none were enabled to claim the blessing. Many seemed to be entirely broken up, and when invited, came forward and gave me their hand as a token that they would never cease to seek until they should find. Many did so. I recommended them to retire to the Grove and there wrestle with the Lord, until night services; many of them did so, and three sisters came back to the tents rejoicing in that love that casts out all fear. The wounded of the Lord were to be seen all round the camp ground. I selected for a text Mat. ix. 12: "They that be whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." After preaching, I again invited the seekers of sanctification into the altar; they came; sinners were also invited, and they came with seeming eagerness.

Whilst prayer was being offered up, a Pentecostal shower came down, and I never have seen such positive demonstrations of the power of God and of the Divine presence as was manifest on this occasion. Some were crying for mercy; others were shouting, in the highest strains, the praises of God.

One sister, who has an infidel husband, professed the blessing of perfect love, and in exhorting the Church to pray for him, she gave such an awful description of his dangerous condition, as was enough to have affrighted him. I pray God that she may be enabled to live such an argument for Jesus, that will bring him to the fold of God. The exercises continued without intermission until a late hour. As near as we could ascertain, about eleven professed sanctification at night, and four during the day, making fifteen in all; about five professed justification at night, and we left many still agonizing for the blessing.

And now, Brother M., it does strike our minds that if we had a sanctified Church, we would not have to preach at our protracted and camp meetings three or four days before we have a move in the camp.

If we had a sanctified Church, sinners could not shield themselves behind the faults of professors, and render themselves almost impregnable to the Gospel batteries.

If we had a sanctified Church, the children of our members would not be raised up in ignorance of the Gospel, a prey to vanity, and the sharks of Infidelity and Universalism.

If we had a sanctified ministry, we would stand a better chance to have a sanctified Church. May God sanctify both ministers and people.

Your unworthy brother in Jesus,

S. H. COX.

PARIS, Sept. 23, 1852.

The sittings of the first French Methodist Conference, held in the South of France, at the beginning of this month, have been characterized by brotherly love, and a sense of the presence of God. I am unhappily without any of the official documents of the meeting, as they have not yet been published; I can therefore say but little about what was done. There will henceforth be for France and Switzerland two districts—one for the North and one for the South, and one Conference, to meet yearly in the month of September. Two ministers, hitherto recognized as assistant missionaries only, were received into full connection. A young man was admitted into the ministry, on trial, and the services of another were accepted as a general catechist and Sunday School agent. Various resolutions were passed on financial and other matters, and committees named on Education, Books, Missions, Privileges, etcetera. The emancipation of French Methodists (if I may so call it) seems to have given them more courage and activity.

But it is a question whether we shall be allowed to organize ourselves fully, for thick clouds seem to be darkening the sky, and gathering fast over our heads. New cases of persecution have taken place. In the department of the Aisne, for instance, three places of worship of the Baptists have been shut up by order of the Prefect. The two first were in small villages, and the meetings were interdicted some time ago, under the pretence that the police could not watch over them. The preaching place in the town of La Fere was, however, allowed to remain open until lately, when an arrêté of the Prefect was issued, interdicting "the religious meetings of the sect of the Baptists," on the grounds, 1st, that these meetings were a cause of scandal to the inhabitants; 2adly, that it was necessary, on account of public morals (!) to put an end to practices which could degenerate into grave abuses, and bring into the bosom of families much-to-be-regretted dissentions; and lastly, that the so called Baptist sect had no religious existence acknowledged by the State, and that its so called chiefs did not appear to be themselves invested with any official legal character.

This is not all, for the Prefect of the Aisne seems to have a mighty hatred against whatever is not official; he decided, soon after, that all religious meetings held without authorization in places not legally appropriated to worship, must cease at once in his department. By this arrêté, he endenvored to put a stop to meetings held by ministers of the National Church in a school room at Fresnoy le Grand, in the circumscription of the consistory of St. Quentin. The consistory then decided at once to have a special place of worship, and appointed a regular minister. This the Prefect opposed, saying that "there were in Fresnoy le Grand no truly and seriously Protestant families." (!!) Well may a Protestant paper inquire, in relation to this opposition, "in virtue of what principle civil authority has a right to judge of the sincerity of religious convictions." There the matter stands for the present. I will make you acquainted with the sequel.

At Trouville, a bathing place near Havre, a Protestant Church was to have been opened last month, but the local authorities forbade the ceremony.

Last week a dissenting minister, of the "Plymouth Brethren" persuasion, was refused leave to open a new place of worship in Paris, under the plea that there were already a sufficiently large number of dissenting chapels in the capitol!

These annoyances, and others I might mention, are supposed by many Christians to be only the prelude of a general persecution, of which the signal will soon be given. For my part, I do not think that things will go to that length, the President being still, in my opinion, personally favorable to religious liberty, however much opposed he be to political liberty. But the Romish party has gained great power of late, and they will certainly make use of all their influence over the President to bring about persecution. It is to be hoped they will not succeed. Yet it is but too true that they have obtained a partial success, so that the struggle is growing fierce every day.

The iniquitous sentence of the royal court of Florence against the Madiai, found guilty of reading the BIBLE, was confirmed in August last by the Supreme Court of Justice. A petition for pardon was then sent to the Grand Duke, but he rejected it, and even refused to commute the punishment, declaring that by forgiving such heretics, he would endanger his own salvation. BRITISH MUSEUM.—A report from Mr. Panizzi, on account of the present condition of the Department of Printed Books in the British Museum, shows that Mr. Panizzi that at the end of the year 1848, the library of printed books consisted of 250,000 volumes. At this moment it consists of 465,000, and by the end of the present year will amount to 470,000 volumes. During the last four years, the library has therefore increased at the rate of 16,000 volumes a year on the average. The present extent of the shelves in the whole library, that is of which is now occupied and intended for printed books, consists of what is set apart for newspapers in the basement, amounts to 55,400 superficial feet. The difficulties and inconveniences to be overcome are twofold: 1. How to provide room for doubling the library in the next ten years (for that is what is required to render it worthy of its name and country.) 2. How to provide room for the 80,000 volumes; that is, for more volumes than are contained in the King's Library, which ought to be obtained for the library during the next five years, the library, it is assumed, will be required for the building, which is to contain about 48,000 volumes, the number which is likewise assumed, will have to be added to the library in the course of the next thirty years.

A CASE OF CONSCIENCE.—A gentleman residing in Noborne county, Miss., sends the following letter to the Gibson Herald for publication, remarking that the man spoken of in the note was actually received by him:

"DEAR SIR—Enclosed you will find forty dollars in reparation for withholding twenty dollars from you eight years ago. You knew it but; but I did not. I have had it as a weight on my soul ever since. Obituary.

Miss Evelyn Vaughan, the subject of the following obituary notice, was born in Madison county, Tennessee, March 12, 1831, and departed this life at her father's residence, in Marengo county, Ala., Sept. 14, 1852.

At the age of twelve years she made a public profession of religion, though long previous to this time she was the subject of deep religious emotions, and under the influence of the Spirit was frequently unspeakably happy, while as yet she nor her friends hardly dared to call it religion. Naturally she was affectionate, amiable and lovely, and when to these gifts of nature you add the adornment of a deep and thorough piety, no wonder she was the pride and comfort of the family, as well as an ornament to the Church.

It was not my happiness to know her personally until last spring, when she became an inmate of my family, having come to this place, not so much on account of the Institution of learning, (though she took music lessons privately) but principally on account of society, and especially religious society. Her father living remote from any church, her religious advantages were limited, and especially her opportunities for attending class meeting, and as might be expected, she did not appreciate these peculiar meetings but she did not attend many Summerfield class meetings before she found them altogether different meetings from what she expected, and in fact esteemed them beyond all other ones. During her stay here, I think I never knew a young Christian to grow and mature for heaven as she did. She was all the time happy, frequently shouting aloud; sometimes at church, but more frequently in her room alone she would experience such overwhelming manifestations of the love of God, that she would send in for my wife to enjoy the feast with her. All her friends now see the wisdom of that Providence which brought her to Summerfield, that she might be fitted for that home to which she had so soon to be removed.

There is an incident connected with her which the Christian world ought to know. On leaving this place for home, she made a public and formal request of her classmates to remember her in their prayers when she should be far removed from them. A few weeks after she reached home, she was taken down sick; and one morning soon thereafter, she sent in for her father and said to him, "Father, I am so happy I can hardly live; surely something is the matter; I know not what to make of it," and she shouted and praised God aloud.

A few days afterwards she received a letter from Sister Heard, (now Mrs. Childers,) in which she stated: "At our class meeting on Tuesday morning, we remembered you especially by name in our prayers; and as we were coming out of Church, Sister Stringfellow said, 'Tell Evelyn, when you write to her, that we prayed for her this morning in class, and while we were praying, I felt that our prayer was heard and she was happy;' and when they came to compare dates, they found that the very morning when she was so happy at home, was the very hour when her classmates were praying for her at Summerfield."

Now the world would call this rant, enthusiasm, or something else equally ugly; but blessed be God, Christians understand it all, and call it by its right name. What a mysterious Providence, that one so young, so full of promise, just at a time, too, when she began to return into the bosom of a fond father such large compensations for the thousnads she had spent upon her, should suddenly be cast down! Why not the daughter of some one else? or if death must invade this circle, why pluck the fairest, sweetest, full blown flower in all the garden? But I forbear, and leave it to be made plain by the clearer light of eternal day. But, dear girl, thou art gone—gone from thy earthly friends, who loved thee too well to wish thee back again, inasmuch as they know that heaven is a better place than earth, and that the Lord of all the earth will do right.

Charity Hospital.—The following is the state of affairs, at the Charity Hospital, for the week ending on Saturday evening:

Admissions	421
Discharged	325

Of the deaths, twenty-seven were from yellow fever, and 30 of cholera.

New Brick Machine.—There was an exhibition yesterday, on Camp street, opposite the Female Orphan Asylum, of a new brick machine, for moulding brick, the invention of Mr. Booth. The machine has been patented. It is worked by a single horse, and it is asserted that with the assistance of four or five boys and men, it will turn out ten thousand bricks per day. The application of steam, this number may be increased to any desired extent. The machine tempers the clay, that is, of the ordinary kind used, without the intervention of the slaw and exposure process to ordinary use. In the trial yesterday, samples of work turned out were of the most perfect description. The machine is not of intricate contrivance and may be built at a moderate cost. It may be worked by one man, and from the rapidity with which it is worked is calculated to bring about a revolution in the present slow and expensive process of brick-making. Mr. Gardner Smith, No. 31 Camp street, is the agent for the patent.

Later from Havana.

By the arrival Thursday of the steamship Empire City, from Havana, we have received dates from Havana to the 1st inst. We use the translations of the Pleayuno.

From the contiened argument and explanations in the Havana papers on the Crescent City affair, we are disposed to believe that recent events have caused no little excitement there.

The Diario de la Marina gives the following account of the return of the Crescent City to Havana:

"The steamship Crescent City, on her return from New York to New York, touched this morning in our port. In order to comply with her contract with the government of the United States. No change having taken place in her crew list, she remained entirely without communication during her short stay in port, and departed about 12 o'clock. Neither the Captain of the Crescent City, nor her crew and passengers, were wanting in the slightest degree in due respect to public decorum, or the merited respect for the orders of our authorities."

The next day the same paper makes the following correction:

"In stating that the Crescent City remained entirely without communication, yesterday, it must be understood so far as regards the landing or taking on board of her passengers, or the enjoyment of the slightest liberty of free intercourse. The communications that passed through the intervention of the Captain of the Port, and the consent of the authorities, are not included in the meaning of the words."

The contributions in Havana, according to the Gaceta, for the sufferers by the earthquake at St. Jago, have reached the sum of $26,816.

The "Item," of the Diario de la Marina, has on his table a ball of cotton superior to anything ever produced in the island. It is only to be compared to Sea Island, but five inches long and seven to an ounce, with a fine silky and very white staple. It is not a selected sample, but taken at random from many others in a field.

The Gaceta says the amount collected from transient vessels in the month of September, for permission to land in Havana, was $312 56.

The mails from the interior present little of general interest.

The Correo, of Trinidad, chronicles the death of a woman seventy-nine years of age, having 178 children, grandchildren and great grandchildren. The children seem to have been as prolific as the mother; of her sixteen children several of them had respectively thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, and one twenty-two.

Arrival of the Philadelphia.

The United States Mail steamship Philadelphia, Capt. John McOowan, arrived here on Saturday morning. She left NewYork on the 6th, and Havana on the 13th inst., and encountered heavy head winds all the way to the latter port.

October 6, at 6:15 P. M., spoke steamship Ohio, bound for NewYork, October 7, 1st 37 47, long 74 20, spoke schooner Alvarado, of Fall River, from Washington, N. D., bound to Boston. October 13, at 7 A. M., passed the brig Frances Ellen, of Portland, twenty-five miles east of Havana, standing to the westward.

The bark Millaudon, from NewOrleans, entered Havana at 12 o'clock on the 10th inst. Exchanged signals with a Spanish brig-of-war cruising off the harbor of Havana.

By the Philadelphia we have received Herana papers of the 13th instant. The Diario comments very severely upon Captain Porter, and says he sought to create in New Orleans the false belief that the authorities in Harena asked him to leave the mails, and that he refused to do so—that he no doubt sought to terrify the great Spanish Gorernment by the weight of his anger. The Diario says:

"Such an assertion, which openly contradicts our former account of the occurrence, is entirely inexact—not to use a more expressive adjective. Our authorities had decreed, in the exercise of their legislative powers, that if the Crescent City retained on board the Purser, Mr. W Smith, he should be denied all intercourse, which decree was carried into effect. The orders of a Gorernment which respects itself, must always be executed; and we have already said to Captain Porter that he is too highminded a person for the Spanish authorities to ask favors from."

The Crescent City had not arrived on the 13th.

The bark Potomac, had arrived at Trinidad, bringing the parts of a new dredging machine for the port, which was to be put up and set to work at once.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival of the steamship Louisiana, Capt. Forbes, we have received Galveston papers to the 15th inst., and a portion of our regular exchanges from the interior.

Railroad Material.—The first arrival of railroad material in Texas, took place on the 10th inst., per brig Washoga from Boston. The cargo consisted of spikes, etc. The bark Island City is on her way from Boston with a locomotive and other machinery for a railroad.

Soldier Robbers.—The San Antonio Western Texan says: "Eleven soldiers (Federal) are now lying in our jail under a charge of highway robbery. They pillaged a wagon belonging to J. H. Sweet, of our city, laden with goods, on its way to a westward fort. We do not wonder at it. It results from lax discipline and general idleness.

A Change.—Gen. P. F. Smith has changed his headquarters from San Antonio to Corpas Christi.

Another Indian Outrage.—A report reached San Patricio on the 27th ult., that forty-two Indians attacked a small body of Mexicans a day or two previous, at a mustang pen some twenty miles west of that town. The Indians killed eleven Mexicans. They (the Indians) had some fifty horses in their possession.

Melancholy Accident.—A melancholy occurrence is reported by the South-Western American of Austin: On the 3d inst., Mr. Dawson and Miss Mary Bowles, both residing in Austin, were drowned in attempting to ford the river in a buggy. Their bodies had not been found.

The Rivers.—The Trinity is rising, and is expected to be soon in good boating order. The steamer Wm. Penn got aground at Morgan's Point, on her way to Houston, and the last accounts had not been got off.

For El Paso.—Captain Smith left Lavaca on the 8th instant, with his train, for El Paso and Chihuahua. He takes out a large quantity of merchandise.

Louisiana Interior.

Shreveport and Vicksburg.—The Caddo Gazette of the 2d inst. says:

The railroad meeting held at Torey's school-house on last Saturday was attended by all the people of that vicinity, among whom were fifteen land-holders. After the speaking, we understand it was proposed and particularly requested, that if any one present felt any opposition to the payment of the railroad tax, he should declare his opposition, but not a voice was raised against.

Weather and Health.—The Minden Herald of the 9th inst. says:

The weather for the last week has been very warm—no appearance of autumn, except on the calendar. The health of our town and country is, we believe, becoming as in days of yore. We hear of no sickness worth recording.

The Natchitoches Chronicle of the 9th inst. says:

We regret to add, too, that more sickness has been experienced throughout the parish than in any season for many years. The fevers, however, are of mild type, and generally yield readily to the proper remedies.

Crops.—The Natchitoches Chronicle of the 9th instant says:

The corn harvest is most abundant in this part of the State; but the frequent rains have been disastrous upon the cotton. The rains have not only greatly retarded the gathering, but have produced rot. We have heard general complaints from different parts of the parish; and, perhaps, it may fairly be said that there will be less cotton sent to market by a fourth than was anticipated six weeks since.

The Mansfield (DeSota) Advertiser of the 2d says:

In addition to the destructive inroads on the growing cotton crop, by worms and dry rot, we have just been informed by J. D. Wemple, Esq., who returned in the early part of the week from Alexandria, that the caterpillar has appeared in the Bayou Rapides districts in such formidable numbers as to sweep almost the whole of the remaining crop before them.

Crops.—The Plaquemine Sentinel of the 16th inst. has the following items:

New Sugar.—A sample of new sugar has been shown us just made on the plantation of Michael Hebert, which is the most beautiful, certainly, that we ever recollect to have seen. We are a judge only from appearance, but think that such description of sugar will assuredly rank as "choice."

Making Sugar.—Several of the Planters in the vicinity of our town have commenced rolling within the last few days, and we have no doubt that the whole force of Iberville will be in operation in a few weeks more. On Grosse Tete, Mrs. Wotfolk and Hotard & Labauve commenced a few days since, and Slack and others have ere this, doubtless, got their fires and engines under full headway.

Con. Z. S. Lyons.—The Feliciana Democrat says: It becomes our painful duty to record the death of this gentleman, which occurred on Saturday evening, the 9th inst. He was buried on Sunday evening, the 10th inst., with all the solemnities of the Odd Fellow and Masonic orders. He was long and favorably known in this community as a lawyer of fine talents and great ability. At the time of his death, he was States Attorney for the 7th Judicial District, the duties of which office he discharged for a number of years, with no less credit to himself than justice to the public interests.

Iberville Parish Improvements.—The Plaquemine Sentinel of the 16th says:

It will be seen, by reference to the police jury proceedings, that liberal appropriations have been made to finish the cut-off road across Iberville Point, and to improve the Grosse Tete road, from Indian Village to the Portage. It will be perceived likewise—which will add much to the value of that flourishing region—that a road is to be opened on the East bank of Bayou Grosse Tete, making another road district, for which Mr. P. P. Sagg was elected Commissioner.

Centenary College, at Jackson, Louisiana, on the 8th day of its present session had entered 171 students.

The Whale Fisheries.—A letter from a merchant at the Sandwich Islands says that more oil has been taken this season by the American whalers than ever before in one season.

Health of Savannah.—The Savannah Board of Health report the deaths of twenty-five persons in that city during the week ending on the 12th inst. Of these, twenty were whites and five blacks.

An Old Cartman.—John C. Klinck, the oldest cartman in NewYork, being at present in his eightieth year, renewed his license an Wednesday, the 13th inst., as public cartmen. Mr. Klinck received his first license from De Witt Clinton in 1803, when that distinguished man was Mayor of NewYork.

New Telegraph Line in Canada.—They are now constructing a new line of telegraph from Quebec to Hamilton in Canada, West of Montreal some 700 miles of poles, and 400 miles of wire, on the new lines and tributaries, are now up, and some 200 miles already in operation, and new stations are being added daily.

Flying and Alighting.—French papers inform us that a man residing in the Rue Quincampoix, Paris, formerly the porter of a hotel, who has for some time been possessed with the idea that he could imitate Icarius, and fly in the air, profited lately by the absence of the person appointed to watch over him, and endeavored to carry out his design by flying from the window, which was on the fourth floor. He fell in the court yard and was killed on the spot. The Freuchmen had not the forecast and sagacity of an aspiring Yankee, who made an experiment in flying. Having demonstrated in scientific principles the possibility of buoying himself up, he procured a pair of wiegs and mounted the ridge of a barn. From thence he essayed his flight; but, being unable to resist the laws of gravitation, he came down perpendicularly into a heap of stones, bruising himself badly. When asked how he liked flying, he said "flying was pleasant enough, but alighting was mighty uncomfortable."

Adroit Escape from the Penitentiary.—On Saturday afternoon, the 9th inst., Wm. E. Crissey, a tailor, who was sent to the Penitentiary a few weeks since, made his escape from that institution. He was in one of the lower cells, the covered yard of which communicates by a door with the ornamented grounds, through the walk which leads from the entrance to the centre building. He was working at his trade, and, to heat his goose, was allowed a furnace in his yard. A suit of clothes belonging to a convict whose time had just expired was given to him to press. He threw off his prison garb, dressed himself in this suit, and, putting on an old cap that he had in the cell, contrived to move the bolt of the yard door, and thus liberated himself from confinement. There were a number of visitors, and several of the Inspectors inside at the time. Walking deliberately down to the gate, he told the porter that he had come in with some friends, but was tired of looking around, and believed that he would leave without waiting for the gentleman who accompanied him. At his request, the unsuspecting gate-keeper, who did not recognise him in his disguise, let him out, receiving from him the customary salutation. [Phil. Bulletin.

NewYork, Sunday, October 10, 1852.

Dear Sir: In the Herald of this morning, as regards the outrage committed on the bark Cornelia, I found a number of assertions incorrectly stated, and not according to facts.

The Captain of the Port himself was not on board the bark, but his under officers were. The bark was cleared at the Custom House on the 21st inst., and on the morning of the 22d was hauled off into the harbor, to a proper place to make sail, and about 7 A. M. did make sail, and when abreast of the guard-ship was boarded by the commanding officer, as you stated. The man Harkness, with myself, was ordered into the boat, and pulled along to the guard-ship—he was left there, and they took me in the same boat to the office of the Captain of the Port. That functionary abused me in the most shameful manner, and told me I had made myself liable ton fine of one thousand dollars. I replied I was not guilty. I was then ordered on board the same boat, and on our way back we stopped at the guard-ship, and a guard of soldiers were sent along with us, to take charge of the vessel until further orders. At the same time, the Captain of the Port sent a pilot on board, and the boat's crew hove up the anchor, and moored the bark near the guard-ship.

About two hours after, the boat from the Captain of the Port came alongside, with an officer on board, who ordered me to come ashore immediately, which order I obeyed. I was conducted to the office of the Captain of the Port, and upon my arrival there I found the Captain of Police along with the Captain of the Port, who took me along into his office, and spoke in Spanish in the following terms: "You have on board a passenger by the name of Guzman. If you will deliver up the packages which he gave you, all ones will be withdrawn, and you can go on board your vessel and proceed to sea." To this I replied: "He never gave me any package, neither have I to my knowledge, any papers belonging to him." He then, in the most abusive manner, commenced calling me all the villains in the world. I then refused to answer him in Spanish, and unless an interpreter was produced, I would not answer a single word. He then flew into a passion, and called me a liar, and threatened to put me in jail. I paid no attention to him, and finally he concluded, with the Captain of Police, that I should be conducted on board again, and be there confronted with Guzman, and interrogated farther regarding the package and letter given me, which was done. After arriving on board under the charge of the Captain of Police, that officer accosted Guzman in the following manner: "Did you give the Captain of this vessel a package and letter to conceal for you?" "I did not," he replied; "all my baggage and effects are in my stateroom."

Finding that nothing could be got out of this man's room, he commenced searching my own state-room for letters. I opened my desk, where there were a number of letters and other papers, which he took all out, and the letter bag which was found, in my state-room, and after overhauling the state-room of Guzman he left the vessel, giving the following orders to the guard or soldiers in charge of the vessel: "That no passenger should be allowed to enter the state-rooms, and that Guzman should be kept on deck until further orders from him;" which orders were carried into effect.

About two hours after, at 1 P. M., an officer, with the Captain of the Port's boat, came on board, with orders to take me and Guzman, and all his baggage, to the Captain-General, for further examination; whereupon I was likewise taken with Guzman as a prisoner, not being allowed to look on one side or the other, between an alley of armed troops. Upon my arrival there, I found the Captain of the Port and the Captain of the Police, and after the most abusive and strict examination, they concluded that I should take my letter bag and be permitted to go to sea. I told them that as they had taken charge of the vessel, and moored her close to the guard ship, the vessel and cargo were at their risk, and I was going to protest against all their proceedings. When I arrived on board the bark, I there found the letter bag, with any quantity of letters withdrawn.

On the 23d I sailed.

Messrs. Drake & Co. never sent the letter bag to me; I went myself, as customary, early in the morning, and took it before any one was in the counting-room, but the porter, and brought the letter bag on board with me.

Sir, by giving the above a publication, you will much oblige your most obedient servant. R. E. Ward,

Master of bark Cornelia, of NewYork.

An experimental trip on the Northern Railroad, extending from Toronto to Lake Huron, so far as completed, was made by the Directors and Engineer on Friday last. But twelve miles of this great road is yet completed, and this portion is to be opened for public use as soon as possible.

The will of the late Bella Flint, of Brockville, was recently contested by his eldest son by his first marriage, who received only £100, the bulk of a large property being left to his widow and her four children. Incompetency on the part of the testator, and improper influences on that of the wife and her children, were urged as reasons for breaking the will. The suit, however, was compromised. NEWS BY TELEGRAPH.

Important from Havana—Arrival of the Crescent City—NewYork, October, 19.—The Crescent City has arrived here.

She reached Havana from NewOrleans at daylight on the morning of the 14th inst. The Captain of the Port came on board and said that no communication with the shore would be received. Lieut. Porter issued a protest, and then left for NewYork without landing the mails or passengers.

Further Particulars — NewYork, October 19—The Crescent City entered the harbor of Havana at an early hour of the morning, and therefore escaped detention.

The Captain of the Port came on board at sunrise, and asked if Purser Smith was on the steamer. Lieut Porter replied in the affirmative. The Captain then stated that as the Crescent City was already in port, she would not be turned out, but at the same time no communication with the shore would be allowed.

Lieut. Porter then desired to present a protest through the American Vice-Consul. The Captain General denied this request.

As the steamer was about leaving, the agent of the U. S. Mail Steamship Company at Havana was allowed to come alongside, accompanied by three Spanish officers.

The agent said he thought the whole difficulty could be settled by Purser Smith sending to the Captain General a written denial of the accusation against him.

Lieut. Porter refused to allow this, saying that he himself had already made two disavowals on the subject, and he considered it beneath the dignity of the company whose interests he represented to make any further explanation of the matter.

Lieut. Porter also refused to hold any conversation with any one except through the American Vice-Consul.

The latter was only allowed to come alongside the steamer, not on board.

Lieut. Porter delivered to him in person a protest, referring to his two former disavowals of the accusation against Purser Smith, remonstrating against the unlawful acts of the Spanish authorities, charging them with violating the treaties of peace and friendship with the United States, etc.

The Crescent City then ran up the American flag and took her departure, neither subdued nor conquered, and as she went out of the harbor firing a salute in honor of his flag.

Thousands of spectators lined the quays and stores to witness the steamer's departure.

Spanish guard boats, filled with men and officers, surrounded the steamer during her stay in the harbor. [Eve. Pleayune

Loss of the Mobile—Seventy-four Lives Lost—The American ship Mobile, Capt. Forbox, bound from Liverpool for NewOrleans, with sixty passengers, and a crew of twenty-three persons, was driven ashore on Arklow Bank, on the Irish coast, on the night of the 30th September. The ship went to pieces soon after striking, and all on board were lost, except nine persons. She had left Liverpool on the 20th, and was little more than one day out when she went ashore.

Lieut. Porter—NewYork Oct. 21—Lieut. Porter, commender of the U. S. Mail steamship Crescent City, left here for Washington City last evening.

Fugitive Slaves—A telegraphic dispatch from Sandusky, Ohio, says that intense excitement exists there in consequence of an attempt to carry back a number of fugitive slaves who had made their escape from Kentukey, and reached Sandusky last night.

They were escorted to a boat by their friends and the citizens, and the pursuers from Kentucky then attempted to capture them.

They were, however, prevented by the citizens of both colors, and after a sharp struggle the slaves escaped to the Canada shore. The pursuers from Keatucky state that they will make the citizens concerned in the affair responsible for its consequences.

How to use a Coal Stove.—The fire should not be permitted to die out during the winter. By keeping the fire up, an immensity of trouble is saved, and paradoxical as it may seem, it is cheaper. The reason is this: the coal burns out during the long nights, because the door of the stove is shut; whereas, if the door is left open, it will not burn out, and will be perfectly alive in the morning. Less coal is therefore consumed. There is no danger in leaving the door open, as the draft is always strong enough to carry off the sparks up the pipe or chimney. It only costs steps in the room, the upper sash of the window should be lowered two or three inches, even in the coldest weather, and more when it is milder. Having a comfortable fire in the room in cold weather, and yet enjoying fresh air by means of ventillation, is the very ideal of comfort, and is at the same time an encouragement to the habit of early rising. Shake down the ashes, therefore, before retiring, fill up the stove with coal and leave the door open if you wish to save yourself or servant a deal of trouble in the morning, and at the same time economize coal. But, by all means, open the window, if it is only the width of an inch. [Ohio Statesman.

Stoves in Turkey.—A few years ago a stove was an kaown in Turkey. Now they are found in a great majority of the cafes in Constantinople, and in the dwelling houses of the rich. They are mostly either American stoves or made after American models.

Red River.—The Caddo Gazette of the 16th, says that Red river was rising rapidly at that point. Cotton is plenty for NewOrleans at $2 per bale, freight.

Alabama River.—The Mobile Tribune of Tuesday, says: The Atabama rose three inches at Montgomery on Saturday night. We hear also that there was a rise of eight inches in the Bigbee, at Demopolis, the same night.

The Great Strike of the Riggers, &c., in NewYork—Serious Riots.—We have already stated that the riggers, calkers and lasterdorns in NewYork had struck for higher wages. The Journal of Commerce of the 13th says:

Yesterday very little business was going on at the wharves, as but few assented to give the prices demanded. Early in the day Chas H. Marshall agreed to the terms dictated, and about ten o'clock E. H. Hurlburt & Co. did the same, when a crowd of 400 or 500 gathered before the store of the latter firm, and vociferously cheered. Pipe fruthlil and one or two others also conceded the point temporarily, with the design of employing those concerned in this movement only until other hands can be procured from the country.

Almost the entire police force of the upper wards was detailed yesterday, to co-operate with the police of the lower wards in the suppression of any disturbances that might occur. One or two severe encounters took place between the police and the disaffected laborers, and though several persons were injured, we are glad to say that no loss of life occurred.

The first symptoms of disorder broke out on piers 34 and 35, in the Seventh Ward, when a large and boisterous crowd collected about ten o'clock. Thence they repaired to piers 18 and 20, and becoming violent in their demeanment, the police undertook to disperse them. They then retreated to pier No 14, near the foot of Wall street, and there the principal fight occurred. It is estimated that the rioters numbered from 600 to 1000 men, while the police force did not exceed thirty. At the first onset the latter were pressed down to the end of the pier, and their position was becoming desperate, when a reinforcement of the Fifteenth Ward police came up. The men then rallied, and by a vigorous use of their clubs the rioters were dispersed and the dock cleared. A dozen or so of the latter were knocked senseless, and one or two were with difficulty restored to consciousness.

On the North River side no very serious disturbance occurred. A gang of men employed on pier No. 1, by the Philadelphia boats, dry dock men, were compelled to leave; also, some men employed on the steamship Southerner. On the day previous the men on the steamship Franklin were interfered with and driven off, but other men were found to take their places. It was rumored that at both this and the Collins steamers the ships' guns were got in readiness, to hold the rioters in awe; but this was not so. At the Collins pier a rush was made to break down the gates excluding persons from the vessels, but after a brief scuffle with the gate-keeper, assisted by policemen, the disturbance was quelled. One of the rioters who pressed within the gate, was struck down by a club.

A meeting of the "laborers that work along-shore" was called last evening at Warren Hall, to consider the measures necessary to be taken for the attainment of the increase in their wages demanded by that portion of the industrial class of our citizens. The hall was crowded almost to suffocation at an early hour, by a large number of able-bodied, hard-fisted working men, nearly all of whom were quiet-looking and peaceable, though determined men. The meeting throughout was characterized by great unanimity of sentiment, good order and moderation. The prevailing opinion evidently was that their object was to be accomplished, if at all, by an all-passionate appeal to public opinion, and not by violence and disorder. Any and all violent demonstrations were emphatically denounced and discountenanced. After several addresses, a resolution was adopted that, whenever a merchant agreed to give the men engaged in his service the wages demanded, the men should go to work.

Large Business.—Our commercial columns show a large business for the past week in cotton, the sales having reached fully 45,000 bales. Of this amount, no less than 12,000 bales were disposed of yesterday.

The Burning of the Bark Reform.—The Mobile Advertiser of Wednesday, gives the following particulars relative to the burning of the bark Reform:

This vessel, which cleared for NewYork on Friday last with a cargo of 800 bales cotton, 60 barrels rosin, 12 casks tallow, 3 casks beeswax, 550 dry hides, 7 bales leather and 3 boxes merchandize, was wholly consumed by fire on Sunday and Monday last. It is supposed that the cotton must have ignited previously to or directly after it was stowed, as the steamer Cley, on Sunday, seeing she was on fire, went alongside and tendered her assistance, but the captain thinking that they had already succeeded in extinguishing the flames, declined the proffered aid. After she left, however, it appears the fire again got the mastery, the result being that both vessel and cargo were entirely destroyed, the hands on board escaping by means of the boats and some cotton bales. The Pratt went down the bay early yesterday morning, on the Florida bringing the news, but found barely a trace of the wreck left. We are glad to hear the both vessel and cargo were fully insured. While regretting the loss which will fall on the insurance companies, we believe there are few if any who will lament the fate of the ship. She was, we are afraid to say how old, and was remarkable for making the longest passages on record between the two ports. Her last voyage is still fresh in the minds of our citizens, to many of whom her mishaps and long delay was the cause of serious loss.

A New Game.—Officer Marshall, says the Cincinnati Times, informs us of a new game which has been introduced by the "sharpers" on the Levee. It is as follows: The sharper places a galvanized counterfeit $5 gold piece into an empty pocket-book. Getting alongside of a green one, he opens and looks into it, holding it in such a position that greeny sees the yellow boy. He pretends as if he does not see it, and closing the book, declares he is out of money, and will sell the pocket-book for a mere trifle. He asks the green one if he will give $2 for it; and he, supposing that there is a $5 piece in it which the holder knows not of, readily gives the $2, slips the book into his pocket and slips off from the sharper, for fear that he will find out that the money is in it. Scores have thus been swindled out of their money, some giving as high as three and four dollars for a pocket book not worth a quarter of a dollar.

Mrs. Swissheim's Baby.—Mrs. Swissheim, editress of the Pittsburgh Saturday Visitor, and Fanny Fern, are the most distinguished asserters of women's right to write. The following is a specimen of Mrs. S.'s peculiar vein:

Southern Presumption.—"The South," the "arrogant South," the "insolent South," the "overbearing South." How these pesky Southern people do try our patience! Nothing will do them but they must have all the Presidents and all the say in Congress. They must verify John Randolph's boast, and keep us "white slaves" catching black slaves, and nobody knows into what outrageous caricatures of dogs and men they do continue to work up their Northern dough. But nothing they, or any of them have ever done, did ever rile our temper like a paragraph we find in our exchanges, stating that Mrs. Prewett, of the "Lezoo Family Whig," has offered to compare babies with us—to intimate that her belief that her mosquito-eaten, flea-bitten, tick-tormented, pismire-persecuted, alligator-menaced, miasma-poisoned, yellow fever-chased, sun-scorched, Mississippi baby will compare with our Nettie! That woman must be "clean daft;" but in our opinion there is no much method in her madness, that she took care not to send that number of the "Whig" to our office.

She must have felt that if we became directly aware of her presumption, we should have started forthwith for Yazoo city, to cover her with incontinent confusion. She took care we should get only a second-hand hint of what was going on. Poor benighted woman! we do really pity her; and now that we have reflected on it, we would not on any consideration let her see our baby, for straightway she would whip and pinch her poor little thing for very spite that it was so entirely eclipsed.

She never imagined a baby like ours, or dreamed of any thing so perfect. Just think of it, Mrs. Prewett—twenty-three pounds in eight months! So white and soft, and round, with such violet eyes and such a tooth! Then, if you could see that little fat toot held up for mother to kiss, and the look of wise wonder that follows this expected caress! Poor Mrs. Prewett, now we do pity you that you have not such the baby!

Dear "Fanny Fern:" Some graceless wight on the other side of the water has roused Fanny's ire by a scandre by a scandalous paragrph, and she gives him fits:

"Don't marry a woman under twenty. She hasn't come to her wickedness before then." [Blackwood's Magazine.

Well! if I knew any bad words, I'm awful afraid I should say 'em. I just wish I had hold of the perpetrator of that with a pair of tongs, I'd bottle him up in spirits and keep him for a terror to liars, as sure as his name is Kit North!

Set a thief to catch a thief. How come you to know when that crisis in a woman's life occurs? Answer me that! I'll tell you what my opinion is, and won't charge you any fee either. A woman comes to her wickedness when she comes to her husband; and, if she knew any thing good before, it all goes by the board then—it's no more use to her afterwards than the fifth wheel of a coach. Don't you know, you wicked calumniator, that thunder don't sour milk more effectually than matrimony does woman's temper.

Come to their wickedness, indeed! Snow-flakes and soot! They'd not know the meaning of the word "wicked." If your sex were blotted out of existence. We should have a perfect little heaven upon earth—a regular terrestrial paradise; no runaway matches, no cases of——e-conscience, no divorces, no devilry of any kind. Women would keep young till the millenium; in fact, millenium would be merely a nominal jubilee, because it would have already come. The world would be one universal garden of pretty, rosy, laughing women; no masculine baldew to mar their beauty or bow their sweet heads, the blessed year round.

Now, you'd better repent of your sins, Mr What'a-your-name; for, as sure as preaching, you will go where you will have nothing to do but to think of 'em; and you won't find any women there, either, for they all go to the other place. Fanny Fern.

Destruction of an Old House.—A Reminiscence.—In Norfolk, last week, a three-story brick house on Little Water street, built in 1804, was destroyed by fire. The Norfolk Herald says:

It was in this house that a shocking tragedy occurred in 1806. Two gamblers (brothers) of the name of Bayle, rented the third story for the purpose of keeping a faro table. One night an Italian, whose name we believe was Colombi, (Coalminer, as he was commonly called,) visited this establishment, and meeting with extraordinary luck, finally broke the bank. The Bayles and another of their fraternity charged him with cheating; he protested his innocence, but it was to no purpose. They attempted to seize him, but he broke from them and fled down the narrow dark stair way, all three in close pursuit. On the second landing he stepped aside unperceived, and as each passed him on the right, in the dark, he gave him a fatal stab with a stiletto in the left side, and a push down the next flight. The two Bayles were mortally wounded, and died within twenty-four hours; their companion lingered several weeks and died also. The Italian escaped.

Lemon Juice for Acute Rheumatism.—The treatment of acute rheumatism with lemon juice, as noticed in the Scientific American, more than a year ago, having been successfully practised in Europe, has been tried here, and found to be a very effectual remedy. Dr. T. B. Lee, of NewYork, has communicated his experience with it to the Journal of Medicine. He cites two cases, one a male, and the other a female, who had been subject to a severe rheumatism for a number of years, and were often troubled with acute pains, severe swellings, and could find no effectual remedy. He gave them lemon juice from fresh lemons in quantities of a table spoonful to twice the quantity of cold water, with a little sugar, every hour. The effect of the lemon juice was almost instantaneous; in ten days the worst case was cured, and in seven, the other was able to go out, and there was a flexibility of the joints after the cure, quite unusual in recovery after other modes of treatment. The London Medical Times directed attention to this remedy for rheumatism in 1810, and we would state that it may answer for one person and not for another. There are two cases recorded in Braithwait's Retrospect, part 22, 1851, pages 37 and 38, where one patient was effectually cured with lemon juice, after calcium, calomel, and opium had been tried in vain, and the other where lemon juice failed, and the patient was cured with opium and calomel pills, taken along with draughts of the acetate of potash and nitro in a camphor mixture.

The Steamer Crescent City.

NewYork, October 18.

The steamer Crescent City has arrived here from New Orleans via Havana. She was permitted to enter the port of Havana without molestation, but all communication with the shore was prohibited. The American Consul came alongside, but not being allowed to go on board, he remained in his boat until Captain Porter prepared and handed him a protest against the proceedings of the Cuban authorities with regard to his ship. Efforts were made on the part of the Cuban officials to compromise the matter with Captain Porter, but the latter refused to listen to any overtures except through the American Consul, or to, consult with any but him. Communication still being refused, Captain Porter put to sea, hoisting the American flag as he passed the Morro, and firing a gun at the same time.

Tremendous Storm—Destruction of Property.

Baltimore, October 20.

Heavy gales have been raging along the coast for the last day or two, doing an immense amount of damage. The dwelling of the Light-house keeper at the Breakwater has been destroyed, and also the railroad bridge in the course of construction at Wakulla. Half a mile of the railroad has been washed up, and much other damage done. To the cotton crop, the storm has been most disastrous, and for a long extent of coast there will not be a yield of one bale for ten acres. In Tallahassee the destruction has been very great. "Every store, from the Capitol to the Court-house, in the city, has been more or less damaged. For a long distance, the roads are blocked up with timber, etc., so as to be almost impassable. The storm was equally severe at Apalachicola. Among the losses of the shipping has been the wrecking of the steamer Palmetto.

The London Times of the 28th contains an article condemnatory of the proceedings of Mr. Webster, and expressing the conviction that the Peruvian Government would be able to beat off or capture the whole of the merchant vessels engaged in the Guano Expedition, unless a naval squadron of the United States interfere to prevent such an attempt.

FRANCE.

An attempt was made to assassinate Louis Napoleon at Marseilles, by means of an infernal machine, containing 250 gun barrels loaded with 1500 bullets. The machine was secured by the police and the parties arrested.

Advices from Paris state that the first official act towards the establishment of the Empire will take place on October 15, when the Tours decree will be published for the convocation of the Senate to examine and report on an address from the departments, inviting the President to assume the imperial dignity.

The conspiracy to murder the President, it was believed, was extended through Prince Vos. (sic) and was not on foot by the French Piedmontese Socialists. Over one hundred well known violent socialists have been arrested, charged with being engaged in the conspiracy. It is thought there is yet another machine concealed at Marseilles.

The Paris journals are principally occupied in chronicling the progress of the President through the Southern Departments. At Grenoble, Avignon and Marseilles the President was received with the most extravagant outward demonstration of joy.

Beneath all this current of popular rejoicing, however, it was plain that indications of a secret hatred were preparing to a great extent. This is proved by a conspiracy to assassinate the President at Marseilles. The infernal machine was planted on a house in one of the streets through which Louis Napoleon was to pass the next day. It was seized by the police that night. Besides the 250 gun barrels, the machine had four hundredweight of powder charged with grape shot. This battery if fired during the passage of the cortege, would have completely swept away the President and his attendants. Many of the conspirators were arrested. The plot of destruction was concocted by a secret society, which had long been watched by the police.

The subject of adressing the addresses emanating from the Departmental Councils generally, and of either framing a report thereon or passing the Senate's ultimatum inviting Louis Napoleon to assume the imperial dignity, has not yet been definitely settled.

The return of the Prince to Paris, after completing his present journey, will be celebrated with royal and imperial pomp and magnificence, which will eclipse anything of the sort ever seen in France.

The news of the attempted assassination of Louis Napoleon had no effect on the Paris Bourse. The machine was calculated to kill 800 persons.

VIOLENT GALE.—A destructive gale was experienced at Savannah, Charleston, and other points along the Atlantic coast, on the night of Saturday, the 9th Instant. The Savannah News says:

At 11 o'clock the wind was at its height, and judging from the terrific force with which it broke against the walls of the houses, and the heavy swelling roar with which it swept over the city, we expected yesterday morning to witness a scene of destruction even more extensive than that occasioned by the gale with which we were visited in August of last year. We have taken considerable pains to ascertain the extent of the damage, and are gratified to find that it is not so great as we had reason to apprehend. Fortunately the wind storm was unaccompanied by rain when at its height. A heavy fall of rain would have added greatly to its force, and much injury would have been done to property in the city. We fear that the shipping on our coast has suffered, and we shall look with interest for reports from outside.

The chimney of Millar's foundry was blown down.

The top of the cupola of the Lutheran church was blown off, and carried across State street, and over the brick house occupied by Mrs. Webb, and in its course struck the back chimney of the house, breaking it off even with the roof, and finally lodged in Mrs. W.'s yard.

We hear of telegraphic posts being blown down, and of breakages of wires along the line of the Central Railroad. The interruption of communication from these causes will soon be remedied, as all the appliances for their repairs were taken up yesterday morning.

The steam towboat Eliza, in coming down the river, on Saturday night, had her wheel-house blown overboard about 12 o'clock.

At Charleston the storm was very severe, and the shipping in port suffered considerably. Several houses were unroofed, and two or three were blown down.

A letter dated at Ashepo Ferry, S. C., the 10th instant, says:

"Last night we had one of the most severe storms that I have witnessed for a number of years. The roads are entirely blocked up with fallen timber, and I expect it will be difficult for the mail to reach Charleston to-morrow. The wind began to blow from about N. E. shortly after dark, and continued till about midnight, when it shifted about S. S. E. and blew very heavy; about day it varied around the compass, still blowing very hard, and before sunrise was West, and quite calm."

The village of Hermann, in Missouri, is the centre of a wine-growing district originally settled some fifteen years ago by a company of Germans. The soil of the country was poor, and did not yield good crops of grain or tobacco, and many of the first settlers left. In the end element of grape culture on the hills—which are 300 to 600 feet high, with a southern exposure—was tried successfully. There are now 437 acres devoted to the grape, and the manufacture of wine is carried on to a considerable extent. The village contains about 1200 inhabitants.

Later from Mexico.

The British steamer which arrived at Havana on the 11th inst. brought dates from Vera Cruz to the 5th, and from the city of Mexico to the 1st inst. We avail ourselves of the Picayune's translations:

On the 23d of September the Committee of Congress presented to the Government a recommendation that that body should be convened to take into consideration the Tehuantepec question, the raising of war on the Indians, and the means of raising resources for the Government. The Government, however, reduced the questions to be presented, and issued the following decree:

"The Chambers are convoked to meet on the 20th of October, to take into consideration measures for the re-establishment of public order, now disturbed by revolutionists."

On the 30th of September the Minister of Justice issued a decree against the liberty of the press. The following are its most important portions:

"While there exists an armed force in any part of the Republic which does not obey the orders of the Government, and stirs up its overturn of the existing order of things, attacking the national institutions, no one shall write for the press anything that shall directly or indirectly favor the pretensions of the insurgents. No one shall be allowed to write against the authorities or functionaries in any way that shall degrade them in public opinion; neither will calumnious or defamatory assertions, under the frivolous pretence that it is publicly said, or it is well known, be allowed; but reasonable discussion on the acts of the Government, which shall not provoke the feelings nor offend the persons of the officers, is not prohibited."

Offences are to be punished with imprisonment or fine of the writer, or printer if he will not present the writer; and the supreme power decrees to itself authority to act summarily in the premises, either with civil or military forms. The press is consequently as completely muzzled as in France.

This correspondent of the Diario de la Marina says:

"Apart from all revolutionary nonsense, it is universally considered here that the Government of General Arista is defunct. His new Ministry is composed, in its majority, of parties who will never set water on fire; and on the proximate opening of Congress it is the general opinion that an entire change will take place. The State Legislatures already begin to clamor against the law of the press, and it is currently reported that the Government of Puebla has called out six thousand men, an energy that evil tongues say would have been better shown during the foreign invasion.

"Without dipping into such depths, I may say to you in pello that the new President of the Republic is Senor Munes Ledo, present ttorernor of Guanajuato, who, as a litterateur and as a politician, has a high reputation. In the present situation of Mexico, can the pen or the tongue of a lawyer cope with the difficulties of the crisis? Many hope it, but withal few expect it. More confidence would be found in a good sword. But where shall we look for it?"

[We would premise that the correspondent who writes is one of the Spanish party in Mexico, and his political anticipations should be taken cum grano salis. Eds. Pic.]

Advices were received at Jalapa, on the 23d, that the re-enforcement of the National Guard that left Perote, on the 16th inst., for Orizaba, had been met by the insurgents at Cerro Gordo, and the entire body surrendered to the insurgents after a short fight.

A pronunciamiento has taken place at Guadalajara, which among the articles of its plan has the following:

"The nation in fine (sic) elects Antonio Lopez de Santa Anna to return to the Republic, that he may co-operate in sustaining the federal systems and re-establishing order and peace."

Don Jose Maria Blancarte heads the movement.

The correspondent of the Diario de la Marina says:

"In regard to the general state of the pronunciamientos of Guadalajara, I hardly know what to believe. Some say they have plenty of money, and others are equally sure they have not a rap. Some think they are well united, including servilles and Santa Annaists; and others know that the most terrible discord prevails among them, and that the revolution is in danger of subsiding into social anarchy. My private advices do not entirely do away with this fear. I may say they rather tend that way. This is the only thing wanting in Mexico's disasters.

"On receiving advices of the movement at Guadalajara, the Government could not affect ignorance, and the law of the press was published, all communication with Jalisco suspended, and troops ordered to march on Guadalajara. This causes some confusion, as you will see.

"Since the brigade of Uraga has been quartered in the neighborhood of Mexico, daily rumors have been current that it would pronounce in favor of a Dictatorship by Arista, and one day we were assured it had taken place at Tacubaya. I will not inquire whether the Government approved the idea, but I am sure Uraga did not. This brought a marked coldness between Arista and Uraga, and when the troops were ordered to Guadalajara, they were placed under the command of Gen. Vasquez, Uraga being sent as Commendnnte to Guanajuato. It now remains to be seen what will be the effect of the removal of a much liked general upon troops who before were inctined, not a little, toward Santa Anna.

"In regard to the other outbreaks I have little to say. They appear to be only local movements including that of Macatlan, which sustains itself. The only spark that seems to mannee danger is the movement of a Prefect of Michoacan, who passen for a Santaindsta, and has 300 men. But enough of politics with which we are nll satiated. Even theatrical affairs have for the moment lost their interest, and I can only say that the opera enthiuses its labors without any notable event. It is said the company may go to Vera Cruz."

Don Lucas Alaman has resigned his position es one of the committee to examine the Tehuantepec propositions. He took this step after receiving the instructions of the Government to the Commissioners. Don Antonio Mondoridin has been named in his place.

A body of 200 men had been ordered by the State Government to march from Vera Cruz to Jelapa, but after the news from Cerro Gordo were received, "es the Governmen had changed its plan of action."

Capt. Levy had returned to Vera Grus and goes to Mexico in order to negotiate for the Interoceanic route, via Alvarado, Huatulco, etc.

EQUESTRIAN STATUE OF GEN. JACKSON.—We visited yesterday the studio and workshop of Mr. Clark Mills, the sculptor, who has, as is generally known, the contract for making the bronze equestrian statue of Gen. Jackson. Mr. Mills had just made the last casting, and is now preparing to finish and elevate the status preparatory to its being removed to Fayette Square. He informs us that he has commenced to build the pedestal, the appropriation of five thousand dollars by Congress having been placed in his hands for that purpose, and he confidently expects to have the statue ready to be inaugurated on the 8th of January next.

Most of other statues in a rearing position are supported by a prop under the belly, or by some other means equally unobtrusive and unsightly. But Mr. Mills has not even the support of the tail of his horse—it is on its hind feet only—and that with a mass of metal greater than in the statue of the Duke of Wellington, and only sixteen hundred pounds less than is in that of Peter the Great. The statue of Peter the Great weighs 36 035 pounds, and that of Gen. Jackson will weigh about 35,000. The artist has taken the attitude of a horse at the moment when all its muscular force is in play in bringing itself in a rearing position. This not only brings the centre of gravity in a dividing line through the boll of the horse and rider, but gives a degree of animation and grace, at once natural and beautiful, which cannot be obtained in any other attitude.

It has been said by artists and travellers, and among them by Tupper, the English poet, that if Mr. Mills succeeded he would immortalize himself. Many have doubted—they could not realize the fact that genius is superior to art; that a gentleman who has never seen old masters, nor studied under the moderns—who has never been out of his own country, and, consequently, never seen an equestrian statue—that he could design and execute a colossal and beautiful work of this character. Artists and founders have said that there was not a foundry in the United States where such a foundry could be cast; but he has done it by building a foundry, which does not hang enough to build a plough-share. To make such immense castings in such a place appears an impossibility; but this gentleman, like Mirabeau, seems not to comprehend that word. For four years—which, after all, is a shorter time than such a statue has ever been made before—he has worked against difficulties which appeared insurmountable. He has overcome them. The amount of the contract, $12,000, will not pay his expenses, and yet he was determined to accomplish the work. [Washington Union.

THE NEW AMERICAN EMBASSADOR.—A trusty correspondent at Washington has sent us an exclusive copy of the instructions of the American Cabinet to Mr. Ingersoll, who comes over to supersede Mr. Abbott Lawrence in his duty of United States Embassador at St. James. It will be seen that they relate more to the personal conduct of the future Minister than to any line of policy between the two countries. They are as follows:

1. You are on all occasions to remember that you represent the simplicity of the republican principle. You will, therefore, as seldom as may be, consider yourself the Duke of Wellington—the Marquis of Niagara—or the Earl of Mississippi—because it is your duty to pay respect to a crowned head; you are not, therefore, to forget that the American President wears nothing but a hat—night caps going for nothing.

2 You will be courteous and accessible on all occasions to your fellow-citizens of the Union; never permitting the atmosphere of a monarchy, and more especially the intoxicating and delirious atmosphere of Almack's, of Stonehenge House, Normanblood Palace, and such high places, to make you forgetful of the equality of all the citizens of Jonathan.

3. You will, in the fulfillment of your official duties, have to swallow many public dinners; whereat you will be called upon to speak. Always hold out the right hand of fellowship—but keep your back straight. When invited to the high festivals of the Tattlebattlemongers' Company, you may or rather must—use a little soft sawder about the business, so amicably settled (with a book and fine.)

4. You have to propose toasts. Therefore do not give the immortal memory of King John—because you may see at the board a Jew sheriff whose ancestor had his teeth pulled out by the order of his anointed Majesty—the King drawing on the Jew's jaw instead of his bank. Finally, you will not spit upon the memory (by the way you must not spit in company anywhere in England) of Wat Tyler, as a rebel to his lawful King, seeing who once riz against good King George, the father of his people, (Jonathan giving his old father such a tarnation licking). [London Punch.

NATIONAL WASHINGTON MONUMENT.—A Contribution from Turkey.—The Washington Republic contains a letter recently received at the office of the Monument, addressed to Mr. Whittlesey, by John P. Brown, Esq., the American Dragoman at Constantinople, from which it appears that the Sultan of Turkey, Abd-al Majid, intends to contribute a block of marble for insertion in the shaft of the National Monument, in token of his admiration of the character and respect for the memory of the Father of our country. It seems that when the late Turkish agent, Amin Bey, was in Boston, Mr. Winthrop presented him with a copy of his address, delivered on the occasion of laying the corner-stone of the monument, and that the Sultan having read it, and being struck with admiration and respect for the character of Washington, has determined to contribute a block of marble to his monument. Mr. Brown, in communicating the fact, says:

This marble is from Byzantium, the most ancient of republics, and from the city of Constantine, as an offering from the successor of the Mahomedan caliphs and the Ottoman Sultans—from the most illustrious sovereign of the race of Eastern princes, illustrious both for the great nobleness and magnanimity of his character, and for the exertions which he is making to promote the prosperity of his country and his subjects; it will, I am confident, give satisfaction to the American people. It will contain the cypher of the Sultan, and a proper inscription, and be sent to your care for the association.

The wire of the Quebec and Halifax telegraph, which stretches across the St. Lawrence, at Carouge, was carried away by the ship Avon, while on her way from Quebec to Montreal.

OUR RELATIONS WITH SPAIN.—It is particularly as affected by the treatment of the American bark Cornelia, and the "indignity" offered to the Crescent City—engross the attention of the New York press: and it is curious to see the wide latitude that is assumed by certain editors while discussing the right and the wrong of the matter. Thus, while the Courier pronounces the treatment of the Cornelia "an insult of the grossest character, and entirely unprovoked" the Journal of Commerce takes an entirely different ground. The vessel in question, it ocnlends, was fairly subjected, under the circumstances, to the action of the local law. The Journal can see nothing in the treatment of the person named Hearkness, (found concealed on board, as is alleged, without Captain Word's knowledge) at all justifying the excitement aroused in his behalf. And then, as to the other alleged objectionable feature in this case—the scrowling of the mail bag after the Cornelia had thus subjected herself to suspicion—the Journal thinks we can better understand the matter by applying the facts to ourselves, for if—

"One revolution had just been attempted among us and another were threatened, and a vessel were in our harbor swept in the country from which the danger in the first instance had come, and again threatened, on board of which a person had been found secreted who was inimical to the government, and there was just reason to suppose that there were letters on board disclosing the measures intended for an expected revolt, it cannot be doubted that we should insist on a full examination."

RUINS OF ANCIENT CITIES IN THE ISLANDS OF THE NORTH PACIFIC.—The ruins of ancient cities of immense magnitude and extent, have long been known to exist in several islands of the Pacific ocean, the origin and existence of which history furnished no account. In one of the Ladrone islands, a group lying in latitude 16 degrees north, and longitude 170 degrees east, some two thousand miles from the coast of China, are the stupendous ruins of one of these ancient cities.

The Vineyard Gazette, published at Edartown, gives an account of a visit to these ruins by Capt. Alfred K. Fisher, of the Nantucket whale ship America. The principal street was three miles long, and the buildings all of stone of a dark color and of the finest meteriel. Near the centre of its street were twelve solid stone columns, near fifty feet in height, and ten feet in diemster at the base. From the principal avenus other streets diverge at regular intervals and at right angles. The ruins of the whole city were overgrown with trees of ancient and gigantic growth. The native inhabitants, nce the Spaniards in whose possession the island is at present, could give no account of the founders of the city. It seems to be a counterpart of those Central American cities, the record of whose people is blotted from the memories of men.

MARINE AFFAIRS—STEAM NAVIGATION OF THE RIO OF LA PLATA AND ITS TRIBUTARIES.—A company, under the name of the New York and Parsguay Steamship Company, has been chartered and is now receiving subscriptions to its stock in New York, for the purpose of establishing a line of steamers for the navigation of the Rio de le Plata and its tributaries—of which the Parana, Paraguey, and Uruguay are the principal. The commerce of the fertile countries along the line of these rivers has long been closed to the world by the obstinacy of Rosas, the late Dictator of the Argentine Confederation, who forbade any vessel proceeding up or down the litle de la Plata. On his downfall, however, it was thrown open, which will give a great impetus to the trade of the fertile States bordering on those streams. The Government of Bolivia, whose territory, with that of Perseguay, was completely excluded by the restriction from all communication by the river with the Atlantic has promised a bonus of $20,000 to the first steamer that succeeds in reaching their coast. This company proposes to purchase the British steamship Cherokee, which arrived from Halifax some few weeks back, and send hes forword without delay.

POSTAGE STAMP ENVELOPES.—The National Intelligencer understands that the Postmaster General has accepted the proposal of Mr. George F. Nesbitt, of New York, to furnish the Department with the Postage Stamp Envelope authorized by the act of the last session of Congress. These convenient little wrappers will consist of three nises—Note, Letter and Official. The denominations will be three, six, and twenty-four cents; the last intended for foreign correspondence. They will be self-sealing and bear a stamp similar in style to the English stamped envelop, and are expected to be in all respects equal to them. They are expected to be ready for delivery by the first of January.

FROM TURAN ISLAND.—The bark Chase, in sixteen days from Turks Island, arrived at New York on the 9th inst. with dates to the 8th ult.

The Royal Gazette notices the arrival at the city of Santo Domingo, from the United States, on the 23d August, of Colonels Ferguson and Pickett, to enter into preliminaries for the introduction into Santo Domingo of 4000 or 5000 American emigrants.

On the 6th ult., an attempt was made by a foreigner named Moocciair, to assassinate, or otherwise injure, President Forth. The individual was committed to jail.

The Gazette of the 8th, has the following: "We understand that the American brig Alfonso, which arrived on Thursday last from St. Martin's, had on board the last of the salt crop (about 2000 hushels) remaining on that island, they having had the heavy rains at St. Martin's last year which were experienced at those islands."

The Great Pitch Lake of Trinidad.—Fred. Taylor, Esq., a distinguished naturalist and mineralogist, has arrived at Trinidad, the object of his visit being, it was understood, the further development of the celebrated Pitch Lake to other purposes than those to which its use has hitherto been limited. The extent of the Pitch Lake is about 100 acres, of which 23 were some time since leased to the Earl of Buodouseld; and in the past year no less than 800 tons of asphalt were exported from this port of the property to England and the United States, where it has been chiefly employed in the production of gas.

THE BANE OF THE UNION.—The Washington Republic says the circulation of this exploded concern is not far from seventy thousand dollars; from six to ten thousand of which, it is estimated, is held in Washington by various individuals. A legal gentleman of Washington has gone to Virginia to take possession of assets of the bank in that State for the benefit of the creditors.

THE TEA PROSPECTS IN CHINA, ETC.—A correspondent writing from Shanghai, July 17, says that there are about five thousand tons of shipping in the harbor, waiting for the new crop of teas. Many crops have been gathered and are now on their way to Shanghai, but have been prevented reaching that place from the scarcity of water in the canals. A severe drouth was prevailing which the Chinese was trying to break up by processions, fasting, sacrifices, etc.

AN AGENT IN HANOVER, GERMANY.—An individual named Frederick Nolcke has been arrested by the Hanover government, who was supposed to have been guilty of an extensive robbery. A letter to the Mayor of Baltimore, from the Hanoverian consul, says that Nolcke was born in Hanover. He was previous to the year 1840, punished in the kingdom of Hanover for theft and other criminal offences; after which he emigrated to this country. He again returned to Germany in April last, and after a short stay, is said to have come back to this country. He again left Philadelphia on the 17th July for Hanover, where by his lavish expenditure of money he drew upon himself the suspicion of the police, and was arrested on the 21th of August and detained in prison, not being able to account satisfactorily for the following amount of money and jewelry found in his possession: two gold $50 pieces; ninety-one gold $20 pieces; twenty-two gold $1 pieces; $16 in silver coin; two gold watches, with gold chains and keys; one gold medal; one gold ring, with red set; one gold breastpin; one gold toothpick; one gold bracelet; one pair gold ear-rings; one gold brooch; two portraits, and a full suit of wearing apparel. The medal which was found on the prisoner is probably the Henry Clay medal, which was stolen in January last.

THE INDIGNATION MEETING IN NEW ORLEANS.—"Ion," of the Baltimore Sun, writing from Washington, says: "The public meeting lately held in New Orleans, on the subject of the outrages on American commerce at Havana, is the beginning of a strong Anti-Cuban movement. The ball is now set in motion, and it is not likely to stop short of a collision between the United States and Spain, or a revolution in Cuba, aided by the citizens of the United States. A free commercial intercourse with Cuba is not to be checked: and yet it cannot be continued without daily collisions with the Spanish authorities of Cuba. Commercial intercourse with the United States is inconsistent with the existence of Spanish power in Cuba. The two things cannot longer co-exist."

"THE U. S. STEAM FRIGATE SUSQUEHANNA.—A letter from Mr. Francis Merritt, of Baltimore, attached to the U. S. steam frigate Susquehanna, lying at Canton river, China, 20th July, says: "Our steamer is improving every day. We went from Amoy to Hong Kong—over 350 miles—in the short space of twenty-six hours; in fact, we beat almost everything up here." The letter further says, they have the sixteen Japanese on board who were picked up by a whale boat, taken to California, and sent to the East Indies in the U. S. ship St. Mary. The Susquehanna had been waiting for three months for orders to proceed to Japan. Most of the crew of the Susquehanna had been laid up sick, the weather being very warm and the climate sickly.

RESURRECTIONIST KILLED.—The Cincinnati Commercial of the 8th says: About two o'clock on yesterday morning, Mr. Jacob Swein, the Sexton of the new City Burial Ground, was awakened by a man in his employ, and told that some one was in the grave yard and engaged in digging up bodies. Mr. S., taking his gun, went out, and saw three persons, one of whom advanced towards him with a knife in his hand. Mr. S. immediately raised his gun and fired, with so much certainty as to kill the body-snatcher dead in his tracks. The other two instantly fled, leaving a horse and wagon, and the implements used for digging up the graves, behind them.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company has had a verdict rendered against it for $8,000 damages, for injuries sustained by a man named Piper, while in the cars.

An English author says of a certain lady—"Lady Nicholls was the true type of a well-bred English woman, who resigns herself, without winking, to a birth once a year, and who finds this prosaic exercise so natural that she utters neither complaints nor regrets."

In being helped to some roast turkey at a hotel, an Irishman was so much pleased with the flavor of the dressing that he called for a second plate, saying, "do mind now, ye spalpeen, give me lots of the stuffing. A complete collection of the military correspondance of Napoleon is being formed by order of Louis Napoleon. Considerable progress has already been made in it, but it will, it is expected, take two years more to finish it. It is to be published, and will run to sixty or eighty volumes.

On the 2d inst. a Mrs. Murphy was fined $3 and costs in a police court at New Bedford, Mass., for having disturbed worship at a Catholic church. It appeared in evidence that on the day the alleged disturbance took place, Rev. Thomas McNulty took occasion to exhort his flock upon the dire and dreadful results of frequenting certain houses. Mrs. Murphy, for some reason, excepted to this sort of pointed preaching, and forthwith rose in her pew and addressed to Father McNulty language which may be stated safely to have been strong if not forcible. Mrs. Murphy styled the Rev. Thomas McNulty a "blackguard," and added other terms more euphonious and less polite.

On the 11th inst., while the workmen were digging round the foundation of the ancient London wall, which is situated on the eastern side of Trinity Square, Tower hill, they discovered a large quantity of old horns of oxen and other cattle, which were carefully collected together for preservation. They were in excellent condition, and weighed about 300 weight. The old lofty wall, which is of great antiquity, and the finest specimen that can be found, has been pulled down and carted away to a stone-mason's yard in Spitalfields, portions of which contained very curious and rare pieces of ancient masonry and unique carving, which must have been executed at least a thousand years ago. Several tablets have also been taken out of the lower portions of the wall and removed by the contractors, most probably to be destroyed, as they were taken away indiscriminately with the dirt and rubbish. The large space which exposed the old wall is now being built upon, and already large warehouses have been constructed for commercial purposes. A great number of respectable persons visited the spot to inspect the old wall, which in two or three weeks will be completely built against and hidden from the public view. The men here been excavating to an immense depth, and have found numerous Roman coins.

Lately, as the workmen were engaged in removing Gerard's Hall crypt, London, they found behind some brickwork the skeletons of a cat and a rat. From the position in which they were found, it is evident that the cat, which is of a very large species, had suffered the painful death of starvation in pursuing the rat, which is firmly held in its mouth. The frames of the cat and rat are most perfect, although supposed to have lain in their place of sepulture some four or five hundred years, the smellers being as complete as when living. Several antiquaries, who have viewed the skeleton of the cat, maintain it to be one of the Persian breed, others of the old English tabby.

The North British Mail says that a young man, who left Paisley, Scotland, about three years ago, to push his fortune in Australia, has within these few days returned home. On entering his mother's dwelling, he found her engaged winding weft on weaver's pirns. After mutual greetings on the happy meeting, the son told his mother to cast by her pirn-wheel. "Na, na, Jamie," said she, "I'll no cast my pirn-wheel till I ken o' something better." "Weel," said Jamie, "look at this," at the same time producing a bank check for £10.000, the produce of his industry at the Australian gold diggings.

The Rockland (N. Y.) Journal says that the Board of Supervisors have resolved to have the cells of the prison, at New City, entirely lined with iron. These are to be three-quarters of an inch thick, and fitted closely and strongly together. The Messrs. Smith & Crumbie, of Rockland, have received the contract, and the castings will commence as soon as the patterns have been formed. This will put an end to the escaping of prisoners, as the very attempt to break out would be like striking an alarm bell.

A commodious and splendid brick edifice has just been completed—ninety-seven by forty-seven feet, three stories—which for stability, convenience of arrangement, and for number, size and comfort of private and school rooms, is not surpassed by any similar one in the country. The Principal resides in the building, and with his lady and competent female assistance, superintends the Boarding Department. A lady will reside in the Seminary, who faithfully discharges the duties of Matron, Nurse and Governess, so that at all times, pupils will find the comforts, kindness and attentions of home. The Principal, with the aid of female teachers, who also live in the Seminary, diligently guard and form their morals, manners and habits of the pupils. Being under his charge at all times, they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations, respecting neatness, order, punctuality, economy and regularity, calculated to give a safe and rigorous development to character. The appliances of home and family are not removed by this arrangement, but perpetuated and strengthened.

The ensuing scholastic year will commence on Thursday the 23d of September, 1852. Pupils can enter at any time during the year, and receive tuition from the time of entrance. No deduction will be made but by special arrangement with the Principal.

Boarders study at night under a teacher. They are required to retire 9 o'clock at night, and rise early in the morning at a given signal, and to take frequent and wholesome exercise.

Private rooms are large, conveniently and comfortebly furnished. Pupils are required to keep their wardrobes and private apartments in neatness and order. A proper officer weekly takes charge of their clothing, inspects its condition, and every Saturday morning instructs them in plain sewing and necessary repaire of clothing. Every article of clothing must be marked with the owner's name.

Bi-monthly reports are sent to patrons, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and deportment of pupils.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, or any amusement calculated to interfere with their studies.

Visitors are not received by pupils, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The Principal must have certain information respecting every correspondent. Pupils are required to attend Church and Sunday School on Sabbath.

No accounts will be opened in Marion but with the expressed permission of patroos. When articles are to be purchased, the patron of the Principal must approve the purchase (who superintends their trading), and thus expenditures will be controlled. Patrons should anticipated supply the wants of pupils as far as is practicable.

Dental operations will not be performed but by special permission from patrons.

Patrons are earnestly requested to encourage economy in all the expenditures of pupils—clothing, pocket money and jewelry.

Life....By E. K. Harris.

...h, thou busy, wasting dream,
...Fading, feding evermoro!
...Time's derkly-surging stroam
...Speed we to a distant shore.
...the star that glistened o'er us
...Waneth feeble—feebler yet;
...ness glooms afur before us;
...Night upon the sky is set.

...fade ere we behold them!
...Flowers wither in our grasp;
...die, yet we enfold them
...Rudely in Death's iron clasp.
...ither haste wo? whither flying?
...Speed we thus Time's waves upon?
...bar dearer selves are dying!
...Yet we journey, journey on.

"Yes," replied the doctor; "but as yanr outward man perisheth," etc. "O yes," he answered, "when my mind returns from its wanderings and fixes itself on Christ, then it rests." About 5 o'clock P. M., much more languid than ever before, and troubled for breath, he said to his wife, "Rosamond, I am getting very feeble. I may not be ahle to say any thing more in particular to any one." She answered, "You have already said much, we can not ask more. She asked him "if he had nny thing in particular to say," to which he answered, "Na! nothing. My mind and spirit rest on Christ, the Rock. If I am able (to say more) well! if not, all is well!" In the evening he said to the doctor, "Faith is a great thing; it enables me to stand on the dividing line between the two worlds without trembling." On the next day he was very languid, and said but little. Tuesday, June 6, the day af his death, at one time he said to his mother: "Mother, I have no temptation to murmuring or impatience; but on the contrary, I feel that heavenly breezes are passing over me." His mother said, "Glory to God!" and continued, "I shouted Glory to God! when you were converted: but then I rejoiced with trembling; now I rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory; and can I but rejoice, when I see my son breathing his life out in the arms of Jesus, and melting away in the light of heaven?" Afterwards he said, "This is not death, it is the consummation of life; a little while, and it will be eternal life, everlasting life."

About two hours before his death, suddenly, and with an expression of anxiety, he said, "Mother, pray for me, that my faith may not fail—that I may not be overcome by temptation." Earnest supplication was made to God by his mother and friends, to which he responded most fervently. When the name of Jesus was mentioned, he repeated it again and again, saying, in the language of supplication, "Jesus is my trust!" After prayer he said, "I seem to have lost sight of my landmarks." Still he wrestled in the name of Jesus. Prayer was continued till the song of victory burst forth from his lips, "Glory to God! I shall be saved. Glory to God! I shall live in heaven. Why was it that I was left?" All was dark; and I began to fear that I should die a sad specimen of a Christian." His mother said, "It was permitted for the trial of your faith. But you will come forth as gold. God will not forsake his children." He replied with great emphasis, "But what if I had not been a Christian!" He raised his head, and waved his right hand, shouting in a subdued, yet emphatic voice, "Glory to God! Glory to Jesus! He is my trust! He is my strength! Glory to Jesus! Mourn not for me: Jesus lives—I shall live also! Glory to Jesus! He is my rock! Jesus! Jesus!" and repeated two lines, commencing with—

"Jesus, the name," etc.

"Jesus, my life! Jesus! Glory to Jesus!" Feebly grasping the hand of Mrs. C., he said, "Farewell, my dear wife. Glory to Jesus! Jesus, my life! Jesus, my trust! Jesus! Jesus!" Thus he fell asleep in Jesus, on the 6th of June.

"THE INFIDEL MOTHER."

BY FANNY FERN.

Can it be? can you look into the depths of those clear, blue eyes, that seek yours in such confiding, innocent trust? Can you deck those dimpled limbs, so "fearfully and wonderfully made?" Can you watch with him the first faint streak of light, that ushers in another happy day? Can you point out to the gold and purple sunset glory! Can you look upward with him to the shining host? or place in his eager hand the field flowers that bend their dewy eyes with grateful thanks, and NEVER name "Our Father?"

When at dead of night you watch beside his sick couch; when you hush your every breath to listen to his pained moan; when every gust of wind makes your cheek grow pale; when you turn with trembling hand the healing drops; when every tick of the clock seems beating against your heart; when the little pallid face looks beseechingly into yours, for the "help" you can not give; oh! where can you turn the suppliant eye, if you see not the "Great Physician?"

When health slowly returns; when the eye brightens, and the red colors cheek and lip; when the vacant chair is again filled; when the little feet are again busy; when loving arms in playful glee twine around your neck—comes there from that woman's heart of thine no burst of grateful thanks to Him who notes even the sparrow's fall?

Suppose Death come! You fold away the little useless robes; you turn with a filling eye from toys and books, and paths those little feet have trod: you feel ever the shadowy clasp of a little hand in yours; you turn heart-sick from happy mothers, who number no missing lamb from their flock; a sunny ringlet, a rosy cheek, or a piping voice, gives your heart a death pang. You walk the busy street, and turn your head involuntarily when a little, strange voice calls "Mother!" Oh! where can you go for comfort then, if you believe not that the "Good Shepherd" folds your lamb to His loving breast!

There is perfidy at your household hearth! there are broken vows, which you may not breathe to human ear. There is treachery repaid for trust! Childhood looks on with a sad wonder; you must "go backward and cast the mantle" of evasion over the moral deformity. Whence shall strength come, to your slender shoulders, to bear this heavy cross? How silence the ready tempter's voice? Where shall all those warm affections now be garnered up? (If not in Heaven!)

Oh, you have no anchor! no rudder or compass! Your little bark is adrift, at the mercy of every pitiless gale; the sea is dark and fearful; the billows mountain high; the sky black with darkness, if you turn from the Great Pilot. [Olive Branch.

REMINISCENCES.

Of all "the pictures that hang in memory's hall," there is one framed in my heart of a dear friend, long since "dead and passed away," to the great world around us; yet she lives to me, and to many throughout the Southwest, as the dutiful daughter, the warm and constant friend, and as a vision of amiability and kindliness. I wish it were given to me to paint her memory in words that would do justice to the image that is treasured in my heart. The attentive observer could not avoid being struck with the wholeness and consistency of her character. And I would love to be able to hold her virtues up high before the minds and hearts of your young lady readers, as an example for them to imitate.

Her father was wealthy, and held an elevated position before the world. His house was the home of the itinerant preacher in that section, and the chosen resort of an intelligent and polished circle of acquaintances. She was her father's oldest child; amiable, accomplished and witty. Of course she was the center of a circle of flatterers and real admirers. I have seen her in the social circle, surrounded by the polished and the intellectual, giving zest and harmony to the hilarity of the company, while all watched for her words, and were in some sort dependent on her for enjoyment, as the leading spirit of the company. And I have seen her as the kind daughter at home, looking over and calculating accounts, in order to save her father from troubles again, as the gentle, dignified and favorite young mistress, she was seen ministering at the bedside of the sick servant. Truly "None knew her but to love her, none named her but to prise." Yet she never lost that kindness of heart, that simplicity of manners which constituted her chief charm.

In one particular especially her character shone with peculiar lustre—as the young hostess, or entertainer of her father's guests. If the visitor was intellectual, polished and entertaining, none could appreciate his society more highly, or enjoy it better. And with earth's less favored sons and daughters, who were visitors at her father's house, she was the affable, the polite hostess. Abnegating selfishness, and with real politeness, which in such cases is real benevolence, she listened to incidents in which she felt no interest, and bestowed sympathy on those who had no claim on her, except the debt she owed to humanity and hospitality. I would hold up this trait particularly for the consideration of the young ladies of this generation. It certainly requires a species of heroism to entertain companions in whom we feel no interest; yet circumstances frequently make it a duty to do so. How often do we see young ladies, when called upon to talk to persons who are not exactly to their taste, yawning, and showing too evidently by their countenance and behavior, that they consider the company an unmitigated bore, even though the unfortunate persons may be "old friends of the family."

Some who may chance to read this sketch, will surely call to mind the devotion of Ann to the comfort of others, and will recognize the character that I am very imperfectly sketching. How many often call to their recollection the affability of Ann, her kind smile, which has brightened the "dark hour" for many a wayworn traveler over life's burning sands. Her memory is still cherished by many an old itinerant preacher, who felt, when talking to her, that he was talking to a friend; that she was as a daughter to him. It was curious and interesting to observe how all her numerous friends felt that they had claims on her; that she was identified in their happiness at least. We all felt that Ann was our sister or daughter. Life lost one of its brightest jewels for me, when she was taken from this scene, where she performed her part so well—to one in which the kindliness and truth of her nature might attain their legitimate development.

I love to look back through the dim vista of the past, and call her image up; her slight form arrayed in white, her favorite habiliment, her soft brown hair parted over her calm, thoughtful brow, and her bright hazel eyes beaming with intelligence and sympathy. I seem to see her now, and she lives again for me. If, in writing these lines, I have called her image and the memory of her worth up from the cells of memory, in the bosom of her many friends, they will thank me for the pleasant reminiscence, and will fill up the sketch with lights and colors from their own pleasant recollections of the lovely Ann.

I will close this reminiscence by copying some lines written on her death by a warm friend of hers, and an itinerant preacher:

"She's gone! the lovely Ann, so early gone;
Take hence that screech-owl wail that tells of woe
So withering to the heart. But wherefore spurn
A true report? Nay, read again those lines;
They tell no more than truth—for she is gone.
Nor art thou mourned, dear Ann, with feigned grief,
By him whose heart dictates these humble lines;
He, though no blood of his ran in thy veins,
Loved thee from childhood, onward to thy death,
With pure, unfaltering, persevering love.
Much has it grieved him that he saw thee not
In life's last struggle; that he was not near
To join thy other friends, in kind attempts
To smooth thy rugged passage to the grave,
And cheer thy spirit in its fainting hour;
To see once more thy face so long beloved,
And write the last expression of thy love
Deep in his heart, there to be read through life.
But vain this sorrow! he was far away,
Where duty called, when thy last struggle came.
What he could do, he did: his prayers arose
Frequent and fervent to the Throne of Heaven,
That thou might'st be supported by His hand,
Who holds alike the key of life and death.
And shall thy friends, who still remain below,
Indulge in unmixed sorrow? No: they grieve
At their own loss, but triumph in the hope
That thou art taken from all ill away,
To dwell with God, and be forever blessed.
Thy death unfastened many a tie that bound
Our souls to life, and held us captives here.
Thy flight inspired new motives to arise
And soar aloft, to find that world of bliss
Where hope has placed thy habitation fair.
Farewell, sweet spirit! then, farewell awhile,
Brief space divides thee from thy friends on earth."

SHORT SERMONS.

BY A LAY-PREACHER.

Modern infidelity has invented an objection of rare refinement to the doctrine of the atonement. This foundation of the Christian scheme is scouted by many of the wiseacres of this age on the following grounds:—They say that an enaction of justice so extreme as to cause, or permit the murder of innocence and sanctity to appease the violated law, would in effect defeat, if not extinguish, the attribute of mercy. If justice, say they, claims and receives the full measure of vengeance, mercy is extinguished, and justice itself is violated by leaving uncancelled the murder of innocence!

Thus skeptics deck their own brows with the plume of magnanimity—scorning even to accept the mercy tendered them by what they term a sacrifice of justice and righteousness. Now this is a specious objection, and might puzzle some simple hearted people. It is, however, nothing but a shrewd sophism, which some may not readily detect. It may be inquired that, as God is too just to suffer injustice to go unpunished unless expiated, who shall expiate the murder of that Being whose innocent death atoned for a world? Now, if we were left to imagine that the Son of God was dragged to the slaughter, as often are the unwilling victims of heathenish superstition, the objection might be maintained. As far as I can see, no ingenuity can solve the difficulty. But as the facts stand, the very reverse is the case. In the case of a free and voluntary sacrifice, as was the Saviour's, the infidel argument turns out to be a baseless fiction. Yet those who have urged it seem to have been too much attracted by the ignis fatuus glare of its high-toned magnanimity to notice this important distinction, which quite destroys all the force of the objection.

For surely any being endowed with freedom of volition, may elect to forego present enjoyments and endure present privations for the sake of doing and attaining to a future and greater good. We find that Jesus Christ "for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and (as his reward) is set down at the right hand of God." It is the hope of future good that inspires the patient endurance of present ills. Men act on this principle, in all matters where they endure any avoidable privation. In the economy of human life, the principle is made a fruitful source of interest and advantage; and it may be a governing principle in the economy of all created intelligences. Unquestionably, then, voluntary sacrifices which conduct to exalted facilities, can not be esteemed infelicitous, much less do they imply injustice to the party freely choosing them.

And shall God contravene a principle which he has implanted, and interdict a free choice of means, essentially benevolent, to attain an end supremely good? Not so; for it has ever been his well known pleasure to crown such actions with honor and happiness. Where, then, is the injustice complained of? The sequel of the death of Jesus—or murder of innocence, as it may be called—was but a triumph of good over evil, of exuberant mercy over the rigorous exactions of an inexorable, but righteous doom.

DEATH, AND OUR REDEEMER.

BY CHARLES PUCKETTE.

The sun is but a spark of fire,
A transient meteor in the sky;
The soul, immortal as its sire,
Shall never die! [Montgomery.

Why should we fear to die? why should we fear to meet that crisis which our Creator and Redeemer has destined us to meet! Alas! man is frail. Even when the soul has made peace with its God, there is an influence about the flesh which causes us, even contrary to the dictates of our better sense, often to shrink from that which we know we can not evade—that with which we have to grapple without any hope of victory, but by which we are doomed to be overcome—to be overcome on earth, but which we shall recognize in the second birth, the resurrection.

Death is but the waking from a dreamy slumber; it is but the opening of the door to new and more pleasant scenes—the key that unlocks the "portals of bliss"—the revealer of all mysteries—the process by which we are qualified and refitted to enter into the enjoyment of our first state—it is the removing of that veil, whose dim flickering shadows and false reflection often cause our fate to appear darker than God ever intended it to be.

Death, we may say, is the end of all sorrow and the commencement of a peaceful rest which is "undefiled and fadeth not away." Had not sin entered, even temporal death had not been known to the children of men. We were first intended to enjoy immortality without passing the "gloomy vale;" but the conditions failed, and man was doomed to return to his kindred elements—was doomed to die—not as he now dies, but was doomed to die without any hope of peace beyond the tomb, or a renewal of his faded glory.

But man was provided with a Redeemer. The Son of God forsook his throne in heaven, descended to earth, took upon himself the form of the "Babe of Bethlehem," was wrapped in swaddling clothes and laid in a manger. His mission was to suffer death upon the cross; but he was permitted to remain on earth a sufficient length of time to set an example of perfection in every legitimate attribute and characteristic belonging to the human family. In due time he died for our sins, and was buried, and "rose again the third day according to the Scriptures;" and in that burial and resurrection, death has been robbed of its sting and the grave of its victory. * * * * * * When man transgressed, "Earth trembled from her center as again in her pangs, and nature gave a second groan," whilst hell rejoiced in triumph; but when the Cross of Calvary was stained with the blood which was to redeem the world, the scene was entirely different. "The sun beheld it not," and "hell howled;" hawled to see "heaven that hour let fall a tear;" howled because "heaven wept that man might smile;" because "heaven bled that man might never die."

Thus death, in the crucifixion of our Redeemer, was virtually conquered; but the victory was not fully completed. Christ must not only die for the ungodly, be buried and rise again for their justification, but must ascend to heaven in the very form and body which he bore upon the cross. It was necessary, in the Divine wisdom, that the Redeemer of man should go from earth to heaven in order that the Comforter might come. And not only so, but he tells his disciples, with his own mouth, that he must go to his Father to prepare a place for his followers, but in due time would come again, would come not in the character of a lamb led to the altar of sacrifice, but as a mighty conqueror, with power not only to reward the faithful of his Father's kingdom, but also with a commission to do justice unto those who forget God. His last words to his disciples, as recorded by one of the sacred penmen, more simple and affectionate than the parting of a kind and benevalent parent to his weeping children, even as the falling of the dew drops of heaven on a tender and thirsting plant, "Let not your hearts be troubled," and lo! the ministers around his Father's throne welcome him home to his Father's house, in which, he had assured them, are "many mansions."

What a pleasing thought, that death, the penalty of the first transgression, and the natural and never failing fruit af disobedience to the mandates af high heaven, has been robbed of its sting, and its victims now heirs to a resurrection of immortality! I say this is a pleasing thought—pleasing in itself, but much more heaven-inspiring when associated with the knowledge of the character of the one to whom we are indebted for the privilege of its indulgence. Yes, death has been conquered—our Redeemer has bled that man might never die—has bled and ascended to heaven, but shall come again; and happy the man who, in anticipation of the event, may be enabled to declare, with as full assurance as did old Job in his afflictions, "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God, and mine eyes shall behold and not another, though my veins be consumed within me."

FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD.

The choice treasures of the covenant, or the spiritual blessings of the New Testament, are all concealed and hid from the natural man; nor can any man ever get at them until the Spirit that seals the believer unseals the Gospel, and leads the believing mind into it.

How many times have I seen unconverted men in the pulpit, laboring in the dark to get into the treasure of an eminent text, which lay hidden under the seal, but all in vain. The sweet sense of pardon, of peace, of joy unspeakable and full of glory; the melting flames under a sense of eternal love; the sweet soul-dissolving sensations enjoyed under the divine flowings of godly sorrow and evangelical repentance, which are drawn forth under the sounding of God's bowels towards us, and the repeated discoveries of his love to us in Christ Jesus; the heavenly sense and divine glee that spring up by the Spirit, under the impressions that attend the divine presence being about our path and about our bed; the sweet rays of divinity that often appear in the word, plowing up the deep mysteries, and leading the enlightened mind, by a glorious radiance, out of one mystery into another, establishing the soul in the glorious harmony that appears in the word; when crooked things are made straight, rough places plain, and apparent discords are made to harmonize; the delightful and soul enriching thoughts of poor worms being indulged with access to God, and with boldness, freedom and familiarity with him; and to hold communion and fellowship both with the Father and the Son; and, at the same time, to see the Word of God tally with all the Divine teachings, influences and operations of the Holy Spirit of God upon us; and to be sensibly comforted under the divine smiles; to be acquainted with the private thoughts of God's heart, which are thoughts of good and not of evil, to give us an unexpected end! How many transient visits! How many transforming views! What sympathy does the God of all grace discover to us in trouble! What support does the heart feel in a trying hour; how sensibly does he rend the heavens and come down to our relief! Isaiah lxiv. 1. He admits our hopes within the vale, and our affections to his own right hand, where Christ sitteth. His blessed presence, when he shines upon the soul, casts a divine lustre upon the whole work of his hands; his brilliant perfections shine in both globes: "his glory covers the heavens, and the earth is full of his praise," Hab. iii. 3. The astonishing condescension of God, in stooping so low as to visit us, makes us seem less than nothing. The distance and disproportion between God and such worms appear to be more, if possible, than infinite; and yet charity, that believeth all things, says, at the same time, and that with the witness on earth, and the record in heaven, "I dwell in God, and God dwells in me." The divine hints dropped for faith to catch, the mysterious leadings of his Providence, the goodness that passes daily before us, and the mercy and truth that follow us; the watchful eye of God upon us; the most minute circumstances, which are so sensibly observed by him; the deal our that he turns to all our exclamations against ourselves; the divine approbation; the love, the paternal embraces, which are bestowed upon us, which we, when self-abased, coolly shun and try to put away, judging ourselves unworthy his clemency! These things, and thousands more, which my poor soul has enjoyed, and with which the Word of God abounds, are all couched under the seal; which no natural man, however bright his parts, or however profound his learning, can touch, much less discover, and bring to the light. Natural men in the ministry are broken cisterns, wells without water, clouds without rain, lamps without oil, and a cruse without salt. One dead discourse from a ministry af the latter, is sufficient to oast the most lively soul into a deep sleep, to lay the most enlarged saint in irons, and to make a watered garden like a barren heath. Spiritual lethargy, legal bondage, and soul beggary, are all that I ever got from such ministers; and I have formerly had enough of this hard fare. They turn a house of prayer into a prison, and free born citizens into slaves. [President Dwight.

SMALL TALK.

MR. EDITOR: Perhaps your readers are beginning to ask, who is this fault finder who pounces so unmercifully upon the Church, and holds his rod—that is, his pen—in terrorem, over the heads of the ministry? Well, we shall not tell you. We are only following a course pursued in every private circle, that is, to abuse whomsoever we please, and to do it behind his back. If any body is displeased, let him help himself if he can. What a blessing to the pulpit to meet with fault finders! Criticism purifies literature; and why should it not purify preaching?

We desire, in this, to refer to an evil quite as great as any heretofore mentioned, viz., the proneness some ministers have to depend upon ready made sermons from the pens of others, for pulpit arrangement and matter. That the evil does prevail to an alarming extent, we are very well satisfied. We have known a minister, at a protracted meeting, take a book of sermons out and study the one he afterwards preached, using, if not the exact language, every important idea in it. This accounts, often, for some wonderful efforts made by men of very inferior minds. Sometimes one exercises so much ingenuity in their use, that it is difficult to detect them. And with the same pains, he could prepare a sermon very creditable to himself. Now, how far we may profit by the productions of others, can not very well be settled. That a minister should read, and in some sense appropriate what he learns, will not, of course, be denied. He may use isolated ideas—he may incorporate the thoughts of others into his own web of thought, etc. But what we especially object to, is so to depend upon others as to make their thoughts the staple of their own—to be cisterns, passively receiving and giving out, without adding particularly to the common stock, rather than springs, whence the living waters of thought spontaneously gush out.

The course of the class we object to is open to several objections. First, it is dishonest. It is a wrong to a writer to take the thoughts for which, perhaps, he has delved hard, and appropriate them en masse to our own use, without credit. Again, it is wrong, in that we deceive our congregations, and induce them to assign us a higher position than we really deserve. We knowingly and intentionally make an erroneous impression upon their minds. A minister meets a brother after service. The latter says, "Brother A., you preached us an excellent sermon to-day; you are really getting to be a great man." A. swallows down the compliment without explanation, and like the jackdaw in the fable, rejoices in his borrowed feathers. He has at length made the impression that he is a great man, and what if he has done it upon another's capital, the people know no better. But the people do find it out, sometimes, and then we to the luckless wight. If afterwards he says any thing of his own particularly good, he gets no credit for it; the people always talk of his efforts with a sneer. Very soon they lose their respect for him.

Another objection is, they dwarf their own powers. How many sad instances have we of men of good natural powers who have ruined themselves by this course. They remind one of a man who has used crutches so long, that he can not walk without them. Take away from the minister his crutch, (his borrowed matter) and what an awkward, zig-zag, laughable gait does he assume! He reels about like a man "half seas over," and ten to one if he does not come down sprawling upon his face. His manner is stiff and recitative—no naturalness, no living energy. Such a thing as digging sermons out of his own brains, is impossible. If he does attempt it, the ridiculous abortion exposes his small faculties and meager resources, and stands out in striking contrast with his ordinary plagiarisms.

When a man is called to preach the Gospel, he is not expected to preach Wesley or Watson, or Melville or Bascom; but to preach according to his own constitutional structure. However inferior that may be, it has a place in the great machinery of saving souls, and if he endeavors to take the place of another, he thwarts the great end for which he is selected. If a man is unable, with such help as he may lawfully obtain from others, to prepare a sermon which will do good, he had better stop and ask himself if he has not mistaken his calling. If he is able, but too indolent to do it, he has reason to fear that he has mistaken not only his calling, but his heart. GOSSIP.

NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, October 30.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The preachers of the Alabama Conference, on their arrival at Marion, will call at the Methodist Church.

Brethren expecting to be accompanied by their wives, will be kind enough to give me early information of it, so that suitable provision may be made for their comfort.

PHIL. P. NEELY.

Marion, Ala., October 25.

REDUCTION OF SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE from its beginning, been the cheapest weekly paper issued from this city. It is proposed now to make it the cheapest in the Church, South. On and after the 1st November the subscription price will be ONE DOLLAR AND A HALF.

CARRYING OUT OUR PRINCIPLES.

No opportunity has been omitted by us of advocating the utmost cheapness practicable in Church literature—low prices and large circulation. We now set the example in the newspaper department. If others follow, it will be matter of no small satisfaction to have initiated the movement. In any event, we hope to succeed, and by our success to establish a principle that may have an important general application.

THE EXPERIMENT.

Such it is. A Methodist paper in New Orleans at Boston and Cincinnati prices is an experiment; and, to be candid, we have hesitated over it. The former price, and nothing less, was deemed necessary in the beginning, and our patrons have stood up to it right nobly—steadily advancing our circulation. Now we have now gained a point at which we are enabled to make a venture in so good a cause. Much is involved in it besides the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

CHANCES OF SUCCESS.

Why not succeed! A survey of the whole ground and the analogies of the case are encouraging. Railroad travelers double as the rates were fall of 100 per cent. The Postage reduction has in every instance been compensated by a corresponding increase of correspondents and receipts. And will not subscribers be forthcoming to a cheap paper, in abundantly sustaining numbers!

MORAL CONSIDERATIONS.

Business considerations are secondary. We are solicitous on this score only this far; that the movement may pay its way. The ends, and only ones, for which this paper was established and will be continued, are higher and holy. They are those legitimately pertaining to that important, indispensable Christian auxiliary of this age—the RELIGIOUS PRESS. These ends are promoted by the cheap press. An increased circulation doubles and quadruples its moral power. The same "talent" makes "ten more" talents instead of two. The poor, the indifferent, the profane, the remote are reached, enlightened and quickened upon great moral issues, who otherwise would be none the better for the existence of the religious press.

TERMS DISTINCTLY.

All new subscribers, on and after November 1, (next Monday,) and all old ones whose subscriptions are renewed then, will be charged $1 50, STRICTLY IN ADVANCE.

OLD BOOKS.

New ones will be opened, and we desire to close up the old immediately. Former rules were, in some instances, for peculiar reasons, (which can not hereafter exist,) so far departed from, that several subscribers have fallen in arrears. This has occurred mostly in the renewal of subscriptions for the second volume. Such are requested to hand the amount to their preacher, or, in his absence, forward it to us, through the Post Office. To the credit of the Post Office we say it, that, for nearly two years, nearly all our receipts have been through it, and not a dollar has, to our knowledge, been miscarried or lost. Do not wait to be called on. Forward it. We wish to put away these old books, with credit to every name upon them.

PLAN OF THE PAPER.

No efforts will be abated to maintain its usefulness as a family and religious paper. Besides religious and literary intelligence, the general intelligence department will be kept up, containing the latest foreign and domestic news, miscellany, full telegraph items, and a statement of the markets, made up to the morning of publication. The Advocate is mailed on the same day with the weekly secular papers of the city.

CONFERENCES—RESOLUTIONS.

Of course, large and hearty co-operation is expected—can not go on without it. The two Conferences owning and controlling the N. O. Christian Advocate, passed resolutions, at their last sessions, that each member would do his best to obtain twenty subscribers for the year. The time is far spent, but, at the low rates, all may fulfil that resolution. The number may be got in a single congregation, or picked up on the way to Conference. We expect also to see these brethren face to face, and find that they have done all they promised, and more. And not from these only, but others who have heretofore upheld and, [illegible] we look for a substantial sympathy and material aid, that will carry the enterprise triumphantly through.

DO THEY WISH TO JOIN US?

Our readers are informed that a weekly paper is published in Vicksburg, Miss., under the patronage of the Diocese (Episcopal) of Mississippi. The price is three dollars a year, in advance. Its name is "Church Herald:" the editors, Rev. S. Patterson and Geo. S. Yerger, Esq., and W. C. Smedes, Esq. The "Herald" is a small sheet, neatly conducted. Its form is the quarto—which, doubtless, is the rubrical shape. All the Protestant Episcopal papers on our list of exchanges are of that shape. This advertisement is gratis.

Our friends of the Herald went on very well the first few months—doing their own work and giving their readers information important to the diocese. All this was good, and we rejoiced at such a co-laborer in the religious press. But lately they have fallen into the old track of now abusing, now coaxing the Methodists. The last few issues have been informing the world, and the Methodists in particular, that their separate organization as a Church was needless, hurtful, hardly less than sinful—their existence is unnecessary. The preachers of the Establishment, in Wesley's day, knew no words hard enough for him; but the Episcopalians of our day, claiming to be of the same blood and order, affect greatly to venerate the man and his counsel! In the Herald of October 22, that old Mother Goose's story is paraded: "How can you, how dare you call yourself a Bishop," etc. (Letter of Wesley to Asbury.) The Wesleyan Times is quoted to shew that the Wesleyans are being punished for their sin in quitting the English Establishment, by the loss of several thousands through agitation, and therefore (!) the Methodists of this country are going down, because they are not a part of the self-styled American Establishment. This, of course, is the beginning of insinuations and garbled statements that the Methodists of Mississippi will be treated to, till they return as prodigals to the Church. It will have to be done, and so we had as well now as any time devote a word to the Church Herald, on our mutual relations, and the possibility of a change.

The history of the organization of the Wesleyan Methodists in Europe and America is before the world, and has long ago been amply justified by the judgments of men and the blessing of God. Those who went out originally, were driven out: a good enough reason, one would think, for going. When those who ought to have been their nursing fathers and mothers forsook them, the Lord took them up. If they now discover their mistake, what is that to us?

The Herald, and kindred prints, must mean something in this crying for us and after us. Is all this talk about an unnecessary division an overture on their part for a union? They must mean, if they mean any thing, that it were better for us and them that the twain become one. For them it would be, as appears from their anxiety on the subject, and stereotype lamentations over it. They give us no rest. We are doing very well, and, indeed, under the blessings of the Head of the Church, were never more prosperous. But, as you of the Herald are anxious, we will so far accommodate you as to discuss this proposition of union. It has two sides: Shall you come to us, or we go to you?

How could the latter be? What could your Church do with our Bishops? Would the venerable Soule who, past his 70thy car, is now packing his trunk in Tennessee for an Episcopal visitation to California, to set the churches in order there and confirm the brethren—would he consent to be limited to the narrow rounds of a diocese? Never. Or Bishop Paine, now on his tour through the tier of Annual Conferences stretching along the west bank of the Mississippi; at this day perhaps presiding over a Conference of native Indian preachers: Or Bishops Andrew and Capers. Our churches, (meeting houses) and all our camp meeting paraphernalia and institutions and means of Gospel propagandism might be turned over to you, in fee simple. But every thing is projected upon the plain, broad, practical principle—that noble democratic principle—the greatest good to the greatest number. They could not be pressed into exclusive, aristocratic, rubrical shape. Your rule of order would rule out many of our best things. The remodelling, resorting and renting of our meeting-houses, where the rich and poor have always met on equal terms, would hardly be submitted to. It would take unnumbered yards of black silk to fix off all our itinerants with a gown, each. And then, our MEMBERS. None of them would be declined, certainly: you have rather a liking for them, as many proselytee witness. But only think of it. You are about 74,000 in the United States; we, one million and a quarter. Pouring in a million and a quarter Methodists upon 74,000 Episcopalians would be like turning the Mississippi river into Bayou Manchac. The inundation would overwhelm you. Your identity would be lost, and the real Simon Pure Church could not be detected in the mass. It would be putting the big pot into the little one. Your fold, neighbors of the Herald, could n't begin to hold our sheep.

But take the other side. You come to us—if you cannot be reconciled to the separation. If the mountain will not come to Muhomet, let Muhomet come to the mountain. The greater should absorb the less; the larger should attract the smaller body. The Union can readily be effected in this way, and we show you how. Your churches turned over to us, according to the deed of settlement (as per Discipline,) would speedily undergo a change. We would enter them, unlock the pew doors, and let in the people—an event that has not yet occurred. The Bible would be elevated on the pulpit into the place of the prayer book, and the minister be required to preach the Gospel, and not the Church. Our general rules of society would cut off some of your prominent members, and the rest could be bestowed into the amen corners without inconvenience.

Your Bishops could be disposed of as Presiding Elders. Start not: this would be admitting them ad eundem gradem. It would give them a much larger jurisdiction than the majority exercise. Take, for instance, any one of the six Presiding Elders' Districts into which the Mississippi Conference is partitioned, and there are more communicants embraced in it, more churches, more hearers, than in the Diocese of Mississippi, which makes so large a figure on paper. The smallest has twice as many. To go no farther than your own neighborhood,—the Vicksburg District: It numbers over three thousand members, while, according to your own statement, there are not eight hundred communicants belonging to the Diocese. So Father Lane, the Presiding Elder of that District, has a more important charge, and makes no fuss about it, than the Right Rev. Wm. M. Green, D. D. Bishop Cobb, of Alabama, and Bishop Polk and Bishop Freeman, and others, make a great parade over a jurisdiction that our Presiding Elders think a small matter.

Could any of your Bishops, then, eject to this arrangement for a union, seeing it advances them so substantially! Our Episcopal friends, from Bishop down to Rector, make a little go a great ways. They do a great business, in the eyes of the wondering world, on an incredibly small capital. Their Convention Minutes are specimens. The same name, with all its adjuncts, initials and titles, written and re-written, small things done up pompously, etc., all swell out the proceedings to a respectable pamphlet, which one of our matter-of-fact Secretaries would condense on a sheet of foolscap. Now, in the union, they would give up this seeming, and get more of the substantial.

One item of the union arrangement would be the throwing of two or three parishes, St. Mark's, St. Peter's and St. Bartholomew's, into a circuit—say Brush Creek Circuit. True, it would not sound so finely, but that is not the thing: we are not after sound.

What do you say, friends of the Church Herald, to this programme? Hinc illæ lachrymæ? If you cannot get along without us, let us unite and have no more words about unfortunate separation, and all that. Do not, however, think to bring about a favorable compromise, by making us think poorly of our cause—that we are going down, running out, mission fulfilled. The facts are otherwise, known and read of all men. The Mississippi Conference will meet in Jackson on the 14th proximo. If the Rev. Mr. P. and his colleagues will go up properly fumigated from Puseyism, and such taints, and make their application, we have no doubt it will be respectfully considered. We expect to be there, and shall be happy to see the reception. Your good communicants will be a small accession—not so great as is brought up in one year, from some Districts.

This is not the time to assume patronizing airs towards us. Your cause, always behind, never stood lower in this country than now. Your own papers are calling to account one Right Rev. Bishop for having taken it upon himself this summer to represent the Episcopacy abroad, and preaching, in this assumed dignity, out-and-out baptismal regeneration; and a suspicion of Prelatical heresy on this vital point is very general, and well founded. A Provisional Bishop has just been elected in New York. Provisional, in the stead of a lecherous and venerable sinner, set aside for vices that have been the scandal of the land. His illustrious brother, of Pennsylvania, has been equally unfortunate. The various Bishops are now on their way home. Where have they been? To New Jersey. Why? To try the distinguished Bishop of that Diocese. For what? For swindling and drunkenness. Did they acquit him? By a close vote they only resolved not to try him. The charges are lef hanging over him. If Protestant Episcopalians had the sole keeping of the honor of American Episcopacy, Mr. Wesley's advice to Superintendents would, by this time, need no other enforcement than respect for one's character—"Do not suffer yourself to be called a Bishop."

We dismiss the subject, the Church Herald, and those it represents.

Their insinuations and proselyting pamphlets circulate in vain. It is impossible to make the Methodists feel ruined and inconsolable because not a part of such an establishment! If they wish to join us, there is a way.

Their application will be kindly considered. But as to our going to them, let us hear no more of it. It is folly; it is presumption.

LAGRANGE, ALA.—A friend writes, (October 15,) that a gracious revival of religion had visited the College and community. Meetings were continued from night to night for two weeks—35-6 professed religion. We have heard with joy of the zeal and piety of many young men in the College, and that three of its graduates will offer themselves this winter to the Alabama Conference.

REV. J. M. HOPER, has returned from his tour in East Alabama in behalf of the German Mission. As we expected, he expresses the highest satisfaction at his reception every where, and the results of his visit. His last letter has unfortunately been mislaid. In it was acknowledged a block ($100) from the church in Columbus, Georgia.

During the past month the American Bible Society has issued 85,501 Bibles and Testaments.

METHODIST PRESS.

SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.—The formation of such a Union was recommended by the Committee on Sabbath Schools of the Louisville Conference, and in conformity with the recommendation, a movement has been set on foot in Louisville, organizing a beginning. The editor of the N. and L. Advocate speaks of it as a "good movement," and thus reports progress:

"At the first meeting of the friends of the cause, which took place in Brook Street Church on the 1st of October, a constitution was reported, which, when matured and adopted, we will lay before our readers, and other preliminary measures taken for the perfecting and carrying out of the excellent scheme. Other meetings are to follow on this subject, which will probably be continued from time to time until the whole matter is fully digested and arranged, and the machinery put in operation. Among the many devices and projections which will occupy the attention of this society for the promotion of Sabbath School interests, the more immediate purpose seems to be to procure the more liberal and extended publication of Sabbath school books among us, and greatly to increase the circulation of our excellent paper, the 'Visitor.' We doubt not but a hearty co-operation in this good work will be realized on the part of the Church, and can see no sufficient reason that can be urged against the complete success of the Sabbath School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South."

COMPARATIVE ESTIMATE OF GREATNESS.

Our cotemporary of the Texas Banner has had some shrewd insight into European politics, and we therefore set much by his opinion in the following paragraph:

"All our exchanges are filled with the death of Lord Wellington. English papers call him 'the conqueror of Napoleon,' which is about as true as Walter Scott's History of the French Revolution. There is some similarity between Napoleon and Wellington. Both were tyrants, and sought their glory in the effusion of human blood; both regarded men but figures, given them to carry out their plans and immortalize their names. Through their skill and bravery the widows and orphans' hearts were made sad.

"But Napoleon was a genius, a lawgiver, a statesman, a monarch! Wellington was nothing but a soldier, who outlived himself; and for all the money, estates, and titles, which he scraped together from the poor and starving English and Irish people, he gave to his Most Gracious Sovereign, Queen Victoria, his cadaver, and saved his funeral expenses."

A NEW BOOK.—Rev. J. E. Cobb, assistant editor of the Memphis Advocate, gives notice of a treatise on the "Philosophy of Faith," by himself, as about to be published. We are inclined to think our readers have had a foretaste of the volume in two communications on the subject, furnished our columns within the last eighteen months by "J. E. C." of Arkansas. They were marked by the traits of a profound, philosophic thinker. Our brother touches our sympathies by allusion to his "worldly estate."

"Now, we are as poor as that distinguished bird which has long worn the sobriquet of 'Job's Turkey;' consequently, must publish by subscription. If any of our readers wish to see what sort of books we make in Arkansas, they can ascertain by sending their orders to us, post paid, for copies of the work when published. It will be a large duodecime, pp. 430-440; price $1 per copy."

HISTORY OF FANATICISM.—The editor of the Western Christian Advocate is out in a long leader, trying to bring the abolition presses of his Church to an agreement, by first bringing them to an understanding of the "meaning of words and phrases," in the slavery controversy. He regrets "certain incautious expressions of Church papers," and resolutions of Conferences on this subject! He says:

"We see that some of the Southern papers are quoting large extracts from the few scattering issues of ultraism that have issued from the Northern press; and are anxious to impress their readers with the idea that extravagant, ultra views are dominant in the Methodist Episcopal Church."

Really, and for the life of us, we can not see any difference worth taking into account between the ultras and those affecting to rebuke them. The ultras speak out, and go straight forward at their object. Of this school are the majority among their editors—Hosmer, Robie, Wise, Watson and Cumming—looks like dominant. The others, as Doctors Elliot and Bond, profess the same moral convictions, aim at the same results, but—Ah! there comes the vanishing point, which is lost upon us. Dr. Bond's position is more than ever fogged since Dr. Elliot, as he does in this leader, reaches over his arm from the West and embraces him; declaring a mutual endorsement of opinions! Perhaps, after all, the difference, in the war upon slave-holders, between the ultras and anti-ultras North, is about that between catching birds under a deadfall and killing them immediately, and driving them into a net where their heads are wrung off leisurely. We thank Dr. E. for the following bit of history:

"When the British abolitionists—we think in 1832 and 1833—sent out lecturers throughout England, and placed in their mouths immediatesim, a wildness and extravaganco commenced then, which, with various waxings and wanings, have continued to this day. Garrison naturally fell into this. George Thompson brought it to America; and many of the abolitionists of this country followed in the wake. The many have abandoned this mode in sentiment and in reality; the few retain the sentiments, and a remnant retain the phraseology. This remarkable fact, however, now stares us in the face, that not one of this school, one or two excepted, has written in a solid, argumentative manner on this subject. The principal weighty, argumentative work produced by the whole race of ultra-abolitionists is "Weld's Scripture Argument," and this, also, has many blemishes. Many of the works issued by the recent abolition press, from the first race of abolitionists have real merit. But the recent abolitionists have produced very little that is calculated to convince. The truth is, the men did not study the subject. They studied lectures; they studied agitation: but the subject of slavery they studied not, either in logical argument, or historical narrative, in any thing like a systematic treatise or connected discussion. It is true, that a multitude of facts have been thrown out before the public of unquestionable authority, but the reasoning on them has often or mostly been extravagant in part. We think these observations will appear in the main correct to any one who examines the list of books issued from the present abolition press.

"It is true, some think the subject should be discussed by correspondents in our periodicals. This, too, has been tried without success. Zion's Herald was opened to the discussion in January, 1835. The writers, many of them ultra, so outdid the matter before a year that the conductors had to restrain them. Those that were restrained said the press was muzzled, because they could not say every thing they pleased. Hence, Zion's Watchman was gotten up January 1, 1836. Here the writers flourished till they had to be restrained again. In January, 1840, a new paper was commenced, because the Herald and Watchman were insufficient. This ran on for awhile, and the True Wesleyan arose from the ashes of the Watchman and the other paper: so that Zion's Herald was worth just nothing as an anti-slavery paper, if the zealots are to be believed. No paper could live, or has lived, if ultra-abolitionists are to be the directors, with the views they have entertained up till now."

MUSIC.—It seems by this notice in the Guardian (Toronto, Can.) of the 29th ult. that our brethren of Canada praise the Lord on "instruments" also:

"The trustees of Richmond Street Wesleyan Chapel, having just erected a very large and costly organ, supposed to be the most powerful instrument of the kind in Canada West, purpose having their opening services on next Sabbath."

MUCH AND LITTLE.

FIFTH COLLECTION.—The following showing by the Episcopal Recorder, of the manner preachers are supported in that Church, in Pennsylvania, its head quarters, is instructive:

"There are in the State one hundred and forty-four Episcopal ministers. Of these thirty have no parishes. Thirteen of those that have, receive an average salary of one hundred and sixty dollars. Five receive a hundred dollars or less. Eighteen receive three hundred or less—thirty-five receive five hundred or less—fifty-one receive eight hundred or less. And only eleven receive over a thousand, and of these eleven, only two are out of the county of Philadelphia."

Now, though with others, we have again and again deplored the lack of that punctual-paying sense of propriety and justice in many of our people towards a pastor, neglecting his support and keeping him in embarrassment, we see, in connection with this "showing" of the Episcopal Recorder, a marked beauty and apostolicity in our plan of disbursing the offerings of the people, for the support of the Gospel. There are no overgrown salaries among us. We have no Bishops receiving $4000 or more: no rector living on $5000 or more a year, while five of his clerical brethren, working just as hard, are receiving $100 or less. It is carried out to some extent in the Methodist Church—it is a principle of our financial economy which can not be too highly commended, that the abundance of some should be a supply for the want of others, in the vineyard—that there may be equality. The FIFTH, or Conference collection, for the aid of preachers deficient in their salaries, is intended to effect this equality. A noble and apostolic intention. To this collection the richest congregations, and those least burdened with their own pastoral expenses, ought to contribute most liberally. It is scriptural. "As it is written, he that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little, had no lack."

Will not these considerations appeal strongly to the preachers, in closing up their year's work, to attend to the Fifth, or Conference collection? It is the Lord's own.

SOUTHERN ORGAN.—The temperance paper we gave notice of some weeks ago, as about to appear, has been laid on our table. We greet it heartily. The editor, J. W. Harmon, and the publisher, have sent forth a sheet highly creditable to both of them. Besides being a temperance organ, it is an excellent family paper.

MCGHEE CHAPEL.—The pastor, Rev. J. B. Walker, has held, during the week, meetings of much interest, in which eight or ten souls have professed conversion.

REVIEW.—The Methodist (South) Quarterly, for October, is before us. The editor has in charge one of the largest churches in Richmond, Va., and a revival there has been a happy hindrance to the earlier issue of the Review. We have not read it yet.

MAGAZINE.—Blackwood (September) has been received. See the publisher's advertisement.

ALMANAC.—Messrs. Carlton & Philips, No. 200 Mulberry street, New York, have put out for 1853, an admirable Almanac.

ADDRESS—By Gov. Foote, before the Literary Societies of Centenary College, La., July 27, 1852. A neat copy of this chaste and statesman-like address has been furnished us.

EDUCATION.—The Methodist Protestant informs us that a new college is about to be established in East Alabama, under the auspices of that denomination. The editor has seen the drawings, plans, etc. of the architects, and pronounces them excellent. The location is not given. Rev. A. A. Lipscomb, D. D., is to be President. The M. Protestant says:

"So far as we can learn, no measure has created more attention and concern than this college undertaking, and none ever bade fairer to enlist universal sympathy and support. Prominent citizens of the State have taken hold earnestly of it, and by their personal zeal and liberal contributions aided in its advancement. If we remember correctly, about $30,000 were promptly raised at the start, and from the prospects we shall expect soon to hear that the sum has reached $100,000. One noble-hearted Southern gentleman, Abner McGehee, Esq., near Montgomery, Ala., contributed $10,000 in the form of an endowment. Others are actuated by the same spirit."

It is not decent to spend your money in foolishness, when you have debts that ought to be paid.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Paris Circuit, Texas Conf.

It will be encouraging to you and the friends of Zion generally to know that the Lord is still reviving his work in this part of his vineyard.

I had the pleasure, through the kind providence of God, of attending the fourth quarterly meeting of the Boston Circuit, which embraced the 20th and 30th of August. Our beloved P. E., N. W. Burks, was at his post, and preached in his usual forcible manner. The meeting passed off very well. On my return, in company with Brother H. Fullingen, who has charge of the Circuit, and my worthy colleague, J. L. Angell, we stopped in a little town (De Kalb) in Bowie county, and commenced a meeting, which continued from Monday night to Wednesday night. The Lord was with us. Sixteen persons joined the Church. There were several conversions; I know not the number. I was told by Brother Fullingen that there is a general revival around his Circuit. May the Lord bless the aged brother.

We are still having good times upon Paris Circuit. God is convicting and converting souls. Many have been added to the Church this Conference year. To God the glory belongs. Your brother in Christ,

D. M. STOWALL.

P. S. We have just closed our second camp meeting on this Circuit. There were eight conversions, and many others serious.

Demopolis, Ala. Conf.

The revival influence, so prevalent in the land this season, has not failed to visit Demopolis. We have been engaged in a meeting for several weeks past, which has thus far resulted in twenty-two conversions and twenty accessions to the Church. There are yet seekers at the altar, and many in the community deeply interested. We meet every night, and shall continue to do so while we can do good. The church is alive, and the members at their posts. The spirit of rejoicing and laboring has been abundantly shed upon them. We have had little noise, but a deep sense of the presence of God seems to rest upon the hearts of all. Before the close of it we hope to be able to report yet greater success.

During one week of the meeting we had the valuable services of Brother Milburn, of Mobile. He entered the work in the spirit and zeal of a Methodist preacher. In altar work he has few equals. THOS. H. FOSTER

October, 1852.

Lauderdale Circuit, Ala. Conf.

Our camp meeting closed Oct. 13th. We had a good time. Some fifty souls were happily converted to God, some backsliders reclaimed, and the church was greatly revived. Twenty accessions. To God be all the glory. We had the assistance of Brothers Callaway, P. E. Clements, Robertson, McCurdy and Boyd.

I have only time to add, before the mail leaves, that we are doing tolerably well. I am preparing to build a neat and commodious church in this place. The missionaries are generally well. Pray for us.

A DAY OF MOURNING.

Monday, in pursuance of the recommendation of Mayor Crossman, the ordinary business avocations of the city were suspended and the public buildings shrouded in the paraphernalia of woe, in token of grief for the illustrious dead. The intelligence of the decease of the Hon. Daniel Webster, spread a gloom over the aspect of things of a deeper hue than could be typified by the gands and trappings of sorrow. In every heart there was a grief that was made manifest by the slow, trend and sorrowing visage, and on every tongue lamentations too deeply mournful to find their full utterance in words. A great man had fallen and an entire people joined in expression of their sorrow for the national calamity.

At 12 o'clock all the public offices were closed and clothed in funeral trappings, befitting a time of sorrow and general wail. Along the streets, from the balconies of private dwellings, and over the doors of business houses were hung festoons of dark and mournful drapery, and across the public thoroughfares were the flags of the different nations, waving in many a graceful fold. Among the buildings most conspicuous for richness and appropriateness of decoration we noticed those of McDowell, Mills & Co., on Carondelet street, and of W. L. Cushing & Co., on Common street. The front of the latter was adorned with the busts of Clay, Webster, Calhoun—who had stood together for nearly half a century amid the storms of party strife—the mighty triumvirate who had held within their grasp during an entire generation the destinies of a people, and who, though pursuing by diverse policies the common weal, in all that relates to patriotism and the glory of the Union were united as one man. Other and numerous appropriate decorations met the eye at every step.

The flags of the shipping in port were lowered at half-mast, expressive of deep regret from people speaking strange tongues and owing allegiance to remote nationalities.

The following report has been furnished us:

A large meeting of our most distinguished and respectable citizens, was, yesterday morning, held at Banks' Arcade, to make proper arrangements for expressing the public feeling in relation to the recent national loss, caused by the death of that eminent ornator, DANIEL WEBSTER.

The meeting was called to order by W. L. Cushing, Esq.

The following officers were called upon to preside:

PRESIDENT—Mayor CROSSMAN.... Vice PRESIDENTS—T. A. Adams, J. N. Howell, D. S. Lewis, M. Garcia, J. L. Carman, A. M. Holbrook, J. L. Levy, E. Lapice, Charles A. Mussun, C. C. Lawrason, Col Walker, Colonel Hayes, E. H. Durell, N. R. Jennings, J. A. Clark, A. W. Tufts, C. C. Lathorp, I. Bridge, B. Fallon, G. H. Duncan, Col. Monaghan, J. A. Beard, R. B. Sykes, J. L. Winter, S. G. Reid, A. Monroe, B. Fourenee, O. M. Waterman, N. E. Bailey, P. Leach, J. J. Durant, J. G. Dunlap, R. S. Barton.... SECRETARIES—Hilel Marks, Warren A. Grice, Durant da Ponte, D. Scully.

A resolution was adopted for the apointment of a committee of ten persons to prepare resolutions suitable to the melancholly occasion. Mayor Crossman appointed the following gentlemen on said committee:

G. H. Duncan, N. R. Jennings, Col. Monaghan, J. G. Larue, Isaac Bridge, Thomas A. Adams, J. N. Marks, Col. Seymour, W. L. Cushing, Alexander Walker.

The committee reported the following preamble and resolutions, which were unanimously adopted:

The sensation which pervaded our entire Republic, caused by the removal of one of its purest, ablest and most illustrious patriots and statesmen, has scarcely subsided, and again the inscrutable decrees of Providence have smitten us with affliction, which human language is inadequate to portray. The last of the three great statesmen of modern times—the admiration of the civilized world—the ornament, the pride, the boast of the American people—has descended to the tomb—Daniel Webster is no more.

While we bow before the throne of Omnipotence, and humbly confess the justice of Him who chastiseth his children only for their good, it is meet that we manifest the feelings which pervade our hearts, by striving to convey to our fellow-citizens a faint description of their intensity. Therefore,

Resolved, That, as American citizens, we cannot without the deepest and most overwhelming emotion, contemplate the loss this nation has sustained in the death of those three master-spirits, whose great intellects, consummate statesmanship and unassuming patriotism contributed so much to give tone to the present age, and earned for this people a fame that can never perish—our Calhoun—Clay—Webster.

Resolved, That a committee of ten citizens be appointed by his Honor the Mayor, to confer with similar committees of the Common Council and other public bodies, who shall constitute a general committee of arrangements for the purpose of selecting a day, and making the preparation for a solemn funeral pageant, to honor the great dead.

Whilst the Committee on Resolutions was out, the Chairman introduced Mr. F. J. Carroll, who addressed the object of the meeting. They had assembled to make arrangements to pay a suitable token of respect to the death of the great orator, statesman and patriot, whose loss we mourn to-day; and all citizens, irrespective of party, should join in this tribute.

Loud calls for Judge Larue brought the latter upon the stand, and he delivered a beautiful eulogium upon the character of the deceased. He admired in him those of his political creed, had often listened to Mr. Webster on the political questions of the day, and had always admired the towering genius of the great statesman, who had given it a broad basis of charity, love and philanthropy. He had studied Mr. Webster's history, who had given to the world a world known name, and all the nations of the civilized world looked with admiration and respect. He admired Mr. Webster as an orator, in opposition to the expressed opinion of his friends of his own city, and all the prejudices which had been brought to bear upon him, he boldly withstood, and at times so deeply pathetic that tears were seen trickling down many a cheek.

The meeting adjourned after the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. Webster is Dead—His Last Moments.

NEW YORK, October 24, 1852.

The Melancholy news has at length been received of the death of DANIEL WEBSTER.

He expired precisely at twenty minutes before 3 o'clock this morning.

During the early part of yesterday afternoon there was some decrease in the dropsical swelling of his feet and legs, and there were fewer symptoms of nausea, but no sign of rallying.

Repeatedly in the course of the forenoon, and in part of the afternoon, he conversed freely, with clearness of detail, relative to his private affairs and the condition of his farm. He stated fully his opinion respecting it and the manner in which he wished it carried out.

About half-past five o'clock in the afternoon, his sister was seized with violent nausea, and threw up a considerable quantity of dark matter, mixed with blood.

Exhaustion now increased rapidly, and the physicians held another consultation, which resulted in the decision that the last hour of the great statesman was approaching.

He received the announcement with calmness, and requested that the female members of his family be called in.

Mrs. Webster, Mrs. Fletcher Webster, Mrs. Paige, and Miss Downs entered the sick room.

To each, calling them by name, individually, Mr. Webster addressed a few words of farewell and religious exhortation.

Next, at his desire, the male members of his family, and those of his personal friends who had been in attendance during his last illness, viz: Fletcher Webster, the surviving son, Samuel A. Appleton, his son-in-law, Mr. Paige, George P. Curtis, Edward Curtis of Boston, Peter Harvey and Charles Henry Thomas of Boston, and Messrs. George J. Abbott and W. C. Somerby, clerks of the U. S. State Department at Washington, were called in.

Addressing each of these gentlemen by name, Mr. Webster referred to his past relations with them severally, and then bade them, one by one, an affectionate farewell. This was about half-past six o'clock in the evening.

Mr. Webster then had Mr. Harvey called up to his bed, and said to him:

"Harvey, I am not so sick but that I know you. I am well enough to know you!—I am well enough to call down the richest blessings of Heaven upon you. Harvey, don't leave me till I am dead!—Don't leave me in the field till I am a dead man!"

Then, as if speaking to himself, he said:

"On the 24th of October, all that is now mortal of Daniel Webster will be no more!"

He now prayed in his natural, usual voice—distinct and clear—ending with:

"Heavenly Father, forgive my sins, and make them thyself, through Christ Jesus!"

At half-past 6 o'clock, Dr. Warren arrived from Boston to relieve Dr. Jeffries as immediate medical attendant.

Shortly after, Mr. Webster conversed with Dr. Jeffries, who said he could do nothing more for him than the minister occasionally a sedative potion.

"Then," said Mr. Webster, "I am to hear patiently the end. If it be so, may it come soon."

At 10 o'clock, P. M., he was still lower, but was fully conscious of everything that passed within his hearing.

He lingered on until twenty minutes to 3 o'clock this morning, when Death called the great DANIEL WEBSTER to his reward in another world.

Thus has crumbled the chief pillar of the Republic.

The most painful gloom pervades all classes, and a solemn stillness that is everywhere apparent is evidence that a national calamity has befallen us.

The last Moments of Mr. Webster.

FURTHER DETAILS.

NEW YORK, October 25, P. M.—The express from Boston this afternoon at 3 o'clock from Marshfield, that Mr. Webster, though failing fast, yesterday appeared perfectly conscious, and occasionally gave official duties. He also spoke of his condition, and hoped would be preserved.

NEW YORK, Oct. 24, 8 50 A. M.—The last hours of Mr. Webster were entirely calm. From half past 1 o'clock Saturday night he failed rapidly.

Arousing at ten o'clock from his lethargy, he spoke with his usual brilliancy, and he exclaimed:

He then sank into tranquil unconsciousness. His breathing became fainter, and he expired so peacefully that his friends and attendants were unaware of the precise moment when his spirit took flight.

On the receipt of the news at Boston, one hundred minute guns were fired.

The funeral will probably take place at Boston on Tuesday, the 26th inst.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24, P. M.—The President has not met this afternoon, to decide on the proper mode of paying respect to the memory of Mr. Webster.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 24, A. M.—On the announcement of Webster's death, the bells tolled, and flags were at half-mast in Baltimore, Washington and Philadelphia, and all the Eastern cities. The gloom caused by the news is universal.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25, A. M.—A special messenger arrived here to announce Mr. Webster's death. It has not as yet taken no action in the matter.

Mr. Crittenden is spoken of as Mr. Webster's successor in the State Department.

FURTHER.—New York, Oct. 25, A. M.—Between 9 of 10 and 11 o'clock, on Saturday night, Mr. Webster appeared somewhat indistinctly the words: "Hebe! Hebe! Hebe!—Gray!—Gray!!"

Mr. Fletcher Webster repeated the first lines of Gray's Elegy in a Churchyard:

"The curfew tolls the knell of parting day."

"That's it! that's it!" said Mr. Webster.

The book was brought and some stanzas of the Elegy read, which seemed to afford Mr. Webster much pleasure.

From 12 o'clock midnight until 2 P. M. he was restless, but did not suffer much. The physicians were quite confident that he was not in actual pain.

A faintness now came over him, which led them to think that his death was at hand. While in this condition expressions fell from him, indicating that the last moments of his mental faculties would remain with him to the last moment.

He spoke of the difficulty of the process of dying. Dr. J. Jeffries repeated the verse from Scripture:

"Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil. Thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff, they comfort me."

Mr. Webster said immediately:

"The fact! the fact; That is what I want. Thy rod and thy staff—"

The closing scene was perfectly tranquil and serene.

The persons present were Mrs. Fletcher Webster and Mrs. Paige, Mr. Appleton, Miss Downs, Mr. Paige, Mr. Edward Curtis, Peter Harvey, George P. Curtis, Thomas, George G. Abbott, W. C. Somerby, Dr. Mason Warren, and the personal domestics of the dying man.

Mrs. Webster was unable to witness the scene, and withdrew from the room. When death had taken place, she re-entered the chamber and heard the heart-rending tones.

It is impossible to depict the scene: it is one that never be forgotten by all who witnessed it.

The countenance of the deceased has assumed, in death, the characteristic expression of the great statesman as in life.

His request was that his funeral should be private, and will be interred to-day in the town of Marshfield.

A special message was dispatched to Washington announce the sad intelligence.

The political movements of all parties have been suspended on the receipt of the news.

A grand funeral pageant will take place in a few days. Mr. Choate or Mr. Edward Everett will pronounce the eulogy.

Mr. Webster's last word were:

"I STILL LIVE!"

THE HOLY LAND.—A survey of the Holy land has been made by Lieut. Van de Velde, formerly of the Dutch Navy. He has made very interesting observations.

DR. PARKER AND MRS. STOWE.—It is intimated in the New York Observer that Dr. Parker intends to withdraw the suit for libel against Mrs. Stowe, for the use of his name in Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Obituary.

It becomes my painful duty to announce through the columns of the Advocate, the death of our much esteemed and lamented brother, James F. McBride. He died in Mobile, October 6, after a lingering illness. He rose without a murmur. He had a severe attack of pneumonia in the early part of last spring, from which he partially recovered. And at the suggestion of his physicians left home and spent the most of the summer at the North. He seemed much improved.

About a month previous to his decease, he was taken with hemorrhage of the lungs. And continued to grow worse until death terminated his sufferings forever. Although not permitted to see many friends beyond his own family, yet he conversed freely with them, told them he was "ready and willing to depart and be at rest." He received every possible attention with gratitude, and fell asleep with a firm reliance on his Saviour. We sorrow, it is true, but "we sorrow not as those who have no hope." Our loss is great, very great, but it is his infinite gain, and we submit.

He was born in Pennsylvania, March 9th, 1800, and came to Mobile in 1826. He embraced religion and joined the M. E. Church in 1833 or '34, under the pastoral care of the Rev. L. Walker, and to the close of his pilgrimage lived an active and useful member. He was warmly attached to the doctrines, discipline and usages of the Methodist Episcopal Church. His attachment, however, was not more impulse, or the effect of educational bias—on the contrary, his early training received a different direction—but the result of a firm conviction that her economy was in accordance with the Scriptures, and better calculated to secure the ends for which the Church of Christ was instituted, than any other system.

If there was any trait in his character more prominent than another, it was benevolence. He was not only forward, but often foremost in the support of the Gospel. Nor was his liberality confined to the Church, but the demand of suffering humanity met with a liberal response. As an evidence of this our deceased brother was an active member of all those benevolent associations, whose legitimate objects are to cultivate the moral and social virtues, and withal to visit the sick, relieve the distressed, and provide for the helpless widow and the homeless orphan. In all these duties he was prompt to every word. While there are many who will attest to his memory this mode of praise, the writer knew, perhaps, better than most others his acts of noble generosity. Would to God there were more such, and that more of those who profess to be the followers of Him who taught and exemplified this heavenly virtue, would imitate the deceased in this particular, and thereby honor both their calling and their Master. He enjoyed the respect and confidence of the whole community—he was a true philanthropist and an humble christian.

No place did his excellencies appear more bright than within the sacred precincts of home. And in this hallowed circle, as within the sanctuary of religion, we have often seen the workings of a warm and generous heart, as it sent the silent tear to greet and mingle with the smile that beamed benignly on his family face, while he ministered in the delightful duties of friendship and affection. Such was the sympathy of his nature, that he could weep with those that wept, and rejoice with those that did rejoice. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace."

Remarkable Longevity.—A colored man named Jack, the property of the late Mrs. Sarah Ingram, died in Norfolk on Friday night, the 15th instant, at the advanced age of one hundred and seventeen years. He was a native of Hanover county, Va; born in the service of Peter Ingram, Esq; was at Norfolk when it was burnt in 1775. He was pressed into her Majesty's service by Governor Dunmore. He was also at the battle of Great Bridge, and remembered all about the siege of Yorktown. The Norfolk Herald says:

"Jack was strong, hale and hearty even to the day of his death. He was employed as a draysman until he was over 80 years old and at the age of 98 could roll a hogshead of sugar, weighing 1500 lbs. on his dray without assistance. He always good-humored, well-disposed, and scrupulously honest. It is a remarkable coincidence that, for many years, he lived in a family three of the inmates of which have died within the last two years, two at the age of 92 and 94, and one at the age of 70."

Mississippi Collisions.—Mr Selcek, of Greenwich, Ct. has suggested a method for preventing great damage by collisions. The idea is to have the end of the platforms built with one corner projecting far from the other, diagonally, instead of square. Accordingly, when they come together with great violence, the force of the shock will be relieved, and the cars, instead of being reduced to pieces, will simply shove each other off the track. In the projecting corner the brakeman is to be stationed, which will be dedicated by Bishop Hedges. In case of a collision, he will be comparatively safe from danger.

Fast Horses.—The NewYork Express says from horses no longer a novelty. "They are an every day affair—one of the most substantial specimens of that species of property is the wordsmith just commenced in this street, next to St George's Chapel. It is all to be three stories high, and is to be erected upon a foundation of stone." with the single exception of the floor timbers of the first and second stories, so that destruction by fire may well be considered almost impossible.

Aging Obituary.—Mrs. Sarah Bliss, of Rehoboth Massachusetts, reached the age of one hundred years on the 4th of this month. On the occasion of her birthday she was assembled a large company at the house of her son Rufus Bliss. Among them were quite a number of her twenty-four descendants—children, grand-children, great-grand-children, great-great-grand-children. Several of her descendants are believed to be now living. There were present in the company twenty-one persons of seventy years of age and upwards, whose aggregate years were eighteen hundred and seventy-nine years.

The receipts of the American Institute Fair, in New York, for the first four days it has been opened, are stated to be $3 567 21, which is a considerable increase over the receipts for the corresponding season of last year.

The Catholics of Memphis, Tenn., are about to erect one of the most splendid church edifices west of the Alleghanies, which will be dedicated by Bishop Hedges. It is to have towers each one hundred feet high, and a spire of belle.

"Sir," asked a prisoner of a magistrate, "what right to commit a nuisance?" "No, sir, not at all." "Then, sir, I claim my liberty. I was not a nuisancer, and as no one has a right to commit a nuisance, and as no one has a right to commit a non-suit."

General Intelligence.

Charity Hospital.—In this institution during the week ending Saturday last, there were admissions 84; discharged 311; deaths 75; patients remaining 662. Of the deaths 58 were of yellow fever, and 17 yellow fever patients were discharged as cured. There were only two deaths of cholera during the week.

Dedication of the Mechanics' Institute.

The dedication of the building of the Mechanics' Institute—that most magnificent evidence of mechanical enterprise and artistic skill—took place Thursday in the presence of about two thousand citizens. The night was unfavorable, and the rain poured down in torrents. Notwithstanding this, the unfavorable aspect of the weather, a very large number of ladies attended.

The Hall in which the dedication took place is the most spacious in the city, finished in a plain and neat style and arranged with a studied regard to the laws of acoustics. A person speaking in an ordinary tone of voice may be heard with distinctness to all parts of the room.

The ceremonies of the evening were opened with an overture from "Der Frieschutz," by Ordiel's Band. Mr. A. W. Seates then introduced to the audience Mr Thomas Murray, one of the Building Committee, who delivered an address characterized by a pleasing elocution, sound logic, practical knowledge and appropriateness of diction. We took copious notes of his speech, but from its length, must defer its publication until to-morrow.

Mr. Seates for the Society replied. He said he accepted the keys of the Institute, as the representative of the New-Orleans Mechanics' Society, with a high degree of satisfaction. He thanked the gentlemen of the Building Committee for that perseverance which had enabled them to overcome so many obstacles in the erection and completion of the building. The Mechanics' Society owed a debt of gratitude to the Committee, which he, in the presence of the assembled multitude, would attempt to discharge by expressing his grateful appreciation of their labors. He also thanked the citizens and the press of New Orleans for their continued kindness and noble contributions, as without their aid this Hall, the pride and glory of the mechanics of New Orleans, could not have been built.

To the State Legislature, through the liberality of which the ground on which the building stands was so generously donated, thanks were due. but he trusted that the gift would, in the progress of time, be amply repaid by the enlightenment and liberal attainments which the Institute would do its part in disseminating among the great and rising community of New Orleans mechanics. In conclusion he said "I now dedicate this Hall to the artists of the Mechanics' Society of New Orleans."

The Glee, "Hark Apollo" was then sung by amateurs, in the course of which were noticeable voices of singular compass and sweetness. This experiment by the amateurs proved the Hall the best adapted for musical festivals of any like upartullent in the city. At the conclusion of the glee, Judge Larue was introduced to the audience, and made an effective speech:

He said, that it was the first time he had ever felt himself called upon to make an apology for inadequate preparation. He disliked to make an apology, but such was the pressure of his official avocations, that on this occasion he must ask the indulgence of his auditory. You have assembled here (he said) to dedicate an Institute built by a society of mechanics. It was started forty-six years ago for mutual benefit, instruction and improvement. It was chartered in 1827, re-charted in 1837, and in the year 1851, the lot on which the present noble structure was erected, was donated to the Society by the Legislature of the State for the erection of an Institute in which a series of annual lectures should be delivered, on subjects of art and science for the instruction and improvement of the community of artisans. This was but the beginning of the vast and beneficial results that were to be expected from this noble institution. And who is it that has done this? Why, the mechanic! The dapper clerk that sells tape, the physician, that lives on hope, and the lawyer, that walter on Providence, who struts in broad cloth, and starves in elegant idleness, when asked who has founded these walls, fashioned these cornices, and raised these pillers, will answer, "Nothing but the mechanics!"

The young lady to whom one of these fashioners of the temples should pay his addresses, might, say, to her mamma and her papa, "Oh, bah! he's nothing but a mechanic!" [Cheers and laughter.] A fellow who never worked in his life, might sneeringly point to the architect of this noble edifice, and jeerlegly say, "He's nothing but a mechanic!" But who are those whom the idlers turn up their noses at? They are the men who make the world—men of action and enterprise, who have regulated society—who have brought beauty and symmetry out of the shapeless quarry, and formed the marble to speak to countless generations! From time immemorial the Greeks had been the patrons and practicers of the mechanic arts—the master spirits of the world. Their artisans were the civilizers of the age in which they lived. What was the state of the Greeks in Athens? Their mechanics were all slaves In Rome all of the patrician class looked on mechanical arts as degrading. But what was the penalty they paid for this their contempt of the laboring class? Things had to be changed. Rome and Greece were overthrown for a blue-eyed people came from the north and sacked their luxurious cities, demolished their temples, and tumbled in the dust their marble gods and goddesses. This people, with the blue eyes and light hair, did the business for Greece and Rome. They couldn't help it! [Laughter and cheers] The ingenuity (he said) of mechanics had made science subservient to art. In past ages, it had been considered honorable to kill and rob. A Baron might assemble his party clan and steal the property of the honest laboring kind, and in those days was chivalry triumphant. The history of chivalry was but a repetition of the ravages committed by the bold man and the robber, and men who did not work, but lived by the labor of others—were no better than the robbers of old, who killed, robbed, and maltreated the honest husbandman for their own glory and aggrandisement. The world was full of that kind of chivalry now—that broadcloth chivalry, and decency in boots and spurs, that lived by a kind of social rapine, and it was time to get rid of them! It was the mechanic and the artisan who had changed the world! It was the mechanic who had made steam, the great civilizer, and the wonder-working telegraph. Yet you, of the present generation, have the same prejudices against the useful arts that existed in times of barbarism! Shame on you! If you have! Franklin, who drew the lightning from Heaven—Fulton, who chained the volatile vapor to the service of man—Roger Sherman, (tallied), Herschel, and Drew, the most eloquent of divines, were all mechanics. And are they names for the idler and the drone to sneer at? The time would come when we would know what mechanics are. They are the men who reduce science and learning to the subservience of the useful arts. Had they not the same capacities as other men? They were that class who chose rather to work than steal, which, unfortunately, he feared, was not the case with the "upper ten." [Applause]

He would inquire, "is there any dishonorable in labor? It was a decree of the Almighty himself when he expelled Adam and Eve from the garden of Eden, where no labor was required, that they should earn their bread by the sweat of their brows. Labor was put upon man as a punishment. But the malediction pronounced against him in heaven, had been deprived of its primal curse. Labor was the best guarantee against vice. He who lives on his patrimony, and he who steals because he has no patrimony, are on one side, and the working men are on the other, and whoever will not work ought to starve! He did not know that such sentiments would be popular with the community. [laughter] but whatever he thought must come up. That man was more praiseworthy that makes a single blade of grass to grow where none grew before, than the conqueror who desolated provinces. He was not sure that his language suited his auditory. [laughter.] What he believed he would tell right out. [renewed laughter]—and it was his opinion, that whoever preferred stealing to working, ought to be hung. [Laughter and applause.] We God a land which, in every mountain and valley, offered treasures for all who sought them, and whoever would not avail himself of them, ought to be driven out of the community. Ours was a working people, and in their homes, tools and dresses, were the evidences of the mechanic's handicraft. This was the class to whom was due all that we possess of luxury, convenience, and the elements of happiness, and to this class all honor was due.

The speaker proceeded to address the boys—recommended them to habits of industry, and, above all, urged upon them the necessity of learning a trade, so that, if born to effluence, and adversity should overtake them, they might have a resource in the hour of need. He did not stint his advice to the ladies, as to the proper education and training of their daughters in habits of honest industry, etc., etc. The speech was listened to with undivided attention. We do not profess to have done justice to it in this brief sketch. A glee was next sung; after which, Dr. McCauley delivered an elaborate address.

The ceremonies of the evening were in the highest degree delightful, and reflected great credit on the members of the institution to whose management the community is indebted for a most pleasant entertainment.

From Havana.—The brig Silliandon, Captain Butler, arrived yesterday from Havana, whence she brought dates to the 23d instant. We are indebted to Captain B for a file of papers, but the only item of news we find, is the mention of another earthquake on the South side of the Island.

The Late Storm.—A miniature tornado, accompanied with sheets of rain, visited our city about 11 o'clock on the night before last. The wind did not appear to come from any quarter in particular, but blew "great guns" from every point at once. It was a whirlwind—short in its duration, but fierce-as-ever-and devastating in its effects. It stirred up things lying loose, and left everything else turned right end down. They had been enabled to save but a small amount of provisions, and they had at once to put themselves on starvation allowances. They constructed a hut, and remained on shore upwards of twenty days, during which time they had nearly completed a schooner, when, to their great joy, four whaling ships hove in sight, and the were taken on board."

The damage to the shipping was considerable. Many boats were driven from their anchorage. Some lost a chimney, some had their yawls stove in, and the rigging of all was considerably chafed.

More than $3,000,000 are invested in churches in Pittsburgh.

Arrival of the Falcon.

Later from California.—The U. S. steamer Falcon, Lieut H. Rogers, U. S. Navy, commanding, arrived last Wednesday from Aspinwall via San Juan, bringing one passengers, the mails from San Francisco to the 1st instant, and $300,000 on freight and in the hands of passengers. The Falcon left Aspinwall on the evening of the 10th inst. and arrived in San Juan on the evening of the 21st Finding that the Pacific steamer had not arrived at San Juan del Sud, and that nothing had been heard from her, the Falcon sailed the same evening for this port. The steamship Georgia sailed the same day for NewYork, with 500 passengers and $2,000,000 in gold on freight.

The Tennessee, which brought down the mails and passengers from San Francisco made a very quick trip.

The steamer Prometheus was at San Juan, to sail for NewYork as soon as the passengers by the Pacific steamer arrived.

Business at San Francisco was dull, and great complaints were made of the dullness of the times.

The papers we have received do not bring us much news of interest.

Mining News.—The Union says there is now on exhibition at the banking house of Mills, Townsend & Co., a lump of gold recently taken out at Downieville, which is one of the largest and handsomest ever found in California. This splendid specimen is nearly pure, and weighs two hundred and four ounces and three dollars! The same firm have also another lump, perfectly pure, which weighs $500, taken from the same spot as the above.

The Placer Herald gives the following interesting description of the Bear River Water and Mining Company Canal:

"The water of Bear River is introduced into a flume, six feet by three and a half, at a point some three miles above Illinois-town. Hence conveyed by canal, flumes and aqueducts, on the slopes of the mountains some eighteen miles parallel with the river; thence leaving the river by a serpentine route, about ten miles, to a point near Bear River House, where it crosses the Auburn and Illinois-town road by an aqueduct; thence about eight miles, to the dividing ridge between the waters of Bear River and the North Fork of the American River. Through this ridge a tunnel has been excavated 2000 feet in length at an expense of $60 000. The water discharged by the tunnel passes down a ravine, intercepting Deer Creek at the Mammoth Saw Mill, where it is taken up in a reservoir; thence about three miles by flumes and canal, where owing to a depression, and to maintain the elevation, requires an aqueduct of about half a mile in length, which has been constructed. Reaching a point commanding the entire mining region of the main canal, with its laterals is completed than seventy miles in length.

Of the superstructures of the line, they are permanent and substantial. Of the Mammoth Aqueduct, which is 600 feet in length 145 feet high containing some 300 cubic feet of hewn and sawed timber, is worthy the attention of artists, and will command the admiration of all who can appreciate works of art. There are eight aqueducts on the line complete and being completed. The water has been introduced, and reached about twenty-five miles but owing to the present low stage of water in the Bear River, and the great amount of absorption consequent upon the character of the soil over which it passes, progress is tardy. The absorption is being diminished and the canal need feel impervious to water, as it becomes saturated, and when this is the case, nothing forbids the immediate introduction into Auburn and the mines generally.

The capital stock of this company is at present $350 000, $300 000 of which has already been disbursed. On the 15th instant, $30,000 was called on stock, payable in two instalments, on the 1st and 15th of October, to meet present liabilities and those pending the paper of the company may rest assured that nothing will be omitting on the part of the stockholders to make provision for the liquidation of their paper at an early day. The stockholders will be justified in the further prosecution of this work, requiring a capital stock of $500,000, which will be done as circumstances require.

The present Board of Directors consists of S. W. Lovell, of Auburn, President; Robert Rogers and Charles H. Rockwell, of San Francisco, and Hall, of Sacramento, and E. S. Peck of Marysville, Directors; James Edwards of Auburn, Treasurer; J. H. Carmichael, of Auburn, Secretary. The stock consists of 120 shares, par value $2100 66 each. Of these shares 63 are owned in San Francisco, 14 in Sacramento, 9 in Marysville, and 34 by resident stockholders.

From San Diego.—We have dates from San Diego to the 18th ult. only, not having received any papers direct from that port. We take the following summary of news from the Southern part of the State, from a San Francisco paper:

Colorsville Diggings.—The miners in these claims are said by the Echo to be doing well. A new company started about two weeks since, and now have a prospect for making money. The company have taken out, within a few days, good wages.

Tunnel Company.—The Downieville Tunnel Company have ever since striking the gold, made very large wages. This and last week they averaged about fifty dollars per day to the hand, says the Echo.

The Indians.—The San Joaquin Republican says: "We learn from the Sheriff of Tulare county, who called upon us yesterday, that the Indians are quiet and no alarms are entertained by the settlers. Large numbers of emigrants are settling down on the fertile plains with their families. There is every prospect of that portion of the country being thickly settled."

Australian Gold.—A beautiful lump of Australian gold, says the Placer Times and Transcript, was exhibited to us yesterday. It was received lately by one of our shipping houses. A large trade is springing up between California and Australia, and the number of persons who leaving here to try their fortunes in the mines of the latter is very large.

Indictments.—On the 24th ult., the American brig Halpwell, Captain Grescolm, arrived at San Luis Obispo from Mazatlan, and Cape San Lucas sixty-two days out, with two hundred and twenty passengers—mostly Texan emigrants, who came by the way of Northern Mexico. They endured, it is said, great privations on the route.

The Halliwell put into San Luis for water and provisions, having lost a succession of head winds for more than thirty-five days. Most of her passengers, and all her crew, left her at the latter place; which obliged the captain to come up to Monterey to get a fresh crew. The crew went down on the Ohio on Wednesday.

On the 13th inst Juanito Ramirez and Pablo Lopez quarrelled about a trifling matter at Los Angelos, when the former drew a pistol and shot the latter in the abdomen. Death ensued in twenty four hours. A verdict of "wilful murder" was returned against Ramirez by the Coroner's jury.

Francisco Canillo, a comander of those precious scoundrels, Rivas and Zatedela, who were hanged a short time since, escaped from jail on the 15th inst.

A horse race took place a few days since at the course near the church, between two horses belonging to Don Andreas Pico and Don Jose Sepulveda. Distance, one thousand yards; purse, $1000. There was considerable side betting. Race won by Mr. Sepulveda's horse Antelope over Don Andres' made up, but was not run. Don Andress paying the forfeit.

Col. Magruder, U. S. A., and Mr. Gray, connected until lately with the Boundary Commission, in the capacity of Surveyor, came up from San Diego a few days since, and pitched their tent just out side the city.

The Land Commissioners were engaged in their arduous duties. The claims of Colonel Fremont were being argued. No decisions of importance.

Hard at Last.—The notorious "scapegrace," Emilee Jon, has at last paid the penalty of a long line of crime. Working by pressage per the steamer Sea Bird, that he was hanged on the 24th inst. at San Diego, protesting his innocence of any attempt to steal the pilot-boat Florida, for which he was condemned. He appeared on the scaffold perfectly composed, and during a speech of half an hour, attributed the "hanging of the cats of San Francisco, Stockton and Marysville, to motives of revenge by the friends of parties hanged by the Vigilance Committee." During the crowd unbar, he died without a struggle.

Wm. Darcy Jones has taken leave with his tawny on his epaulettes and left the land of life in California. He is evident in his deameanor and promises more to the "good time coming" when he shall have more leisure and shall have his "reminiscences at home."

From Oregon.

We have received the Portland Oregonian of the 11th and 16th ult. That paper of the 16th says:

We made a trip about the first of July last to the Puget's Sound, and again a few days since. The rapid increase of settlements along the way was truly astonishing.

Nowhere the place above alluded to the only portions of the territory which evince a rapid improvement; the whole Willamette valley is filling up with an intelligent population; and Oregon City, Salem, Lafayette, Marysville, Scottsburgh, Jacksonville, and many other towns, are growing into importance with a rapidity unknown, save in the settlement of California.

The actual population of Oregon did not probably exceed three thousand; this year we are assured it will not fall short of ten thousand. It will therefore be seen that our course must be onward, so far at least as the increase of population and business is concerned.

In view of this state of things, it behoves every lover of his country—every well wisher of his race, to look well to the interests of the territory, and guard the avenues which, through the strife and bickerings of party, lead to disaster and destruction. The course pursued by our contemporaries, in urging the people to draw party lines, and make every consideration secondary to party ascendancy, can not fail so produce the most disastrous results, if not timely rebuked.

A new paper called the Columbian has been started at Olympia, Puget's Sound, by Messrs. Wiley & McElroy.

The Oregonian has accounts of more fights between the emigrants on the southern route and the Indians. In one engagement, from fifteen to twenty Indians and three white men were killed.

A large quantity of spurious gold dust, supposed to have been shipped from the Atlantic States, has made its appearance in the Oregon markets.

A fire broke out at Wyeska, which destroyed an entire square in the most valuable part of the town. It was supposed to be the work of an incendiary.

A man named Wemple has been convicted of murder in the first degree, and a writ of error having been denied in the case of O'Kelly, convicted of the murder of Maloney, they are both to be hung.

Emigrant trains were arriving frequently, and the prospects of the country are bright.

From China.

Dates from Whampoa to August 3 have been received at San Francisco.

We learn that Captain Laud, of the famous ship Challenge, died at Whampoa on the 20th of July. The mate took charge of the ship, and was to proceed to Liverpool.

Loss of the Whale Ship Hurtress.—The whale ship Hurtress was totally lost on the coast of Kamschatka, by running upon an Island, which was put down on the map forty miles out of the way. The Captain and crew took to the boats, and after great suffering reached the main land where they encountered eight feet snow. They had been enabled to save but a small amount of provisions, and they had at once to put themselves on starvation allowances. They constructed a hut, and remained on shore upwards of twenty days, during which time they had nearly completed a schooner, when, to their great joy, four whaling ships hove in sight, and the were taken on board."

From the Isthmus.

We do not find much news in our Panama exchanges.

Arrival of a Ship of War.—The British ship of war Hardinge sailed for Panama on the 7th inst., from Callao, and sailed for Acapulco on the 11th.

The health of Aspinwall and Panama was good, and the railroad was progressing rapidly.

Mr. Thomas H. Jenkins, the grantee of the Panama Water-works, has nearly completed his arrangements, and is about to start for NewYork to fulfil the fulpinent of the stock. The works will supply the city with from 5000 to 7000 gallons a day, which is ample for all uses. Mr. J. has labored for two years to obtain facilities to carry out this great project.

The Panama Star has a long article under the head of "The Federation of the Isthmus." It is seriously proposed to separate the Isthmus from the Republic of New Granada, and annex it to the United States. This project has already come before the New Grenadian Government. In conclusion, the Star says:

We have been led into these remarks, not because we think the United States either desires or would gain anything from such an annexation, as that country already possesses all the advantages she requires without the expense of maintaining a government here, but we write purely through a desire to benefit this country and the people connected with it; and we feel confident that this question is merely one of time. The fact alone of the entire lack of schools in which to educate the rising generation and the knowledge, that annually large numbers of young americans are sent absence to the United States to complete their education, is sufficient to induce any thinking man into the belief that these youths will grow up with very different ideas regarding this country, to what they entertained previous to visiting the States. Their views will become more expanded and more liberal, and if no steps are taken to that end previously, they will be sure, as soon as their voice can be heard, to cry out for annexation.

We give our views thus openly, because we deem it the duty of every man having an interest in the Isthmus, to come forward when called upon, as we have all been, by the Provincial Government, and state frankly and unprejudicedly, what he thinks best for the welfare of the general body.

The Government at Bogota has acted most liberally in opening the matter for discussion, and the Provincial Congress here have acted wisely in summoning the people publicly, to express their sentiments in reference to a separation from their mother State; and therefore we say the people should act openly and candidly towards the Government, as the Government has done towards them in this all important question.

Louisiana Interior.

Artesian Wells.—Colonel S. Henderson is making preparations for the construction of an artesian well, upon the premises of the Baton Rouge Foundry. Mr. H has acquired all the needful information, and has no doubt of the success of his undertaking.

Sugar House Burned.—The Baton Rouge Gazette of Saturday says: On Wednesday morning last the sugar house of Mr. T. J. Bird, in this parish, was burned to the ground, together with a large quantity of wood. We understand the loss is covered by insurance.

The same paper adds: Many planters in our vicinity have commenced making sugar; but for the want of a sufficient supply of water, we learn, most of them will have to stop until it rains. A heavy rain just now would, indeed, prove "a blowing blessing."

Accident.—A negro, the property of Mr Robert Perry, of Jackson, was killed last week by the accidental discharge of a pistol in the hands of a student at the College, named Sandal. The latter picked up an old pistol which he supposed was empty, and to frighten the boy, snapped it at his head and blew his brains out.

Shreveport.—The Southwestern, published at Shreveport, says: Cotton is arriving in great quantities—long ranges of waggons may be seen at all times wending their way to the river, while the levee begins to assume a lively and business like aspect. There is only one drawback to the prosperity of our town—the want of floating capital It could be made the most important inland cotton mart in the Union. If our capitalists would establish a banking house, for the purpose of affording facilities to the mercantile community.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival Tuesday of the steamship James L. Day, Capt Talbot, we have received Galveston papers to the 21st, and our exchanges from the interior. We do not, however, find any items of news.

Gen. P. F. Smith.—We learn that the health of General Smith is not good. He had left San Antonio for the western frontier.

Dangue Fever.—This disease has been prevailing to a considerable extent at Indianola and Port Lavaca. In a few cases it run into typhus fever, and several deaths have occurred. The disease itself rarely, if ever, proves fatal.

Railroads.—The railroad enthusiasm has not abated, and meetings are being held in nearly all parts of the State.

From El Paso.—The San Antonio Ledger of the 14th has the following:

On Monday last, Mr. Dunn arrived in town in charge of the El Paso train, belonging to Sweet & Co. Mr. Dunn left El Paso on the 24th ult. At Eagle spring he encountered a body of Mescaleros, a branch of the Lipans. This was about 120 miles from El Paso. They charged on the train with stirring bows, but retreated when some forty men emerged from their wheels with ugly looking muskets. At the Painted Cave, a distance of 175 miles from San Antonio, another body attempted to molest the animals belonging to the train; they also amounted to about the same number. The same body had lately run off the Boundary Commission, under the command of Lieut. Michler, from the Rio Grande. The Commission, now at San Felipe, had sent an express to Eagle Pass for a reinforcement.

Mr. Dunn states that Lewis's train, which will arrive here in a few days, lost four men at Comanche Spring. These four were in advance of the train. The train found them dead on their arrival. The road is in the finest order. Mr. Dunn is in raptures about it. He pronounces it the finest natural road in the world. The whole country is full of Indians.

The day before Mr. Dunn left El Paso, twenty-nine mules were taken from Magoffinsville by the Indians. There is no trade at that place, or comparatively none. There are some eight or ten sickly looking soldiers at Magoffinsville. The nearest fort is forty miles distant. The citizens complain constantly and bitterly of want of protection from the Federal military. The Indians commit depredations as they please. No man is safe beyond the heart of the settlement. Skillman was shot at in the suburbs. Dunn met the mail on the 21st ult., on its way to Santa Fe. There are millions of bushels of white onions for sale in that region. Lewis's train is freighted with them. Mr Dunn heard no Mexican news. Senator Downe has been promoted to the Alcaldeship of that section of country.

Generous Acts of British Commanders.—We have already announced that an American vessel had been attacked by the natives, after having stranded in attempting to enter the Congo river, on the coast of Africa, and that she was rescued by the generosity and gallantry of the commanders and crews of two British ships of war. The London Chronicle contains the following interesting particulars:

"The American vessel, a brigantine, was called the Mary Adeline. She went ashore in attempting to enter river Congo. The British ship Dolphin was in the river, and seeing the signal of distress flying, went to her assistance at night fall. but was unable to effect anything that night. To the surprise of all, the next morning the river was crowded with canoes, with ten to forty natives in each, all armed, and at least two-thirds with muskets. Their movements left no doubt of their hostile purpose. The British ship sent on board of the American a gun, fitted it for service, supplied ammunition, and took up a position herself to defend the ship. The natives made the attack; flourieg in a fire of musketry, and attempting to board the vessel. The Dolphin opened upon them a fire of shot and shell, and in a little while drove the assailants ashore, and cleared the beach of them. The number were estimated at three thousand. They being done, the ship's boats attempted to get off the stranded vessel, but failed; and it was found necessary to remove her cargo. On the evening of the day another British harmed vessel—the Fire Fly—arrived, and sent her boats to assist. In the morning, the natives rallied and recommenced the attack, but were dispersed by another broadside, and took to the bush. The Dolphin and Fire Fly continued their assistance, notwithstanding the heavy swell which set in and capsized one of the ship's cutters. The whole of the cargo was transferred to the Dolphin, and the 22d on the Mary Adeline was got off safe.

"These are kindly international acts, and deserve the special acknowledgement by our Government of the generosity displayed by the British vessels."

Among the offices held by the late Duke of Wellington was that of Constable to the Tower. Constable, by the by, used to be a term of high dignity, although it has lately come to designate one of the pettiest municipal appointments. Was the Constableship of the Tower is its duties and its pay, we find stated in the London Daily News, which seemed to think there an opportunity of the vacancy ought to be improved to abolish absurd sinecures and useless sinecure. But we find that Lord Combermere has had this "nice thing" given to him, and the economy question has to be postponed perhaps, to another generation, although the new Constable is rather aged.

The Tower of London, is an ancient royal fortress, not subject to the ordinary control of the army office. The garrison is under the immediate control of the Sovereign. It is Queen Victoria's particular fort, and all the orders issued are by direct mandate, through the Secretary of War, and not from the Horse Guards or the Ordnance—the two heads of the military service. To carry on this Government there is a Constable with his deputies, at a cost of £4000, say $20 000 a year. Of these, only one deputy is resident, and his duty is to take care of "the key." He is therefore a sort of gate keeper, and this is all the duty done, for which the country pays $20 000 per annum. The ceremonies are amusing. Every night the guard, a watchman, turns out, at midnight in procession to the office of the Mayor—that is the title. The call is made. "Who goes there?" "Keys" is the reply. "What keys?" "Queen Victoria's keys." "Pass, Queen Victoria's keys." "God save Queen Victoria"—and the night work is over. The Mayor takes the keys, and his superiors, who never come there, get fat salaries for doing even less. Among the well paid officers about the Tower is a physician for state prisoners, although there has not been one there since Sir Francis Burdett. And one small military force for a mile to put a ben where there is none. Parliamentary committees have several times reported that these costly ceremonials with such excellent pay for doing nothing at all, ought to be abolished at the death of their holders, but it has never been done.

"Sammy, run to the store, and get your mother some sugar." "Excuse me, ma, I am sick what indisposed this morning." "Send father, and tell him to bring me a paper of tobacco Mong."

Arrival of the Niagara—Further Advance in Cottou.

NewYork, October 27, 11:30 A. M.

The Cunard steamer Niagara has arrived at Halifax, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 10th inst., three days later than the accounts by the Washington, and one week later than those brought by the Europa. The following is a summary of her commercial accounts:

Liverpool Markets.

Liverpool, October 16.

There has been a good demand in the Cotton market since the departure of the Europa, and the sales of the week embrace 74 000 bales, of which speculators have taken 20.000, and exporters 3000, leaving 41,000 for the trade. Prices have been firm throughout the week, and latterly an advance of fully ⅛d. per pound—the greatest improvement being on the lower qualities. The quotations at the close are as follows: Fair Orleans 6¼, Middling Orleans 5¾, Fair Pisauds 5¼, and Middling Uplands 5⅝d. per pound.

Trade and Money.

Trade in the manufacturing districts is improving.

The London Money Market continued easy, and Consols closed at 100 to 100⅛.

Commercial advices from India are favorable for the manufacturers.

Breadstuffs, etc.—Flour has been in good request, and the rates have advanced. Flour is now quoted at 22s for Western Canal, and 22s 6d per bbl. for Ohio. Corn has been rather better, and closes at 29s per quarter for Yellow, and 30s for White.

Lard has been steady, and closes at 62s per owt.

England—Extension of the Franchise.

It is expected that the British contemplate the extension of the franchise by means of an income tax on wages. Under this law it is said that a tax is to be laid on all incomes, as wages, exceeding one pound sterling, and only dex-payers are to have the right of suffrage.

Ballot-Box—New Appointments.

A strong organization is being effected of those in favor of voting by ballot at all elections in Great Britain, and it is expected to be complete by the time for the meeting of Parliament.

Lord Combermere has been appointed Lord High Constable of the Tower of London. Lord Derby has been elected Chancellor of the University of Oxford.

France—Louis Napoleon's Movements.

Louis Napoleon's reception has so far been dazzling. His Bordeaux speech has been received with enthusiasm and is placarded throughout the streets of Paris.

The first measures looked for from the new Emperor are titles of high nobility to be granted to his Ministers, and a general amnesty for political offenders.

The new Emperor was to enter Paris in triumph on the 10th of October.

Spain.—There is nothing of special interest from this country. The subscriptions for the relief of the families of those who were killed in Cuba during the Lopez invasions amount to 231.000 piastres.

Germany.—All Prussian workmen that have been employed in Switzerland, have been ordered by the Prussian Government in return to their own country.

It is reported that the King of Denmark intends to abdicate his throne.

The Sultan of Turkey has recovered from his recent dangerous illness.

Late advises from China state that the insurrection is by no means put down, but is under full headway, and continues to gain strength.

Crescent City Affair.

Washington, October 23.

The Republic of this morning announces, par authority, that the Government has taken strong grounds with regard to the outrage on the Crescent City, and that the result will show the full vindication of the rights and honor of the United States.

Lieut. Porter had been transferred to his regular command of the steamer Georgia, by the owners of the line.

[illegible] Mrs. [illegible] A. D.

[illegible] with the dew

[illegible] talk to thee
[illegible] shone,
[illegible] hopes are gone,
[illegible] mourn—
[illegible] can hold no voice
[illegible] for thee now—
[illegible] no healing balm
[illegible] cured us thou.

[illegible] we know that thou will be
[illegible] deep and true,
[illegible] will raise restore to thee
[illegible] hopes as those which flew—
And yet we [illegible] to thee of joy—
[illegible] of the aching heart—
We tell thee of a brighter hope,
Where sorrow hath no part.

Is [illegible] not joy for thee, lone one?
[illegible] it nought to feel
That [illegible] treasured treasure safe
[illegible] can never steal?
[illegible] that sweet voice will greet thine ear—
[illegible] eyes meet thine own
[illegible] no dark shadow o'er your love,
[illegible] again be thrown?

[illegible] a light upon the earth
Is but a flickering blaze,
And oft despair, or doubt, or grief,
May hide its lingering rays;
The warmest love of earth may die,
But thou canst calmly say:
The faith so wedded unto mine,
Can now know no decay.

With mournful tenderness, and deep,
Thou needst not watch again,
The treasure whose possession clea
On earth is aiming pain—
For now the fiend ordeal is past—
The mighty struggle o'er—
For love hath flown unto the skies,
It dwells on earth no more.

Then evermore look—the flame of hope
Grows brighter in that sprite,
And when here takes his upward flight
It burns with purer life.
Oh weep no more, for thou art now
Enough mourning, richly blest,
For [illegible], and hope, and even death,
But woo thee to thy rest.

[illegible] Eruption of Etna.—We have been [illegible] with the perusal of a private letter as [illegible] as the 16th September, announcing the lava [illegible] to have taken another direction, and is fast up- [illegible] reaching Milo, the inhabitants of which, to [illegible] the wood, are cutting down their chesnut [illegible], and, of course, emptying their houses.

A coasting vessel, the Mongibello, when lying [illegible] near Catania, has been covered with [illegible] the lava from the mountain. A [illegible] born [illegible] to this island, and has been pronounced of the very best quality. The mountain sent it forth in vast [illegible]

We find the following graphic account of the lava in a letter dated Catania, August 30:

Yesterday, after breakfast, we reached Zafarana; from the last house in the village we saw the lava at gun-shot distance, and at that distance the heat was very great.

The manner in which the extraordinary and frightful torrent advanced is not to be described—it must be seen. It moves slowly and uninterruptedly; the first waves, if I may so express myself, rise and fall at the least obstacle they encounter, then send forth streamlets here and there, recede, extend themselves, and again advance. Now it is heard as a continual sound of glass breaking in the fire—nothing more—and now immense damage succeeds. Every now and then it is arrested, denoting the presence of greater obstacles or of water.

By day all this grand mass present an appearance between red and yellow—sometimes dull, sometimes brighter. I can ill describe the spectacle by night—that dull stream of fire—those clouds of ashes and sulphurous vapors—are beyond description and sublimely horrible.

The streams of lava are much higher than the surrounding land, for as the former beds have become solid the new lava flows over them.

In truth, nothing can be more picturesque, could we divest ourselves of the misery and grief which pervades this hapless region.

The lava flows over the richest and most cultivated [illegible]ntry, destroying vineyards, all sorts of fruit trees and some houses. Conceive the misery, that has fallen on many proprietors and colonists.

Since writing the above we have accounts from Catania to the 24th September, up to which date the eruption continued, but without having destroyed any village, though rich vineyards, woods, etc., have been devastated.

England.

We have again to report quietness in political matters.

It is rumored that Lord Fitzroy Somerset will succeed Earl Dalhousie as Governor General of India. In the meantime, Lord Fitzroy is appointed Master General of Ordnance.

In the Liverpool county court the suit of the Liverpool Steaming Company ex. Brown, Shipley & Co., agents for the United States steamship Arctic, has been on hearing for a day or two past, but no decision has yet been given. The suit is for £435 damages, caused by the Arctic running down the steam-tug Mona.

The brig had sprung a leak twelve days previously, and the crew, exhausted with pumping, were obliged to abandon her, not being able to keep her free from water. It was blowing a strong gale, with a heavy sea running, and the Cromwell had to lay by the brig twenty-four hours before the men could be taken off."

On Thursday last, a deputation from an influential company, just formed, had an interview at the Board of Trade, to present a petition for a royal charter to establish a direct communication by means of steamships, from the east and west coast of England to Canada and the United States. London will probably be the eastern port and Liverpool the western, the dock accommodations at Plymouth and Bristol being considered insufficient for the class of steamers proposed. The deputation referred to consisted of Messrs. Rolt, M. P.; Maddock, M. P.; Princep, Brooking, Woolbridge, Carter, Gillespie, and Nelson.

Friday last, several reports on the state of the potato crop were presented to the Poor Law Guardians by the relieving officers of the Galway Unions. From these reports it would appear that, taken in the aggregate, a very fair crop will be secured, and that the prices of this staple food of the people will be materially under those of last year.

France.

Louis Napoleon continues his journey, and was last heard of at Narbonne.

A great sensation has been made in Paris by the assassination of Mr. Morton, correspondent of the London Daily News, by Mr. Bower, correspondent of the London Morning Advertiser. It would seem that Bower had suspicion of criminal intimacy existing between his wife and Morton; and the latter coming into his apartment at a moment when those suspicions had received confirmation, Bower struck him on the neck with a dinner knife he had in his hand, and killed him on the spot. Bower has as yet eluded arrest.

Prussia.

The reply of the States of the Coalition to the Prussian note of the 30th August, has not yet been officially presented, but its purport is, nevertheless, pretty correctly divined. As previously noticed, its tone is courteous, but contains nothing that changes the position of the parties of the Darmstadt convention, Prussia.

The camp near Pesth has been broken up, and the troops have gone into winter quarters. The expense of the manœuvre is calculated at three millions of florins. Rather expensive pastime.

Disturbances seem again likely to break out on the northwestern frontier of Hindostan. Along the eastern boundary peace is undisturbed. The whole country, from Peshawar to Kurrachee had been deluged with rain, and the Indus had overflown its banks, doing great damage. Severe shocks of earthquake were felt at several places in Bengal Presidency, about half past 4 A. M., August 4. A ship named the Runnymede was to sail from Bombay, for Australie about the 25th of August, with emigrants, many of them Anglo Indians who think they can better their condition in the gold country. A riot took place at Benares, August 2, but was quieted by a detachment of cavalry with whips.

The reinforcements for Burmah were on their way to Madras and Calcutta for embarcation to Rangoon. The army, which will be assembled in November, will number 20,000 men of all arms. No reliable information respecting an advance on Prome has transpired. All fears of an invasion of Assam are dispelled by the conduct of the Rajah of Munipore, a frontier ally of the British, who has organized a force to bar the passage of the Burmese through his country for which service it is presumed he will be rewarded by the British with a slice of the Burmese territory.

The Crescent City at Havana.

The telegraph has already informed us that the Crescent City, Capt. Porter, arrived at Havana on the 14th, and that she was not allowed to have any communication with the shore. The NewYork Herald of the 19th has the following interesting particulars:

The Crescent City entered the harbor of Havana at the first break of day, and it was supposed by those on board that it was owing to their not being seen until they were well inside of the harbor, that they were not molested. At sunrise the Captain of the Port came alongside, and asked for the obnoxious Mr. Smith, who he was told was still on board. He then informed Capt. Porter that as the ship was in port no steps would be taken to turn her out, but that no communication would be allowed with the shore, or any one from the shore. Capt. Porter said that he desired to present his protest to the Consul, on which the Captain of the Port politely offered to get further orders from the Captain General, in the meantime informing Capt. Porter that the ship might lie in port as long as suited his purpose, and she might go to sea when she pleased, as they acknowledge no control over her, but communicate she should not in any manner.

Such was the Captain General's orders, and by way of enforcing them, guard-boats were placed on all sides of the ship, filled with the usual police force that board foreign vessels These poor fellows did not seem to relish the business altogether, as the sun was pouring down upon them, without any awning; and when the gong on board the Crescent City sounded the joyful call for breakfast, a call to which all the Spanish officials are politely invited on board the Crescent City, they looked sad enough, wishing, no doubt, that Capt. Porter would go to sea, and relieve them from their impr sonment. Captain Porter had no such intention, however? but after breakfast, ordered the paint pots got up, and set the man to work systematically to paint the ship outside, from which manœuvre it was supposed by the guard-boats that he intended to stay at least a week. In consequence of this, the police boats were relieved, and two boats, with regular crews, detailed from a frigate, to watch the Crescent City.

At 9 o'clock the Captain of the Port came alongside again, and informed Capt. Porter that he would not be permitted to lay his protest before the American Consul. He was asked by Capt. Porter "of what use a Consul was, if American vessels in difficulty were not permitted to communicate with them; that in every civilized nation a Consul was recognized as the representative of his country, and the law of nations entitled citizens to have access to him." The Captain of the Port declined entering into a discussion of the matter, affirming (which was true) that he was exercising no authority of his own, but acting entirely under orders. The interview terminated, and so did the outside painting, and steam was ordered up, the Captain intending to drop two copies of his protest on board an American bark lying in the corner harbor. When just as the C. C. was about mooring ahead, word came off that Mr. Morales (of the house of Drake & Co., agent of the Company,) had permission to come alongside, which he did in a few moments after, in a shore boat, but accompanied by a Government boat with three officers. Mr. Morales thought the difficulty could be got over by Mr. Smith sending a written denial to the Captain General with regard to the accusations of Peter Hicks. This Capt. Porter refused to permit, as he had made (himself) two disavowals which had not been received, nor would he permit any correspondence from any officer on board the ship to the authorities; he considered it beneath the dignity of the Company to make further explanations. Capt. Porter also refused on his own part to hold any correspondence with any one on this matter except through the United States Consul. It was then endeavored to ascertain from Capt. Porter the nature of the document he wished to send to the Consul, and if they continued a disavowal of the charges against Mr. Smith. They were informed that it was a protest, and that it referred to the two former disavowals made by Capt. Porter, but at the same time it was written in plain terms.

The object evidently was to get some kind of apology or acknowledgement of wrong on the part of Mr Smith, which would enable them to settle the affair which was becoming rather troublesome. In this, however, they received no assistance from the Crescent City, and, after some discussion amongst the Spanish officers, they offered to go on shore and see if it was not possible to get the protest delivered to the Consul, and thought it could be done if it was first ascertained whether the armament contained anything offensive to the Spanish government. Information on this matter was denied them, notwithstanding which, the officers did go on shore with Mr Morales, and after some time the Acting Consul Mr. Moreland came alongside in a government boat, in company with the Captain of the Port, Don Guillermo Chacon, the Consul was not, however, permitted to come on board, nor allowed to write home by the Crescent City. Capt. Porter delivered his protest in person.

As the protest of Captain Porter fully explains all the grounds of complaint against the Spanish authorities, in a matter so much affecting the commercial interests of the United States, and the rights of our citizens, it is herewith inserted entire. It will better explain the position of affairs and the outrage committed against the United States than a history of the whole matter would do:

PROTEST.

Whereas, The first article of the treaty of amity between Spain and the United States declares "there shall be a firm and inviolable peace and sincere friendship between his Catholic Majesty, his successors, and subjects, and the United States, and the citizens thereof, without exception of persons or places."

Article six of the same treaty promises "mutual assistance and kindly acts towards the ships of either power, when in the ports of the other;" which engages to defend and protect them to the extent of jurisdiction by land or sea; and article nine secures to the citizens or subjects of each free access to the courts of justice of the other in all cases; and provides that all cases be prosecuted by order and authority of law only, and that the parties shall have liberty of counsel and defence.

How far the Spanish authorities in Cuba have conformed to this treaty is apparent from the fact that they have arbitrarily, and without any form or process of law, seized an United States steamship, engaged in the pursuit of a legitimate and peaceful business, to be turned from their port on one occasion, and refused communication on another, merely for an imputed offence committed in the territory of the United States, and which offence, if actually committed within their own territories, the Spanish authorities had no right to punish an American citizen for it. On two occasions the undersigned has in plain terms denied that Purser Smith wrote anything against the Spanish Government in the newspapers of the United States; but the word of an officer (who has heretofore enjoyed the confidence of his Government, and the company he serves) has been entirely disregarded by the Cuban authorities, as if they were ignorant of the publy which governs civilized nations; on the contrary, they have pursued a vindictive and unfriendly course, which must, if persevered in, inflict great and serious injury on the commerce of the United States, and against which course, as applied to this ship, or any of the company's ships, the undersigned once more most strongly protests.

The undersigned begs leave to draw the attention of the Spanish Government in Cuba to the fact that the Crescent City sailed from New York with a large number of Cuban and American passengers on board, every one of whom had with him a passport from the Spanish Consul at New York, granting permission to sail in the Crescent City for the port of Havana, with a guarantee of safe landing on the shores of Cuba. Moreover, that the Spanish Consul at that place did not inform the passengers, or give notice to the United States Mail Steamship Company, that there was any likelihood of the Crescent City being prevented from entering the port of Havana; it is true that a "manifesto" was issued to the undersigned, but the Company were in no wise bound by such manifesto, having perfect right to consider it the hasty and ill-advised act of a subordinate officer, Martin Calzano, (by whom it was signed) which act, if persisted in, would interrupt the friendly intercourse of the two countries; and which they would likely not repeat after the disavowal of the imputed offence by the undersigned.

The Spanish authorities in Cuba have in the most arbitrary endrse, pursued by their violating the treaty of amity existing between the two countries, have inflicted serious injuries on private individuals and on the company. Interests of large amounts are likely to suffer by the non-deliverance of the mails entrusted to the government officer of a friendly nation, and the wheels of commerce, as far as regards this ship, are entirely at a stand.

Mr. Smith, the officer in question, has been a long time employed in the Company's service, by the full knowledge and previous countenance of the Spanish authorities, who have given him from their harbor; and it is a well known fact that the unbrigaded and those under his command have abstained from any acts of interference with the affairs of the island, either by speech or act, though it might naturally be supposed that they could not help but sympathize with the misfortunes of unfortunate captains.

In conclusion, the undersigned takes this opportunity to protest again, in the strongest terms, against the indefensible disregard of the treaty of "amity," and the law of nations, by which American citizens are, without notice and legal accusation of offence, or opportunity offered to defend themselves, subjected to proscription and severe mercantile loss, the flag of the United States treated with scorn and contempt, and the Government treated with disrespect in the person of its officer, who, though commanding a ship owned by a company, is placed in his position by a written order of the United States Government and by a law of Congress of the United States. The undersigned also protests against not being allowed to make known to the American Consul the situation in which he is placed, having been refused most positively permission to communicate with the representative of the United States in the Island of Cuba. An appeal to the Consul of a country is ever respected amongst the Barbary powers, from whom a knowledge of the law of nations is not so much to be expected. Respectfully submitted,

H. B. Porter, Lieut. U. S. N.

To the authorities of Cuba, Oct. 14, 1855.

After being informed by Mr. Moreland that nothing more could be done, the Crescent City put to sea, "neither subdued nor conquered."

As she passed the Custom-house, thousands were assembled to witness her departure. The star-spangled banner was run up to the fore topmast as she passed, and, as it floated out upon the breeze, its stars looked as bright, and its stars as unsullied, as on the day America adopted it. Not a sound was heard from that vast multitude, but there were beating hearts in that crowd filled with hope that the insult to that flag would be avenged, and many silently attested their respect by uncovering their heads, as the steamer, under a full head of steam, swept by the mole.

As the Crescent City passed by Moro Castle, she fired a gun in honor of the flag that floated proudly at her fore-mast head, and seemed to bid defiance to the frowning castles of despotism.

The Japan Expedition.—The United States steam frigate Mississippi was to leave NewYork on or about the 20th instant for Annapolis, where she will remain until the Princeton, now fitting to accompany her on the Japan expedition, is ready. The Mississippi takes out a variety of articles as presents to the Emperor of Japan, to conciliate him, to clothe the natives, and prepare the way for the desired negotiation. A locomotive and a quantity of railroad iron will be taken along, with which to show him the operations of a railroad. A telegraphic apparatus and wire will also be taken, with which to demonstrate how the lightnings have been converted in the use of civilization. Two of the ship's engineers (Messrs. E. D. Robie and G. W. Alexander) are learning the use of the apparatus, in order to explain it to the Emperor. An apparatus for taking Daguerreotypes will also be used and explained for the information of his Majesty, by Lieut. Rudd. A beautiful barge is on board to be presented to him. Also, boxes of domestic goods, comprising a great variety of manufactured articles, which are to give the Emperor an idea of the industrial pursuits of this country, and perhaps awaken a desire on his part for an exchange of commodities between Japan and the United States. The Mississippi will take ten boats for her use. There are four beautiful brass nine-pounders, mounted on carriages, which are to be used, if necessary, by parties of engineers engaged in surveying. They can be fitted in the bows of boats which may be employed in exploring the coast.

The Belfast Journal relates a story of a Dutch painter who had for a subject "The Sacrifice of Isaac." He represented Abraham as a sturdy old Dutch burgher leveling a musket at his son, while the interceding angel spits in the priming pan to stop the sacrifice.

Arvine, in his "cyclopedia of Anecdotes," records many instances of very laughable anachronisms of painters, and among others that of the picture of "Eden." In which Adam and Eve occupy the foreground, while in the background a German student is shooting ducks!

There is an old painting by a French artist, of the Lord's Supper, in which the table is decorated at each end with tumblers holding cigar-lighters!

The Washington National Monument.—We take from the Charleston Courier, the following, in reference to the Washington Monument: The block of marble from Texas, for the National Washington Monument, has been received at Washington, and duly presented to the Board of Managers. California is about to send three blocks, the one previously sent not being deemed by some of its citizens of sufficient magnitude and beauty. The one from Texas is said to be equal to the finest specimens yet received, and completes the full complement of blocks from all the States of the Union.

The monument it is said, is now about 118 feet high, and will reach 220 feet at the close of the present season. We regret, however, to learn that the funds raised in various ways by voluntary contributions are falling short, and that the structure cannot be carried up unless a more enthusiastic and spirited effort by the American people be made. It is stated by the Baltimore American that $140,000 will be sufficient to complete the structure. Surely this small sum can be raised in this vast Republic, and it is a national disgrace that it has not been done before. The proposition that each voter at the next Presidential election should contribute half a dime to this object, we perceive has been generally approved of, and it is hoped that it will everywhere be adopted. South Carolina, however, cannot participate in this movement; we would therefore respectfully suggest that on Sunday, the 31st of October, an appeal should be made from the pulpit at every place of worship in the State, and a collection made in behalf of the fund; and when we consider that the civil and religious liberty we now enjoy is mainly due to the efforts of that great man, it is preposterous to suppose that there could be found any so dead to feelings of patriotism as to refuse to contribute toward the erection of a Monument that is to perpetuate a nation's gratitude for his services.

Important Trial.—An important trial is now progressing before Judge Potts at Newark, N. J., arising out of the destruction of buildings in NewYork, by gunpowder, during the great conflagration of December, 1835.

The Longest Times.—It is stated, as characteristic of the careful provision and good management of this journal, that its long memoir of the Duke of Wellington, on the morning after his decease, had been prepared six years previously, to be in readiness whenever that event occurred. It is understood to be written by Mr. Dodd, the well known compiler of a parliamentary annual, who undertakes the "obituary" department of the Times.

Coffee.—The Baltimore American, of a recent date, has compiled from various authentic sources an estimate of the production and consumption of coffee for the year 1852. The production is set down in round numbers at 548,000,000 pounds. The consumption for Europe, British America and the United States is estimated at 540,000,000 or about 92,000,000 pounds over the production, and hence, perhaps, may be found the cause of the high price of coffee for the past four years. Like all other articles of commerce, there has been a steady increase of the production of coffee ever since and before the year 1840, and yet it is only within four years past that the article has so much advanced to make it an expensive luxury to our people.

Ordinarily, this advance in price would have curtailed consumption, but the abundance and cheapness of food, the profits of commerce, and the rewards of industry and labor, enable all classes to continue the consumption What was originally a luxury, is now become a prime article of necessity, especially among the working classes.

Chloroform as a Motive Power.—A year or two ago M. Tremblay, a French civil engineer, exhibited at the Novelty Works, in New York, an engine in which the vapor of ether, in combination with steam, was used as a motive power. Considerable interest was excited by this invention, but more particularly in France, and the French Government ordered an engine to be built on M. DeTremblay's principle. It was found to work admirably, and a saving of fuel equal to fifty per cent. was realized, when a discovery of the highly inflammable nature of the ether employed rendered its adoption as steam vessels inexpedient. This difficulty, however, has been removed through the instrumentality of M. La Fond, a French naval officer of high scientific attainments, who proposed to make Du Trembley's invention available for marine purposes, by substituting chloroform for ether. The French Government has ordered two engines, of sixty horse power, to be built and placed on board the Gallice, a man-of-war constructed expressly for the purpose. Two other vessels have also been ordered to be fitted with engines upon the same principle.

Murderer's Confession.—The Utica Observer learns by a private letter, that a person living in the village of St. Thomas, Franklin county, Penn., who was supposed to be dying, made a confession to his having, with two others, murdered a man about four years since. The wife of one of the murderers having died about three days before the deed was committed, they opened her grave and put the murdered man in to conceal him. The grave has been opened, and the body of the murdered man found. The murderers were arrested and sent to the Chambersburg jail.

Red Men in Western Africa.—The NewYork Tribune says:

The Nouvelles Annales des Voyages for June contains a translation by Cherbonneau, Professor of Arabic at Constantine, of the journey of a traveler named Tuggurt, via Timbuctoo, to the Mountains of the Moon. These mountains, however, according to this account, do not lie in the Middle, or rather in Eastern Africa, as laid down in our geographies, but among the Western Highlands, which fill the space between the middle course of the Niger and the Atlantic ocean. The route taken was from Timbuctoo to Dechenne, up the Niger, then for some time up the Niger, and finally by land to Bambara, Sakay, Maika, and Sakut Then follows the rounding passage: "Beyond the circle of Sakat begins, so to speak, a new world; the people have a red color, of whom a part is herdsmen, possessing innumerable herds of camels and flocks of sheep; the rest are husbandmen. Our travels some two months upon the territory, and then comes to a great salt lake, called Sebkat Sebaniakha. This lake loses itself in the sands of a boundless desert, in which one finds no trace of vegetation Across this desert the passage of which occupies five weeks, dwell nations of a red color, living in tents made of buffalo skins, and subsisting on dates and camel's milk. Then comes a second waste, which can be crossed in fifteen days; after which occur the first oasis, which belong to the Mountains of the Moon, and are inhabited by red men."

New Patent Law in Austria.—A new law upon patents has appeared at Vienna. No patent will be granted except to the inventor himself; and the inventor, if a foreigner, must previously have taken out a patent in his own country. Otherwise, all foreign inventions may be imitated in Austria. From this it would seem that a one who inherits the right of an invention, or an individual who acquires it by purchase, cannot obtain protection from infringement in the Austrian empire.

Pirates in the China Sea.—The ship Celestial, of New York, while on her passage from Canton to Liverpool, was attacked by a fleet of nine piratical junks on the coast of Hainan, but a breeze springing up, enabled her to get clear of them. Some of the junks mounted sixteen guns, and had from forty to fifty men on board.

A commodious and splendid brick edifice has just been completed—ninety-seven by forty-seven feet, three stories—which for stability, convenience of arrangement, and for number, size and comfort of private and school rooms is not surpassed by any similar one in the country. The Principal resides in the building, and with his lady and competent female assistance, superintends the Boarding Department. A lady will reside in the Seminary, who faithfully discharges the duties of Matron. Nurse and Governess, so that at all times, pupils will find the comforts, kindness and conditions of home. The Principal, with the aid of female teachers, who also live in the Seminary, diligently guard and form their morals, manners and habits of the pupils. Being under his charge at all times, they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations, respecting neatness, order, punctuality, economy and regularity, calculated to give a safe and vigorous development to character. The appliances of home and family are not rendered by this arrangement but perpetuated and strengthened.

The ensuing scholastic year will commence on Thursday the 23d of September, 1852. Pupils can enter at any time during the year, chargeable from the time of entrance. No deduction will be made but by special arrangement with the Principal.

Boarders only will reside under a teacher. They are required to retire 9 o'clock at night, and rise early in the morning at a given signal, and to take frequent and wholesome exercise.

Private rooms are large, conveniently and comfortably furnished. Pupils are required to keep their wardrobes and private apartments in neatness and order. A proper officer weekly takes charge of their clothing. Inspects its condition, and every Saturday morning instructs them in plain sewing and necessary repairs of clothing. Every article of clothing must be marked with the owner's name.

Bi-monthly reports are sent to patrons, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and deportment of pupils.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, or any amusement calculated to interfere with their studies.

Visitors are not received by pupils, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The Principal must have certain information respecting every correspondent. Pupils are required to attend Church and Sunday School on Sabbath.

No accounts will be opened in Marion but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, the lady of the Principal must approve the purchases (who superintends their trading), and thus expenditures will be controlled. THE STREAM OF DEATH.

There is a stream whose narrow tide,
The known and unknown worlds divide,
Where all must go;
Its wayless waters dark and deep,
Mid sullen silence downward sweep,
With moanless flow.

I saw where at that dreary flood
A smiling infant prattling stood,
Whose hour was come;
Unaught of ill, it neared the tide,
Sank, as to cradled rest, and died,
Like going home.

Followed with languid eye anon,
A youth, diseased, and pale, and wan,
Stood there alone.
He gazed upon the leaden stream,
And feared to plunge—I heard a scream,
And he was gone.

And then a form in manhood's strength
Came bustling on, till there at length
He saw life's bound;
He shrunk and raised the bitter prayer
Too late—his shriek of wild despair
The waters drowned.

Next stood upon that surgeless shore,
A being bowed with many a score
Of toilsome years.
Earth-bound and sad he left the bank,
Rock turned his dimming eye, and sank,
Ah! full of years.

How bitter must thy waters be,
Oh Death! How hard a thing, ah, me,
It is to die!
I mused—when to that stream again,
Another child of mortal man
With smiles drew nigh.

"Tis the last pang," he calmly said,
"To me, O death! thou hast no dread—
Saviour, I come!
Spread but thine arm on yonder shore—
I see!—ye waters bear me o'er;
There is my home!"

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

October 6, 1852.

PAPAL DEVELOPEMENTS.

Of the case of the Madiai the whole protestant world has heard. But we cannot now fully judge of these things. We have become of late years so accustomed to the tyranny and audacity of Rome, whenever and wherever it has been possible for her undauntedly to tyrannize, that even an auto da fe, now again, after the lapse of ages, such a thing were to be enacted, would excite no very overwhelming emotion amongst us. Our yesterday, reading of such cases as those of Madiai and the Madiai, as we now read the martyrs chronicled by Foxe, will feel we are amazed and indignant by far, at such enormities than we do, and no doubt, in the days commemorated by Foxe, the burnings at Smithfield, and the cruel persecutions of Philip of Spain, excited little more feeling among the Protestants of Europe, than is now felt by those who read of the cruel fate of the Madiai.

Indeed, we take into account the superior enlightenment, refinement, and humanity of the present age, as compared with that of Queen Mary, if we remember that that was the age when torture was the customary mode of examining the suspected, even in England, and that the principles of religious toleration were at that time altogether unknown in the world—while the present is the age, in every civilized, or even partly civilized country, Turkey not excepted, where Popery may have established its strongholds, of almost universal toleration, and in some cases unpardonable political laxity, so far as religious principles are concerned, and the age, moreover, when the criminal code and processes of every free country have been disarmed of nearly all their ancient cruelty of rigor; if we take these circumstances on the one hand, and on the other fairly into account, we easily conclude that the condemnation of the Madiai to ignominy and the galleys, merely possessing and reading the word of God, so gross and outrageous an act of cruel oppression and cruelty as any martyrdom in Smithfield, under Mary, or as any act of Philip. Nay, making allowances for the difference in the periods, is it not as unique and infamous an act as the burning of Huss and Jerome by the middle-age councils, or the expulsion of the Jews by Ferdinand of Spain?

PROTESTANT INDIFFERENCE.

It is how indifferent comparatively, is the protestant public to this unparalleled enormity. The religious journals indeed lift up their voice; but feeble and strained is the voice of the secular press, if indeed it chance to speak at all. And all that the religious world, together with the utmost efforts of the evangelical alliance, can accomplish towards rousing the righteous indignation even of the serious masses of this nation is comparatively very little. A few feel as they ought to feel, but most are little more than indifferent. Nevertheless, let the matter be but once fully brought home to the British mind and heart; and the resolute indignation of protestant Britain, with which that of Protestant and Republican America will surely be joined, will make itself heard and felt in the Pope and Popish cabinet of the potty prince, called the Grand Duke of Tuscany and in the very slave of Rome.

A DEPUTATION OF REMONSTRANCE.

Meantime, in accordance with a resolution and suggestion of the Evangelical Alliance, at its late meeting in Dublin, a deputation consisting of the Earls of Roden and Cavern, two eminent noblemen of high character, and Arthur Kinnaird, Esq., M. P., is to proceed at once to Florence, personally to plead and remonstrate with the Grand Duke, on behalf of the persecuted Madiai. This deputation is to receive as an associate, at the instance of the Evangelical Alliance of Geneva, the Comte de St. George. And it is possible that other noblemen or gentlemen, representing other nations and ecclesiastical communities, may join them; so that the deputation may not appear to be a mere British interference, but may be, as far as possible, representative of universal Protestantism.

Certainly the fact of such men undertaking such a mission is one which speaks aloud for the prevalence of religious feeling, even amidst so much mere expediency and indifferentism, in the most influential classes of the nation. Already a deputation of somewhat similar character, though engaged in a more doubtful case, has interposed with success on behalf Achilli. May the present deputation, of yet higher character and more imposing rank, be no less successful on behalf of the poor and persecuted, but illustrious Madiai.

SIR H. BULWER'S DIPLOMACY IN ITALY.

While the excellent Mr. Kinnaird, and the Earls of Roden and Cavern, thus represent the earnest and pious Protestantism of Britain, in its sympathy with struggling and suffering Protestantism in Popish lands, it is indeed lamentable and humiliating to see the the diplomatic indifferentism and expediency of our government represented in Italy by her majesty's envoy plenipotentiary, Sir Henry Bulwer. Far better and more honorable work might surely have been found for his rare talents and tried experience than to send him, in the midst of the deadly season of South Italy, unasked and unwelcome to Rome, to solicit (in effect) a political reconciliation of Britain with the head of an apostate and usurping Church, who misrules, as his predecessors have misruled for ages, and by misruling blights and curses the finest land under the purest sky in Europe. Sir Henry has showed, as might have been anticipated, even his diplomacy at fault when matched with the subtlety of Rome, and has had the failure of his mission aggravated by the cold contempt, and insolent smile with which it has been received. He cannot but have contrasted in his own mind his present sphere of action in dark and priest-ridden Italy with that which he so lately occupied in your free land. But such an issue was deserved, and richly deserved. With the intolerable assumptions and impudent indifference of Rome, which has called forth from the indignation of Britain, the inadequate, but yet significant and warning response of the "Ecclesiastical Titles Bill," not only still unrevoked by the intrusive and presumptuous Pontiff but openly and defiantly persisted in; with Popish wrongs against British subjects, done in obedience to papal policy, still unredressed, and unacknowledged; with such a specimen of popish tyranny and remorselessness before his very eyes, as the case of the Madiai, Sir Henry Bulwer is to hie to Rome, to consiliate, forsooth!—to coax and compliment—the Romish See! Oh! for an hour of Cromwell, to show Britain how such affairs ought to be managed!

You need not doubt that this affair will indefinitely augment the unpopularity, already sufficiently great, of our foreign minister lord Malmesbury.

PROGRESS OF ANGLICANISM.

While Popery is thus developing, under its own name abroad; at home, under the guise of Anglicanism, it has been enacting horrors different indeed, but not less fearful. The worst impurities of the Romish confessional have been exceeded in the examinations by the Rev. Mr. Pryune, a clergyman of Devenport, in the South-western diocese, over which Bishop Philpott presides, of girls of twelve years old, placed under the charge of the infamous or infamous "Sisters of Mercy," established in that town. These abominations have been fully investigated, and the facts alleged, abundantly established in an extra judicial examination held before the Bishop of the diocese, the details of which, horrible and disgusting beyond conception, have been published at large in the daily papers, and yet the Protestant (!) Bishop of Exeter, has dared, without questioning the facts, not only to exculpate, but strongly to commend the clergyman, saying that he thought he had done no more than his duty, and that it was very likely by means of such inquiries and examinations (although conveying thoughts far too beastly for a brothel, into the minds of tender children) that such girls might have been saved from many sins! The Bishop of Exeter, however, must hear of this again!

PHASES OF INFIDELITY.

Strange, indeed, are the times in which we live; much, it must be owned, there is of good—more, by far, than in any former age; but how much, also, of evil, and how strangely intermingled. It is the age of zealous and missionary Protestantism, but also the age of deepening, strengthening, and spreading Popery: the age of increased and extended spirituality of feeling and influence, but at the same time the age of advancing infidelity.

HIGHEST CLASSES—PANTHEISM.

In the higher classes, Pantheistic spiritualism, which, notwithstanding the iris-hues of the plausible veil it wears, is, when closely examined, as foul-featured and malign a spirit of evil as Moore's veiled Prophet of Khornassan, is battling with true, simple and earnest piety, in the high places of the land.

LOWEST CLASSES—ATHEISM.

The lower classes are to an appaling extent given over to a hard-headed and hard-hearted material and atheistic scepticism; yet, on the other hand, never were there so many and so potent influences brought to bear in favor of their regeneration and elevation as at this moment.

MIDDLE CLASSES—SPECULATION.

The middle classes are, perhaps, on the whole, better informed, better principled, and more influenced by a real religious sense, than at any former period; yet even here, it is still true that the sudden overflow of general intelligence, before the tide of advancing knowledge had worn for itself a channel, sufficiently deep, and broad, and well defined—has produced an extent of seeming knowledge, which is but covert ignorance, most favorable to the impostures of pretentious shallowness, and to the progress of every crude and mischievous novelty. Hence, false philosophies and showy infidel speculations find too ready an acceptance among the young men of the age, who must form, in a few years to come, the working staple of the population.

EDINBURGH PHILOSOPHY AND FREE-THINKING.

In Edinburgh especially, not only a profound, masterly, and comprehensive philosophy, truly deserving the name, but a clever, specious, active and versatile school of materially well educated infidelity, has its principal seat and centre. Sir William Hamilton represents the former, to which also Professor Wilson, (who has recently resigned his professorships) the famous Christopher North, of Blackwood's Magazine, must be considered as belonging. The coterie with which the Chambers and George Combe have been connected, represent the latter. Indeed one of the Chambers, whose clever and useful 'Journal' is so well known, has had very extensively the credit of being the author of that most specious book. "The Vestiges of the Natural History of the Creation:" and perhaps nothing has contributed much more to the spread of the influence of this most dangerous and evil school of polite and moral free-thinking—of resolute anti-supernaturalism and anti-spiritualism, than the favor with which the shallow and spurious science of Phrenology has been in most places welcomed by the young and curious, who have not been thoroughly educated.

THE AGE OF CONFLICT.

This age is, in truth, the age of conflict. The world, in its present phase, is the battle-field of all forces and antagonisms. Every thing has received a mighty impulse. Steam power vehemence and railroad speed are the symbols of the era. The good is better, the bad is worse. Popery gains converts in Protestant countries—Protestantism advances in Popish lands. Absolutism entrenches itself in Austria, Italy and France: popular progress is the motive power in Britain and America. The deeply thoughtful become yet more profound, the shallow still more superficial. It is the age of conflict and of transition. But all these strifes and energies, disorderly as they may seem to us in their working, are preparing the way for the coming of the Final Reign. "Truth is mighty, and will prevail." "The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever."

DEATH OF WELLINGTON.

The death of the great Duke has given us an emphatic lesson on the vanity of all earthly honors. The greatest name in the world is now no more. Honors unequalled in lustre and number have now no claimant. "Where are all those things which he possessed?" "Man dieth and giveth up the ghost, and where is he?"

"Vain his ambition, noise and show,
Vain are the cares which rack his mind;
He heaps up treasures mixed with woe,
And dies, and leaves them all behind."

"Oh! be a nobler portion mine—
My God, I bow before thy throne.
Earth's fleeting treasures I resign,
And fix my hopes on thee alone."

THE NEW CONFERENCES.

Our Australian deputation has set sail. The Rev. Robert Young leaves his home for two years, to take charge of settling, on behalf of the British Conference, the terms of connexion between the British and Australian Conference, and the condition of the latter's independency.

The French Conference has met, and made some judicious arrangements, as well as some noble sacrifices. But of this, J. J. C. will tell you, as also of the strides by which the Prince-President advances towards imperialism.

N. Y.

A Sad Story of the Spirit Rappings—More of the Feyits.—The New York Observer of last week, gives us the particulars of one of the most revolting instances that has yet come to our knowledge, of the crime and infamy in which that most stupid of all impostures, Spiritual Rapperism, so frequently involves its demented victims. In giving publicity to so distressing a narrative, the Observer says it has been "inclined to suppose until lately, that the class of minds which a paper of its religious character reaches, was not likely to be reached by so stupid and transparent an imposition as this." The editor finds, however, that the folly is spreading among respectable and religious people of the weaker sort, and of credulous, visionary and unsettled minds, it is true, but it is important that they should, if possible, be reached and saved. And to that end, the statements herein made may not be wholly without effect.

The person who communicates the facts to the Observer, says, for more than a year he had been confined to a bed of suffering and disease, which, during the past winter, assumed a form that seemed to baffle medical skill, and death alone seemed to promise a certain and speedy relief to his sufferings. We quote:

While in this precarious state, the wife of a brother, who is absent in California, came from a distant part of the State to make us a visit. She claimed to be a writing medium, and professed to be in constant communication with the Spirit World—claimed that spirits of departed friends dictated communications, and moved her hand to write them out, without any physical effort on her part. She hurried a week and returned. At that time, to all human appearance, it very few days at most would terminate my earthly existence, and to satisfy my husband of the genuineness of her mediumship, she agreed to find out by the spirits, and write and inform him of the precise time of my decease. Accordingly, after the lapse of about two weeks, he receives through the post office a long letter in her hand-writing, dated "Spirit World," and purporting to have been written through her to him, by my spirit, containing the most absurd infidel doctrine, sanctioning falsehood and deception, and other anti-christian sentiments at which my very soul revolts.

The next we hear from this misguided sister is that she has been instructed by the spirits, that she must take a certain young man named ——, for her spiritual husband, and they, (the spirits) would marry them, and strange and incredible as it may seem, the simple truth was seduced into the ludicrous farce of a "Spiritual Marriage," with another man's lawful wife. A friend at whose house she found a home, charitably supposed that such strange conduct was induced by a fit of temporary insanity, and earnestly though ineffectually endeavored to save her from the disgrace consequent upon a public exposure, and, when it was found that he would give no sanction to the transaction by recognizing such a marriage, (performed, as was pretended by the parties, by the spirit of her mother, talking off through another medium the marriage ceremony,) and feeling no disposition to turn his house into a spirit brothel for their accommodation, they were instructed to leave. They obeyed, and found a welcome in a family of believers, where they were permitted to spend their "spirit honey moon" unmolested.

When the misguided woman first became related to me by marriage with a dear absent, though much injured brother, she was a professed disciple and follower of our Lord and Master, and daily knelt at the family altar, from whence ascended the grateful incense of prayer and praise. Then I could love and respect her as a sister. But eleven years have since passed away, and now I can only look upon the wreck of this once virtuous and lovely sister, with grief and shame, as the willing, voluntary victim to one of the worst delusions that ever cheated immortal souls of happiness here and hereafter. Not long since I made a visit to friends in a distant part of this State, in the neighborhood where she now resides, and I found the reality to be much worse than I had ever imagined from any previous information concerning this unhappy and disgraceful transaction."

SHALL WE KNOW OUR DEPARTED FRIENDS IN HEAVEN?

The affirmative of this question is ably maintained in an article published in the Independent, and we doubt not that an abstract of the argument will interest our readers.

The doctrine of future recognition was generally believed by the ancients, and with us is inscribed on monuments, and incorporated into sermons, and gives pathos to funeral hymns. Its prevalence indicates one of the wants of the soul, and therefore one of its just expectations from divine mercy. Our memories, which perpetuate the experiences and friendships of the present, will be preserved in a future state, and will have their previous knowledge of the loved refreshed and enlarged by the revelations of the judgment day. The same doctrine is inculcated by the scriptural accounts of the saints, as "gathered to their fathers," "gathered to their people," &c;" expressions not used to indicate a common place of sepulchre, since many of them were buried wide asunder. The exclamations of Jacob and David, when hearing of the loss of their children, teach the same lesson. In the parable of the unjust steward, it is said that the charitable will be welcomed to heaven by those whom they have befriended. Lazarus was recognized by Dives; will not the good also recognize each other? Paul comforted the bereaved Thessalonians by the assurance (1 Thes. 4: 13,) that they should again behold the departed, and be united with them and with the Lord forever: and also declared, that those who had been converted through his ministry, would be a cause of rejoicing to him at the coming of Jesus Christ.

If it is objected, to this view, that the knowledge, that some of their friends are lost, would impair the happiness of the saved, it may be answered that we will have such clear views of the odiousness of sin, and the transcendent beauty of holiness, that we shall entertain no sympathy for the guilty, but on the contrary acquiesce fully in the sentence of condemnation: just as the angels preserved their blessedness when some among them fell from their high estate. And even the presence of our earthly associates, it must be remembered, is not the chief source of heavenly happiness. We shall be chiefly happy because our home is also the home of Christ. [South. Baptist.

MINISTER'S SALARIES.

One of the worst evils, on the whole, in the relation between pastor and people, is the failure to secure for him pecuniary independence, when the people are able to do so. One can hardly understand how any one should fail to see the truth on this subject, or to practice it, did we not see some lamentable examples to the contrary. The law anxiously provides for the independence of the judiciary, by giving the judges an adequate salary, and forbidding it to be diminished during the term for which they are commissioned. Our organic law, both in scripture and constitution, is no less particular as to the clergy. They are to be kept free from worldly care and anxiety. As a general rule, they are not so kept. They are dejected by pecuniary responsibilities they cannot meet, or by sacrifices they ought not to make. Their families are often perplexed beyond measure, even to provide for the necessaries of life, while very few are able to purchase the books which are the very tools with which they work. They feel their minds dwarling, and sigh for mental food, but do not deem it honest to go in debt even for what seems indispensible to their preparation for the pulpit. Worn out by long continued labor, they are blamed if they take a summer journey. The temptation to be too complaisant to be rich, frets the honest hearted minister, and perhaps leads him to the opposite extreme of discourtesy. Worse than all, perhaps he begins to cherish hard feelings towards his flock. Here are people, he feels, who are perfectly able, without distressing themselves, to take this mountain weight of pecuniary responsibility off his heart, and they will not so much as touch it with one of their fingers. Must he not be almost superhuman, if, with such feelings, he can, with gentle tenderness, fulfill his pastoral duties? It is most difficult to school his heart to love for the brethren, who, he sometimes says bitterly within him, are starving his family; and to kind feeling for those who, he thinks, do not sympathize with the severest troubles of his lot. The prayers of his flock for him sometimes sound like mockery; and their professions of love to him, and to the cause of Christ, send a pang to his heart. Gladly would he engage in any other pursuit, which would support his family, but he cannot see his way clear to leave his master's work. And so he suffers on, as far as may be, in silence, but the interests of the church suffer with him. For a half-hearted service will show itself in a half-hearted church.

Now, we submit that this is the refinement of cruelty. It is like that torture in the inquisition, where a man was so fastened, that drop after drop of water, falling on his head, at last pierced his brain. Such slow nail lingering anguish as many a minister suffers, no church surely would inflict, if they understood the matter. [Presbyterian Review.

NOTHING LOST BY KEEPING THE SABBATH.

It would be difficult to find any one who ever really derived any permanent advantage from working on the Sabbath; although very many in a small way of business, such as bakers and green grocers, imagine that they would lose their trade if they were to discontinue the practice. There are, however, persons still living and doing well who thought otherwise, and who have prospered beyond their most sanguine expectations. One such instance occurred to a young man, a baker by trade, who lived in a seaport town of Hampshire.

He had resided in the place sufficiently long to form many pleasant connections, and become greatly attached to his abode, when he was told by his employers that, in consequence of some new arrangements, his services would be required during part of the Sabbath, namely, from nine in the morning till two in the afternoon. His employers, seeing that the young man seemed greatly perplexed, said to him, "You can take a month to consider the matter, and then we will talk further on the subject;" intimating, at the same time, that unless he complied with the proposal, they would be constrained, although unwillingly, to look out for another assistant. The young man was much distressed; he desired to continue in the situation which he occupied till able to commence business on his own account; and there was certainly no hope whatever of his obtaining a similar situation in the town. His determination was, however, soon made: and notwithstanding the earnest remonstrances of his young friends, who entreated him not to ruin himself, he firmly, yet respectfully, made known to his employers that he could not work on the Lord's day. "Very well, then the matter is settled," was the brief reply. Nothing more was said; the master turned on his heel, though not without a secret consciousness that the place of the young man would not be readily supplied; and the discharged journeyman went slowly to his lodging, hoping, as he turned round the corner, and passed the door of the baking house, that he might hear the voice of his master calling him to return.

One week then passed, then another: the faith of the young man was sorely tried, but he remembered the promises of the Lord, and took courage. At length, when his savings were nearly exhausted, he wrote a letter to his family, informing them that he was going to Southampton, in quest of a situation, probably from thence to Salisbury, and that, in the event of his not succeeding, he should return in about a week. This done, he proceeded to put the letter in the post office, and had nearly reached the place, when he was beckoned across the street by an elderly tradesman, who asked him if he had got a situation. On being answered in the negative, the baker, for such he was, said as follows: "Well, I have been thinking about retiring from the cares of business for some time past. I have no family, and have acquired sufficient to take me to my journey's end; so, if you feel inclined to take my business, you shall have it." The young man answered that he would gladly embrace such a favorable offer, but having neither relations nor friends to assist him with sufficient capital, he should not be able to do so. "Well, I have thought that matter over too," replied the tradesman, "and the difficulty can be easily got over. Let the stock be valued by mutual friends, and an agreement drawn up and signed, and you shall pay me by instalments. I know that you are a young man of sound principles, and therefore I will undertake to recommend you to those with whom I have been in the habit of dealing, as well as to those who deal with me. Never fear; do as I have done before—trust in divine Providence, and you will do well."

The agreement was made at once, and the young man returned to his lodging in high spirits; it was no longer needful to set out for Southampton, nor yet to ask his friends to look out for a situation on his account; he wrote to them, indeed, and on the same day, but his letter told only of joy and thankfulness. In about a fortnight he commenced business, and shortly after married a very respectable young woman. He is now a flourishing tradesman, with a good prospect of retiring from business at no distant period. [Servant's Magazine.

The Way to Learn.—Let the Infidel abandon his irksome superiority over the brute, if such is his will; but our lesson has been taught in a loftier institute. At the foot of the cross, in all humility and adoration, we have learned at once the depth and the height of human nature; and we have learned to think all wisdom but foolishness for the knowledge of Christ; all purity but sin, unwashed by his atonement; all hope in earth, of all hopes the most miserable, but in the faith of his blessed resurrection; content to bear the struggles of life, at his command; and submitting to the grave with a consciousness that it can sting no more; "sown in corruption, to be raised in incorruption; sown in dishonor, to be raised in glory; sown in weakness, to be raised in power." [Rev. G. Croly.

THE SUCCESSFUL MINISTRY.

"They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." Psa. 126: 5, 6.

A tender, affectionate, weeping ministry shall be a successful ministry. Such a ministry was Christ's and Paul's, and such ought always to be the ministry of the gospel. The seed of the gospel is too precious to be cast away and lost; the consequence of sowing it too momentous to be trifled with.

But what does the ministry of Christ sow? "Precious seed." The seed is the word—the word of the gospel.

Precious, as being the fruit of God's everlasting love. Precious, as being the purchase of the Savior's blood. Precious, as being the revelation of the Holy Spirit. Precious, in its adaption to the sinner's condition and necessities. Precious, to the convert himself, to his family, to the world, and to the church; in the effects it produces on him, and by him. "He is a new creature, created in Christ Jesus unto good works."

But how does the minister of Christ sow his precious seed? "He goeth forth and weepeth." Ministers are called upon to go forth. Out! out! Onward! onward! is their watchword. Forth. Out of themselves to Christ, for grace and aid. Oh! what a work is theirs. To smite the rock—to raise the dead! "Who is sufficient for these things?" "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." His whole soul must go forth in strong cryings and tears to Christ for aid.

He goeth forth. Forth to the chamber of affliction. Forth to the bed of death. Forth to the widow and the fatherless. Forth in search and pursuit of the strayed ones. Forth to the midst of his flock, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God, and to comfort all that mourn.

He weepeth.

Strange! Why weep? Is he ashamed of his message, of his Master, or of his work? Oh, no! Never was there such a message, such a master, or such a work. Why, then, does he weep? He weeps for himself. He feels so disqualified, so unfit, so unworthy, so inadequate to the task.

He weeps for his dear people. His "bowels yearn o'er dying men." They have not all obeyed the gospel; and the Savior says: "He that believeth not shall be damned." That "except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Can he do otherwise than weep for such?

He weeps over many of the dear youth of his charge, over many heads of families, and he sorely weeps in consideration of the aged impenitent. When he oversteps the boundary of time, descends to the pit of woe, how can he but weep as he asks. Where are they who are fleeing "from the wrath to come," and giving themselves unto God and to his church?

He sees the day fast approaching when he must meet them at the bar of God as a witness against them, if they obey not the gospel, and how can he but weep? "He goeth forth and weepeth," where no eye sees his tears for them but God's.

Such a minister "shall not labor in vain, nor spend his strength for nought and in vain." He "shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him." All experience, all observation, and the word of God confirm it. The seed he sows shall not be lost. The obedience the merits, the intercession, the power of his master, and the faithfulness of God to his Son, secure him fruit to his ministry. Without doubt such a sower shall reap a glorious harvest; his tears shall be succeeded by joy and rejoicing. The harvest shall be shouted home. The ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

What joy among the angels of heaven at the Savior's birth, in prospect of the joy of shouting home this harvest of God's redeemed ones—at the prodigals return; what joy—to the heart of the convert what joy—to the church of Christ what joy—to the minister of Christ, to God, and to angels, what joy!

May all who sow the precious seed, so sow in tears, and reap thus in joy. [Christian Intelligencer.

How I would Preach if I could.—"I am tormented," said Robert Hall, "with the desire of writing better than I can." I am tormented, say I, with the desire of preaching better than I can. But I have no wish for fine, pretty sermons. Prettiness is well enough when it is in its place. I like to see a pretty child, a pretty flower; but in sermons prettiness is out of place. To my ear it would be any thing but commendation, should it be said to me, "You have given us a pretty sermon." If I were put upon trial for my life, and my advocate should amuse the jury with tropes and figures, to bury his argument beneath a profusion of the flowers of his rhetoric, I would say to him, "But, man, you care more for your vanity than for my hanging. Put yourself in my place—speak in view of the gallows, and you will tell your story plainly and earnestly." I have no objection to a lady winding a sword with ribbons, and studding it with roses, when she presents it to her hero lover; but in the day of battle he will tear away the ornaments, and use a naked edge on the enemy.

Preparation for Death.—After celebrating the holy supper, Christ retired into the garden to prepare himself, with greater solemnity, for his approaching death. Hence we learn, that whenever we have a prospect of our change at hand, we should not content ourselves with habitual preparation, but use a more solemn, distinct, and actual preparation for it. Our Lord, no doubt, was always in readiness for that which he knew was the great end of his incarnation; and yet, on the night before his sufferings, he retires into the garden to prepare himself for that hour. We should always so live as to be fit to die; because every hour we live some steps towards the grave. Every thought, every word, is a sand running from the glass of time.

If God gives us warning by old age, or a dangerous sickness, or a languishing body, or by any other method, that we shall shortly leave this world, solemn and actual preparation is fit and necessary. If God tell any of you, by a bodily sickness, that your change is near; if the decays and infirmities of old age tell you that you have not long to live; that it is high time to set your hearts and your houses in order, you ought solemnly to do so. You that have one foot in the grave, forget not this, lest you be called away before you are ready. But you that have served the Lord from your youth, and have the comfortable review of your past sincerity, in walking with God, you may rejoice upon any such summons, that your race is almost run; your warfare will shortly be accomplished; you have but a few steps more of your pilgrimage to make, a few temptations more to resist, a very little time longer of trial and conflict, before you shall receive the end of your faith and hope, and be forever with the Lord. Should you not, then, with such a warning, stir up the grace of God, quicken holy desires, strengthen faith, and exercise it upon the invisible world, and solemnly resign yourselves into the arms of the Redeemer? [Shower.

EXAMPLES OF BIBLE READING.

Many of the anecdotes compressed within the following paragraph, it is easy to verify; and every reader will acknowledge the value of the lessons which they are intended to teach. Remarkable as some of them are, not one approaches what is related and earnestly believed in the East, of a famous Mohamodan, namely, that during his confinement in the prison of Bagdad, where he died, he read over the Koran seven thousand times!

That we may see, says Dr. Plumer, what can be done in becoming acquainted with the Bible, let us look at a few facts. Eusebius tells of one who had his eyes burnt out in the Diocletian persecution, and who repeated in a public assembly the very words of Scripture with as much accuracy as if he had been reading them. Jerome says of Nepotian, that by reading and meditation, he had made his soul a library of Christ. Theodulus the younger was so familiar with the word of God that he made it a subject of conversation with the old bishops, as if he had been one of them. Augustine says that after his conversion, he ceased to relish even Cicero, his former favorite author, and that the Scriptures were his pure delight. Tertullian spent much of his time in reading the Scriptures, and committed large parts of it to memory. Beza learned all Paul's Epistles in Greek so thoroughly, that when he was eighty years old he could repeat them in that language. Cranmer is said to have been able to repeat the New Testament from memory. Luther was one of the most indefatigable students of the Bible that the world has ever seen. Ridley said, "The walls and trees of my orchard could they speak, would bear witness that there I learnt by heart almost all the Epistles," of which study, although in time a greater part was lost, yet the sweet savor thereof, I trust, I shall carry with me to heaven." Sir John Hartop, a man of many cares, made the book of God so much his study, that it lay before him night and day. A French nobleman used to read three chapters of the Bible every day on his bended knees, with his head uncovered. Joshua Barnes is said to have read a small pocket Bible one hundred and twenty times over. Roger Cotton read the whole Bible through twelve times a year. William Romaln studied nothing but the Bible for the last thirty or forty years of his life. John Boyse, one of the translators of our Bible, had read all the Scriptures before he was five years old; his mother read them through twelve times. I have read of more than one, of whom it was said, that if the Bible had been lost, the whole might have been recovered from their memories. In short, was there ever an eminent christian who was not remarkable in his study of the Scripture as he had opportunity?

Various Degrees of Future Glory.—Perhaps there is nothing more dangerous, as there is nothing more lulling and stupifying than low and relaxed notions of Christian holiness; than the supposition, that what difference may exist among members of society here, there will be none hereafter; that, however halting and hesitating their pace along the course may be, we shall all get together at the goal, and receive the same or a similar prize. Such is the [illegible] ness imagined to be, that, by a mystic process it expands the intellect of each, till all are alike capacious, all then filled to the brim and running over, that we shall all be happy, and all as happy as we can be.

Thus, by a golden spell, a kind of dream charm, the enemy of all righteousness chants many, and leads them to the waters of Lethe. However fatal this delusion, wide its spread, it cannot be owing to [illegible] tive information furnished by the Bible, for it appears to me as if the all-conscious Spirit had foreseen the error, and used the means of prevention. For in clearer from the divine oracles than the existence of different degrees of glory, we labor not we shall have [illegible] that our reward will be according to our works; that we shall reflect the divine image, and that our enjoyment hereafter will be precisely as our finishing here; that he who [illegible] sunters away, or ill improves the talent, will have less part unto eternal life! I feel, in saying this, I condemn myself; but truth must and will prevail. All the efforts of satan and of sin can no more hide it, than I can eclipse the sun by my hand, or stop the whirl of the earth by a word. However late, I trust that I am coming to my right mind. NEW ORLEANS:

Saturday Morning, November 6.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The preachers of the Alabama Conference, on their arrival at Marion, will call at the Methodist Church.

Brethren expecting to be accompanied by their wives, will be kind enough to give me information of it, so that suitable provision may be made for their comfort.

PHIL. P. NEELY.

Marion, Ala., October 25.

[From our last week's edition.]

REDUCTION OF SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE has, from its beginning, been the cheapest weekly paper issued from this city. It is proposed now to make it the cheapest in the Church, South. On and after the 1st November the subscription price will be ONE DOLLAR AND A HALF per annum.

CARRYING OUT OUR PRINCIPLES.

No opportunity has been omitted by us of showing the utmost cheapness practicable in Church literature—low prices and large circulation. We now set the example in the newspaper department. If others follow, it will be matter of no small satisfaction to have originated the movement. In any event, we hope to succeed, and by our success to establish a principle that may have an important and general application.

THE EXPERIMENT.

It is. A Methodist paper in New Orleans at Boston and Cincinnati prices is an experiment; and, to be candid, we have hesitated over it. The former price, and nothing less, was deemed necessary in the beginning, and our patrons have stood up to it right steadily advancing our circulation. We have now gained a point at which we are enabled to make a venture in so good a cause. Much is involved in it besides the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

CHANCES OF SUCCESS.

Why not succeed! A survey of the whole field and the analogies of the case are encouraging. Railroad travelers double as the rates of fare fall off 100 per cent. The Post-Office has in every instance been compensated by a corresponding increase of correspondence and receipts. And will not subscribers be forthcoming to a cheap paper, in order to the steadily sustaining numbers?

MORAL CONSIDERATIONS.

But these considerations are secondary. We put them on this score only this far; that the paper may pay its way. The ends, the only ones, for which this paper was established and will be continued, are higher and holier. They are those legitimately pertaining to that important, indispensable Christian auxiliary of this age—the RELIGIOUS PRESS. These ends are promoted by the cheapening. An increased circulation doubles and trebles its moral power. The same principle makes "ten more" talents instead of five. The poor, the indifferent, the prejudiced are reached, enlightened and influenced upon great moral issues, who otherwise would be none the better for the existence of the religious press.

TERMS DISTINCTLY.

All new subscribers, on and after November 1, (next Monday,) and all old ones whose subscriptions are renewed then, will be charged $1 50, STRICTLY IN ADVANCE.

OLD BOOKS.

New ones will be opened, and we desire to settle up the old immediately. Former rules will, in some instances, for peculiar reasons, which can not hereafter exist,) so far depart from, that several subscribers have fallen into arrears. This has occurred mostly in the renewal of subscriptions for the second year. Such are requested to hand the amount to their preacher, or, in his absence, remit it to us, through the Post Office. To the credit of the Post Office we say it, that, during nearly two years, nearly all our receipts have come through it, and not a dollar has, to our knowledge, been miscarried or lost. We shall have to be called on. Forward it. We are willing to throw away these old books, with credit for the name upon them.

PLAN OF THE PAPER.

No efforts will be abated to maintain its religious fulness as a family and religious paper. Besides religious and literary intelligence, the general intelligence department will be kept up, containing the latest foreign and domestic news, Germany, full telegraph items, and reports of the markets, made up to the day of publication. The Advocate is issued same day with the weekly secular papers of the city.

CONFERENCES—RESOLUTIONS.

A large and hearty co-operation is needed to not go on without it. The Church owning and controlling the N. O. Christian Advocate, passed resolutions, at their last sessions, that each member would do his best to obtain twenty subscribers for the year. The time is far spent, but, at the rates, all may fulfil that resolution. The number may be got in a single congregation, or picked up on the way to Conference. We expect soon to see these brethren face to face, and find that they have done all they promised, and more. And not from these only, but others who have heretofore upheld and encouraged us, we look for a substantial sympathy and material aid, that will carry the subscription triumphantly through.

Tous les habitans sont invites d'y assister.

Pointe Coupee, 22 Octobre, 1852.

The enemies of our Lord wrote over his cross an accusation in three languages—Latin, Greek and Hebrew. The despisers of his holy day alike crucify him afresh under a polyglottal announcement. It is here printed in French and English.

If the "orator of the day" forwarded the invitation, we take this occasion to make acknowledgement. Our principles, however, and our engagements le dimanche, 24 Octobre, prevented attendance.

What the politics of this Mr. Gayarre are, we know not; only to the mortification of every moral citizen of Louisiana let it be known he is Secretary of the State of Louisiana. A fine conservator, truly, of the good character of the State and keeper of its seals is this "L'Honorable Ch. Gayarre"!

If he is a Whig his Sunday speech did not save the election: if a Democrat, it was not needed. So this placarded Sabbath-work was without result as it was without apology.

Where and in what age are we living? Can such things be tolerated without rebuke by a people not yet prepared to say "there is no God." A Secretary of the State of Louisiana, in 1852, advertising a political meeting at a Court House for the Sabbath! Is this a State document? We say again, we know not Mr. Gayarre's politics, neither does it concern us to know. But if he is a Whig there are better Whigs: if a Democrat there are better Democrats. And for the character of the good State of Louisiana those "better" should be its office-holders.

We do not require that every official should sign the 39 articles, or fast twice a week; but it may be required that those who are upheld by a constituency, most of whom respect the institutions of christianity, and many of whom believe them essential to our political and social well-being, should not thus outrage christain law and propriety.

The name sounds French. He may labor under the prejudices of National education. But we cannot give up the Sabbath yet. The example of France is rather uninviting on this point. Nor can we, in doing our duty as citizens, give the prestige of L'honorable to a man that boldly counsels its desecration. Whig or Democrat, he could not get our vote.

We hold, that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." That is a board in our platform. It will endure; it will uphold the State when every other shall have rotted out. The nation cannot prosper that God opposes. Such encroachments upon institutions that are the bulwarks of public morality, and have ever been acknowledged by the wise and good as the conservators of peace, happiness and prosperity, should be jealously watched and pointedly rebuked.

10,000 SUBSCRIBERS.

At its present price, the friends and patrons of the New Orleans Christian Advocate may look for this number without being counted sanguine. What member is too poor to take a Church paper at that price? Who that has any interest, business or trade with the world, but would give that price for a weekly paper from the great emporium of the South? The PRICE CURRENT alone is worth it.

We hope, therefore, the Agents of the paper will not confine their applications to the members of the Church only. Few out of the Church but will find it to their interests to subscribe, when it is once presented to them.

But there is the rub—making applications. What avails it that there is a Church paper, and a cheap one, unless it is brought before the people? It cannot find its way out into the world, no matter what be its merits, but in this way. If we had access to the people through the towns, villages, and country, we would do this; but this we cannot do while at this post, and laboring here. We must divide the work with our brethren and friends. If they will do their part, we shall still try to do ours by the paper, and let the world and the Church have the benefit. Bring it before the people, privately and publicly; let its terms and nature be made known, and there is no doubt that in a brief time, every family will be visited by a weekly periodical, heralding our common christianity, and enforcing and defending our own denominational and doctrinal peculiarities. And are not the advantages accruing from such a diffusion and prevalence of our religious press sufficient to make it a matter of conscience to extend its circulation?

May we not expect to carry our list of subscribers up to 5,000, by or before January? We shall then report progress, and talk together about the next 5,000.

Already we are receiving letters expressing great surprise and satisfaction at the new subscription price; but the satisfaction is accompanied with some grains of doubt—"Can the paper be sustained? Yes—if it has the right sort of friends.

N. O. BAPTIST CHRONICLE.—A neat copy of this paper has been laid on our table, bearing every mark of editorial and typographical excellence. It is to be issued fortnightly.

METHODIST PRESS.

GEN. CASS ON TOTAL ABSTINENCE.—The editor of the Philadelphia Christian Advocate notes with joy the progress of Temperance in the West. To be sure, something ought to be doing in that region, whence the streams of rectified whiskey issue. The great men and the small men are enlisted in this work and working side by side, heartily. The time cannot be far when the existence of "license laws" will be regarded and reprobated as one of the most glaring defects of our civilization. Our contemporary of Philadelphia refers to statements of several correspondents, one of whom, hailing from a country town, says:

"This is quite a moral place: there is very little rowdying going on. And the reason is very obvious; there is no public house in the place at which liquor is sold. There is indeed, one old hard case that sells on the sly at his own house; but the temperance men have now proof of it, having converted a drunkard, and are about to arraign him for selling without license. I went to Cassapolis, Cass co., to a grand democratic mass meeting and county fair, at which General Cass was to preside. Gen. Cass and Governor McClennand, the Governor of State, spoke. Gen. Cass said, for the benefit of the young men present, 'that he had passed the time allotted by the Psalmist for man's earthly existence, three score years and ten, yet he had never touched a drop of ardent spirits in his life, and to his total abstinence he imputed his strength and vigor at his time of life.' And our friend says, "his looks verified his assertion. He spoke for two hours in the sun, from a wagon, 'bareheaded.'"

THE SAME SUBJECT.—Zion's Herald has a strenuous editorial in support of the Liquor Law. After answering objections, real and captious, the editor thus points out the duty of every religious man and good citizen in relation to it:

Such is the liquor law. It stands built on the assumption that the liquor traffic is a scourge to society—a nuisance necessary to be abated. In prohibiting it, it exercises nothing more than a right inherent in society. In its provisions, it violates no single right of the man, or of the citizen. It is stringent only so far as is necessary for the accomplishment of its object. Its aim is lofty; its spirit benevolent: its influence blessed beyond comparison. Maine, glorious Maine, has given it more than a year of trial; and her people have already grown jubilant under its auspices. Massachusetts and Rhode Island furnish innumerable proofs of its delightful power to bless society. What then shall be done with it? The entire army of spirit-dealers, sustained by a wine-loving aristocracy, and by a multitude of the slaves of the still, are seeking to procure its repeal. They would treat it as Ephorus did the heptachord of Phrynis, the poet. Being of an inventive genius, the poet had invented two new strings for his instrument; but Ephorus rudely cut them without stopping to inquire whether they added to the harmony and perfection of the music or otherwise. With equal disregard for its influence, these men would destroy our law. Money is expended unsparingly for this purpose. The press is used to the extent of its influence. Political men are tampered with on every side. Shall they succeed? Shall they be permitted to triumph because of the apathy of better men? Nay, it must not be so. Great questions are involved in the fate of this law. Sustain it, and trade will flourish; crime will diminish; pauperism will almost cease; public morality will be promoted; social refinement and happiness will advance; public health will be recuperated; life lengthened. But let it be repealed, and through the floodgates of the traffic a tide of unutterable woe will roll over the State, sweeping before it the good and beautiful, and overflowing unnumbered hearth sides with sorrow.

What, then will the render do, we ask? We rend his heart. He will give the law his influence. He will speak for it. He will urge his friends to speak for it, saying with the poet,

"If we have whispered truth,
Whisper no longer:
But speak as the thunder doth,
Sterner and stronger."

He will vote for it, treating the bands of political partizanship, if they would bind him in unholy fellowship to an enemy of the law, as Sampson did the wythes of the Philistines—tear them resolutely asunder—scorn them—despise them, and vote for an undoubted friend of the law. Personal interest, the claims of family, the welfare of society, the mands of religion, all imperiously require such a vote at the hand of every good citizen; and woe to to that man, who, to please his political friends, deposits a vote for a doubtful candidate. The responsibility of such a vote, we would not dare to meet. Nor will the reader. But by speech and vote he will stand by the law, and use it as Aaron did the censer of fire, when he stood between the living and the dead, and stayed the plague among the people; for what that censer of fire was to the Jewish plague, so is this law to the modern curse of Intemperance.

MORE PREDICTIONS.—The Banner of the Cross (Episcopal Church) has been prophesying. It strengthens its predictions by quoting from its Church Review. Among other things quoted with approbation, is this:

Yet the most careless observer cannot but see that the peculiar 'mission' of Methodism is forever at an end. Their houses of worship, once the speaking type of professed humility and lowliness of mind are now graced by the highest steeples and largest bells, and are decked out in all the finery of the upholsterer and the artist; and no congregations are more gaily and gaudily dressed, or seem to be yielding more to the spirit of the world.

As far as the above paragraph indicates among us a spirit of worldliness and not liberality we are sorry; as sorry as our Episcopal friends can possibly be: but it is downright amusing for them to be shaking their heads solemnly at such things and setting them down as signs of declension! On this, the Richmond Advocate thus remarks:

The Church, par excellence, predicts its gradual dismemberment and certain extinction; and what can we say against that? Its existence is "accidental," but its destruction is certain sure, as the old ladies say. Well, if God so order it we are content!

But alas, for its continuance, Methodism is now graced by the highest steeples and largest bells, and decked out in all the finery of the upholsterer and the artist." Therefore its end draweth nigh! Very logical, truly! These things are outward signs of grace to others, but they are proofs of sin, and harbingers of ruin to methodism! Very—likely we are growing wordly; but what business has a worldly-minded churchman to be throwing stones at us! Has he a divine right to steeples, bells and upholstery! "But," says this sagacious critic, "the soul and spirit of old-fashioned Wesleyan Methodism has died out." Don't you believe a word of such trumpery stuff, Mr. Bunner of the Cross! Step into the nearest Methodist Church, on next Sunday, and "learn your folly's confutation," and the doom of your pretension to the prophetic spirit. Perhaps, if you would do this now and then, it would lessen your asperities against your Methodist brethren; and it might possibly lead you to suspect that you are actuated by the spirit of fear, rather than the spirit of love, in your evil speaking against a Church that sets you an example of zeal to save those for whom Christ died that it were better to follow than to traduce.

FUNERAL SERMONS.—The Buffalo Advocate has the following remarks on this subject which it were well to take heed to, not only in sermons but obituaries. Eulogy here if not clearly just is extremely dangerous:

Funeral sermons lower the standard of morality. The ministers who preach many sermons of this kind generally make it a point to preach every subject safe to heaven, and often when the congregation must know that there were no fruits of piety in the life. A single good desire expressed by a dying one is sufficient in the hands of the funeral orator eulogist to open heaven to the departed. The conclusion is that if such a life will so infallibly end in heaven, I am safe enough as I am, and the sinner is left secure in sin, as the effect of the sermon.

YOUNG PREACHERS AND LADIES.—There is a pleasing partiality among all classes and sexes to the "young preacher." Especially so if he conduct himself with such sobriety, prudence, meekness and purity that no one can "despise his youth." They are said to be popular with the ladies, too. But strange and sad it is that so many injure their usefulness as preachers, in the course of getting wives. Even elders are sometimes at fault: and so the ministry is blamed.

Paying false attentions; making hollow professions; committing oneself by fair implication if not direct avowal and then "backing out," as it is called; making proposals of marriage under striking incongruities of time, place, person and circumstances, playing the lover at the expense of the dignity of the minister—these things have forever damaged reputations otherwise fair, crippled usefulness, and in some cases broken up congregations. The Church may well fear when "Our pastor is in search of a wife," and pray that that nice affair may be begun and consummated without "offense."

Seeing these things are so, we know of no praise too good for the "young preacher" who has borne himself with discretion; passed the crisis, if you please, and got married; and all with good report.

We have fallen into these remarks by reading in the St. Louis Advocate, an article, in which the editor gives the reasons of the favor with which young preachers are regarded and some good advice. The reasons are good and true. There is in them a tenderness, a sacredness appealing strongly to the noble heart and mind and guarding against abuse:

It is to be presumed that young preachers are to be considered as one of those classes of suitors who are apt to be peculiarly popular with the female sex. And it would be a great reflection on their judgment and taste if it were not so. For, in the case of young preachers, there is all that pledge of piety, virtue, conjugal fidelity, kindness, and general respectability of character, that official duty can give. It is not strange, then, that many young ladies of enlightened minds and virtuous sentiments, should manifest a preference, other things being equal, to promising young preachers. When a preacher pays attentions to a young lady, which have the appearance of being particular, they are apt to go for much more than they are attentions would, if paid by a secular man, or even a private member of the church. The non-professor, it is understood, may, perhaps, have in view, in such attentions, his own present amusement only. But, the fair presumption is, that the minister of Jesus christ has too much honor, integrity, and purity of principle, to stoop to the dishonorable and infamous work of trifling with the affections of an unsuspecting female acquaintance. An equal degree of attention from him, therefore, will be apt to be considered as meaning more than from a person of merely secular profession. And his whole department should justify this presumption in favor of ministerial character. While the unmarried preacher should treat every female with whom he may become acquainted, and who may be entitled to such treatment, with respect and due attention, he should carefully guard against everything like particular attentions, unless he has serious thoughts of seeking a matrimonial alliance.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.—Another wonder of the telegraph! The result of the election for President and Vice President throughout the Union was known in our city six hours after the polls closed. Messrs Pierce and King have been elected by a large majority. The returns will be complete by next week, when it is likely we shall give them.

MIND YOUR CONSTRUCTION.—A heavy law suit is between Dr. Parker, a Presbyterian preacher of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Stowe, of the celebrated abolition fiction "Uncle Tom's Cabin." The material difference between them grew out of the following sentences. Dr. P. on a certain occasion very sensibly and correctly said:

"What then are the evils inseparable from slavery? There is not one that is not equally inseparable from depraved human nature in other lawful relations."

Mrs. Stowe quotes him, in her book, as saying—

"Slavery has no evils, but such as are inseparable from any other relation in social and domestic life."

Mrs. S. refusing to retract, Dr. P. sues her for a libel—damages set at $20,000.

NEW BOOK STORE.—Attention is called to Mr. Flemming's advertisement of his new book store, in Fourth District. He has enlarged his premises and taken a very eligible location. We are glad that our friends in that portion of the city have such an excellent store convenient to them. Mr. F. will promptly fill orders from the country.

FROM HAVANA.—A dispatch from the Balize reports the arrival of the steamer Crescent City from New York via Havana. She was permitted to land her mails and passengers, but notified that they could not land in future. Purser Smith was not on board.

The aggregate wealth of the United States amounts to $12,000,000,000, and the population is 24,000,000 of souls. The wealth divided by the population gives $500 to each person, young and old.

UNSTEADY CORNER STONE.

ATTEMPTED FLIGHT OF THE POPE.—The following extraordinary story is told in the Official Gazette of Savoy:

"According to a letter from Genoa, Pius IX had actually attempted to make his escape from Porto D'Anzio, and was only prevented from effecting his design by the impossibility of getting out of the reach of Capt. Oliver's steamer, which accompanied him under the pretext of showing him respect. On the 14th, Gen. Cotte, the Marquis de Turgot, and M. Rayneval had waited upon the Pope at Castle Gandolfo, for the purpose of persuading the Holy Father to proceed to Paris in order to crown Prince Louis Napoleon. The timid counsellors of the Pope at once advised him to take flight, as he had done in the winter of 1848-9. With his usual weakness, Pius IX. on the following day, directed his journey to Porto D'Anzio, where a pontifical steamer was in readiness to convey him to Naples.

"But at Porto D'Anzio it appeared that another steamer, which plies on the Tiber for the service of the French division, and is commanded by Capt. Oliver, had accompanied the pontifical one. How came this steamer, which ought to have stayed at Fiumicino, its usual station, to be at Porto D'Anzio? The Pope and his suite embarked under pretence of taking a mere pleasure trip, but the French steamer insisted upon accompanying the Holy Father as escort of honor. Hopes were entertained that she might be outstripped, so as to reach Gaeta or Naples in safety; but Capt. Oliver stuck close to the pontifical steamer, so that the idea of flight was given up. The Prince President, at Lyons, alludes to religious consecration by the chief of Christianity. It may, therefore, very well be that Gen. Cotte had received such a mission, and that the counsellors of the Pope had advised him to take to flight."

It is by no means surprising that His Holiness desired to avoid the very pressing invitation of the French President. He had doubtless in his memory the result of a similar honor conferred by the ancestor of Louis Napoleon upon his predecessor, the worthy Pius VI. He was "invited," it will be remembered, to Paris, to aid in the coronation of the Emperor, and Napoleon was so pleased with his company, that he detained him for upwards of two years! The affairs of the Holy City are just now in so critical a condition, that Pio Nino might well fear to be absent for so long a period from his dominions, should the nephew of the uncle think proper to honor him with a similar extended hospitality.

NOTE FROM TENN. CONFERENCE.

Tennessee Conference just closed at Pulaski—very pleasant session. Bishops Soule and Andrews with us; both in tolerable health. The latter starts shortly for California. An interesting revival commenced during Conference, which is still in progress. We left some forty penitents at the altar.

Yours, truly, JOS. CROSS.

October 22, 1852.

[We learn by another note from a friend that Dr. Wadsworth, having resigned the Presidency of Lagrange College, was appointed to the McKendree charge, Nashville. Professor Hardy has been elected to the Presidency and was received into the Tennessee Conference.]

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Clinton, Miss. Conf.

Since the 20th of June last, it has been my great privilege to be at, and to the extent of my humble ability, to assist in a series of revival meetings. These have been held in this and adjoining counties, in connection with many of our brethren in the ministry and in the laity.

Since the day named, I have seen the goodness of God in the land of living—in converting and saving power, in an extraordinary manner. Yes, the Lord has visited us, and this day there are in our midst hundreds that are living happy witnesses that the Lord forgiveth iniquity, transgression and sin, and that he still looketh to the humble and contrite heart, and saveth those that put their trust in Him.

Never in all my history in the ministry, have I known as many marked and decided interpositions of the Divine power, as I have witnessed in the progress of this gracious and never-to-be-forgotten revival. INDIVIDUALS that had long been in the Church, without much if any comfort in religious duties have been "strengthened with might in the inner man," and have become "strong in the Lord and in the power of his might." BACKSLIDERS have been won back to their duty and privileges by the power of the Cross. God has graciously owned them and healed all their backslidings. SINNERS, by many scores, some of whom had stood well nigh "all the day idle," have been drawn to God by the power of the Gospel, and have believed to the saving of their souls," and are rejoicing in God their Saviour. CHURCHES that had grown cold and almost dead, have been revived, and built up, and are now bearing the peacable fruits of righteousness in the members.

"The lines have fallen to us in pleasant places," and "the Lord has given us a goodly heritage." This is by far the most favored year of my Christian history—of my Christian ministry. Never before have I been more happily associated with dear brethren in these delightful "labors of love." Never before have I known brethren more fully to "keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace." Never did brethren more fully heed the Apostle's injunction, "In honor prefering one another."

We are laboring to make this a revival of all the benefits of our holy religion, and so far as our beloved Methodism is charged with the training of the converts, we are training them in all the doctrine and usages of the Church of their choice. This we regard as most important, and without strict attention just here, we hazard the loss of much that we secure in those gracious revival influences.

We have chronicled a number of thrilling incidents connected with these revivals, that we may forward you soon, which we doubt not will be read with deep interest by all the readers of the Advocate.

October, 1852. O. L. NASH.

Jones' Valley Ct., Ala. Conf.

The head of the Church is with us on this work. I commenced a two days' meeting at Palmetto—a new place, on Tuesday, and continued until the following Monday. The result of this meeting was 17 conversions, (whites,) and the same added to the Church. Our camp-meeting came off on the 23d of September, at Shiloh, and as it was our 4th Quarterly Conference, we had the services of our much esteemed P. E., Thos. J. Koger. The result of this camp-meeting was about 55 conversions, (whites) and 14 added to the Church.

I commenced a third meeting in Elyton, on Sabbath the 10th of October, which continued nine days, closing under a good influence. I had in connection with me in the ministration of the Word of Life, Brothers B. Tarrant and F. Grnee. Brother Grnee, a promising young man, will enter the Itinerant field the ensuing Conference. The result of our meeting was 14 whites converted, some who had backslid were reclaimed and made to rejoice in God their Saviour. This meeting was signalized with the mighty displays of the power of God. Fourteen whites and eight colored were added to the Church.

We are not altogether behind the times in the Missionary cause: we have raised by subscription and cash about $70—expect to raise about $100.

Allow me to say before I close this communication, that I never was among a more kind people in all my ministerial labors. The Lord be with the good people on this circuit, and send them a more efficient minister the ensuing year.

We have another camp-meeting appointed to commence next Thursday night, at Pleasant Hill. The expectations of the people are high in reference to that time. Our prayer is that the Lord of Hosts may be with us. To God be all the glory for what he has done. Amen. WM. E. HOLLIDAY.

October 22, 1852.

Amite Ct., Miss. Conf.

The Lord has been gracious to us recently on the Amite Circuit. We held a camp-meeting lately at Adams' camp-ground. It commenced Thursday, the 7th of October. There were but few people on the ground until Friday evening, multitudes came in from every direction. When the signal was given for preaching, we had a large congregation at the stand; from this time the congregations were large till Monday morning. The meeting broke up on Tuesday morning.

Our Presiding Elder was with us, and labored with his usual zeal and energy. That venerable and venerated servant of God, and minister of Jesus Christ, Brunnbas Pipkin, was with us in the spirit of his master, and preached with great profit to the multitudes present. Brother Green, from the Pearl River Circuit, was also with us, but not able to do much, in consequence of bad health. Brother Burnet, from the St. Helena Circuit, was also with us, and labored with zeal and energy. All the local preachers of the Circuit were there, and some local brethren from the other Circuits, seeming to feel a disposition to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. The Lord honored our labors with his presence, and souls were converted; and when asked to come to the altar for prayers, a great many presented themselves; and the consequence was, that not less, it is believed, than twenty-five persons were converted. Many back-sliders in heart, and some in life, were redeemed to the love and favor of God. About twenty-six persons joined the Church—twenty-two whites, and four colored. Upon the whole, our meeting was a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. In regard to order, there was but little to be excepted to within the limits of the ground; but it is matter of deep regret that much was done in the neighborhood that was very improper there, or elsewhere.

It would be impossible at this time to calculate the amount of good that will result to Amite Circuit from the camp-meeting. I have been round the Circuit since the meeting, and it seems that the moral aspect is greatly changed for the better. Many deeply convicted for sin at that meeting, will be converted, and will join some branch of the Christian Church.

Religion is greatly in advance of what it was last winter in Amite Circuit. The membership have been stirred up, and a goodly number added to the Church, and soundly converted to God. The class-meetings are better attended; the class-leaders, to some extent, are aroused to a sense of the responsibilities that rest upon them, and I think that the Amite Circuit is likely to do better than it has done for several years.

October 31. J. MATTHEWS.

Paulding Ct. Miss. Conf.

The Lord has graciously revived his work on the Paulding Circuit, during the present quarter. Up to this time about sixty have united with the Church, on probation, and a goodly number have experienced justifying grace. Our Camp-meeting, which commenced on the 14th inst., and closed the following Tuesday, resulted in the reception of fifty probationers—thirty-three whites, and seventeen colored. The number of conversions I could not ascertain, but judge about twenty. This of itself is great for this place, where sin hath long "abounded, and the love of many—nearly all—waxed cold." Many who had "run well for a while," but in time of trial had well nigh cast away "the beginning of their confidence," were quickened by the energies of the Holy Ghost, and built up in their most holy faith.

The preachers shared largely in the blessings of the Gospel of the grace of God.

Yours fraternally,

Oct. 25. B. B. WHITTINGTON.

Holmesville Ct., Miss. Conf.

We have just closed our Fourth Quarterly Meeting, which continued three days, and thank God the result was good. Many sinners were convicted and twelve whites and five blacks came over upon the Lord's side. We were deprived, by sickness, of the labors of our beloved P. Elder, but we had Bros. Raiford, Winborn and Lewis, local preachers of our own Circuit, who preached with good effect. We also had some exhorters and other official members, who did us good service. P. E. G.

October 25.

Bastrop Ct., Texas Conf.

We closed an excellent Camp-meeting last week, at which about twenty souls were born from on high, and the membership greatly revived. Ten joined the Church, making in all one hundred and twenty-three additions in this Circuit this year.

LIFE AND EXISTENCE.—The mere lapse of years is not life. To eat and drink and sleep—to be exposed to darkness and the light—to pace round in the mill of habit, and turn thought into an implement of trade—this is not life. In all this, but a poor fraction of the consciousness of humanity is awakened, and the ennobling still slumber which make it worth while to be. Knowledge, truth, love, beauty, goodness, faith, alone can give vitality to the mechanism of existence. The laugh of mirth that vibrates through the heart, the tears that freshen the dry wastes within, the music that brings childhood back, the prayer that culls the future near, the doubt which makes us meditate, the death which startles us with mystery, the hardship which forces us to struggle, the anxiety that ends in trust, are the true nourishment of our natural being. DOMESTIC MISSION.

Plymouth, Miss., Ala. Conf.

To the Rev. E. W. SEHON, D. D., Secretary of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South:

DEAR BROTHER—Before this reaches you I shall have commenced my last round on this mission for this year. In addition to the 19 members reported last year, there have been thirty accessions, which makes the whole membership, (after deducting five, who have gone to the spirit land,) 187. All of these, however, are not satisfied with their experience; but as far as I can learn, they are faithfully seeking God.

I would remark, that the above increase is not all of the fruits of my toil; there are forty or fifty more who have professed faith in Christ, and joined the Baptist Church, they being under the influence of old Baptist leaders who live on the plantations, and think that nothing but going into and under the water, will ever save them. Many of them are under the control of "Old Reuben" (well known to some of the readers of the Advocate,) as far as their training in reference to baptism is concerned. The burden of assertion that John baptized in Jordan has more weight with them than any argument that I can produce on the subject.

The condition of the mission may be regarded as being good. There are sixteen appointments, twelve of which have to be supplied on the Sabbath. There is more or less religious influence felt and enjoyed at every appointment. At some, they are very religious; at others, there are difficulties. In fact, the work cannot be accomplished without difficulty. The preacher that undertakes it, should be a man of iron constitution, and with a nerve that will repel all discouragements. I have had perhaps as few as any of my brethren engaged in the like work, and I believe I have had the prayers and sympathies of the pious, both among the owners and overseers; while the unconverted, of both, have treated me with the utmost kindness. I have frequently witnessed the tears of the overseer and master, with their families, while they rejoiced in the hope of the same blessed immortality.

On one occasion, while preaching, the Lord made the Word powerful in the awakening of the overseer; he began crying for mercy with all his soul. It was enough to melt the most obdurate heart, to see the silver grey-headed servants, with those who were younger in years, weeping around him, and crying "for mercy, praying, "Lord bless my master overseer." And when the Lord did bless him, I never saw a greater manifestation of joy.

I have had 250 children under regular catechetical instruction; some of them are very smart, and promise to do well. I have but little doubt, if they are properly attended to, they will be far superior to the present generation of negroes; and in eternity, they will shine as stars in the crown of our rejoicing.

Suffer me to say, in conclusion, that I have done the very best that I could. I have often labored under great pain, while trying to preach the third and fourth time on Sabbath; but the Lord has helped me; and I have been buoyed up by the glorious reward promised to the faithful. If I have failed to do what was expected of me, I can only say, "I have done the best I could," and my record is on high, and that I am willing so far as that part of my work is concerned, to meet my Judge.

In conclusion, I hope the mission will be kept up. I think the planters will pay about two hundred dollars, as they paid the amount last year. They ought to wake up on this subject, and not let this Missionary Society be at expense to support this mission. They are the beneficiaries, and they are able, and ought to pay for it. It does not seem right—nay, it is wrong to take the funds of the Missionary Society to support missionaries to the colored people, when their owners are as able and wealthy as the patrons on this mission are. I sincerely hope that there will be an increased interest manifested on the part of the owners. My brethren and friends, the day will come, when, in "the fair fields of Eden," you will meet those you have cared for in this life, and master and servant join in united praises to God and the Lamb forever.

LANDON J. SEHORN.

Columbus, October 28, 1852.

A CLERGYMAN REBUKED.—Last Sabbath there occurred rather a curious scene in the parish church of Campsie. It appears that the Rev. Mr. Park, of Cadder, proceeded to the pulpit to officiate for the Rev. Thomas Monro, the minister of the parish. Mr. Park had gone through the usual routine of singing, prayer, &c., and had just given out his text, and was commencing his discourse, when a woman got up, and at the top of her voice, exclaimed, "Gae hame wi' ye, sir, an' learn your lesson—(a slight pause)—gae hame, I say, an' learn your sermon afore ye come here. We're nae accustomed wi' a man readin' a sermon tae us—we can read ane at hame oursel'es. Gae hame,—(louder than before, accompanied by a stamp of her foot) gae hame, an' learn your lesson, like a sensible boy—gae hame, sir." She went on in this strain for some time; and it is said Mr. Park looked unutterable things. Mr. Monro is an off-hand preacher, seldom using even notes in the pulpit; so there is little likelihood of his people relishing a sermon read with the preacher's (readers's it ought to be) finger at the place, as is the practice in some of the churches in this neighborhood, not even omitting Kirkintilloch. [Dumbarton Herald.

THE ERUPTION OF MOUNT ETNA.—A private letter of the 10th September announces that the lava of Etna had taken another direction, and is fast approaching Mile the inhabitants of which, to save the wood, are cutting down their chesnut trees, and of course emptying their boxes. A counting vessel (the Mongibello) while lying at anchor near Catania, has been covered with sal ammoniac, the snow from the mountains. A specimen has been sent to Malta, and has been pronounced of the very best quality. The mountain has sent it forth in vast coulds.

GERMAN EMIGRANTS.—It was calculated in the early part of the year that the number of German emigrants who were passing through Hull, England, would average something like one thousand per month. Since January last, however, a lapse of only three quarters of a year, we believe that upwards of fifteen thousand have been brought over by the continental steamers, six thousand more than was estimated by the agents.

MR. W. S. O'BRIEN.—The Dublin Freeman publishes the following extract of a letter from Mr. O'Brien, in which that gentleman says:

"I am in good health, but my existence here is wearisome, flat, stale, and unprofitable; barren in regard of personal enjoyment—still more barren in regard of hope for the future. Nevertheless, I endure life with unmurmuring patience—content to wait for such changes in my condition as the progress of events, and the will of God, may evolve."

RANDOM THOUGHTS.

Bro. McTyeire—This has been a year of the outpouring of the divine spirit, and a glorious harvest of souls. Indeed, I do not remember a year of more extensive revival since my connexion with the Church, (fourteen years.) This is certainly great cause of thanksgiving to God; and this state of things should silence the cronkings of some, who think the mercy of God is clean gone from us—that the Methodist Church is on the wane—her glory departing. Furthermore, there is in all this the same evidence we have always boasted of, the divine approval, and the effectual working of our system. And in view of present prosperity and efficiency, since the necessity for change in any essential feature of Methodist economy? Has any congregational organization succeeded so well? Indeed, I question whether all the churches, of all the different denominations, have had such accessions to their numbers as has been realized in one Presiding Elder's district in the Mississippi Conference this year. I speak this not vauntingly, but merely as an argument in favor of our system.

Never have I known in my day such efforts to modify, and in some cases to destroy Methodism. But after all, there has been a ripple started upon the face of the waters. Calm, smooth and unruffled is the sea of our pleasure and spiritual communion.

In Georgia, the venerable Dr. Pierce and others have been sparring a little. He has been accused by some of his brethren, but is not guilty. And certainly, if such a man as his, since he entered the ministry, has given the soundness of a man's heart and mind upon all subjects pertaining to the economy of Methodism, we cannot think him disposed to innovate, or modify, in any way that would be detrimental to our beloved Zion.

Alabama, (your old Conference,) has been the theatre of some new "fantastic tricks," in the way of reform. No doubt the good Brethren who head this movement sincerely desire the prosperity of that best of all causes, the salvation of souls. And so long as they walk worthy their vocation as christians, they deserve, and ought to have, that charity shown them which christianity ever requires. But Congregational Methodism! This will never answer the purpose for which it was raised up this people. Methodism was called to supply a vacuum, or rather to do a work that no other Church had done, or even inclined to do. That work has been accomplished to a considerable extent, though not fully as yet. True, it has been carried at the expense of much expense and sacrifice. There has been mutual concession. Preachers and people have consented to yield some of their rights for the general good. Preachers waive the right to choose their field of labor, and the people their pastors. But during the present year, it seems to me that our Baptist brethren particularly have had their sympathies stirred in behalf of the poor, down-trodden Methodist laymen, beyond anything I have ever known before. Dr. Graves, of the "Tennessee Baptist," is writing to Bishop Soulo on the subject of Methodist polity. Mr. Waller, of the Western (Baptist) Recorder," avails himself of every opportunity to strike a blow at the aristocracy of Methodism—nay, its despotism. And almost every Baptist preacher we have met with this year has had some fault to find with Methodism. But has their system no objectionable features? Let him that is without sin cast the first stone. I have no disposition to interfere with, or complain of the affairs of others. By-the-bye, I learned one item of Church history at a Baptist Association the other day! I heard a leading member of the body say, in a public address, that "the Baptists numbered, in the United States, about one million and a half, and the Methodists only a million." "Mirabile dictu."

Amen. Yours, H. J. H.

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED, on the 13th Oct., at 6 o'clock P. M., by Rev. C. D. Oliver, JAMES A. HENRY, of Auburn, Ala., to Miss SUSAN J. OLIVER, of Montgomery.

MARRIED, on the 14th ult., by Rev. Dr. Manly, GEORGE W. BENARD, Professor of Mathematics, in the University of Ala., to Miss MARY W. COLLIER, eldest daughter of His Excellency Gov. Collier, all of Tuscaloosa, Alabama.

OBITUARY.

DIED, on the 12th inst., in his 22d year, ALFRED D. KING, son of Col. A. P. and Catharine Laens King.

For the last two years he resided in Bienville Parish, La., where he attached himself to the M. E. Church, South. Since his becoming a member in full connection, he has given ample satisfaction to his class-leaders and brethren of his devotion to God through Christ and a growth in grace.

He came to his death by attempting to swim his horse across a swollen stream, in which they became entangled, and he was drowned.

Doubtless he was in eternity before he had time to think of his danger, or utter an ejaculatory prayer. Though we had no dying word of consolation, yet his life and professions whisper "all is well." B. W. P.

DIED, at the age of 2 years 8 months, in Caddo Parish, La., NANCY JANE, daughter of Benjamin and Adeline M. Whitworth.

These parents but a brief while ago were called to part with a lovely little daughter at the "grave's dim portals." Again the same bitter cup "brimful and welling over," has been presented to their lips. Little "Nannie," the "light of their eyes," the "joy of their wounded hearts," has been suddenly snatched away to the "unseen invisible." She may not come to us, but we may go to her. Solaced by the cheering promise, we submissively yield our precious treasure—not to the ruthless destroyer—for he hath no more dominion over her—but unto the bosom of Him "who loved little children," and to the sweet companionship of those white-robed spirits of whose radiant home it hath been sung—

"Dreams cannot picture a world so fair
Sorrow and death may not enter there—
Time does not breathe on its fadeless bloom,
For beyond the world and beyond the tomb—
It is there—it is there."

Bereaved parents, bright by its side gleams another one of your "treasures in heaven." Both now are forever safe from sin's contaminating influence—for the chill mildew of disease, and the blighting touch of death shall tarnish their glorious beauty no more forever. "They are thine and mine, oh! Lord."

IMMIGRATION.—Among the papers read at the last sitting of the Academy of Sciences at Paris, was one by M. Dorvleart, the great nephew of the celebrated man of that name, on the improvement of the digestion of persons of weak stomachs by the use of the gastric juice taken from animals. A great deal has been said and written on this subject, but as yet we have very few, if any, proofs of the efficacy of the means as a general plan of treatment, although there may have been cases in which the gastric juice taken from the stomach of slaughtered domestic animals may have been used by man with temporary advantage. Nor does M. Dorvleart furnish any practical proofs of the correctness of his theory. He contents himself with discussion; but appears to have no doubt in his own mind that indigestion in the human stomach arises from the want of a sufficient quantity of gastric juice, and that if the deficiency were supplied from the sources of which he speaks, the digestion would be perfect. As this gastric juice, in its natural state, is of a taste and appearance which would be repulsive to most patients, M. Dorvleart has proposed that it shall be reduced to the state of powder, paste, etc., and mixed with the ailments. [Galignani.

CHARTER OF A TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—Parliament has granted a charter for the construction of a line of telegraph from Quebec to Detroit, 850 miles long, with branches 800 miles long extending to the main towns near the route. Poles for some 800 miles have already been put up, and over 400 miles of wire are finished, and the whole will be completed by spring. The line will cost about $250,000, and 1,000 business men have taken stock in it.

TELEGRAPHIC LINES CUT.—The Eastern telegraph lines leading from Boston to Halifax, were cut in several places, on the evening of the 24th ult., by parties interested in preventing the reception of the steamer Niagara's news in season for the morning papers.

including the amounts received at the two Precincts in the Fourth District, within the limits of the Parish of Jefferson; the entire sum contributed by the city will probably reach $1,200.

MASONIC CELEBRATION—Centenary Celebration of the Initiation of Geneo Washington.—This event was consummated Thursday, by the different Lodges of the Masonic Order, with due pomp and solemnity.

The members of the order assembled at their Hall on Baronne street, dressed in all the paraphernalia of the craft, where after forming in procession, accompanied by the Grand High Priest and officers of the Grand Chapter of Louisiana, the Right Worthy Grand Master, officers, and members of the Grand Lodge of Louisiana, Royal Arach Masons, Knights Templars, etc. etc. and headed by music, they marched to the Grand Hall of the Mechanics Institute, where the celebration took place.

There was present a full attendance of the public, and numerous ladies.

The ceremonies of the day commenced with a Masonic Ode, sung by amateurs in excellent voice, accompanied by the organ.

ODE.

When darkness brooded o'er the deep,
When nature lay enchained in sleep;
Or in sad slumber rolled:
'Twas by the word the day-star glowed,
And light and life together flowed,
Upon the blushing world.

CHORUS.

All Hiring struck their untuned lays,
And Echo first awoke in praise,
Ere the great Architect on high,
Had fixed in radiant Masonry,
The letter'd starlight.
Our craft, by wisdom's eye no less,
Had pass'ed the word—had sealed its sense,
Which Masons still unite.

CHORUS.

While the broad earth shall westward turn,
Our lamp of Truth shall lambent burn.
As that bright Arch still gleams our eyes,
And decorates the sounding skies;
The pledge of Heaven to Earth.
So may our Temple rise to bless
The widow and the fatherless,
And shelter wandering worth.

CHORUS.

As Hagar's prayer was heard on high,
The exile, here, shall cease to sigh.
The Corn and Oil we pour upon
The Mason's Hope, the Pious Stone:
Let brethren breathe the Amen.
Meek Charity attends, with Love;
While Wisdom, Strength and Beauty, prove
The pillars of our Fane.

CHORUS.

Bless Thou the work, our Master dread,
Who hath the earth's foundations laid.

A prayer was then made by the Rev Rob Whithall, Grand Chaplain, followed by an oration by the Rev. Bro H. C Thweatt which was heard with great advantage and listened to with undivided attention.

The Amateurs then sung the following

MASONIC ODE

Empires and kings have passed away,
Imo'd, by time's mine;
And towering cities have felt decay;
Since auld lang syne.

But Masonry, the lore its art,
With wisdom's ray divine;
Twas ever so, the Heavenly cries,
In auld lang syne.

Behold, the occidental chair
Proclaims the day's decline—
Hiram of Tyre was seated there,
In auld lang syne.

The South proclaims refreshment nigh,
High twelve's the time to dine;
And beauty decked the Southern sky,
In auld lang syne.

Yes, Masonry, whose temple here
Was built by hands divine,
Shall ever shine as bright and clear,
As auld lang syne.

Then, brethren, for the worthy three,
Let us a wreath entwine,
The three great heads of Masonry
In auld lang syne.

Remembering oft that worthy one,
With gratitude divine,
The Tyrian youth—the widow's son—
Of auld lang syne.

The ceremonies closed with a benediction, and the following hymn by the choir!

Hail! mysterious, glorious science,
Which to discord bids defiance,
Harmony alone reigns here.

Come let us sing to Him that raised us
From the rugged path that mazed us,
To the light that we revere.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The report of this institution for the week ending Saturday the 31st ult., is as follows:

Admissions	330
Discharged	353
Deaths	83
Patients remaining	946

Of the deaths 26 were of yellow fever, and 4 of cholera. We hear of no cases of yellow fever in private practice.

CELEBRATION OF ALL SAINTS DAY.—Monday all the cemeteries were decorated in commemoration of the festival of All Saints. The tombs were hung in the habiliments of mourning, and ornamented with garlands and festoons of flowers. Lights burned all day in front of the sepulchres, and the grounds were visited by thousands, both there to mourn some deceased relative, or to gratify curiosity. It was a novel scene—combining in one view individuals of every shade of coloring, and every variety of nationality. The ceremonies were prolonged to midnight.

Later from Havana.

By the steamer Black Warrior, which arrived at Mobile on Saturday night, we have received files of the Diario de la Marina to the 25th ult.

We do not find any items of news, of any interest. The Diario devotes a column and a half to Capt. Porter, the "mercenary captain," as it calls him, and the indignation meeting in New Orleans. The pursuit of "mercenary captain," which the Diario laboriously and frequently applies to Capt. Porter, seems to be used as an expression of great contempt. As a justification of such expressions, the Diario states that even Mr. Morland, the American Vice Consul, did not deign to answer Capt. P.'s letter to him.

The Diario says that the people of New Orleans are fond of meetings, and it does not wonder at a meeting, considering the representations made by Capt. Porter, but it is surprised that prominent citizens were engaged in it. Judge Larue is scored without mercy, for his remarks, and the editors of El Pelayo are held up as martyrs to American rowdyism. Mayor Crossman also comes in for a good share of abuse.

Later from Mexico.

By the brig Tehuantepec we have files of Mexican papers up to the 23d from Vera Cruz, and the 19th ult. from the city of Mexico. We find their contents translated in our contemporaries, the Evening Picayune and the Evening Bulletin, and from them we make up a summary:

EXTRA SESSION OF CONGRESS.—The extra session of Congress opened on the 15th ult., and General Arista delivered a long speech. The Government had rescinded the law of the press on the 13th in consequence, as the decree says, of the ascertained certainty that the members of Congress would attend the extra session, and that the Government could count on their co-operation to put an end to the agitations that embarrass the Republic.

A bill has been introduced in Congress to grant an amnesty to parties engaged in the Vera Cruz movement. Of this movement the Monitor says:

"Senators Salcinbre and Soto, commissioned by the State Government of Vera Cruz to confer with the Supreme Government in relation to the affairs of the State, yesterday began to hold interviews with the President and Ministers. It is probable that measures will be taken to allay the alarm in those places occupied by the insurgents, and it is to be hoped concessions will be made to the people."

On the 15th, three impeachment bills were presented in Congress, one against the Minister of Justice for having decreed the law of the press, one against Sandoval, chief clerk of the War Department, for having directed a correspondence to display the orders of the court in the affair of Señor Betancourt; and one against Senor Ramirez, ex-Minister of Foreign Affairs, for the dissolution of the Ayuntamiento.

The purposes for which the Congress has been rallied together are, to adopt measures for restoring order in those places where it has been disturbed, to give the help required by those States which are invaded by the savages, to carry on an effective and successful war against them, to adopt the most proper measures in regard to the contract which the government wishes to make for a road across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and the liberty of the press—together with some other measures of less moment.

STATE OF THE COUNTRY.—The Universal says: "The situation of the frontier States is daily more and more deplorable, and instead of undivided and efficacious assistance, they receive only a sterile compassion. The enthusiasm which some time since existed here in their favor has subsided. In fact, nothing is done, nothing is undertaken with resolution and energy to remove the horrors to which those States are a prey, and the efforts of a few good citizens, which they are not destroyed by the hopelessness of others, are ruined by opposition from those who should most support them."

The revolution in Vera Cruz is still raging. The insurgents had retreated from Orizaba on the 7th, but soon after returned, and were again soon driven back. In the engagement, the Governor's brother was killed, and many of his men wounded. 23 prisoners, and a considerable amount of provisions and ammunition. The Government troops lost 11 killed and 23 wounded, and among the latter three officers of the National Guard.

The insurgents retreated to Cordova. Guadalajara was temporarily quiet. Manuel Angulo, late Governor of the State, has been imprisoned.

In Tamaulipas Gov. Cardenas is likely to find a strong opposition.

In the State of Vera Cruz affairs look better for the government. The insurgents are repulsed at Orizaba.

The Supreme Government are preparing to take measures to establish tranquility there.

A movement at Morelia had been suppressed.

The Minister of War had issued a circular in which the State authorities are directed to arrest all military men who have not the necessary passports, and to proceed against them according to law, especially if there is any suspicion that they intend to join the insurgents.

THINGS IN THE CITY OF MEXICO.—The City of Mexico was in a confirmed state of alarm. The Universal of the 18th says:

Spies are making their harvest from the credulity and fear of the Government. Last night the roof of the prince was filled with all the munitions of war necessary to resist an attack; the sentinels were doubled, watches were set and all the preparations usual under the pressure of fear or danger were made. Useless precautions; every one laughs at these steps.

The Siglo of same day says:

Last night about half-past nine a rocket-bomb exploded in the Plaza de Armas, and alarmed the Government and the police. This will probably give rise to new arrests.

Many new papers of an ephemeral character have been started in the City of Mexico, with such titles as Asmodeus, the Jalisco Monkey, the Mexican, etc., all directed against the Government.

MISCELLANEOUS.—The following are the only miscellaneous items of any interest:

Bahelieh has proclaimed the plan of Guadalajara, with some additions.

Don Miguel Barbachan has been re-appointed Governor of Yucatan.

The Commission had not yet decided on the applications for the opening of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.—On the 13th, the President confirmed the patent giving to St. Conde de la Cortina the privilege of establishing a railroad from Mexico to San Angel, passing through Tacuyaba and Mixcoac.

A new line of stages is advertised from the city of Mexico to Tepic, on the Pacific. Stages leave Vera Cruz every day, and Mexico thrice a week. Fare from Vera Cruz to Mexico $35 from Mexico to Tepic $80. Time through, thirteen to fourteen days, including two for rest. Road said to be excellent, hotels abundant at $2 a day, meals 75 cents. A branch line will be run to San Blas as soon as the road is paired. Distance 20 leagues, fare $10.

TAMAULIPAS.—On the 1st of October, Gov. Pardeos took formal possession of the gubernatorial chair of Tamaulipas. The Tampico Commercio says that the trade of that place is almost entirely destroyed by the immense quantities of goods smuggled into the Northern States over the frontier. The Legislature of Tamaulipas has decreed:

"That no one shall be persecuted nor molested in the State in consequence of religious tenets."

Later from Texas.

By the arrival Wednesday of the steamship Louisiana, we have received dates from Galveston to the 29th ult., and our exchanges from the interior.

THE RIVERS.—A rise of eight feet in the Trinity was reported at Galveston. Corn was selling on the Trinity at thirty cents per bushel. In regard to the month of the Trinity, the Galveston News says:

We are informed that one of the two ware-houses now going up at the mouth of the Trinity is nearly completed. It will be remembered that then Chambers has already erected a wharf reaching from Anahuac channel to the head of the river, and it is upon this wharf that the buildings are going up. Boats can now land their cargoes upon one end of the wharf and receive it from the other end where it can soon be transferred by means of railway. The iron for the track is on expected, but it is so arranged that every accommodation will be afforded even before the iron is laid down. Thus the detention at the mouth of the river in low tides will in a great measure be avoided, and the exposure to which goods have heretofore been subject be prevented.

RED RIVER TRADE.—The Telegraph states that a few days ago a large shipment of goods were received at Hunston, for Shreveport, La., fully three hundred and fifty miles distant, and remarks:

"When the Red river road is completed, we will in part supply north-western Louisiana and south-western Arkansas."

RESIGNED.—Judge Evans has resigned the office of Judge of the 35th Judicial District. The resignation will take effect as soon as his successor can be elect I and qualified.

WOLVES.—The Leon Pioneer says that a Mr. Thomas Smart was lately attacked by a pack of wolves about six miles from Centerville, while out riding. Not being prepared to show fight, he beat a retreat, and the wolves gave chase, giving him a beautiful race for two or three hundred yards.

MURDER IN GRIMES COUNTY.—A man named McGoffin was killed a few days since, in Grimes county, by another named Monroe Black, upon a very slight provocation. The difficulty arose on the refusal of McGoffin to loan his wagon to Black, as he had use for it. Some words passed between them, when Black drew a pistol and shot him. He fled, and at the last account had not been arrested.

EXTRA SESSION.—The Lone Star is informed that Gov. Bell has concluded to call the Legislature together early in December.

The Star also says an application will be made at the called session for a division of Washington county, and the Star is in favor of the measure.

A vessel from Boston, with a locomotive and tender and several cars on board, arrived at Galveston on the 28th ult.

TEXAS MARBLE.—The Indianola Bulletin says: We have received from our old friend, Col. John H. Banks, of Webberville, some specimens of the lately discovered Texas marble. In his letter accompanying the same the Colonel says:

"This marble is found in great abundance in this vicinity, and should we be so lucky as to get a railroad from the coast, it will be a great source of revenue to the State."

We were previously aware that samples of this marble had been sent to the North, and by men of science pronounced equal to the best in the world; but the old maxim runs to the effect that "seeing is believing"; and so with ourselves. We did not doubt the abundant existence of very fine marble on the Colorado and in the mountains; but we were not prepared to see so perfect an article. We have never seen marble more beautiful, more perfect in its formation, nor admitting a higher polish. The ground work is a light dove, with streaks of red, purple and golden hue through it.

There is every reason to believe that the interior of our State abounds in a great variety of valuable stone and minerals. This marble is found in greatest abundance in Hamilton's Valley, (now known as Burnet Court House, Burnet county,) fifty miles above Austin. The specimens may be seen at our office.

COTTON.—The Lavaca Commercial says: "Cotton is continuing to arrive pretty freely, and business of every and seems to be quite brisk. We noticed the other day, fifteen wagons arrive all in a train: each one containing from seven to eight bales of cotton, and that was not an unusual sight for this place, as the number of wagons loaded with cotton that have arrived here during the past two weeks must have averaged as many as thirty per day. The quantity of merchandise brought to this market this fall is much greater than that of any previous year, and the business of the place has of course increased in proportion to the amount of goods on hand."

There were only 1500 bales of cotton raised in the county of Gonzales last year; this year there will be 5000 bales raised in that county. The quantity of cottos raised in the adjoining counties has been increased in proportion to that of Gonzales. This speaks well for the increasing prosperity of the Western portion of our State.

THE RIO GRANDE.—The Lavaca Commercial has the following:

"A friend, writing to us from the Rio Grande, speaks in very flattering terms of that portion of the State. He says, since Carvajal has felled in his revolutionary schemes, the Indians have become more quiet, and every thing is a hundred per cent. better than they were a year ago. He says that good crops have been raised on the Rio Grande this season, that lands are rising in value, and that the farmers intend to engage in the culture of cotton next year."

Webster's Early Home and Father.

We clip the following from the New York Journal of Commerce:

We have been favored with the perusal of a letter, written by Mr. Webster to an intimate friend in the city, dated Franklin, May 3, 1846, from which we take the extract below, dated which, we are sure, will be read at this time with unusual interest:

"I have made satisfactory arrangements respecting my house here, the last of which is, that I can leave it where it is, and yet be comfortable, and without handing the rail-road. This house faces the north. Its front windows look toward the river Merrimack. But then the river soon turns to the South, so that the eastern windows look toward the river also. But the river has so deepened its channel in this stretch of it, in the last fifty years, that we cannot see its waters, without approaching it, or going back to the higher lands behind us. The history of this change is of considerable importance in the philosophy of cinnamon. I have observed it practically, and I see something of the theory of the phenomenon; but I doubt whether the world will ever be benefitted, either by my labouring, or my observation, in this respect.

"Looking out at the east windows at this moment, (2 P. M.) with a beautiful sun just breaking out on my eyes, I see a rich and level cultivated meadow a hundred acres. At the end of it a third of a mile off, I see plain marble grave stones, designating the places where lie my father, my mother my brother Joseph, and my sisters Mehitable, Abigail and Sarah; good Scripture names, inherited from their Puritan ancestors.

"My father! Ebenezer Webster—born at Kingston, in the lower part of the State, in 1738—the handsomest man I ever saw, except my brother Ezekiel, who appeared to me, and seems in my view to me, the very finest human form that ever I had eyes on. I saw him in his coffin—a white forehead, finger-tipped cheeks—a complexion as clear as heavenly light! Set where am I straying?

"The grave has closed upon him, and it lies on all my brothers and sisters. We shall soon be all together. But this is melancholy—and I leave it. Dear, dear kindred blood, how I love you all!

"The fair field is before me—I could see a lamb on any part of it. I have ploughed it, and raked it, and hoed it, but I never mowed it. Some how, I could never learn to hang a scythe! I had not wit enough. My brother Joe used to say that my father sent me to college in order to make me equal to the rest of the children.

"If a hot day in July—it must have been one of the last years of Washington's administration—I was making hay with my father just where I now see a remaining elm tree, about the middle of the afternoon. The Hon. Abiel Foster, M. C., who lived in Canterbury, six miles off, called at the house, and came into the field to see my father. He was a worthy man, college learned, and had been a minister, but was not a person of any considerable natural powers. My father was his friend and supporter. He talked awhile in the field and went on his way. When he was gone my father called me to him, and we sat down under the elm on a hay rack. He said: 'My son that is a worthy man—he is a member of Congress—he goes to Philadelphia and gets six dollars a day while I toil here. It is because he had an education, which I never had. If I had had his early education I should have been in Philadelphia in his place. I came near it as it was. But I missed it, and now I must work here.' 'My dear father,' said I, 'you shall not work. Brother and I will work for you and we can handle out, and you shall rest'—and I remember to have cried—and I cry now at the recollection. 'My child,' said he, 'it is of no importance to me—I now live but for my children; I could not give your elder brother the advantages of knowledge, but I can do something for you. Exert yourself—improve your opportunities—learn—learn—and when I am gone, you will not need to go through the hard-ships which I have undergone, and which have made me an old man before my time.'

"The next May he took me to Exeter, to the Phillips Exeter Academy—placed me under the tuition of its excellent preceptor, Dr. Benjamin Abbott, still living.

"My father died in April, 1806. I neither left him, nor forsook him. My expenditure on effort at this season was that I might be near him. I closed his eyes in this very house. He died at sixty-seven years of age—after a life of exertion, toil and exposure—a private soldier, an officer, a legislator, a judge—every thing that a man could be, to whom learning never had disclosed her ample page.

"My first speech at the bar was made when he was on the bench—he never heard me a second time.

"He had in him what I recollect to have been the character at some of the old Puritans. He was deeply religious, but not sour—on the contrary, good humored, facetious—showing even in his age, with a contagious laugh, teeth all as white as alabaster—gentle, soft, playful—and yet having a heart in him, that he seemed to have borrowed from a lion. He could frown; a frown it was, but cheerfulness, good humor and smiles composed his most usual aspect.

"Ever truly, your friend, DANL. WEBSTER."

South Carolina Election.

CHARLESTON, November 2, 0:20 P. M.

The Legislature of South Carolina assembled yesterday, (Monday) and both Houses organized by the re-election of the former presiding officers. In the evening a caucus of the members was held, when it was resolved that Pierce and King should be supported, but with the declaration on the part of the State that the State protests against any approval or acquiescence in the measures commonly known as the Compromise.

This morning the Legislature met pursuant to adjournment, and proceeded to the election of electors for President and Vice President, when one hundred and thirty-five votes being cast for those on the Pierce and King ticket, they were declared duly elected.

The Legislature then received and read a message from the Governor of the State, announcing the death of Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, and accompanying the announcement with suitable remarks. Resolutions appropriate to the subject of the Governor's Message were then adopted, and the Legislature adjourned.

Four Days Later from Europe—Arrival of the Pacific—Interesting Commercial and Political News.

NEW YORK, Monday, November 1.

The Collins steamer Pacific has arrived here, bringing dates from Liverpool to the 20th October, four days later than the accounts brought by the Niagara. The Pacific brings one hundred and twenty passengers. The following is a summary of her commercial news:

Havre Cotton Market.

A large business was done in the Havre market up to the 18th, but the Africa's accounts checked the demand and depressed the rates slightly.

France—Louis Napoleon.

Louis Napoleon entered Paris in great triumph on the 16th October, and every thing was done on a scale of great magnificence. It is expected that the Senate will offer him the crown in a few days.

New Secretary of State.

WASHINGTON, November 1.

Edward Everett has accepted the office of Secretary of State, tendered him by the President, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Webster.

NEW YORK, November 1.

The total sales of the four days preceding the departure of the Pacific were 50,000 bales, at which speculators had taken 20,000 and exporters 2000 bales. The rates had undergone no actual change, but the market bore a heavy appearance after the arrival of the Africa from New York. The rates closed as follows: Fair Orleans 6¼, Middling Orleans 6, Fair Uplands 6¼, and Middling Uplands 5⅞ to 5¾d per pound.

NEW YORK, November 1.

The Pacific brings the following interesting items of news from England and the Continent of Europe.

France—Imperial Indications.

The entry of Louis Napoleon into the City of Paris on the 16th of October was made with imperial pomp. Many of the principal thoroughfares were spanned with triumphal arches, with inscriptions, welcoming the Emperor. The President lives in imperial state, and every thing about him is in imperial style.

The Senate is to be convened on the 4th November to deliberate on the establishment of the Empire, and the result of its deliberation is not were its principal champions, while the mass of the democracy, controlled by Clay, Snyder, D. D. Tompkins, Baldwin, H. Niles, Matthew Carey, etc., had for years been the ardent advocates of protection. The times have altered since then; Mr. Webster has seen occasion greatly to modify, if not entirely retract his free trade notions.

New England unitedly supported John Quincy Adams for President in 1824, and Mr. Webster concurred, though never personally an admirer of Mr. Adams. He and John Randolph were tellers when the House elected Mr. Adams President—by the vote of 13 States to 11—and he became one of the ablest and most influential supporters of the administration of Adams and Clay. Re-elected in 1823 and 1826 with scarcely a show of opposition, Mr. Webster was in the latter year chosen a Senator of the United States. Towards the close of 1827 his first wife died, while he was on his way to Washington to take his seat in the Senate. The next year (1828) was signalized by the defeat of J. Q. Adams, and the accession of General Jackson to the Presidency. During the session of 1829–'30 occurred the memorable debate on Foote's resolution respecting the public lands, wherein Mr. Webster, in replying to Col. Hayne, of South Carolina, vindicated his right to rank first among living debaters.

Mr. Webster remained in the Senate, advocating the re-charter of the United States Bank, condemning the veto by which that re-charter was defeated—opposing the re-election of Gen. Jackson, and supporting Mr. Clay in opposition to him—vigorously opposing Nullification when attempted to be put in practice in 1833—opposing the Tariff Compromise of that year—the removal of the deposits, etc., etc. He was a candidate for President in 1836, but received the twelve votes of Massachusetts only. He continued in the Senate, warmly advocating the election of Gen. Harrison in 1840, until he was called thence to take the first place in Gen. Harrison's Cabinet, which he continued to fill after Harrison's untimely death, under Tyler's administration. He remained in the Cabinet until 1843, having meantime negotiated the Ashburton Treaty, whereby our long disputed North-Eastern Boundary was definitely settled, and returned to the Senate on the 4th of March, 1845. He there opposed the Mexican war, as he had previously opposed the Annexation of Texas. He did not, however, oppose the granting of supplies for the prosecution of the war. Mr. Webster was a candidate for the Whig Presidential nomination at Philadelphia in 1848, but very meagerly supported. Had his friends chosen to assent to his nomination for Vice President with Gen. Taylor, he might have filled the Presidential chair.

On the 7th day of March, 1850, while the country and Congress were both agitated by questions connected with the organization of the Territories recently acquired from Mexico, and the proposed interdiction of slavery therein, Mr. Webster made his memorable speech, taking ground in favor of a compromise respecting the Territories, and against any act or proviso by Congress aiming to exclude slavery therefrom. Mr. W. voted steadily against the Wilmot proviso and all kindred measures, until, on the sudden death of Gen. Taylor, (July 11, 1850,) he was called by Mr. Fillmore to fill once more the first place in the Cabinet, which he retained to the last. [N. Y. Tribune.

A LETTER ON WATER-SPOUTS.

On a warm summer's morning, a few weeks ago, the good bark Jasper lay in the Gulf Stream becalmed. About her decks her passengers dispersed themselves as best they might. Some stretched beneath the quarter-deck awning, and were deep in a game of draughts. Some had their books and lay drowsing over their contents. One or two hung listlessly over the rail, coaxing Mother Carey's chickens with biscuit, while the rest, scattered here and there, were watching a couple of youngsters, who, with the chatter and mischief of monkeys, were daring each other into all manner of dangers among the rigging.

A heavy shower had passed in the night and left the atmosphere dull and hazy, though the sun was shining brightly. The sky was clear, except where, away to the southward, a dark cloud had heaped itself up, and now hung threatening near to the sea. Each of us had gazed at this cloud in his turn, and, seeing in it nothing of interest, had sought other amusement, until the captain alone was left to observe it. Suddenly we were startled by his voice, "Look at that—a water-spout!" A dark column towered before us for a moment, and then swept slowly away. Its outlines grew gradually less distinct, a misty vapor seemed to take its place, and so it vanished from our sight.

As we gazed, another began to form. The black cloud grew blacker, and seemed to draw itself together as if rallying its energies for a struggle. Its gloomy mists came gathering to a centre; then a funnel-shaped process of cloud put itself out, and hung pointing downward like a giant finger. Lower it reached, and lower, stretching down slowly and sure to the sea. The water began to boil beneath it, and to whirl itself about in changing currents. The cloud came still lower, and the ocean reared as if swept by a tornado. Yet the cloud drew nearer. The vast funnel which had shaped itself now reached more than three-fourths of the distance from the main cloud to the sea. There was a strange heaving of the waters; then, drawn by some mighty power, they shot upwards to meet it. The waterspout was completed. Sea and sky were joined. A pillar of cloud and a column of water, together reaching more than a thousand feet, had linked the one to the other.

From a circular portion of the sea's surface, the diameter of which appeared to be about twice as great as that of the column midway its height, the water rose, not in a solid body, but as if torn into spray by its motion, like the scattering jets which are driven from the pipes of a powerful fountain. Thus the water-spout, shewing white and dense as it left the sea, became foggy and transparent at an elevation of a few feet, and darkened again, though slightly, where its waters gathered to enter the tube of cloud which had let itself down to receive them. Were it not for the sharp converging lines which showed with what rapidity these waters were darting upward to reach that cloudy and the foaming masses in which they were whirling through it up to the sky, one might imagine that the hanging cloud was joined to the sea by a common mist. Such is the appearance at a distance.

A water-spout two miles away looks like a pillar of cloud resting upon a pedestal of spray. Closer examination will show that this cloud is simply a tube. The apparent spray enters it from below, and seems to condense into foaming water, which then moves spirally up, still in the interior of the tube, until it vanishes in the cloud above.

We had ample time to observe these phenomena. For full fifteen minutes the thirsty cloud continued to draw torrents of water. There the long funnel began to shorten and rose from the sea. The water from below still leaped up in spray to reach it, but in smaller volumes and with moderated speed. As the cloud rose higher this too ceased, and the water-spout was gone.

There was silence on our decks for a moment; another moment passed in rapid questions and answers; then youngster number one challenged youngster number two to race up to the cross-trees; the gentleman on the rail threw another biscuit, to his chickens; one of the draught-players pushed a piece into the king-row, and things went on as before.

About two o'clock on the afternoon of the following day the ship was lying again becalmed. A shoal of dolphins had been playing about us, and we were trying a dozen ways to bring some of their number on board, when our attention was called to objects of greater interest. A heavy cloud had gathered in the west, and a water-spout had formed beneath it. Some atmospheric change had altered the shape of this spout strangely. It was bent like a bow, and terminated with its outlines describing the segment of a circle, until it disappeared. The water seemed to make its way upward in this curious course as readily as when it mounted vertically.

The afternoon was full of wonders. In the course of four hours fourteen water-spouts were visible. All took their origin from the same cloud; all were in common partly a tube of the black cloud, partly a column of spray, but here the resemblance ended. In size, in shape, in velocity of motion, there were constant changes. In this the closed same down close to the sea; in that the spray ascended four-fifths of the distance, to enter a mere stump of a tube. Here was a water-spout apparently bending double; there a switched another, though perfectly straight, inclining at an angle of forty. Now two would go sailing off by itself into the distance; then a small party would march with a solemn, steady motion directly towards us. We were lost in admiration, but I noticed a shade of anxiety resting on the features of our captain, which only lightened when the approaching columns wheeled their course in another direction. Their near approach brings always terror. The distance which they can traverse depends of course upon the speed with which they are carried and the time during which they remain in action. Some spring into existence in a moment and disappear almost as suddenly, while others may be visible for half an hour.

At six o'clock the last water-spout vanished, which closed the spectacle. The oldest sailors on board had never witnessed such an array, and many were the events they foretold from the phenomenon. That night some of us joined the tars on the forecastle, and, wrapped up in sails, lay for hours listening to their stories. It was pleasant to sit with a freshman-like expression of countenance, and, asking some innocent question, witness the huge exultation with which "Jack" set to "stuffing landsmen." With a wink to his fellows to notice how neatly he did it, a jerk at his waistband and a roll of his quid, he would "spin out" a romance worthy of Sinbad. Each tale grew more marvellous than the other. One old "salt" had stood on the deck with his shipmates all roaring at the top of their voices to break a water-spout which whirled past them at the distance of thirty feet. This was true. One had stood at the helm all of one fine morning "down among the Indies," so steering his craft as to "dodge" the water-spouts which now and then came rushing at her. This might be true. Here one became ambitious: "Avast there, you lubbers, what do you know about spouts?" He had been on a vessel when a water-spout, taking them "athwart ships" had gone "clean over her," carrying with it their fore-yard, main-yard, some of the standing rigging, and sails by the quantity, scaring all hands terribly; but, "howsomdever," injuring no one. This we beg leave to doubt.

We heard no more. Our thirst for information was satisfied, and, defying competition to equal the last, we went below.

In regard to the falling or bursting of water-spouts, there are many legends. It is said that the concussion of the air, produced by the report of a cannon, a musket, or even by a loud shout, is sufficient to shatter their structure, and that these are the last resorts on vessels threatened by their vicinity. We had no opportunity for experiment. If the whole column of water, which must often attain a height of more than a thousand feet, is precipitated upon one spot, we may imagine its effects. Some years ago one fell on a plain in Scotland. The account of it states that "for some hundreds of yards the ground was torn up to a depth of seven feet, while the streams were filled with the surplus water." Yet we hear of no disasters caused by them at sea, and, with the solitary exception detailed by our romantic friend, the sailor, they seem perfectly harmless and well disposed.

THE WIFE'S UNIVERSAL RIVAL.—It must ever be borne in mind that man's love, even in its happiest exercise, is not like woman's; for while she employs herself through every hour in fondly weaving one beloved image into all her thoughts, he gives to her comparatively few of his, and these perhaps neither the loftiest nor the best. It is a wise beginning, then, for every married woman to make up her mind to be forgotten through the greater part of every day; to make up her mind to many rivals, too, in her husband's attentions, though not in his love; and among these I would mention one, whose claim it would be folly to dispute, since no remonstrances or representations on her part will ever be able to render less attractive the charms of this competitor—I mean the newspaper, of whose absorbing interest some wives are weak enough to evince a sort of childish jealousy, when they ought rather to congratulate themselves that their most formidable rival is one of paper. [Mrs. Ellis' Wives of England.

A NEW BUILDING MATERIAL.—An invention has, it is stated, just been patented, for the adaptation of a preparation of coke and other substances, by which bricks, paving slabs, door and stair steps, tiles, pipes, blocks, railway sleepers, and other articles of general use by builders, etc., can be produced with a perfection and at a cost which it is expected by the inventor will effect a complete revolution in the building trade. The price at which it is proposed to offer the coke brick to the public is scarcely one-third of the cost of the clay brick, while in point of durability it is superior to the best article supplied from the kilns. The manufacture, according to the specification, is effected by means of cast-iron moulds, the interior of which are of the exact dimensions of the common brick; in this mould a certain quantity of dust, or waste coal, powdered coke, charcoal, or cinders is placed, and being carbonized, the amalgamated material swells to the exact form required. When taken from the mould it undergoes a finishing process, in which varnish is applied to the end or side, having while wet a coating of powdered glass, with a an admixture of a mineral coloring matter, sifted over it.

The brick is then vetrified, when a beautiful glaze of any required color is produced, and the article is ready for use. During the manufacturing process the fumes are passed through water. The finishing process is only required for particular purposes, as in many instances the coke brick is equally available without it. The material is rendered fire proof by an application of the muriate of alumina, and is impervious to atmospheric influences by the nature of its formation. When articles of coke fabric are required of extraordinary density, a variation in the filling material, and also an extraordinary amount of compression, are necessary; and then there is hardly any limit to the degree of solidity which may be obtained. It is further stated that there is no description of article used in the erection or ornamentation of buildings but may be produced from the material; thus columns for interior and exterior use, cornices, capitals of plain or ornamental design, can be manufactured and supplied in a finished state. [London paper.

A correspondent of the Alexandria (Va.) Gazette speaking of his visit to England, says: "I had gone to Gravesend, with the view of taking passage, but an incident prevented. A white swan, which was worthy to perform its flight through the milky way, came near the vessel in which it was my design to sail, and her commander took his gun. The sequel we need not mention. The blood of the dead stained the river. We were just then fresh from reading the Rhyme of the Ancient Mariner, in which the vessel encountered heavy calamities after the killing of the Albatross, and the circumstance determined me not to go with such a barbarian. You will smile at my superstition. You may even go through Lausanne and tell the incident; but don't forget to add that the vessel from whose deck the bird was shot had been missing from that time. She perished with all on board."

THE LATE COL. JNO. G. GAMBLE.—The National Intelligencer, noticing the death of Col. John G. Gamble, of Tallahassee, Florida, says:

Col. G. was originally from Virginia, and was a gentleman of accomplished education and talents. While a youth he was attached to the American Legation to France, at the head of which was Chief Justice Marshall, and he subsequently became an eminent merchant in Richmond. About twenty-five years since he removed to Florida, and embarked in planting, and became the head of an extensive banking institution. Col. G. was allied by marriage to the late Attorney General Wirt, and other distinguished men of the Union, and was beloved by all who knew him for his private worth. He was the intimate friend of the great statesman whose death we have just heard of. Col. G. is the uncle of Mr. Cabell, the Representative in Congress from Florida.

IMMENSE CORN CROP IN MISSOURI.—The Drumswicker of the 25th September says: The yield of corn for this season in the Grand River country will be, unprecedented, and will probably bring forth the best fattened pork hogs we ever had, as that will be the most ready way of turning corn into cash. Stock animals of all kinds are in great demand among us, and we shall have, for years, a great market of all kinds of live stock. Three year old steers now sell at from $15 to $18; four year olds at from $20 to $25, and sucking mule colts at $30.

AN EXTENSIVE RIDE.—A Yankee ship-master, in St Petersburg, Russia, recently got upon the statue of the Colossal Horse, in the square, and seated himself behind Peter the Great. The fun cost him $6000, the amount of the fine. When the captain remonstrated with the judge at the largeness of the fine, saying that it was rather an expensive ride, the judge good naturedly replied, that the captain never before rode so expensive a horse.

THE LATE DR. BOWDITCH.—The Boston Transcript relates the anecdote of Dr. Bowditch, the mathematician: "One of the most interesting incidents in the early history of the famous men of our country, is related of Dr. Bowditch, the learned translator of La Place. During the revolutionary war, a privateer from Salem captured a vessel and brought the prize into that port. A valuable private library, was among the articles on board. Those books were a rare prize for those days, and young Bowditch borrowed a number from the person having them in charge. The volumes were retained longer than was necessary for a simple perusal, and it was ascertained that the young student was so desirous of procuring the works, and his means were too slender for him to dare hope of purchasing them, and he actually copied twenty folio and quarto volumes of scientific works, which were of great service to him as books of reference in after years. These manuscript volumes are now in the possession of the sons of Dr. Bowditch, and are highly prized.

WORTH TRYING.—A lump of wet saleratus, applied to the sting of a wasp or bee, will stop the pain in one moment, and prevent from swelling; try it and see. It is a sure remedy for rattlesnake bites, if applied immediately, and always on hand. Be sure and remember it.

The wetting of the coals is very false economy, for though they burn slower, a great deal of the heat they give out is lost in drying, as it is carried off in the steam.

THE LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD.—The board of light-house commissioners appointed by the President and Secretary of the Treasury, under Mr. Evans' amendment for reforming the whole light-house system, is in session at Washington, and has nearly completed the business necessary to put the new plan in operation. It consists of the Secretary of the Treasury, President, and the following members: Com. Shubrick, Navy; Gen. Totten Engineer; Col. Kearney, Engineer; Com. Dupont, Navy; Professor Bache, Coast Survey; Prof. Henry, Smithsonian Institution; Dr. Jenkins, Navy; Lt. Hardcastle, Army.

The board has already laid out the coasts of the United States into the twelve districts required by the law, and have assigned a number of them to officers of the army and navy, each of whom will be responsible for the management of the lights within his district. The inspectors are taken from the following corps: Three from topographical engineers; three from military do.; three commanders; three lieutenants.

COUNTERFEITERS ARRESTED.—The Vienna Gazette states that a band of forgers had been discovered, who had been employed in manufacturing Prussian paper money. The head-quarters of the gang was in America, and a part of them had been arrested in that country and in Germany. The Prussian police had been for some time aware that a regular company had been formed by shares in the United States, for carrying on this nefarious traffic, and that an agent, in the person of a medical man, a native of Germany, was to land at Bremen with a considerable amount of this counterfeit paper money, which he was to put into circulation at Hamburg. A Prussian police officer was consequently dispatched to Dremen, and on the vessel arriving, the individual was arrested. On examining his trunks, a large amount of false paper, very well executed, was found. At the demand of the Prussian Government, the American Government has seized the presses and all the apparatus, and arrested the culprits, who will be brought before the tribunal at New York.

RUSSIAN POSSESSIONS IN N. W. AMERICA.—These possessions are in a deplorable condition, from the ferocious warfare carried on by the Indians against the whites, more especially on the Island of Sitka. Continually they menace the city with conflagration and the inhabitants with massacre, nor does one week pass in which the Governor is not obliged to prepare the inhabitants for self-defence; and wherever a party of the latter is found unprotected, they are indiscriminately slaughtered and horribly mutilated. The perpetrators of these savage deeds are said to be a fine intelligent race; but war is their passion, and their method of conducting it is of course owing to their false ideas of warlike conduct. Considering that these fellows are supplied with arms from foreign vessels, the Russians will have no small difficulty in maintaining their position against them.

INTEMPERANCE IN GERMANY.—At one of the last meetings of the Congress of Pastors of the Protestant Church, held in Dremen, to discuss such moral and social questions as come within their sphere of activity, Mr. Wald, the Superintendent of Konigsberg, defended the Temperance Societies, and, to show the necessity for them, stated that drunkenness was the greatest vice of the lower classes of Germany. There are annually, he says, throughout Germany, 40,000 deaths from delirium tremens: in the Zollverein alone, 360,000 quarts of brandy are sold and consumed, and in Hesse one-half of the grain produced is used for distillation. From some quotations from the writings of Luther, adduced on the occasion, the great Reformer appears to have been no sparing denouncer of the "heavy-headed revels" of his countrymen and contemporaries.

COMMERCE OF THE PACIFIC.—Two hundred and sixty-one vessels arrived at San Francisco in July and August. This is equal to 1560 a year, and it must be recollected that these vessels are mostly of the largest class, 700 to 1800 tons burden. Of this number, seventeen were from New York, fourteen from Boston, and from China twenty-six. The trade between China and the Pacific coast continues to increase rapidly, and there is a diminution in the number of Chinamen passengers arriving. The duties on foreign goods this year are estimated at three millions.

GREAT DISTRESS AT MADEIRA.—The failure of the vintage, resulting from the recent blight upon the grape, has produced the greatest distress among the inhabitants of Madeira, and threatens with absolute starvation large masses of the laboring classes. The Civil Governor of the Island has issued a circular acknowledging the impotence of the Portuguese government to meet the emergency with anything like adequate relief, and appealing to the christian sympathies of foreign nations for aid to avert the impending calamity.

DEGREES OF DRUNKENNESS IN LONDON.—If Prince Albert were drunk, he would be called elated; if Lord Tristam were drunk, he would be called elevated; if Mr. Plum, the rich merchant, were drunk, he would be called inebriated; if a respectable tradesman be drunk, he would be intoxicated; but if a workman be in liquor, it would be said that the nasty beast was as drunk as a pig!

STATISTICS OF GOD FELLOWSHIP.—From the annual report of the Grand and Subordinate Lodges to the R. W. Grand Lodge of the United States, for the year ending 30th of June last, we learn that the whole number of Lodges in this country is 2720: contributing members, 103,298; Past Grands, 23,818; suspensions during the year, 12,018; amount of relief granted, $914,731; revenue of Subordinate Lodges, $1,164,331.

BALOON ASCENSIONS.—It is said that applications have been made to the proprietors of the the different places of entertainment in London, from whence baloon ascents take place, by an individual who wishes to make an ascent suspended thirty feet below the car, by magnetic attraction. The method by which he proposes to accomplish the feat is this: He possesses a magnet, the attractive power of which will sustain a weight of 150 pounds; this is to be hung by a line thirty feet below the car; round his body is fixed an iron zone, which, on being brought near the magnet, firmly attaches itself thereto.

The last remnant of the O'Connell property in Kerry, was sold lately at Trales, Ireland, under an order of the Encumbered Estates Court. But two lots remained to be sold, the net aggregate yearly value of which was about £210, and the sum brought by the sale was £4520, the purchaser being unconnected with the family.

AMERICAN ARTISTS ABROAD.—A correspondent of the New York Mirror is traveling in Holland, and writes as follows from the Hague:

Passing through Rotterdam, the other day, I saw a good sized building, upon which was written in large letters, "Panorama of the Mississippi!" I thought it wouldn't do to pass by on the other side, and so I went in to see this part of my country, which was situated just then in Holland! I found Mr. Lewis, who painted, and is now exhibiting the panorama, a first-rate American, and as friendly as possible.

I have made the acquaintance, at the Hague, of a young artist, named Johnson, who hails from Washington, though originally from "way down east." He is a good fellow, and a capital artist—if I might judge from the first rate pictures I saw in his atelier. One, in particular, representing a Jew boy, has attracted the attention here among artists; and another, called "The Gamblers," recently purchased by an Englishman, has been spoken very highly of in the Dutch journals. His friend, Mignot, from Charleston, South Carolina, is also a talented young painter, and leaves soon for New York.

STEAMSHIPS FOR THE NEW YORK TRADE.—The Persia, measuring 3000 tons, the Alps, 1600 tons, Andes, 1600 tons, Caucasus, 1200 tons, Taurus, also 1600 tons, are all progressing rapidly in England towards completion, and may be expected in New York in a few months. They are all screw-propellers, made with every modern improvement of that mode of working.

ANOTHER EARTHQUAKE.—Another earthquake occurred at Clinton, Ga., on the 22d ult., about midnight. The sound was, if anything, more audible than the one that took place on the 11th, and the agitation of the earth more violent.

The subscription in Spain for the Spanish soldiers who were wounded, and the relatives of those who were killed during the Lopez expedition, amounts to two hundred eighty thousand piastres, or about $60,000.

THE CHINESE.—While the Governor of California is trying to drive them out of that State, the Government of British Guiana offers a bounty of $80 on their importation.

DEATH OF DR. FAIRCHILD.—Rev. E. R. Fairchild, D. D., Home Secretary of the American and Foreign Christian Union, died suddenly of heart disease, while hurrying to the cars at Windsor, Vermont, on the 16th ult.

The Erie Railroad Company have recently forbidden entirely the sale of intoxicating drinks in any of the refreshment houses along the road, or in any of the grounds of the company, and absolutely refuse employment to any person who makes use of such drinks.

A LARGE LUMP OF CALIFORNIA GOLD.—A solid lump of gold, in its rough state, weighing twenty-six and a half pounds, avoirdupois weight, has been deposited at the importing house of Messrs. Richard Patrick & Co., in New York, by a Texas miner, who dug the same from a mine seventy feet deep, in California.

Let the motto of every man be punctuality. Let this virtue be manifested in a high degree in all our actions, and life's rugged pathway will be much more pleasant.

The first closed mail to Prussia will be despatched from New York by the steamship Baltic, on the 30th instant. This arrangement cannot fail to be of great convenience to German merchants, as well as to our adopted citizens generally from that quarter of Europe:

HOW TO "FINISH" A DAUGHTER.—1. Be always telling her how pretty she is.

2. Instill into her mind a proper love of dress.

3. Accustom her to so much pleasure that she is never happy at home.

4. Allow her to read nothing but novels.

5. Teach her all the accomplishments, but none of the utilities, of life.

6. Keep her in the darkest ignorance of the mysteries of housekeeping.

7. Initiate her into the principle that it is vulgar to do anything for herself.

8. To strengthen the latter belief, let her have a ladies' maid.

9. And lastly, having given her such an education, marry her to a clerk in the Treasury upon £75 a year, or to an ensign that is going to India.

If, with the above careful training, your daughter is not finished, you may be sure it is no fault of yours, and you must look upon her escape as nothing short of a miracle. [English paper.

THE SOLDIERS OF THE REVOLUTION.—The soldiers of the Revolution are fast passing away. In a late Northern paper we find recorded the death of Mr. Wm. Moulton, at Grantham, N. H. Mr. M. served in the war of the Revolution, and was actively engaged in the battle of Long Island; where more than one of the enemy were made to bite the dust by his well directed aim. He was, also, at the execution of Maj. Andre.

DEATH IN HIGH PLACES.—The New York Times says, of the eminent men of the United States who have been voted for for President, only two are now living (Van Buren and Cass) out of eleven. The candidates, in 1832, were Crawford, Jackson, Clay and Adams. In 1828, Jackson and Adams. In 1832, Jackson, Clay and Wirt. In 1836, Van Buren, Webster and Harrison. In 1840, Van Buren and Harrison. In 1844, Clay and Polk. In 1848, Cass and Taylor.

ARTESIAN WELLS.—A contract for sinking an Artesian well has been entered into at Mobile.

DIVIDENDS.—The Bank of the State of Georgia has declared a dividend of four per cent. out of the profits of the last six months.

A French courtier said among all his acquaintance, he only knew three honest women. "Who are they?" asked the Queen. "Your Majesty is the first, my wife is the second, and as for the other, your Majesty will excuse me for naming her, as I wish to keep open a door for escape, by leaving every other woman to think herself the third."

American women have less courtesy than any others in the world. A thousand rules of deference are established by confessions of the other sex, which they enforce with ungracious arrogance, as if they were but the recognition of inalienable rights. This is their offence to all well-bred Europeans. [English paper.

BISHOP EMORY.

JOHN EMORY was born in Maryland, on the 11th of April, 1789. His father and mother were members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The father was a class-leader in the Church. The mother was a woman of great heart, of generous spirit, of strong mind and of sincere piety. Their house had long been the home of the early preachers in their itinerant visits to the eastern shore of Maryland. The children were accustomed from infancy to the company and conversation of these holy men of God, and to the morning exercises of family devotion. Thus early trained in the doctrines and usages, and subjected to the influences of the church, they were easily susceptible of religious impressions, and exhibited early an affinity for Methodism. They were accustomed to attend, with their parents, class meetings, love-feasts, quarterly meetings, and camp-meetings. Two of the children were consecrated at home during family prayer, and both at very early ages were converted at class and public meetings, and became exemplary and exemplary Christians.

The father it seems had some notions very good, but altogether erroneous, respecting the education of children. Instead of giving his children a thorough and general education, qualifying them for any business or profession in life, and then leaving them, when they should become of age, to choose for themselves a profession, according to their taste, inclination or judgment, he classified his children, when at a very early age, for different pursuits and professions, and educated each for the specific department of business to which he had appointed him. One was to be a farmer, one a merchant, one a doctor, one a statesman and one a lawyer. In this capricious allotment John was set apart for the lawyer. His education, therefore, was directed to this specific end. At the early age of ten years he was sent from home to attend a classical school. Fortunately, though designed for a specific profession, his education was conducted by teachers on a classical and very liberal plan.

He spent four years at a classical academy at Easton, Md.; one year at an academy in Salisbury, Penn., and two years at Washington College, eastern shore of Maryland. During these seven years he was thoroughly trained in a liberal course of study. At the close of his academic course he entered as a student of law in the office of Richard Tilghman Earle, Esq., of Centerville, Md. Having pursued diligently and thoroughly the study of law for three years, he was at the age of nineteen, admitted to the bar. Immediately upon this he opened an office, business flowed on him, and he had every prospect of rising to wealth and fame in the profession which his father had chosen for him. But a change came over the spirit, and his whole plan of life was modified.

He had not in his attention to the classics neglected the Bible, nor in his devotion to the law forgotten the Gospel. His mother at the time of his birth had consecrated him to the Lord. She had hoped he might become a minister at the sanctuary of God. She had constantly prayed for him. The influence of these religious impressions he had received in his childhood had not departed from him. While at school at Easton, when not more than eleven or twelve years old, during a religious excitement, he had become seriously impressed, and had joined a Methodist class, consisting of small boys, led by a faithful and pious man. He might have continued in the path of early piety, without devintion or temptation, had he not have been seduced by his associate to do an act which wounded his tender conscience. The act itself was wholly trifling, merely climbing a tree in a retired place, to see a distant horse race. But he knew it was wrong. He, however, did it, and thus violated the dictatoe of his consciouce. The injury, therefore, to him was as great as though he had committed some act in itself criminal. The effect on his mind was unfortunate. He became discouraged, neglected prayer, gave up his religious profession and returned to a life of worldly ambition. The good Spirit did not, however, give him up, but followed him still, nor could he forget the prayers and instructions of his pious mother. In August, 1806, while a student at law, he attended a quarterly meeting in the neighborhood of his family home. It was a season of gracious revival. His brother and sister had shared in the heavenly visitation. He had been for some time unusually serious, though he had concealed his feelings from the family. The evening before the commencement of the meeting there was a social gathering of several members of the family at the house of an elder brother. The evening was spent in singing, in religious conversation and in prayer. John took no part in the exercises; but remaining a quiet, serious and respectful spectator. Early on the ensuing Sabbath the family proceeded to love-feast. John, though not yet a member of the Church, accompanied them by invitation and took a seat in the crowded assembly. In the course of the exercises, Emory, to the surprise of the people, arose from his seat, and in the most solemn manner called God, and angels, and the people there present, to witness that he had that day determined to seek the salvation of his soul. He then fell upon his knees, and remained during the love-feast silently praying the Lord to pardon his sins. Much interest was excited among the people by the unexpected and interesting circumstances of the occasion. His sisters, who sat near the door, when they heard his voice and knew it was their brother, were nearly overcome with emotion and joy. A circle of pious, devoted and praying Christians was formed about him. While they were praying for him, he suddenly rose from his knees, and with indescribable composure declared that he felt peace and comfort. A smile of angelic loveliness lighted up on his countenance. He was the very personification of peaceful, tranquil bliss. From this happy moment his course was onward and upward. He led over after a life of piety and of active Christian zeal. He was always in the way of duty—never deviating from the path of righteousness.

Soon after his conversion he was appointed class-leader, an office for which he was peculiarly qualified. Believing it to be his duty to labor still more extensively for the salvation of the people, he obtained license to preach in local capacity. While yet a student at law, he preached every Sunday, either in the town where he resided or some place in the neighboring country. Continuing his practice of preaching Sunday after he commenced the practice of law, he began soon to feel a desire to devote himself wholly to the work of the Christian ministry. But his course in this direction was encompassed by difficulties. To abandon his legal profession and lucrative practice would subject him to great personal sacrifices. He was in the line of safe precedents, and on the direct road to honor, fame and fortune. His talents were of the highest order, his reputation unsullied, his popularity rapidly increasing, and his success certain. To become an itinerant Methodist preacher he must abandon his position, with all its advantages and prospects.

All those sacrifices, however, he could cheerfully make. All the privations and inconveniences of an itinerant life he could with fortitude endure. But there was in his way another difficulty of formidable import. His father flatly and plumply refused consent to his becoming a traveling preacher. What could he do? No man held in higher respect than did John Emory parental authority, yet he acknowledged a law higher still—a law emanating from the authority that is over all, and made known to him by the Spirit of God operating on his heart. He had the witness of the divine Spirit testifying through his conscience that he was called to preach. While he conceded, according to the established order of civilized society, the right of his father to control his business pursuits during his minority, he could not acknowledge any such right to form for him any engagements to extend beyond the age of twenty-one years, or to dictate his course of life after he had passed the age of independent manhood. During his twenty-first year he suffered most intensely from conflicting emotions. He would most willingly do all in his power to gratify the feelings and meet the wishes of his father; but he could not refrain from giving up himself to the work of the ministry. After much "reading, prayer, and meditation, he made a covenant on his knees, wrote and signed it, to give up the law," and become a preacher. His father was sorely displeased at the decision to which his son had come. He well-nigh for a time disowned him. He would neither hear him preach nor allow him to write to him. The day of reconcilintion, however, at last came. Some three years after the son had entered the ministry the father fell sick. No sooner had he ascertained that his end was nigh, than he dispatched a messenger for that son whom he had so obstinately discarded. The son hastened home, sat down by the bed of his dying father, watched assiduously over him, administered to him the consolations of the Gospel, received his last blessing, and saw him depart in peace and in hope of eternal life.

In the spring of 1810, on the very week of his twenty-first year, Emory joined the Philadelphia conference. Of the incidents of his life during the fourteen years he spent on circuits and stations we have no account; for he kept no journal. The fact that he remained uniformly in each station he occupied the second term allowed by the law of itinerancy, is evidence that he sustained himself well in the work to which he had devoted his life. The fact of his being elected by the Philadelphia Conference, when he was barely eligible from age, a member of the General Conference of 1816, and of his being appointed by the authority of the General Conference of 1820, the delegate of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America to the British Wesleyan Conference, would seem to exhibit the high rank he held among the preachers.

The mission to England was a work of much importance and great delicacy. Originally Methodism had been one in England and in America. The early American conferences placed the name of Wesley on their Minutes, and acknowledged him as their ecclesiastical head, and willingly obeyed his wishes in all matters of Church organization and government. After some years, conceiving that Mr. Wesley, from his great distance from America, and his want of personal knowledge of the ever-changing circumstances of a new world, like America, could not be qualified to make wise and prudent decisions on various matters relating to American matters, and fearing lest, should they continue to acknowledge his jurisdiction, he might claim the right to recall Mr. Asbury, and appoint to the superintendency some one not agreeable to the American Conference, they dropped his name from their Minutes, and so, in effect, dissolved all ecclesiastical connection with the British Methodists. No official intercourse had been held between the British and American connections for many years. In the mean time serious difficulties had occurred between the preachers of the American and those of the British connection in Canada. As early as 1791, missionaries had been sent from the conferences in the United States to Canada. Success had attended their labors, societies had been organized, and circuits and districts formed. In 1820 there were in Upper and Lower Canada two districts, about twenty circuits and stations, nearly thirty preachers, and upwards of five thousand members. Yet there was still room in the Canadian provinces for a greater number of laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, and the Missionary Society of the British connection had, with the best intentions in the world, began, about 1812, to send missionaries to Canada. Unfortunately difficulties soon sprung up between the British missionaries and the American preachers in Canada. The parties often came in ecclesiastical collision. The British missionaries, instead of entering on unoccupied ground, began to interfere with the societies already formed, and occupy the churches already built by the American connection. Each party had its adherents among the people. Some of the Canadians adhered to the British missionaries on account of political sympathies. Others adhered to the American connection on account of old associations, of gratitude, and of sincere affection. Soon, therefore, a condition of things peculiarly unfortunate, and utterly destructive of all religious prosperity, and uncongenial to Christian feeling, began to exist. To effect a settlement of those difficulties, and to restore the friendly intercourse between the two great sections of the Methodist community, the General Conference of 1820 resolved to send a delegate to the British Conference, with instructions "to endeavor, by all prudent and practicable means, to effect an amicable and permanent adjustment of the unpleasant difficulties existing in Canada," and to propose, in order to restore and preserve friendly and harmonious relations between the British and American connections, a mutual interchange of delegates every four years. The Board of Bishops were authorized to appoint the man who, in their judgment, would be most likely to succeed in accomplishing the objects of that mission. They unanimously selected Emory; and never was a selection more fortunate.

Mr. Emory on his arrival in England held an interview with the Missionary Committee at London, and then proceeded to meet the British Conference at Liverpool. His success was triumphant. A settlement of the Canadian difficulties, on the basis proposed by the General Conference in their instructions to Mr. Emory, was readily effected. The Canadian territory was divided. The British took Lower and the Americans took Upper Canada, and the ministers of each connection devoted their services to their own province.

At the General Conference of 1824, Mr. Emory was elected Assistant Agent of the Methodist Book Concern, and 1828 he was promoted to the place of Principal Agent. In the office of book agent he exhibited a comprehensiveness of plan and an energy of execution which have never been equalled by any of his predecessors or successors. When he entered the Concern, a common store, with a counting-room in the rear, sufficed for the transaction of all the business in the establishment. The books were printed at other offices on contract. They were bound in the basement of the Wesleyan Seminary, in Crosby street, and then conveyed in a wheelbarrow to the Book-room, in Fulton street. How many persons were employed about the establishment at that time I know not. There could not, however, have been a very large force; for the Rev. Johna Soule, on retiring from the office in 1820, reports to the General Conference that he and his associate had not only performed the editorial labor and various branches of clerkship, but had actually, with their own hands, done the packing, hooping, and shipping of the boxes. When Mr. Emory retired from the Concern in 1832, it had become the largest book establishment in the United States, employing nearly two hundred persons, and a capital of more than four hundred thousand dollars.

His literary duties in the Book Concern were discharged with great ability and satisfaction. He selected the books for publication with great care and much discrimination. The Methodist Magazine, which had been commenced in 1818, and had been usually made up of extracts from other works, and of miscellaneous articles, he elevated to the dignity of a quarterly review, and occupied its pages with subjects of general and permanent interest. He employed, so far as could be expected from his multifarious engagements and feeble health, his own pen to enrich its pages. Many of the articles extant from his pen, either in the pages of the Review or in other forms, partake of the character of controversy more largely than is agreeable to most readers. Controversy, however, was not the passion of Emory. He entered the field only to avert or repel the attacks of enemies on the Church, to whose doctrines and Discipline he was most ardently attached. It was his lot to live during the evil days, when excitement in relation to Church government was highly intense. In the contest known in the history of the M. E. Church as the Radical Controversy, which culminated in 1828, and resulted in a large secession from the Church, Emory stood forth, in the front ranks as one of the master-spirits in vindication of "our fathers," and in defense of the system of Church government bequeathed to their sons by Asbury and his coadjutors. The war was waged on the part of the "Reformers," as they chose to style themselves, with the most intense bitterness. The most desperate assaults were made on the Church, and the most violent attacks on the good and great men who had founded it, and who had devoted their all to its edification.

Manfully, boldly, chivalrously stepped forward Emory in defense. He brought to bear in the contest talents of the highest order, and a temper of the smoothest yet keenest edge. Gallantly did he sustain the cause—successfully did he conduct the defense.

At the General Conference of 1832 he was elected Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church. This was an office neither to be sought nor declined. An office of so great dignity and of so efficient means of extensive usefulness could only be accepted, and its responsible duties discharged to the best of his physical, moral and intellectual ability.

It must be conceded that he came into the office of Bishop with very superior qualifications. In literary acquirements he was greatly in advance of all his predecessors and colleagues. He had had the inestimable advantage of thorough training in a full and judicious course of academic education. By classical study he had acquired habits of accuracy, taste and discrimination. By legal study he had acquired critical and logical acumen. By general reading he had become acquainted with the whole range of science, literature and art. By his position in the Book Concern he had acquired habits of application to all the details of business. By his controversy with the Radicals he had become acquainted, more fully than any other man in America, with the theory of Church government. He was, therefore, deficient in no branch of knowledge available in his important position. He excelled in compass and comprehensiveness of mind. Standing at the centre, he could comprehend in one view all the interests of the Church, diversified by physical and moral circumstances. He could bring his varied acquisitions and his indomitable energy to bear on the cause of missions, of Sunday Schools, of education, of the Book Concern, on the best means to secure the property of the Church in meeting-houses and parsonages, and on the efficient administration of Discipline.

He was a man of progressive mind, a movement man, a true reformer. He believed Methodism the "child of Providence," and under obligation to follow wherever Providence might lead. He would not hesitate to change a rule of Church discipline whenever, from a change of circumstances, it might become imperative or expedient. He would advocate such occasional modifications in our economy and usages as would enable us to keep fully up with the spirit of the age and the demands of the times.

My personal acquaintance with him was limited. I had, however, the pleasure of meeting him on a few occasions, among which were two affording me an opportunity to observe the nature and extent of his peculiar talents. One was in 1830, at the organization of the Wesleyan University, of whose Board of Trustees he was a member; and the other was in 1835, at the session of the Maine Conference, at which he presided.

In the debate on the organization of the University he took an active part, exhibiting very intimate acquaintance with the theory of educational enterprises, but betraying some want of experience in the practical details of college instruction and discipline. At the conference at Bangor, in 1835, he presided in a most masterly manner. Never have I seen the presiding officer of any deliberative body render himself so useful and agreeable. During the proceedings of the Conference he gave, on several questions of ecclesiastical law, opinions which, for clearness, accuracy and precision of application, might stand, with honor, comparison with the matured and carefully written opinions of Marshall or Story on questions of civil and common law.

In power of analysis Bishop Emory excelled all men whom I ever heard, either in debate or in the pulpit. He would examine a subject in all its parts, bearings and tendencies. He would hold it up before the mind in every possible light. He would turn it around and around so as to exhibit every face. He would clench it down, as the geologist would a mineral, to its primitive form. He would melt it in the crucible; he would detect all the elements of its composition, and determine their proportions by weight and measure. Truth and error could not long remain intertwined in his hand. He would find the thread, disentangle the snarl, and present before you the skein clear, straight and smooth. The Gordian knot would yield to him without the application of the knife.

While, however, his power of analysis was extraordinary, he did not excel in synthesis. His arguments were not deficient in point; but they had too many points. He was not skilled in plain, direct, precise, cogent reasoning to a single point. He introduced too many subjects but indirectly bearing on his main position. Though a fine classical scholar he was not well trained in mathematics. He had never been drilled in precise and rigid demonstration.

In person Bishop Emory was interesting in appearance. He was small, but straight, neat and perfectly well proportioned. His features were regular and handsome. His voice was pleasant, but feeble. He could not be heard amid noise and confusion; yet so distinct was his enunciation, and so correct were his sentences, that he could easily be heard and understood by an audience very large, if quiet. His manner of preaching was energetic and forcible. His sermons and speeches though wholly extemporaneous, were sufficiently accurate to be taken down by the stenographer and published just as they were delivered.

He was a man of surpassing dignity. It would seem that he had never been a child, never enjoyed a child's sports, never know a child's feelings. He would appear to have been in heart and mind a man from his birth. His letters written to his own wife and to his children are as precise, and formal, and dignified, as are his arguments on the constitutional organization of the Church. He seemed the same every where—in the counting-room, in the pulpit, on the conference floor, in the Bishop's chair, and at the fireside. Yet with all this dignity, which he never for a moment laid aside, or in any way compromitted, he was a most affectionate husband, provident father and constantly reliable friend.

Take him for all in all, he was the very man for the times in which he lived. During the period of his ascendency, from 1820 to 1835, the Church was passing a crisis in many respects. The old order of things was giving place to a new and improved system. A new system of operations, involving the enterprises of missions, Sunday schools, Bible societies, the publishing of periodicals and of books, the founding academies, seminaries and colleges, had become as necessary as was the itinerant ministry itself. All these enterprises had been projected, and most of them commenced by Asbury and his early coadjutors, and they were in operation, most of them, however, on a small scale before Emory's day. Yet just such a mind as his, so comprehensive, so versatile, so discriminating, so liberal, so highly improved by education, was necessary, at that particular time, to mature, perfect and vivify the plans which the Church was forming. Though he died young, yet he accomplished much, very much during the twenty-five years of his ministry, and particularly during the ten or eleven years of his services in the Book Agency and in the Episcopacy.

He traveled always on horseback, in a very plain and primitive manner. Whenever he had a day or two of leisure, in any village along his route, he would spend the time in organizing a Sunday school, a missionary society, or in some other way useful to the people and the Church.

The latter part of the year 1833 he started on his second tour. He rode on horseback from Baltimore to the seat of his first conference, at Natchez, a distance of twelve hundred miles, in fifty days. During this tour, which continued six months, and compassed about three thousand miles, he attended the Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and South Carolina Conferences, and made several excursions to places of interest along the line of his regular route.

On the 16th of December, 1835, he left home early in the morning, in a light, open carriage, for Baltimore. About two miles from his residence he had to descend a hill, nearly a mile in length. The carriage was seen, as it was said, about daylight, passing rapidly by a tavern near the top of the hill. In about twenty minutes a waggoner, passing down the hill, found, about two hundred yards below the tavern, the Bishop, lying bleeding and insensible by the roadside. It appears that his horse had run away with him, and that he had been thrown from his carriage, and had fallen with the back of his head on a stone, which had fractured his skull. He was taken up and carried to the tavern. Medical aid was called, his family and friends gathered around him, but the injury proved fatal. Lingering insensible till evening, he expired. On the ensuing Sabbath his funeral was attended at the Eutaw street Church in Baltimore, and he was laid to rest in the vault beneath the pulpit, where he yet sleeps by the side of the great and good Ashury.

Five children, the oldest about twenty-one years, and the youngest only a few weeks old, were left orphans at his death. The eldest—Robert Emory, afterward President of Dickinson College—was a young man of rare promise, fully equal, perhaps superior to his father. After a very brief but most brilliant career, he died, leaving the world wondering why two such men, father and son, so distinguished, so great, so good, should die so soon. [Ladies' Repository.

BURMAH AND THE EAST.—During the meeting of the Baptist Convention, the Rev. Dr. Bright announced the appointment, by the Executive Committee, of a delegation to visit the missionary stations in the East under the patronage of the American Baptist Missionary Union. The primary cause which had created this necessity, is the expected occupation of Burmah by Great Britain, which will soon throw open this entire country to the entrance of the gospel. The stations of the Union have been hitherto occupied to a certain extent with reference to the protection of the British government, as this enabled them to carry forward their work with so much more vigor and efficiency. The whole of Burmah being soon to be placed on an equal footing in that regard, will possibly make it necessary to change their whole base of operations, and remove their schools, seminaries, printing presses, etc., from the positions which they now occupy, to others more accessible to the new territories now opened.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY AND ACTION.—An age of discovery leads to an age of performance. First comes the science, and then its applications to life. The church is well furnished with grand ideas. It has on its hands comprehensive, evangelizing schemes, whose successful accomplishment will usher in the millenium. What she now wants is agents to execute them. She wants an army of young men, large-minded and large-hearted, and deeply baptized in the Saviour's spirit.

"I CAN WORSHIP GOD AT HOME."

If by this you mean to say that you regard family worship and secret devotions both a duty and privilege, then we fully concur in the sentiment. Every sincere follower of Christ is not only of the same opinion, but practices religion daily and regularly "under his own vine and fig-tree." He feels sincerely grateful for this privilege, and would not wish to be deprived of the blessings and advantages of God among his own familiar household for any earthly consideration. Is he a parent or head of a family? Then he will, like the blessed patriarch of old, assemble the members of his household statedly around the family altar, instruct them in the ways of the Lord, offer up his prayers and thanksgiving in their behalf, and direct all their affairs in an orderly and decent manner. As an individual, the Christian will never loose sight of any of his duties, and will not worthy of his high and holy calling in every respect. He walks circumspectly, uprightly, honestly before a gainsaying world, always mindful of the all-seeing eye of Him who notes in the book of his remembrance not only every overt act of life, but also our "secret faults," and who takes cognizance even of the hidden thoughts and imaginations of the heart. His soul delights in the frequent exercise of secret prayer and meditation; for his delight is in the law of the Lord, and in his law doth he meditate day and night. If, therefore, by saying, "I can worship God at home," you intend to say nothing more nor less than what we have here intimated, then we have not a single objection to offer. We would rather confirm your opinion, and wish it might be more general; that people would entirely discard the fatal notion, as if men were only to worship God in the church and publicly, and not with equal faith, ardor and devotion also in their more retired relations, in their houses, their offices, their workshops, engagements, etc. But if you feel inclined to regard private devotion as a sufficient substitute for public worship, then you will allow us the privilege of stating a few plain reasons why the worship of God at home can excuse no one from neglecting to attend to public worship.

Because public worship is better calculated to inspire us with zeal and holy affection. It is unquestionably of great benefit to Christians to read the Bible, a good sermon or some other book of devotion privately. But who has not observed a marked difference in the effect produced by hearing a good sermon preached and by reading one? Our natures always incline to a spiritual sloth, indifference and heartless formality. But in public worship, besides the quickening effects of faithful preaching, the united prayers and the harmonious singing of a congregation, together with the awful solemnity of the place, have a tendency, to awaken, strengthen and encourage in a manner which none but those who experience it are able to estimate and comprehend.

Private worship should not be substituted for public worship, because of the necessity of Christian fellowship, which is only capable of being promoted by regular sanctuary worship. "Behold," exclaims the Psalmist, "how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity." How vastly different from our Church-shunning professors of religion those pious servants of God in olden times must have thought and felt on this subject. It was their prayer to dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of their life. The tabernacle of the Lord was "amiable" to them. Their souls longed, yea, even panted, "for the courts of the Lord." They called those blessed that dwell in His house; and David declares that he would rather be a door-keeper in the house of the Lord, than to dwell in the tents of the wicked. In public worship not only the spirit of devotion is awakened, and the Christian's heart refreshed and his courage increased, but whilst believers "dwell together in unity," adoring their blessed Redeemer with common affection, breathing the same heavenly element, their hearts become spiritually united, and their affections mutually blended, so that they are under all circumstances enabled

"Kindly to share in others' joy
And weep for others' woe."

We owe it to God that we make repeated public acknowledgment of his mercy and goodness. If we can truly say with St. John that we have passed from death unto life, then let us act decidedly—come out from among the ungodly world, by joining heartily and publicly unto God for all all His manifold mercies, than by humbly participating in the public worship of God? "Oh, bless our God, ye people, and make the voice of his praise be heard." Ps. lxvi., 8.

Again, public worship is a duty which Christians owe to their fellow-men. The Church is, in a very important sense, the medium through which the redemption of Christ is made to flow, and by which it is promulgated. "Ye are the salt of the earth;" "ye are the light of the world," said Christ to his disciples; and, "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify you Father which is in heaven." The world is to be enlightened by Christian example as well as by gospel preaching; and where the former is wanting, the latter is often made powerless and of no effect to the conversion of sinners. Only such as are ignorant of the true nature of Christianity will regard men of upright and honest dispositions as true Christians, whether they attend to their public religious duties or not.

Another reason why we are unwilling to receive the plea, "I can worship God at home," as an excuse for public worship is, because we have little confidence in its truth. We know it to be wrong to impeach the motives of any individual on no other ground than mere suspicion. Yet we repeat the sentiment: Persons who habitually absent themselves from public worship, under the pretense that they practice religion in closets, must either have a mistaken notion of true piety, be under the influence of a spurious religion, or [illegible] even the very form which [illegible] possess. Follow such negligent [illegible] of God from sunrise to sunset; as they pursue their secular business, their shops, fields or travels; how [illegible] secret, read their Bible and [illegible] serious frame of mind on [illegible] All! how many of those who [illegible] can worship God at home, have [illegible] about God and the sacred duties [illegible] ows to him, even for days, [illegible] Alas! how deluded is man! In their [illegible] they serve with their seemi[illegible] peculiar whim or pride [illegible] They are Pharisees in closet [illegible]

OUR NATIONAL RELIGION.

It is a fact too significant to pass without comment that those great men whose lives and labors have stamped nationality upon American character, have been religious men. They were in no instance sectarians—that would have been incompatible with their stations: they did not write theological treatises—the asthrities of this new world gave not enough repose for this to the chief actors in its political destinies. But they feared God. Their minds were pervaded by a strong and wholesome religious sentiment. They prayed and were not ashamed of it. The Christian system was not regarded by them a "cunningly devised fable." In their most solemn and sublime hours they paid it the tribute of their profoundest reverence and faith.

In that line of great men—the American Presidents—we find but one gloomy exception to the above remarks, in the third President. His religious speculations were, however, not industriously and boldly thrust upon the country with the fatal prestige of his political name. His scepticism did not amount to atheism. Even he, in animadverting upon certain things which he considered the sins of his countrymen, said, "I tremble for them, when I remember that the God of heaven is a God of justice."

The Father of his Country was alike admirable in his moral and political precedents. Nearly all of his illustrious successors in office were communicants at some altar of the Church. The iron-browed and iron-willed Jackson meekly bowed at the Cross. For years before his death he was a member of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Polk was baptised into the Methodist Church shortly before his death, having long frequented its sanctuary. Among those of our statesmen, whose greatness could not be added to by office, whose names are household words—our Chief Justices and Legislators—there was a distinct and emphatic recognition, either in conduct or conversation, of the truth, the beauty, the authority of the Christian religion.

In several instances there was one sad abatement—that this recognition was so long delayed. But this does not affect the worth of their testimony to Christianity, though it detracts from them as Christians. The testimony came in an honest time: it was to the point: the decision of their great minds on the "Evidences," was distinct and is a portion of the legacy they have bequeathed to their countrymen.

Fourth-rate statesmen are sometime caught in the flippant and irreverent use of scripture phraseology: they may make a mock at sin; the institutions of Christianity may be contemned and occasional efforts at Shaftesbury ridicule be made by them. So did not the fathers, the founders, and the expounders of our institutions.

These facts should be considered in connexion with another. We have no State religion: no Government Church: no test oaths: no legally prescribed subscription to Christianity in order to reach office and eminence. This religious testimony of our great men is spontaneous, not compulsory—a consideration largely enhancing its worth. It was not bought, it was not bid for. The highest place in the Republic had been reached and held, without it. Infidelity was no constitutional bar to posts of honor and emolument. It was a voluntary subscription and yet they put to their seals that Christianity was true.

Of course this is not claimed as an honor to it—that which has God for its author can not have any lustre or worth conferred upon it by the adhesion of men or angels. But it has its uses. How much our security and happiness, our prosperity and power are due to this prevailing religious sentiment in those who framed and worked and have given character and consistency to our political scheme, can never be too highly appreciated.

The death of Daniel Webster has brought out from a press and people no longer biased by party issues, unqualified and repeated attestations to his religious sentiments. Indeed it is found impossible to do justice to his fame in the absence of those sentiments, so calmly weighed, so clearly conceived and so loftily expressed. He was a representative man and we can not better conclude this writing than by a special allusion to him.

Mr. Webster reverenced the Bible—the book of books. As a critic his sympathy with the sublimity and beauty of the holy scriptures, if not their holiness, was true and necessary. The books of Job and Isaiah he regarded as the finest specimens of sublimity afforded in the compass of human language. The following highly appreciative passage on this subject, we take from a late discourse of Rev. Mr. Clapp of this city, in noticing his death. It is from his table-talk, giving his views to a circle of friends on the literature of the Bible:

"Among other observations, Mr. W. said that he had never read any writing, of any age or dialect so simple, grand, impressive and eloquent as the last chapter of the prophecy of Habakkuk. To illustrate the superiority of its mere literature, he related the following anecdote: A miserable French sceptic (to use his own words) when atheism was all the fashion in France, happened one morning, as he was rummaging a library, to come across a copy of the Bible in his vernacular tongue. He had never seen the book before; had never read a word of it. In utter ignorance of the character of the volume, opening it at random, his eyes, by chance, first lit upon this identical chapter of Habakkuk. He perused the second and third verses. They appeared to his imagination most striking and magnificent. As he went on, his admiration rose to the highest pitch, till he was completely transported. Shutting up the book without the most remote conception of its real origin, he hastened away to announce the discovery to some of his companions. "I have found," said he, "to-day, the most eloquent production which I have ever seen." Indeed, inquired they, "Who is the author?" He replied, "it is one Monsieur Habakkuk;" supposing him to have been of the same country. "My taste," said Mr. W., "is precisely that of the French critic."

Mr. W. continued. "I should like to have a finished portrait of this prophet as he was uttering the prayer in question, drawn by a masterhand, to hang up in my room. I would have given to it such a head as Michael Angelo has imagined belonged to Jesus Christ when on earth. I have seen this head, which in the principal beauty of the celebrated painting of the last Judgment in the Sistine Chapel at Rome. The great artist assigned to our Saviour such a bust as he thought a perfect human being should possess. It is not only universally admired as a remarkable production of genius, but also is admitted to display all those traits, which the modern science of phrenology declares to be essential to the most finished development of the brain."

"The prophet should be represented to be in the midst of the utter desolations which he predicted; in a wide desert, once a blooming district, but now stripped of every verdant and living beauty; and kneeling down beneath a tree once adorned with the loveliest form and foliage, but now leafless and bare; its trunk and branches shattered by the thunderbolts of Heaven, as he is offering up to God the touching ejaculation of the text, "Although the fig tree shall not blossom; neither shall fruit be in the vine; though the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields yield no produce; though the flocks shall be cut off from the field, and there shall be no herds in the stall; yet will I rejoice in the Lord, and joy in the God of my salvation."

His pastor, in the funeral discourse, informs us that he had it in mind to prepare a work upon the internal evidences of Christianity as a testimony of his heartfelt conviction of the divine reality of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. And the following "instruction" to that pastor, from such a source, ought to be worth much to others. How mistaken and false the policy in one who has a dispensation of the Gospel committed to him, to soften its points and generalize its awful truths, in the presence of the great, meanly thinking to make their favor and perhaps do them good:

"Vividly impressed upon the memory of the speaker is the instruction once received as to the fitting way of presenting divine truth from the sacred desk. Would that its force might be felt by those who are called to minister in divine things. Said Mr. Webster: 'When I attend upon the preaching of the Gospel, I wish to have it made a personal matter! a personal matter! a personal matter!!'"

The following passage from a eulogy on one of his early and noble compeers, deserves a record here. It is a high, complete and eloquent testimony to the essentiality of religion to all true greatness and worth:

"Political eminence and professional fame fade away and die with all things earthly. Nothing of character is really permanent but virtue and personal worth. These remain. Whatever of excellence is wrought into the soul itself belongs to both worlds. Real goodness does not attach itself merely to this life; it points to another world. Political or professional reputation can not last forever; but a conscience void of offence before God and man is an inheritance for eternity. Religion, therefore, is a necessary and indispensable element in any great human character. There is no living without it. Religion is the tie that connects man with his Creator and holds him to His throne. If that tie be all sundered, all broken, he floats away, a worthless atom in the universe; its proper attractions all gone, its destiny thwarted, and its whole future nothing but darkness, desolation and death. A man with no sense of religious duty is he whom the Scriptures describe in such terse but terrific language, as living without God in the world. Such a man is out of his proper being, out of the circle of all his duties, out of the circle of all his happiness, and away, far, far away from the purposes of his creation.

"And he died"—feelingly confessing the need of "thy rod and thy staff" in that hour. Live as they may, (and this man's life was not exemplary) men will pray, they must confess to Christ, sooner or later.

THE CONFERENCES.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.—Our exchanges bring fuller accounts. By the Nashville Advocate we learn that an unusual degree of interest marked the proceedings of this body in reference to Education. Reports from the Scholastic Institutions under its care were encouraging. Many of the pupils are pious and numbered as converts at revivals visited upon the Institutions to which they belong. Several young men from Lagrange College were present seeking admittance into the itinerancy. A considerable feature in the proceedings of this Conference was the appointment of a committee of five to nominate the regular standing committees, to prepare and digest business. We note this as considerable. The business of our Conferences, especially those larger ones, would be greatly facilitated by passing through judicious committees. We do not belive in "committee government," but committees have an important use. Rev. J. L. Hill had died triumphantly during the year. Rev. E. H. Hutcher, superintendent, goes to Florida, with affectionate commendation of his brethren, to spend the winter there for his health. Rev. E. C. Slater takes the Agency of American Bible Society. Rev. Joseph Cross appointed to superintendency of Bascom Female Institute, at Huntsville, Ala. On account of deficient returns and a vast emigration from the bounds of the Conference it is thought that the numbers in Church membership will not be in advance of last year's report. The anniversary collection of the Conference Missionary Society yielded about $500.

John Gross, James S. Belton and James A. Patton transferred to to the Alabama Conference. F. S. Petway, J. W. Cooley and Jno. W. Lebetter to Texas. Joel Turrentine to Arkansas. Joseph N. Malone and Jno. Matthews transferred to the Pacific Conference. B. A. Hubbard transferred to Memphis Conference.

Next Conference at Franklin, Tenn., Oct. 12, 1853.

HOLSTON CONFERENCE.—We believe we have not yet given any item of this body which met in Asheville, N. C., Sept. 29, Bishop Capers presiding. The statistics on Sunday Schools are admirably complete, as given in the Holston Christian Advocate. Number of schools in Conference, 311; officers and teachers, 1961; pupils, 11,402; copies of "Visitor" taken, 456; money collected for Sabbath schools during year $519 92. Ascertained conversions in the Sunday schools, 305.

Rev. J. C. Pendergrass was transferred to the Pacific Conference.

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.—This body adjourned (Fredricksburg) 28th Oct., Bishop Capers presiding, in good health. Ten young men were received as candidates for the ministry and one re-admitted. The statistics are healthy. The amount raised for missions is between eight and nine thousand dollars—about an average of twenty-five cents a member. Upwards of $800, raised at the anniversary! Conference collections reached nearly $4000, and the dividends to claimants were struck at eighty-six cents in the dollar. Last year the dividend was 87½. The financial system of this Conference is a model and continues to work admirably. A society for educating the daughters of ministers was organized; the design is to raise a specific fund and the educations to be conducted at a Conference Institute. Something like, though not quite as extensive as the plan now operating well in the Alabama Conference. All the pulpits of the city were tendered to the Conference except—that of the Northern Methodist Church. The Baptist, Episcopal and Presbyterian were freely offered and occupied.

The editor of the Richmond Advocate, from which we get all the above items, says of the proceedings of the Conference:

"Nothing occurred in the progress of the session to disturb the quiet of the body. No vexed questions, no angry discussions, no trials of delinquents, no discordant sentiments, nor unhappy developments pernicious to character and crushing to piety were made known. Every thing was clear, calm and transforming. We have never mingled in a more harmonious body; nor witnessed a richer manifestation of the charities of Christian intercourse. A reason for this may be found in the fact that a large proportion of these men of God were fresh from the fields of glorious revivals, whose influence, like the perfume of roses, was still lingering about their feelings. Besides, sinners were born of God during the Conference—a fact that filled every heart with devout gratitude and pious joy. Under these circumstances, business was transacted with quietness, and the intervals filled up with those communings of spirit which men who bear the heat and burden of a year's toil in the pastoral work, know so well how to enjoy in the season of repose and re-union. And then, too, only one had fallen in the harvest-field; the rest were spared—and while the survivors mourned that one was not, for God had taken him, they rejoiced that he died with the harness on, and was victor even in death. The rest were spared, and they thanked God and took courage.

"FORGET NOT ALL HIS BENEFITS."

By the appointment of Governor Foote, of Mississippi, Thursday past, the 4th inst., was recommended to the people of that State to be observed for Thanksgiving. Whether the notice was extensively circulated and pressed upon the attention of the people, and whether, under the political excitement, running very high on a day so near the Presidential election, the appointment was generally kept we know not. Such acknowledgements of God as the Father of all mercies, the Giver of all good are well becoming the State and Federal Executives. Besides, being proper in fact, they are salutary in their moral effect and noble in example. It were much to be desired that, some day might be agreed on among all the States for this observance; a day, as secure as possible from any peculiar periodic pressure or excitement.

Before us is a proclamation of the Executive of Alabama, in excellent taste and spirit.

Governor Collier, in accordance with a proposition that the "last Thursday in November shall be observed in the present and all future years as a Day of Thanksgiving throughout the entire confederacy," has set apart, by proclamation, the 25th instant, for that purpose in Alabama. He says:

"I do, therefore, recommend to the people of this State, to observe THURSDAY, the 25th November next as a DAY OF THANKSGIVING to the Father of all Mercies, for the blessings He has vouchsafed during the year that is closing, in causing the earth to yield its fruits in unusual abundance, and for the mercy that has preserved so many of us, though pestilence hath walked in darkness, and destruction wasted at noonday. I do further recommend that Divine Service be performed in all places of public worship, and such other observances be had as are proper and usual upon such occasions."

FAMILY PRAYER.—Those were earnest and spiritual exercises that took place at the family altar of Bishop Emory's father in which two of the children were converted. One can allow the "days that are past" to be referred to without an insinuation of creaking, when such things occurred. O, that "in these," such scenes might often be witnessed.

By the way—that biographical sketch of the good Bishop occupies more space than it is our custom to give a single article, but it will repay the reading. One who knew the holy man in life, thinks it is a good and true portrait.

CONFESSIONAL IN THE "ESTABLISHMENT." On first page is given the account of the case alluded to by our foreign correspondent in last week's letter.

The Archbishop of Canterbury is to hold a convocation this month, and, it is supposed, that, among other things, the resignation of the Bishop of Exeter will be recommended. If the Church of England had any discipline it would unrobe such an undisguised Papist.

BISHOP SOULE.—According to the advice of Dr. Boring, Bishop Soule has deferred his visit to California till February.

THE NEW CONSTITUTION of Louisiana has been adopted—majority not yet ascertained.

HELP FOR THE GAULS.

The following extract from the last monthly summary of the Secretary of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, shows the connection of our Northern brethren with the Methodism of France:

"THE WORK IN FRANCE.—For some time past the Wesleyan Missionary Society in England has been disposed to commit portions of their foreign work to the direction of the particular missions under whose care those portions were severally. Among them was the work in France. The Rev. Chas. Cooke, superintendent of the Wesleyan Missions in France, anticipating this change, had been in correspondence with us, with a view to our taking part in the work in France. Some five or six months ago he informed us of a most gracious awakening and revival in a city on the South of France, near on the borders Italy, and expressed an earnest wish to occupy it, by employing the excellent French minister who had been, under God, the instrument in this work; but said that their funds would not allow of their incurring this additional expense. This information was communicated to our Board in New York, and they placed one thousand dollars at the disposal of Dr. Cooke, to occupy the position, leaving our relation to the work to be fixed by us at the close of the year. The Bishop having charge of foreign missions approved of the action of the Board, and instructions were sent to Dr. Cooke immediately to occupy the position, and see whersunto this work would grow. Dr. Cooke immediately employed the minister who had been the instrument which God used in the awakening, giving him a copy of our instructions and views.

"We have a letter from Dr. Cooke containing extracts from the report of the minister whom we sustain, giving us more encouragement than we could have anticipated. We have had from the first a strong conviction that this is a door of invitation to us to take part in the work of evangelizing France, and also to exercise a salutary influence upon the approaches to Italy. But great prudence and much faith are necessary to conduct this delicate and difficult enterprise to a fruitful result. May God give us wisdom and grace as a Church and as an administration to glorify him in this interesting matter."

A CORRECTION.

Readily and cheerfully we publish the following. If injustice has been done to the late editor of the Wesleyan Times or the Reformers, by any statement of our English correspondent, we presume he would be as ready as ourselves to undo it. Meantime, as far as the correctness of the statement complained of is concerned, he is able to speak for himself. "X. Y." is high authority with us, and high at home. When he speculates he speculates like other men and may be misled: but we do not remember to have found him at fault yet on an issue of facts. [ED.

GENERAL WESLEYAN REFORM CON'TE, 11 EXETER HALL, London, Oct. 11, 1852.

To the Editor of the N. O. Christian Advocate:

SIR: The attention of the General Wesleyan Reform Committee has been directed to an article in the New Orleans Christian Advocate, headed "English Correspondent," and dated "Sheffield, August, 1852," in which it is stated that "the editor of the Wesleyan Times has cut the country, and has embezzled three or four hundred pounds of the Reform fund."

We are directed by the General Wesleyan Reform Committee to give this statement the most unqualified contradiction. Mr. Harrison, the late editor of the Wesleyan Times, has not left this country; nor is he in any way indebted to the Reform fund.

Trusting that you will, in justice to Mr. Harrison, insert this in your next paper,

We are, Sir, your humble serv'ts.

METHODIST PRESS.

STATE OF THE CHURCH ON PACIFIC.—The Observer of the 13th and the Ch. Advocate to the 14th October, were received by the last California mail. The state of religion is represented favorably. On the 11th ult., the new Methodist Church (South,) at San Jose, was dedicated—sermon by Dr. Boring. This is represented as a new and handsome brick church, gotten up chiefly by the efforts of the pastor, Rev. A. M. Wyan.

The editor of the Observer acknowledges several subscribers from the old States. It is a worthy shoot, highly important and efficient for our Church in California, and we are glad at the increase of its patrons. Price of subscription per annum, has been put down to $5. To avoid delay and confusion, subscribers in the old States are requested to make payment for the Observer and order it through Dr. Summers, at Charleston, S. C.

Rev. Mr. Russell, from the Missouri Conference (South,) who went across the plains, has "arrived out," in good health, and taken his place. A camp-meeting, at Saisau, is thus noticed, showing the power of the Gospel in California also:

The meeting began on Friday morning. A few gathered in the little school-house, and while listening to Bro. Russell, (who has just gotten across the plains) memory reverted to scenes in past life and the heart glowed in anticipation of a similar enjoyment. On Saturday a few canvass tents were raised, and embowered tables were spread, while from the homely but substantial pulpit the words of life were declared. The contest for the life of attendant souls was begun. Hurd was the battle and long, but the lovers of God wearied not; and on Sabbath, as "the emblems of the broken body and shed blood" were being administered, the cloud broke and showers of grace descended—and from this to the end of the meeting was one continued scene of triumph. Often did the virgin forest reverberate the voices of the rejoicing children of God. And well might they, for then did the prodigal return; aye, many of them. Then was seen the young man in his strength and the old man in his years to bow and plead at a throne of grace. Two aged men, whose heads have begun to "blossom as the almond tree," were amongst the enquirers after salvation. And O, how their inquiries thrilled through the hearts of those who have seen difficulties attendant upon the reclamation of those who were confirmed by the habits of years in their ways. But, thanks to God, the tide of salvation was sufficient, and even these were rejoicing in hope of glory. And thus continued our success until the allotted time was past, and we with full hearts and buoyant hopes separated.

In this meeting was clearly evinced the willingness—aye, the desire of the people, to hear the plain truths of the gospel, and the readiness of God to bless. Never before have we seen persons so easily bring themselves to the point of saying,

"Here Lord I give myself away,
'Tis all that I can do."

An encouraging announcement, of the 13th, is this:

"For several weeks past the accounts of the preachers from their respective circuits and stations have been of the most encouraging character. We receive almost daily accounts of the conviction of souls and upbuilding of the Church. Truly, these are results in which we may and ought to glory. Let it be the constant aim of each missionary to save, by all possible means, the greatest number of souls; in order to which, let the Cross of Christ, and the Throne of Grace be our refuge—our strong tower. We beg to urge on all the preachers the importance of organizing societies, keeping up class and prayer meetings, together with all the usages of the Church."

CHURCH AGENCIES.—In the Nashville Advocate of 28th ult., Rev. L. Rosser reports collections at four "precincts," in Tennessee, for the Washington City Church amounting to $435: (pretty good,) leaving a balance yet to be collected for the relief of the Church of $1500.

In same column, our good Bro. Fields, Agent for the Fowler Institute, East Texas Conference, sums up the results of applications at about fifty places (perhaps one hundred times that number of persons) at $563 34. It does strike us that if there be an "appointment" at which we should halt the itinerant track it would be that of "begging Friar" for some school, college or chapel in debt. It must require peculiar ministerial grace to try steamboats and cold churches, and encounter "closed doors" over and anon from unsympathizing stewards, and in short confront the world's selfishness at large.

Brother F. seems to look at it so too, for he so concludes:

And now permit me, in conclusion, to return my hearty thanks to the donors, and promise the world never to appear before the public again in the capacity of a college agent.

P. S. We are now just ready to leave for our Texas home, and if in the good providence of God, we reach it safely, we shall be content to spend the remnant of our days in that field of our glorious itinerancy.

COMMENDABLE LIBERALITY.—Our cotemporary of the Banner gives us a pleasing view of liberality among the good folk of Texas. It is rather apropos to the above and may draw a swarm of agents upon our good brethren. The editor says, in announcing a missionary meeting:

Rev. J. W. Whipple once said: "If you want money for good purposes, go to the people and ask for it. Texans have never refused to give to do good."

A ROYAL BOTANIST.—There is one King in Europe who is a good practical botanist, and who must look back upon the hours spent in the arrangement of his fine herbarium with far more pleasure than upon those wasted in a vain and retrograde course of politics. The monarch in question is his Majesty of Saxony, who, in his scientific career at least, has gained honor and respect. Many are the stories told by his subjects of their ruler's adventures when following his favorite and harmless hobby; how, more than once, astray from his yawning courtiers, he had wandered in search of some vegetable rarity across the frontier of his legitimate dominions, and on attempting to return was locked up by his own guards as a spy or a smuggler, since he could produce no passport nor give any more probable account of himself than the preposterous assertion that he was their King. Fifteen years ago he made a famous excursion to the stony and piratical little Republic of Montenegro. It was literally a voyage of botanical discovery, and the potentate sailed down the Adriatic in a steamer fitted out with all the appliances of scientific investigation. On its deck he might be seen busily engaged in laying out his plants, ably and zealously assisted by his equerries and aides-de-camp, and guided by the advice of eminent botanists, who accompanied him as members of his suite. Such a kingly progress had surely never been seen before, unless Alexander the Great may have relieved the monotony of conquering by making occasional natural history excursions with his quondam tutor Aristotle. The Montenegrins, on ordinary occasions very troublesome, and by no means trustworthy people—folks who still keep many of the worst habits of the old Scottish Highlanders—were mystified into tranquillity by the peculiar proceedings of their royal visitor and his noble attendants. Resolved, however, to render due honors to so distinguished and unusual a guest, they furnished a guard of state to accompany him in all his peregrinations; and, whenever his botanical majesty stooped to gather a new or rare specimen, the soldiers halted, and with much ceremony presented arms. [Westminster Review.

THE IBERIAN COLONY AT NAUVOO.—We take some statistics of the progress of this community from the semi-annual report, which comes down to the 1st of July last. The society, during the previous half-year, consisted of 365 members—176 men, 101 women, and 88 children: 60 persons were added during the period covered by the report, and 100 new members were expected. The colony had 445 acres of land under cultivation, and was in possession of eight plows, eleven horses, and eight yoke of oxen. The crops have been excellent; 1500 bushels of wheat, 8000 bushels of Indian corn, and 1700 bushels of potatoes having been harvested. Twenty-four men have the care of the fields, and eight of the vegetable garden. The orchards and vineyards are in the highest degree promising, though not yet in bearing condition. Thirty men are employed on the island cutting wood, which is brought to the settlement in two flat-boats. The transportation of fuel in this manner gives employment to seven other men.

The saw mills, cooper shops, etc., supply all the necessities of the colony. The number of fat swine was 30; 150 were fattening for this autumn, and 250 for next year.

The school was not yet in full and successful operation, owing to a want of room; there are other present difficulties in the way, which will be overcome in time.

The musical band consists of thirty-two persons, and both music and the drama have reached a very satisfactory pitch of excellence. The general health has been good, though early in August an attack of cholera carried off six men, ten women and six children.

The finances were also in good condition. On the credit side of the account stands the sum of $42,402; on the debtor $4822—leaving a balance in favor of the society of $36,580.

During the present autumn, ten men will seek a proper place in Iowa for a new and extensive colony. When the foundation of this is fairly laid, Nauvoo will, for the future, be but a place for the preparation and proving of new colonists. [NewYork Tribune.

In one moment we may plunge our years in fatal penitence and color things with hues of night. [Ilyporion.

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Prattville, Ala. Conf.

We have just closed a very interesting meeting at this place, of twelve days' continuance, which resulted in 18 accessions to the M. E. Church South, and about as many conversions. The Church has been much blessed and encouraged: To God be the praise. We have a new Church in building that will soon be finished, at a cost of some eighteen thousand dollars, the whole of which is assumed by Brother D. Pratt. The Church at a recent official meeting have resolved to build a parsonage of suitable size and convenience. Notwithstanding these heavy expenses, our missionary and conference collections, I hope to raise to their usual mark, not beyond. I may further add, that our class and prayer meetings are well attended, and that we have the best go-to-church people I ever saw.

Forkland, Ala. Conf.

While the Lord has been reviving his work in other places, he has not been unmindful of us here. During the year we have had some 60 conversions; 37 whites and 23 blacks, and 64 accessions, 39 whites and 25 blacks.

B. S. WILLIAMS.

November 1, 1852.

Blountsville Dist., Ala. Conf.

I am now nearly round my district the first time, and wish to submit the following hasty report.

On each appointment we have had gracious revival seasons: but not equally successful in every part of the work.

On the District we have held five camp-meetings: one on the Blount Circuit, in Murphy's Valley; one on the Lebanon Circuit, in Little Will's Valley, a new camp-ground; one on Saud Mountain Mission, also a new encampment; one on the Harperville Circuit, Chapel camp-ground, and one on the Warrior Mission, at Liberty.

We held the above meetings under great discouragement, caused by the unusually great amount of sickness prevalent. Even this mountain region has not escaped.

There has also been quite a number of protracted meetings throughout this District, some of which I have attended. More or less they have been seasons of refreshing to the Church, and souls have been converted. To God be all the glory.

I remain yours,

L. B. McDONALD.

Deer Creek, Miss. Conf.

My work embraces all that portion of Deer Creek lying in Issaquena county. When I came to it I found two white persons, a gentleman and his lady, who claimed to be members of our Church, and two others who had letters, and as soon as it was convenient they handed them in; so then we numbered four white persons. As to the colored persons, we found a number of them who claimed to belong to us, but some of them had been acting badly, and as the class-book was lost, and there was no shepherd sent to this flock last year, we had to arrange things the best we could.

We now number 17 white members and near 200 colored ones. I think we are on rising ground. We have built one Chapel here this year, on the upper part of the work, and we would have had another completed, if we could have gotten lumber, and there is but little doubt, in my mind, that it will go up next year.

Mr. Fawl, who is Mr. Hill's agent, talks of and I think will build one for his people.

There are between eighty and ninety white persons in the bounds of this work, and over 1200 negroes, and something like 9000 bales of cotton made here annually.

LOUIS NAPOLEON AND THE POPE.

Although reports are assiduously propagated of the complete success of General Goneau's mission to Rome, the correspondence of the London News says that the Pope will not come to Paris if he can help it; and although his Holiness is now a sept of state prisoner of France in his own palace, he is not so helpless in this matter as might be imagined. He knows that the French Army was not sent to Rome to serve him, but to further the ambitious designs of the French President; and he could afford to disregard as idle any threat to withdraw that army, because the effect of such a measure would be either to place him under the protection of Austria or to produce a republican rising in Rome—circumstances most distasteful to Louis Napoleon than to himself.

The latest story current in official circles is that the Pope, and the elderly cardinals whose duty it would be to accompany him, are afraid of travelling in cold weather, and that the coronation will be put off till May is not the convenience of the head of the church. But there is strong reason to think that the negotiations are in a state far less favorable to the darling object of Louis Napoleon than even this dilatory plea to the "greatest instance of General Goneau would imply.

A Swiss journal, the Echo of Mont Blanc, gives the substance of an autograph letter written to Louis Napoleon by the Pope, full of barren compliments, but expressing no terms, no intention to maintain a neutral position with regard to French politics. The Univers of 30-day reproduces the statement of the Swiss journal in a complete form, and with the evident intention of conveying the impression that the successor of St. Peter has not committed himself to any promise to place the imperial crown with his own hands upon Louis Napoleon's brow. The paragraph is as follows:

"The Pope has just addressed to Louis Napoleon an autograph letter in which, while remaining a stranger to the political direction of the French government, he compliments him on his services to religion, and expresses the desire for the happiness and the union of France. The letter, in which the eminent qualities of the heart of Pius IX are displayed, is a new proof that the ancient rivalry between Rome and France, broken for a moment by the intrigenius of the revolution, will be drawn closer. The holy See will be honored thereby, and the great country whose providential destinies are those of Europe will be happier."

PROPAGATIONS OF THE GOSPEL.—The total income of the British Society for the propagation of the gospel in foreign parts last year, including part of the Jubilee and royal letter collections, and balance, was £167,748. Number of missionaries, lay teachers and students 1100. Field of labor—British North America, West Indies, Guiana, South Africa, India, Ceylon, Borneo, Australia, Tasmania, New Zealand, Seychelles, Tribun. Three countries are now the seat of twenty-two dioceses.

HOW RUSSIA AND PRUSSIA REGARD THE FRENCH EMPIRE.—The restoration of the Empire by Louis Napoleon is now discussed by the Prussian Journals with less freedom than a few weeks ago, when the anti-Bonapartism of the Kreuz Zeitung had not drawn upon it the reprehension of the Ministry. It is noticed, however, that Count Hatzfeld, the Prussian Minister to the French Government, who is now in Berlin, is not about to return immediately to his post, and the inference is drawn that Prussia will hold herself entirely aloof from the important events which are now pending or in progress at Paris. The departure of Count Kisseleff for St. Petersburgh is regarded as significant of the Czar's intention to concur with Prussia in its abstention from the interior affairs of France.

THE MONUMENT FUND.—The Washington Monument Fund is likely, says the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin, to be very handsomely increased by contributions made at the late election. In many places boxes were placed at the polls for the donations of voters, and it is a matter of regret that the plan was not generally adopted. In Baltimore, it is estimated that from $18,000 to $20,000 were thus raised. In Louisville, the sum contributed was $305 82. At Savannah and Augusta also handsome sums were contributed. At Buffalo, the amount contributed was $46 25, and at Cincinnati, $1210.

MARRIED—On the morning of the 3d inst., at the residence of Mr. John Mixon, by Rev. C. Callaway, WM. E. IVY and Miss FRANCES MIXON, all of DaHns co., Ala.

Obituary.

Death is a gloomy subject; yet the consideration of it may be rendered extremely profitable, and is absolutely necessary if, in our best moments, we desire to possess tranquility of peace. The sentence we know has passed upon us, and will ere long be executed, "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." In consequence of man's transgression, death has obtained a universal dominion and he reigns over all creatures with unconfined authority; but his chief trophies of victory are displayed among the children of men. Yet how apt we are to act as though we might miss his destructive shaft! With regard to others the matter appears to us in a proper light. We discern clearly that they are mortal. We wonder at their carelessness and unconcern. We are astonished they could make little or no preparation for the final state they are just about to enter. In the meantime our own condition is overlooked, only that now and then, when a neighbor and friend or a relation falls by the unerring hand of death, the unwelcome truth is pushed home upon our souls and we begin to feel that we are mortal. But the impression fades away.

"For hearts wounded, like the wounded air,
Close; where passed the shaft, no trace is found,
Where the wing no scar the sky retains."

And thus we fail to reap any advantage from the many warning given us, by the various deaths we see and hear of day by day.

May God grant that the death I now record may be sanctified to the good of the family with which the deceased was a member.

MARIS WILLS died Nov. 2, 1852, in Greene county, Ala. He was in his thirteenth year; had been a great sufferer for the last six years. His death was very afflicting to the family—his last born, and the first whose spirit was called back to God—the only one of ten children that has been called from earth. His sufferings are ended. Never again will he say, "I am sick;" never again will he struggle in the agonies of death. Afflicted parents, look upon this as coming from a merciful God, and therefore right. May the brothers and sisters, especially those unconverted, take warning from this first death in the family and prepare to die.

J. WESLEY LANEY.

ALEXANDER TALLEY MIMS, M. D., died Oct. 29th in his 29th year. He was from his infancy the care of the Church, and the subject of many prayers; and it was in answer to these (he believed and often said) that God converted him while very young. In his 14th year he made a profession of faith in Christ, and united himself with the Church. It was a matter of principle with him to acknowledge Christ everywhere, and he therefore always took a certificate of Church membership with him. At home, at Lagrange, Ala., where he was educated, or at Philadelphia, where, in 1844, he received his degree of M. D., in his speech and the company he kept he proved him as a Christian. He was a steward of the Church and leader of the young lady's class in Summerfield. May the young men who composed that class see this notice though scattered over the State, and resolve to imitate his example. The home altar is lonely shaded, the family Bible lies on the shelf.

Brother Mims did not die at home.. We have seen his example, heard his conversations and felt his helping prayers; and we desired to stand around his couch in his last moments, and receive strength to our faith. He died at Cooper's Well, Miss. We are indebted to Dr. J. T. Kennon for all we know of the closing scene. A letter to Col. R. A. Baker, father-in-law, says: "On Wednesday I discovered that he was sinking very fast and must soon die. It was with some reluctance that he admitted the truth of my opinion in his case; but soon he became conscious of his approaching dissolution and spoke with great confidence of the goodness and love of God, and of his acceptance with him. The last request he made was that we should sing for him. It may be said of him,

"That so peaceful was his death,
That he did not die too soon,
And yet, so useful was his life,
That he could not have lived too long."

RESOLUTIONS.

As God in his wisdom has removed from us, Dr. A. T. Mims, of Summerfield, Ala., who was formerly a worthy and beloved member of our Society, we feel that some mote of respect is due to his memory. The church has sustained a heavy bereavement; the community in which he lived has lost an exemplary member, and the Dialectical Society has been deprived of one of her brightest ornaments; therefore,

Resolved, That we deeply and heartily sympathize with the friends and relatives of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a tribute due to his memory we will wear the usual badge of mourning, and also will request our sister Society to unite with us in this expression of sorrow for their bereavement.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the New Orleans and Southern Christian Advocates, and also to the family of the deceased.

[Love varies, necessarily, in its degree and manifestation; still, when it is genuine, it is the same in developed. It is not fitful or capricious, like a wayward child soon pleased and soon offended. It is not evanescent, like the flash of summer's lightning, illuminating the whole of the surrounding scenery by its strong yet momentary radiance. True love—that which is constantly indwells, endures. It is an abiding principle. Indeed, it can not die. It is immortal. It is love which "many waters cannot quench," which the fiercest fires can not extinguish, which the greatest sufferings can not diminish, which the most brutal persecutions can not annihilate. Christian love springs from principle, and principle of the noblest order; therefore, it is by permanent. As regards character, moral excellence, the HEAVY BUSINESS IN COTTON.—A reference to our commercial columns will show that the business in the cotton market during the past week has been on a very large scale, the sales amounting to 73 000 bales. The receipts have been over 61,000 bales, of which 22,535 bales were received yesterday. We believe the week's sales to be the largest ever known in the same time in New Orleans, and yesterday's receipts to be the largest of any one day, counting from morning to evening. The value of the cotton sold during the week is not less than three and a half millions of dollars.

HEAVY RECEIPTS OF COTTON.—The following number of bales were received at this port yesterday, by the steamboats, viz: T. P. Leathers, 2370; Alex Scott, 225; Natchez, No. 2, 2967; Glenly Barks, 3087; Belle Donna, 2455; Caspian, 1204; P. F. Kimball, 500; Frank Lyon, 2197; D. B. Mosby, 1277; Lelia No. 2, 761; Rockaway No. 2, 2113; Lenora, 170; Oregon, 111; Mary Foley, 8. Schr. Jenny Lind, 68. Steamer Southern Belle, 2937.—Total, 22,535 bales.

Meeting of Committee on Funeral Obsequies

CALHOUN, CLAY AND WEBSTER.

The General Committee met, last Thursday, at the office of the Crescent Insurance Company. Colonel Elmore was called to the chair. The Sub-Committee, who had been appointed to report a programme, made the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

1. That the ninth day of December be set apart as a day of general mourning; that all places of public and private business be closed, and that the same, together with the dwellings of our citizens, be draped in mourning, and further that the flags of the shipping and public buildings be hoisted at half-mast, and that the several churches and city bells be tolled during the day.

2. That a committee of five be appointed for the special purpose of inviting and of soliciting the attendance of our various military companies, fire department, benevolent and other associations on the occasion of the funeral ceremonies.

3. That our citizens be requested to meet in their respective Wards at an early hour, organize, and march to such place as may have been assigned for them in the procession.

4 That Chief Justice Eustis be requested to deliver the Eulogy on John C. Calhoun; Judge McCaleb that on Henry Clay; and Hon. Christian Roselius that on Daniel Webster.

5. That thirty-one pall-bearers be appointed by the Committee of Arrangements, one native from each State.

7. That Col. Charles A. Labuzan be appointed Grand Marshal; Gen. Tracy, 1st Assistant, and that the Grand Marshal have full power to appoint one Marshal from each District of the city; and such other Aids as he may require, and that the preparing of the Programme of the Procession be left to his direction. In connection with the Committee of Arrangements. Committee further reported that they have appointed Messrs Holbrook, Harris and Place as a Committee to examine and select for Funeral Car and Cenotaph, and Messrs Cushing, Harris and Cohen to procure suitable places to deliver Eulogies, which committee would make their respective reports.

Mr. Place, Chairman of the Committee on Funeral Car and Cenotaph, reported they had examined various places and had selected the plan for a beautiful car, with six horses; and a Cenotaph, to be built on Lafayette Square. Their report was adopted.

Mr. Cushing, Chairman on Selecting Buildings, reported that the Board of Directors of Odd Fellows' Hall, had kindly offered the use of their Hall; that the Lyceum Hall could be obtained; and no doubt the session of Dr. Scott's Church would give the use of their building. On motion, the Committee of Arrangements were authorized to engage all the buildings.

Arnold Hagers, T. A. Adams, W. L. Cushing, T. J. Durant and V. Weckman, were appointed a committee to invite various societies.

The following gentlemen were appointed a committee of arrangements, with full powers and control:

A. M. Holbrook and William L. Cushing, on the part of the citizens. Aldermen Lugenbuhl and Harris, on the part of the Board of Aldermen. Aldermen Place and Watkins, on the part of the Assistant Aldermen; Messrs. Elmore and Cohen, on the part of the bar.

LAW SCHOOL.—Louisiana University.—The lectures in this ably conducted institution commenced on last Monday evening, in the room of the United States Circuit Court. The large class in attendance this session is conclusive evidence of the high reputation the Professors enjoy, not only in Louisiana, but throughout the South-west.

Professor Randell Hunt, Dean of the Faculty, opened the session with an introductory lecture, replete with a fund of legal, classical and historical learning, which was listened to by a highly intelligent audience with unflagging attention. On Wednesday evening, he lectured on Commercial Law, giving an accurate and eloquent history of that beautiful system of jurisprudence. He called the Commercial Law, "the law of honor and of good morals."

Judge McCaleb, Professor of Admiralty and International Law, delivered an introductory lecture to his class on Tuesday. His elegant diction, correct views, and happy delivery, completely enchained his audience.

Sidney L. Johnson, Esq., a member of our bar, of fine abilities, has been elected Professor of Common and Constitutional Law and Equity Jurisprudence, in the place of Judge Thomas H. Monroe, resigned.

Christian Roselius, the distinguished Professor of Criminal Law, has been absent from the city for some days on professional business, but returned yesterday in time to deliver his introductory lecture. Professor Roselius displayed a masterly knowledge of the subjects upon which he touched, and the clearness and logical arrangement of his lecture was the theme of all who had the fortune to hear him.

CRIMINAL STATISTICS.—The arrests in the First District during the last month were of males 155; females, 86. Second District—Males, 626; females, 132. Third District—Males, 241; females, 54. Fourth District—Males, 138; females, 13—total, 1748. Half of the prisoners were drunk when arrested. Of the arrests 16 were for assaults with dangerous weapons; 9 for carrying concealed weapons; 7 for robbery; 3 for murder, 4 for passing counterfeit money.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report of this institution for the week ending Saturday the 6th inst.: Admissions 461; discharges 376; deaths 100; remaining 884.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION STATISTICS.—We extract from the Baltimore Sun the following statistics:

The number of votes cast at each of the Presidential elections, for the past twenty-five years, was as follows:

Years.	No. of Votes
1828	1,162,418
1832	1,289,408
1836	1,501,298
1840	2,402,690
1844	2,704,031
1848	2,878,613

From these figures it will be seen that the number of voters in the country in 1848 was nearly equal to the whole population of the country, at the close of the revolutionary war.

The following table shows the electoral majorities since 1828:

Jackson's (democratic) majority in 1828	95
Jackson's	....	1832	152
Van Buren's	....	1836	46
Harrison's (whig)	....	1840	174
Polk's (dem.)	....	1844	35
Taylor's (whig)	....	1848	36
Pierce's (dem.)	....	1852 probably	278

General Pierce has, beyond doubt, beaten all former competitors in the Presidential race, since the existence of the present parties.

CROPS AND WEATHER.—The Point Coupee Echo says: "Although the weather is very warm the cane is yielding finely on all the plantations that we have heard from. We have never before seen so many finely grown canes as are now exhibited by the curious in such matters; and they are not only large, but full of highly concentrated juice. We were told yesterday that the plantation of Mr. Hunter, on Fulse river, was yielding three hogsheads to the acre. This is hard to beat, and at this early part of the season, entirely unprecedented."

The Caddo Gazette says: "There was a heavy frost at Calhoun ville in this State, on Wednesday morning—the first of the season at that place."

The Natchez Courier, of Tuesday, has the following: "The storm of Saturday last purified the atmosphere, the wind shifting from due east to northwest, bringing a bracing atmosphere and a white frost on Monday morning. The heavy-headed visitor, was a welcome guest to our business men, as it will have a tendency to chill the lying tongues of those who have been circulating falsehoods relative to the health of Natchez."

NEBRASKA TERRITORY.—The people of this Territory held an election in October, for a delegate to Congress, which resulted in the choice of Abelard Guthrie; though a letter states that there was a possibility that Guthrie was beaten by his opponent, Major Barron. The letter states, further, that the United States officers resident in the Territory opposed the movement—as did also numbers of the white inhabitants, on the ground that the movement was a revolutionary one, they believing that application should first be made to Congress.

A COLLEGE ROW.—Forty-seven students at Williams' College, Mass., were expelled a few days ago, because they ascended Greylock mountain against the orders of the Faculty. All the students subsequently refused to attend their recitations until the act of expulsion was revoked.

SOLDIERS OF '70.—The corner-stone of the "Soldiers' Monument" was laid in Milford, Ct., on the 28th ult., in the presence of one thousand or twelve hundred persons, and an address was delivered by Gov. Seymour. It is intended by this monument to honor the forty-six brave martyrs who died and were buried in one common grave, from on board the celebrated Jersey prison ship Asia, in 1777.

RESIGNED.—Judge Ed. S. Dargan has resigned his seat on the bench of the Supreme Court of Alabama.

FOR AUSTRALIA.—The New York Express says: There appears to be no diminution in the Australian movement, judging from the number of vessels advertised to leave for the new El Dorado, "with dispatch." The fine ship Queen was dispatched last week by Messrs. R. W. Paauron, and John Ogden. His Wolf street, the agents of the Pioneer Line of Australian packets, with one hundred and seventy passengers, chiefly from Canada, and from the admirable manner in which the ship was fitted and provisioned, they will have a pleasant passage we doubt not. The beautiful ship Seargo of the same line succeeds the Ocean and will probably sail about the end of the current month. The Seargo is a first class ship only two years old, and the elegant manner in which she has been fitted up, in the regard of sailing, sleeping and ventilation, reflects much credit on her philanthropic agents.

Thirteen vessels have already left this port and Boston for Australia, since the movement first commenced, with an aggregate of 1788 passengers. We notice by our European files that the movement is on the increase there, and vessels were leaving ports in England, Ireland and Scotland nearly every day, crowded with passengers. Strange as it may appear, emigration from Germany to the United States this year exceeds that from England, Ireland and Scotland! This is owing to the extensive emigration from Great Britain to Australia.

SECRETARY CONRAD AND GEORGE LAW.—New York, Nov. 10, 10:20 A. M.—George Law, one of the proprietors of the Pacific mail line of steamships, has published a letter accusing Mr. Conrad as acting falsely in the matter of the Crescent City difficulty. Mr Law says that while Mr Conrad was announcing that the Government was taking active measures to vindicate the rights of American citizens in this matter, he was, at the same time, endeavoring in private to effect the discharge of Rogers Smith and the removal of Lieut. Porter from the Crescent City. [Pic. Picayune.

HEMP CROP.—The amount of hemp raised up the Missouri river, will fully equal last year's crop; and it is thought the first will be finer. Some few crops will be deficient, as is always the case—but the generality of them are fully average, and the number of acres put in rather increased. The old hemp crop has mostly gone forward. The steamboats are rarely taking any of the old crop to market. What is on hand is reserved for the manufacturers at home, who are giving as high as $180 a ton. The new crop in the entire State may be estimated at over 60,000 bales.

TAKING THE BLACK VEIL.—The ceremony of taking the black veil by three young ladies took place at the Convent of Visitation, in Baltimore, on the 3d instant, the Most Rev. Archbishop Kenrick officiating on the occasion. The names of the young ladies who took the veil, together with the names by which they will be designated in the community to which they have attached themselves, are as follows: Miss Mc Virginia Bunting, of Baltimore, to whom the name of Sister Mary Frances was given; Miss Caroline Pratt, of Baltimore, who assumes the name of Sister Mary Samuel; Miss Mary Tarleton, of Baltimore, who assumes the name of Sister Mary Chantal.

ADULTERATION OF WINES.—The London Economist states that there are some eighteen or twenty establishments in London which paid duty in 1853 for 148,810 gallons of manufactured wines. Since then the annual produce has increased to about 600,000, of which about 60,000 gallons are British port, ginger, green ginger, orange, raisin, black currant, white currant, red currant, raspberry, cowslip, elder, champagne, port, sherry, and tent, are all manufactured in one house in London. They are all made much in the same way, and about equally spirituous, and flavored with the fruit from which they are named. Champagne is made from French grapes; rape wine is used in the manufacture of port and sherry; tent is made from the black sherry. British port and sherry can be sold retail at 1s 2d a bottle. British champagne is sold to the trade at from 24s to 28s a dozen, but the consumer has to pay 4s to 6s a bottle for it. These facts are now stated as an argument for the reduction of the import duties upon foreign wines.

SUGAR IN SOUTH CAROLINA.—The Charleston Mercury says that a friend has presented the editor with several stalks of sugar cane, grown upon his plantation in one of the neighboring parishes. The cane is of the striped or ribbed variety, some of the stalks containing seventeen and eighteen perfect joints. Enough is raised on one acre of land to make from three to four barrels of sugar and ten barrels of molasses. There is but little trouble or difficulty in the process, the common plantation pots answering every purpose for boiling, etc. The Mercury thinks this is a matter eminently worthy the consideration of the planters, especially in the low country, as a moderate supply of the products of the cane is greatly conducive to the health and comfort of the negro.

BRAZIL.—The annexed paragraphs show that Brazil is waking up to the importance of steamboats and railroads:

"An exclusive twenty years' privilege had been granted by the Brazilian Government to Senor Pedro de Alberquerque, a wealthy proprietor of Bahia, for establishing steam navigation between that city and Maceio, by a Northern line, and Carravellas by a Southern line of steam packets. A privilege for thirty years had also been conceded to Senor Irenen Evangelista de Sousa for the navigation of the river Amazon by steamers. In one day the 3000 shares of this company, representing a capital of 1200 contos, were subscribed for."

In a Pernambuco paper we find the following paragraph:

"By advices from Rio de Janeiro, we learn that Messrs Edward and Alfred de Morsey had obtained from the Government of this country the right of privilege to make a railway from this city through the interior of this province as far as the village of Agua Preta a distance of about twenty-five leagues. This grant is for the term of ninety years, but yet required the confirmation of Parliament, which, we believe, may be considered a form only."

IRON SHIPS.—As a good deal of attention has lately been given to iron ships, it may be interesting to ship owners to know that the iron bark Richard Cobden, now being overhauled in No. 1, Canning Graving Dock, was, on Wednesday last, bored through one of apparently the worst and most corroded plates in her. Mr W F. Sim, the managing owner, being anxious to ascertain what the actual diminution in thickness would prove, after eight years' breathing about between this and the East. The result was, that the plate operated upon turned out to be precisely the same thickness that it was when the ship was launched in 1845—namely, nine-sixteenths of an inch on the sixth tier from the keel. The only part of the vessel which, on examination, exhibited any corrosion, and that only slightly, was the bow, where the anchor and chain had chafed the joint or seating with which the vessel is covered as a preservative, and which appears to perform its office effectually.—[Liverpool Albion.

HEALTH OF CITIES.—The following statement comprises the deaths in some of the Atlantic cities for the week ending October 30, and their proportion to the population:

	Deaths.	Population.	Proportion.
Boston	50	138,788	1 in 2478
New York	301	517,849	1 in 1720
Philadelphia	167	350,000	1 in 2095
Baltimore	83	160,625	1 in 1817
Charleston	31	43,014	1 in 1387
Savannah	00	10,000	1 in 000

THREE CENT PIECES.—The Philadelphia Ledger says of the operations of the Mint, during the month: "The manufacture of three cent pieces has been immense—2,060,800 pieces were coined, representing in value $60,000, last month, the coinage of this very convenient little piece was over a million and a half, and the amount then was thought to be immense. Large as this supply is, it does not exceed the demand. The Treasurer has now but a few on hand."

A BOSTON MILLIONAIRE.—The Boston Mail states that the yearly income of a certain rich citizen of that town would buy twelve hundred farms. His income—six per cent. on his entire wealth—would amount, daily, to more than the wages of two hundred hard working men. His income would buy a bottle of Schneider or a pair of boots every three minutes. Every breath the old man takes is worth another sixpence. His enormous capital, commands the toll of one thousand laborers and mechanics yearly to pay the interest.

PROFITABLE CRUISE.—The bark N. D. Cook, which arrived lately in the port of Beverly, Mass., after a cruise of one year in the South Pacific, landed 420 barrels sperm oil, which was immediately disposed of in Salem at $1 21 per gallon.

INTERESTING RELICS.—The Journal of Commerce states that the identical pulpit in which George Whitfield preached his powerful sermons in England, was brought over to this country a few days ago, and is now deposited at the Tract House at New York, in the rooms of the City Tract Society. It is about six feet high, nearly square at the top, and is a light frame-work of hard wood.

Madame Henriette Sontag gave eight concerts in Philadelphia lately, in succession, and it is said the gross receipts of these concerts amounted to $24,400, and her nightly expenses are stated to be from $900 to $1000.

THE ALABAMA RIVERS.—The Mobile Advertiser says: At Montgomery, the Alabama was rising fast on Sunday evening, appearances betokening continued rains in the interior. From the Higbee, the steamer Julia reports heavy rains at Demopolis, and a passenger by her informs us that at that point the water had risen eighteen inches in six hours. The report of a rise in the Warrior, at Tuscaloosa, noticed by us a day or two since, is confirmed.

AN AMERICAN MAN-OF-WAR AT TRIESTE.—A correspondent of the Tribune writes from Trieste on October 1, as follows:

"The American steamer San Jacinto, has attracted a vast crowd of visitors of all ranks and classes, from the Governor of the city down to poor starved Hungarians who harbor here. Unfortunately for our reputation, she is here for repairs, her engine having proved to be a lame affair. The officers and crew do not compare unfavorably with the best of the great naval school established here. There is an ease and openness of manner which appear in strong contrast with the haughty bearing of the minions of despotic power. It is well, just now, to send our war vessels into the ports of Europe. The appearance helps to encourage the people by keeping attention fixed upon us, and thus presenting topics of conversation. The stars and stripes are synonymous with freedom everywhere, and the people look upon them with much more affection than kings. By such intercourse we can exert a good influence upon the cause we wish to prosper."

Telegraphic Items.

NEW YORK, November 12.

The following are the heads of chief interest brought by the Humboldt and Canada:

England—Repudiation—Indian War—Cuba Affairs.

The Stock Exchange in London has been thrown into something of a panic by advices of the repudiation of the Turkish loan by the Sultan.

Later accounts from India state that some fights had taken place, which had resulted in the destruction of detachments of the British troops by the Burmese, and the latter were marching on Rangoon.

The London Times has turned its attention to Cuban affairs, and has put forth an article favoring the view that it is the true policy and interest of Louis Napoleon to protect and defend Spain against the aggressions of the United States upon Cuba.

Franco—Infernal Machine—Succession.

Another infernal machine has been discovered, evidently designed for Louis Napoleon. The machine was found at Fontainbleau.

Paris continues tranquil.

To avoid discussion, the only question to be submitted to the people is: "Shall the Empire be hereditary in the direct line of Louis Napoleon, and in the event of no male issue, shall he have the right to name his successor?"

The Pope declines the invitation to visit France, and place the crown on Louis Napoleon's head.

TURKISH LOAN.—The French Ambassador has threatened to leave Constantinople, unless the refusal to ratify the Turkish loan be rescinded.

British Naval Preparations.

—Ten line of battle ships of the British Navy are now being outfitted up with screw propellers.

LOUISVILLE, November 12.

One house in this city, and four in Cincinnati, have commenced cutting and packing pork. The weather is cold.

California Steamer.

NEW YORK, November 12.

The steamer Illinois has arrived from Aspinwall, bringing two millions dollars worth of gold.

EARTHQUAKE.—A slight shock of an earthquake was experienced at Petersburg, Va., on the night of the 21inst.

Arrival of the Philadelphia.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

The United States mail steamship Philadelphia, Captain McGowan, arrived Wednesday from Aspinwall, with one hundred and fifty passengers, and the California mails to the 10th ult.

The Philadelphia left Aspinwall at eight o'clock on the evening of the 4th instant. The U. S. mail steamship Illinois, Captain Hartstein, left at the same time for New York with the mails, about three hundred passengers, and $2,500 000 in gold dust.

The health on the Isthmus is reported to be much better than heretofore, and the rainy season is nearly ended.

On the morning of the 8th instant exchanged signals with a Spanish brig of war, cruising off Cape San Antonio. Saw, also, on the afternoon of the same day a steamer, supposed to be English, standing to the eastward.

Left at Aspinwall the bark Cuba, Captain Sherwood, discharging coal, and to sail in ten days for Laguna. Also, the ship Camilla, of New York, discharging railroad iron.

The steamship United States was at Aspinwall, when the Philadelphia left, waiting the arrival of the Curlez on the other side.

CONDITION OF EMIGRANTS.—The State Journal says that Col. Ross arrived in Sacramento from Carson Valley, and reports snow on the mountains four feet deep. Beyond doubt a large number of persons will have to remain in the valley over winter, and that too with a very limited supply of provisions.

TREMENDOUS SHIPPER OF GOLD DUST.—By far the greatest shipment of gold dust ever made from this city semi-monthly, goes forward to-day from the banking house of Page, Bacon & Co., the amount reaching the enormous sum of $501 351 09.—[Union.

STRANGERS.—The Alta California speaks of the influx of strangers into San Francisco as extraordinarily large.

A POLITICAL EXCITEMENT.—The building of the State Penitentiary having been contracted for at two millions five hundred thousand dollars, a great amount of indignation is poured forth from the press.

FREE SOIL TICKET.—A Free Soil Convention was held at San Francisco and Electors for Hale and Julien were appointed.

GOLD.—The shipments of gold from California from the 1st to the 10th of October, amounted to about $5,000,000.

MINING INTELLIGENCE.—Parks' Bar.—Island Bar Company is doing literally well, though not so well as they have done heretofore. Their receipts for the last week's operations amount to something more than $2000.

The company adjoining, seem to be cursed in all their attempts to get into the river. Most of what has been done has been undone some two or three times, and thus they are kept out. This company is called the Parks' Bar Mining Company.

The Squad company, also in order in the river, is entirely forsaken, there being no one to be found. It is believed, however, differently, and that determination necessary to a successful issue is the great cause of failure.

Other companies following the Squad are doing well; and the Middle Company, just about getting in, is expected to astonish the natives. It adjoins the celebrated Perry wing-dam, which, during three days' operation, ending Saturday, have taken out six pounds of the precious.

Miners are wanted up on Ohio Bar.

The Perry-wing-dam took out last night, Oct. 10, 175 ounces of dust—they are working night and day.

We take from the Alta California, the following general summary of California news, and news from all parts of the Pacific.

From Oregon, our advices are as late as the 9th. We have offsetting reports of desolation among the newly-arrived immigrants across the plains. The citizens were taking active measures for their relief, although the Governor had not yet dispatched a relief train. It only required a few Government agents, of the order of Governor Rigler's appointments to this State, to dispense water and provisions to the immigrants, and their miseries would be complete. Numbers are constantly arriving in the territory, and they bring tales of distress of the parties who are still backward. It is said that over one thousand wagons were behind. The crops, this season, throughout Oregon, have been generally good.

From the Sandwich Islands we have advices to the 11th of September, though the news is barren of interest. The exclusion of the Kingdom is in a most deplorable state. A loan is talked of. The government organ thinks that the current year will close with the debt of the ordinary augmented to $100 000, at twelve per cent. interest. This is a heavy burden for a government whose sources of revenue are so crippled as those of the Hawaiian Kingdom. The U. S. frigate St. Lawrence was at this at last accounts. There had been a seizure of a California vessel loaded with liquors, for an infringement of the Honolulu revenue laws.

From Tahiti the news is no later than was reported by the steamer of the first inst. An extremely interesting posture of affairs is described in these accounts. The effect upon the part at the English Commodore to set up a new order of government on the leeward islands is particularly entertaining. This is a newly-bred "Mosquito" humbug. Perhaps the newly-created French Vice Admiral for the Pacific will clip its wings.

From Australia we have files of Sydney papers to July 7. The village of Bendigad, on the north bank of Murrumbidgee, was destroyed by a freshet on the 26th of June, between sixty and eighty lives were lost. The town has been completely ruined. The rains had been very severe. Business was brisk, and provisions high. The gold discoveries are reported to extend and increase in value over an immense surface of country. Fortunes are being made, it is said, with great facility, and hundreds of English emigrants are arriving in the country almost daily. The amount of first and "nuggets" shipped to England, on the 23d and 25th of June, was 250,000 ounces.

The Peruvian Government have added to their naval fleet a frigate named the Mercedes, making in all five vessels of war now owned by that Republic.

The country was perfectly quiet, and there was no appearance of any further difficulty occurring with Ecuador in reference to the Flores expedition.

The Valparaiso Reporter says that the National Guard in Arequipa, placed on a better footing by Gen Echenique, has effectually restrained their ever-ready propensity for revolution.

The Yankee expedition to the Island of Lobos—which they denominate a piratical expedition—and the general feeling throughout the country seems to tend to this effect. Much is spoken of the railway from Pacasmayo to Arica, contracted for by Government with Messrs Began & Co., which it is supposed will advance the interests of both cities considerably.

It is also proposed to raise a capital of $2,000,000 to finish the Ucchucuma canal.

The Charge d'Affaires of the United States has issued a circular to the masters and owners of vessels belonging to citizens of the United States. After stating that depredations had been received from the Government "that no countenance or protection shall be given to the authors" of enterprises against the Lobos Islands, says:

Now, therefore, the undersigned, Charge d'Affaires of the United States of America to the Republic of Peru, having in view the interests of both nations and being desirous of preventing any collision, encounter or dispute between the masters, captains and crews of vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, arriving at the said Islands of Lobos, and the Peruvian authorities and forces stationed there, hereby warns the said masters, captains and crews to abstain from using any acts of violence or force, to obtain guano from the said Islands, but on the contrary, if duly notified by the authorities, not to land guano there, that they proceed with their vessels to other destinations or to the port of Callao, where they will be chartered, in the form, by the agents of the Peruvian Government, to carry guano for its account; or where they can await the further orders of the owners of their vessels, if it be the will of said masters or captains so to wait, in preference to accepting a charter.

Lima, October 1, 1852. J. RANDOLPH CLAY.

The Panama Star says:

We further learn that the force hitherto stationed at the Islands is to be withdrawn, and merely a schooner kept there to enter into contracts with the American vessels as they arrive.

The Panama Star has papers from Guayaquil to the 30th September.

On the 30th September the Assembly elected General Urbina as President, and Pacifico Chiriboge Vice President of the Republic.

The Assembly has declared the acts of Nubon's Congress null and void. This insures, will expel the Jesuits, for it was only by virtue of a special act of that Congress that they were received in Ecuador soon after their expulsion from New Granada.

The correspondent of the Star says:

I noticed in one of your late papers a statement that the French Charge to Ecuador had asked and received his passports on account of insults from this Government. In my judgment the Charge had no just cause of complaint when he demanded his passports. It was almost universally believed here that the Charge, and the captain of a French corvette, then at Guayaquil, had for several months been doing all they could to thwart the Government and the people in their efforts to repel them. This very naturally excited the popular feeling against them; and one of the newspapers of the city, having no connection whatever with the Government, published some offensive remarks upon their conduct, of which the Charge complained to the Government. The Government proposed to refer the matter to the proper legal tribunal for investigation, but the Charge wanted the press to be proceeded against after the manner of the Prince President. This the Government declined, and therefore, as I am informed the Charge asked his passports.

In the feeble republic of South America the spirit of democracy has to contend continually against the efforts and intrigues of some of the representatives of European kingdoms and despotisms. The mighty spirit, however, will overcome all obstacles.

The U. S. steamer Massachusetts arrived here on the 10th instant, bound home, having stopped at this port to examine, and, if necessary, to repair her bottom. She sails to-morrow. Captain Carter and the other officers are all well.

Arrival of the Daniel Webster.

The steamship Daniel Webster arrived yesterday morning, from San Juan, bringing dates from California to the 10th ult., the same as received by the Philadelphia.

The Webster brings passengers from California via San Juan and Navy Bay, having touched at the latter place on the 23d inst., and awaited the arrival of the passengers per the Oregon, of the mail line.

The vessels left at Navy Bay were: steamships Illinois, Philadelphia, United States, and ship Camillus, of New York. The United States was awaiting the passengers per the Cortes, which left San Francisco on the 20th October. A vigorous opposition was anticipated between her and the Illinois.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival last evening of the steamer James L. Day, we have received Galveston papers to the 5th inst. and our exchanges from the interior.

MINING COMPANY.—The Lagrange monument has been informed that a mining company is organizing in Bastrop for the purpose of digging a silver mine which has been discovered about two hundred miles above Austin. A number of individuals have already been at work in the mine, and have met with sufficient success to induce them to return with as large an accession as they can obtain to their number. The company except to spend the winter at the mine, and as it is in the midst of the Comanche hunting grounds, they will doubtless run some personal risk.

GREAT LAND SALE.—The great sale of land at San Antonio was to take place on the 8th inst. The Ledger, of the 28th ult., says:

"Fifteen thousand acres of land within thirteen precincts will be exposed at auction. It may surprise many at a distance how we own such valuable property. Over one hundred years ago, by legal enactment, the town proper secured an area of about forty thousand acres. The late Supreme Court quieted the title to this tract by vesting it in the city. The survey ranges the lots from a single acre to one hundred, according to the position of the land. The terms of the sale are peculiarly favorable, being one-fifth cash, and fifty years credit on the balance, with the payment of eight per cent. interest. The inducements for investment are overpowering."

NEW SUGAR.—We saw a few days ago, says the Univerton Journal, a sample of new sugar made on Dr. Desmuke's plantation at Liberty, by Mr. C. Bryan. It would bear comparison with the best Louisiana sugar.

FEVER.—This disease is prevailing, to a considerable extent near San Augustine. Several deaths had occurred.

COFFEE TREE.—The San Antonio Ledger says: In the yard of Major Calvert, at Seguin, we saw a legitimate coffee plant. His good lady discovered a coffee grain in the act of sprouting, and placed it in the earth. The little tree is now about three feet high, and covered with yellow blossoms and pods of the latter of which are some nearly matured. It is as yet but two years old, and the only care bestowed upon this tropical stranger, has been, to screen it from rude northers.

Issue of the Questions with America.

[From the London Spectator.]

New Orleans is the scene of a procession, composed of the usual elements of popular processions in the great cities of the United States—citizens, associations, firemen, and military volunteers; but there are three incidents to the procession not usual in themselves, which lend even to the commoner elements an air of the extraordinary: those three incidents are, the torch-light, the hearse and trappings, and the body of men once prisoners and now parading in an organized threat against those who had imprisoned them. It is the anniversary of the capture of Lopez in Cuba: the ceremony is intended to commemorate the death of that leader and of his American companions; the returned prisoners are the Americans who succeeded in escaping from Cuba. The fire companies, it will be remembered, are the flower of American youth; and the presence of the "well-known" citizens and of the volunteers, who form the major part of the United States army, lends to so irregular an exhibition a remarkable sanction, social if not almost official. In the ordinary view, this public ceremonial to commemorate the defeat of a piratical attack is a great public scandal; but it is evident that the community of New Orleans does not account it as such. Old England and Young America see the question of public morals from different points of view, and it hardly belongs to either side dogmatically to assume for itself that it is in the "right" or the other in the "wrong." English morals would not justify the seizure of Cuba, and yet American morals mourn the failure of the last expedition, and are preparing a second, actively making ready in Charleston and elsewhere.

It would not be easier to come to any common agreement on the right or wrong even of those other questions between England and America which have a more distinct issue and an official recognition. Even when the right can be laid down in the abstract, it is not always open for practical ascertainment. Separate and partial grounds are taken up by the two sides in the still unsettled Fishery question. The Yankees are obstinate; the colonists complain, with the Quebec Mercury, of the "shameful" direction of national duty in the Government of Great Britain; and in the meantime there are already signs that the fishers of the two countries will go on as before, encroaching and resisting, until some tangible quarrel be established. The technical right of the treaty has been aliased by the practical concession made in the nonconclusive settlement; but it is perfectly evident that neither of the parties which moots the question in its practical form would wait for technical niceties, and equally evident that neither side can be satisfied save at the expense of wrong.

The right in the case of the Lobos Islands is much more clear, and at the beginning of this week to us in England the wrong seemed much more imminent. Adventurers are fitting out a privateer expedition, and are duly notifying it to the Government at Washington; enclosing documents on the subject, the first headed by the letter from Mr. Jewett, which drew forth Mr. Webster's first reply sanctioning the American claim of access to the guano; a sanction which is also cited in a very marked manner as official. Mr. Abbot Lawrence's letter to the National Intelligencer, denying that he had consented on the part of the United States to "the monopoly of the Lobos' Islands between Peru and Great Britain," is so worded as to imply that he regards the tenure upheld by Peru as such a joint "monopoly." Mr. Webster, indeed, has virtually revoked his license, and has notified that the "private war" will not be supported by the Government or Navy of the United States; but we have not yet heard the last of this Lobos expedition.

The question at issue on the Mexican border is more impossible of solution. The Mexican government ceded the right to form a railway to a Mexican subject, who suffered it to lapse. It was revived and confirmed by a brief revolutionary government in Mexico, and the pretence made over his right to a citizen of the United States. In the meantime, however, a new Government in Mexico had made a similar cession to English speculators; and the result is, English and American interests are in litigation. The quarrel has for the Americans a complication with the political question; and it is in its nature likely to be the interminable, because the very source of the "right" claimed on either side, the technical authority of the irregular Government or the competency of the regular Government to re-open the matter, is in dispute. But here again the Americans are committed, personally and politically, too far for their own Government to control them or to determine the result. If it could be discovered—which is barely imaginable—there is no prospect that the "right" could be secured.

These sectional questions cannot

INDIAN SUMMER.

There is a time, but ere the frost
[illegible] to pave of [illegible]'s way,
[illegible] in a reverie [illegible]
[illegible]-tipped dreams away.

When [illegible] comes, to make my mind,
To see once more on hill and dell,
To mark how shiny shadows they bind,
And call all in rapt'rous spell.

With balmy breath the whispers low,
The dying flowers look up and give
Their sweetest incense as they go,
For her wish made their beauties live.

She enters 'neath the woodland shade,
Her nephyrs lift the lingering leaf,
And bear it gently where are laid
The loved and lost ones of its grief.

She seeks the shores, old Ocean hears
With gladness huge his mighty breast;
Prisons his wild winds in the caves,
And basking in their smiles is blest.

And last old Autumn, rising, takes
Again his sceptre and his throne,
With bold, rude hands the trees he shakes,
Intent on gathering all his own.

Sweet Summer, sighing, flies the plain,
And wailing Winter, gaunt and grim,
Sees sober Autumn board his grain,
And smiles to think he's all for him.

A PANTHER HUNT.

Barking and yelping, with noses close to the ground, three noble hounds of rare breed rushed through the thickly-grown wood, sometimes losing the track amidst the withered leaves, then, snuffing about the decayed and prostrate trees, they would once more resume the chase in full cry—a sure sign that their pursuit was of no bear or panther, and not the nimble-footed stag which, if it did at times lure them for a period from the path, never rendered them wholly untrue to it.

They had now reached a spot where their foe had evidently been for a time, and must have crossed their road; for, stopping for a moment, they sought, whimpering wildly, more eagerly than ever, through the closely-hanging parasitical plants which, like a living wall, encircled the place, then returning again and again to the centre, renewed their howls and lamentations as before.

Suddenly the bushes parted, and a young man on a small black Indian pony, cutting, by one vigorous stroke, with the broad hunting-knife held in his hand, the creepers which threatened to drag him off his horse, leaped in directly on the hounds, who, delighted at his appearance, fawned upon him for an instant, then, to redoubled zeal by the neighborhood of their master, proceeded anew in their search.

"So! my brave dogs!" cried the young man, stopping to replace his knife in its sheath, and laying the rifle which he carried on his shoulder on the saddle before him. "So! you seek! seek you here, on the road, and I think we shall succeed in nabbing the pig-stealer that has escaped us so often. Harrah!" shouted he, raising himself in his stirrups, as he saw the eldest of the dogs taking the lead, and, followed closely by the others, going at once into the thicket. "Harrah!" And throwing his gun again across his shoulder, he seized the reins in his right hand and pressed his heels against the pony's side, he flew on after the dog. On the way lay a couple of trees, overgrown bushes, marshy ground and slimy channels, but nothing could check their ardor.

Onward and onward still they went, followed by the black pony snorting and foaming, and its rider buzzing loudly with delight. Once more he stopped, but this time from no uncertainty as to the path their enemy had taken, for, barking and howling, they sprang at one of the mightiest oaks on the upland, gnawing with rage the roots and bark of the noble tree which had afforded shelter to their foe, and thus hindered their pursuit of him. The hunter now arrived at the chosen spot, and without staying to tie his horse, he leaped in one bound, that almost threw the animal, from out his saddle, and with eager glance to search through the thick leaves of the tree, round which the dogs were jumping in so much exultation; and he espied twixt two of the branches the long living creature which, clinging to the boughs, seemed to deem itself unnoticed and concealed. It was, indeed, evidently dark amidst the clouds of the thick foliage for a less practised eye than that of our young habitant of the forest to have received some time in doubt as to the description of which so earnestly sought to shun his observation. But Weston's eagle eye soon recognised, in the crouching figure and long tail, which it could not perfectly conceal, the panther cub, and raised his gun to fetch it more surely from its height, while the dogs, leaping with expectation, looked, now toward the rifle from which they momentarily expected the flash, and now toward the sunny of the oak, in whose branches they knew prey to be. But in vain was the low which they hoped to hasten the progress of their master; he seemed suddenly to change his mind, and, laying his gun aside, proceeded once more a cautious and attentive examination of the tree. Reassured at last apparently, of that which he desired to know, he unbuckled the belt in which his knife and hawk were stuck; and taking off his jacket, again returned toward the oak; then, bidding the dogs, though anxiously observing his every movement, had never once removed their eyes.

"I will try," he murmured to himself, "and take it alive; for if I bring a young panther to Little Rock, I shall readily obtain my ten or fifteen dollars for it; but if, on the other hand, I shoot it, its skin will be worth nothing. The old one must have left it, as I can not see it anywhere in the tree, and, for ten dollars, one may once bear a few scratches from the young one. Look out, Master Panther! I'm coming!"

At these words he went to his pony, which was quietly hard by, unslung a rope from around his neck, buckled on his girdle in which he replaced his knife, but left the hawk behind, and began to ascend the lofty tree; drawing the rope three times round the stem, which he could not firmly clasp, and fastening the ends together, he seized it sometimes with the right and sometimes with the left arm, and by its assistance cautiously mounted to the top; while the hounds, comprehending only what he meant, jumped with delight round the oak. Slowly then, indeed, but surely, he climbed nearly forty feet up the slender body ere he arrived at the first branch; then stopping for a moment to rest himself and take breath, he felt if his knife was still secure, and looked up toward the young panther, which remained almost motionless, and clinging to the branches as at first. Weston then slung the rope, which he no longer needed, round his shoulder, and, making use of the twigs as rails of a natural ladder, he ascended quickly and cautiously towards the cub, which, though it did not stir in the least, still kept its fiery eyes fixed upon him, as if watching the progress of our hunter, who was wholly unconscious of the proximity of so grim and dangerous a foe—none other than the mother of the cub, who lay, with tail slowly waving, in one of the withered trees that stood beside, with branches interlaced in that in which he was, ready for the spring, and seemingly but to await his nearer approach ere, with ferocious bound, she threw herself, tooth and claw, upon the audacious man who would dare to rob her offspring. Carelessly, then, swinging himself bough to bough, Weston was now close to the young one, who raising itself gently, in fashion of a cat, with its back up, stood on a branch and looked down upon the hunter, not perfectly comprehending the danger apprehended from him.

Weston stopped, and, taking the rope from off his shoulder, he formed a noose with it to catch the panther's head; then, settling himself firmly between two branches, he looked up in search of the proper moment for attack, carefully opposite and hardly ten paces from the glowing eyes of the female as she bent in readiness for the spring.

Brought up from childhood in the woods, and well acquainted with the dangers which so often threaten the solitary sportsman, Weston retained the fearful presence of mind enough to keep the body of the tree between him and the enemy, ere the latter could divine his intention; and this he fortunately succeeded in effecting just in time, as that instant the dark figure of the panther leaped upon the spot he had quitted, and gazed with fiery eyes on the unwearied hunter, who, with his left arm clasped around a branch, held in his right hand his bare knife, as with every breath he drew he expected to see the enraged animal spring down upon him; however, intimidated by the eye he had steadily fixed upon her, was satisfied to know the safety of her young, and to lie attentively to every movement of her foe at scarcely a yard from him. At this moment, Weston perceived that he was lost; for even if able to use his knife, a good stout weapon, against his grim antagonist, still the place on which he stood, and from whence the slightest false step would dash him headlong to the ground, was by no means suitable to so fearful a struggle. But perceiving then that his adversary was content with merely watching him, he swiftly but cautiously, and without any rash movement, which might irritate the monster, replaced the knife in its sheath, and slowly commenced his retreat. The panther, seeing him remove further and further away, followed him leisurely; and often did he feel for his weapon, as he saw her about to take a leap, yet without ever daring to bring himself to an open and eye to eye encounter.

Arriving, then, once more at the last branch, he again fastened the rope around the stem and slid as quickly as possible down it. The dogs, meanwhile, driven almost to despair by perceiving their enemy in the branches without being able to get at her, jumped and howled in a heart-breaking manner about. At length Weston once more regained the firm ground, with clothes torn, blood oozing from his arms, cut by the rough bark of the tree, his knees trembling, and strength exhausted. But not one moment did he allow himself for repose; but hastening to where his gun was laid he seized and leveled it toward the panther's fancied place of security. Vain, however, were all his efforts to hold the heavy barrel steady for a second—his limbs shook; so he was compelled to throw himself down to rest, yet without drawing his eye an instant from the form of the animal, which was now close to the stem, and its young one, no longer apprehensive of danger, with tail uplifted, stretching itself comfortably on the bough beside its mother. Weston soon recovered himself, and raising once more his rifle, took a long and steady aim until the distant hills reverberated with the echo of its thunder. The beast, pierced through by the ball, drew itself together, and sprang in furious haste from bough to bough, the branches bending beneath her weight, until she gained the lofty summit of the tree, when, having reached the highest point, and striving to get still further, the slender foliage gave way and she toppled over, clutching with powerful claws at every leaf and twig in her descent, till, with a mighty crash, she fell at Weston's feet. There was now no further impediment to the capture of the young one, who had followed the mother in terror to the lower branches of the tree; but Weston's nerves had been too strained in his first attempt to admit of his trying the perilous path anew. So, reloading his gun, he brought it in one shot within reach of the dogs who flew upon it in fury.

In a brief space the skins were thrown across the pony's back, and away trotted our bold hunter, followed by his hounds, in search of new dangers and fresh pray.

ARRIVAL OF THE CRESCENT CITY!

The steamship Crescent City, Captain Davenport, arrived at her wharf at an early hour Saturday morning. In addition to our telegraphic dispatch that morning, we are enabled to lay before our readers the following particulars.

From the information of a private correspondent, it appears that the Captain General has determined to regard Mr. Wm. Smith as a passenger on the Crescent City, and not as a Government employee, and on this ground is his exclusion based.

From our latest information, Judge Sharkey, the American Consul, had been called on, and was in close council with the Captain General.

The U. S. steamship Crescent City, Henry K. Davenport, U. S. Navy, Commander, arrived from New York via Havana in eight days and thirteen hours, leaving the latter port at 9½ o'clock A. M. of the 3d inst.

As the Crescent City approached the Moro, the pilot came off and inquired if Captain Porter or Purser Smith were on board. Upon being informed that the latter was on board, he declined taking the ship in, and Captain Davenport took the ship in without his assistance. As soon as the anchor was let go, the Captain of the Port came alongside, and after learning that Mr. Smith was on board, he stated that no communication could be had with the shore until he returned from a visit to the Captain General. Upon his return he stated that the mails and passengers for Havana might be landed, but that no other person would be permitted. Captain Davenport then showed him a letter from the American Consul, just received, which advised him that the whole difficulty had been settled by Mr. Conklin, except Captain Porter and Purser Smith would not be permitted to land.

The Captain of the Port said this was a mistake; that the mails and passengers for Havana might be landed on this one occasion, but that if Mr. Smith returned in the ship from New Orleans, no communication would be permitted with the shore; that the Spanish Minister at Washington had written to this Captain General that the Secretary of State had assured him that Mr. Smith should positively not be permitted to go out again in a steamer to Havana. Capt. Davenport told him there must be some mistake about this, for that Mr. Smith was a private citizen of the United States, and could go where he pleased, without let or hindrance from the United States Government. The Captain of the Port went again to see the Captain General, and the boat of the officers who were to give permits to the passengers came alongside, but Capt. Davenport informed them that no officer or other person could come on board his ship until he learned the disposition and determination of the Cuban authorities. Capt. Davenport then addressed a letter to the United States Consul, apprising him of the condition of things, and asking his directions.

The Captain of the Port returned with the permission of the Captain General for all the passengers and officers of the ship except Mr. Smith, to go on shore, and again repeating that if Mr. Smith returned in the ship from New Orleans, the same would be placed in communicado. Captain Davenport then addressed the United States Consul again, stating the change which had taken place; that the passengers would exercise their own discretion about landing, but as Captain Porter, whose course he entirely approved, was interdicted from landing, he would himself decline the permission granted.

Judge Sharkey, the U. S. Consul, came on board and had a long and full conversation with Capt. Davenport in reference to the pending difficulties and the course to be pursued upon the return from New Orleans.

The Captain of the port was throughout the several interviews, extremely polite and civil.

As soon as the U. S. Consul learned that the passengers in transit would not be permitted to land, he called upon the Captain General, and it was through his efforts and representations that permission was granted. A few of the passengers went on shore and spent the evening. A few moments before leaving the port of Havana, Mr. Morales, of the firm of Drake & Co., consignees of the Crescent City, came on board, and stated, by authority, that if Purser Smith would send a letter to the Captain General, denying the charge made against him, the difficulty would all be settled. Captain Davenport, in reply, assured him that under no circumstances could he allow Mr. Smith, or any other officer under his command, to address any communication to the Cuban authorities upon the subject, as Captain Porter, an officer of unblemished reputation, had, on two previous occasions, under his own signature, disavowed the charge.

ALLSTON'S LAMP.—At the opening of the Manchester Free Library speeches were made by Dickens, Thackeray, Bulwer, and others. Among the good things said by Sir Edward, in his characteristic, figurative way, was the following:

Gentlemen—You will remember that story of Aladdin which we have read in our childhood—how a poor youth descended into a cavern, and brought back from its recesses an old lamp. Accidentally he discovered that at the mere friction of the lamp a mighty genius appeared at his command. Awed by the terrors of the spirit that he had summoned, he at first only ventured to employ its powers to satisfy his common and his humblest wants—to satisfy mere hunger and thirst; but gradually accustomed to the presence of this gigantic agent, he employed it to construct palaces, to amass treasures, to battle armies, and to triumph over foes, until, at the close of the story, the owner of the wonderful lamp is the sovereign of a peaceful empire, assured to his remote posterity. Gentlemen, that story is a type of labor at the command of knowledge. When we first find the lamp, we are contented to apply its genius solely to our common and physical wants; but as we are accustomed to the presence of that spirit which we have summoned, we find that we have obtained a secret which places the powers of earth, air, and ocean at our command. That genius, left to itself, would be a terrible and threatening ministrant, because it is only rude physical force; but to him who possesses the lamp, that genius is docile and benignant subministrant, because here physical force is the slave of intellectual will. Now, gentlemen, in that same physical force, which, in the phrase of the day, is sometimes called the "power of the masses," lies a great problem for all thoughtful men to resolve. Knowledge has brought us these to face with it, and knowledge must either instruct force, or it will destroy the invoker. May, then, all those who possess the knowledge, who are gifted with the lamp, use it only for beneficent and useful purposes, so that the genius whose tread could arouse the earthquake, and whose breath could bring down the storm, may only come to enrich the treasury and assure the empire.

A NEW WAY TO "TAP" BOOTS.—The following we extract from TO-DAY, of Boston:

"We find a 'rum trick,' literally speaking, which we wonder has not attracted the attention of those evaders of the Maine liquor law who exhibit so much ingenuity in discovering new mechanical purposes to which alcoholic liquors may be applied, exposed in an article on 'college instruction and discipline' in a number of the American Quarterly Review, published at Philadelphia more than twenty years ago. The subject of a required uniformity of dress among the students of colleges being under consideration, the Review says: 'In the laws of the University of Virginia, we find that boots are proscribed, and this may seem to be according to unnecessary minutiæ; but they who are practically conversant with university discipline are aware that this article is objectionable on other grounds than expense. It is one of the contraband methods often had recourse to for the introduction of forbidden liquors. The boot is sent apparently to the shoemaker, containing an empty bottle, which returns by the same conveyance filled with the forbidden article.'"

From Jamaica.

We have received files of the Kingston Journal to the 21st ult., but we do not find any news of importance.

At Kingston, an extensive system of smuggling had been discovered, and several arrests had been made. Large quantities of brandy and cigars had been seized.

The Rainbow sailed from Kingston for New Orleans on the 21st ult.

The Journal says: "On the night of the 6th inst., about 9 o'clock, P. M., the wind began to blow fiercely, and at about 12 o'clock the Hob Boy ran on shore for the second time, but was not injured; two sloops and a schooner boat were wrecked, one of which was the sloop Young Duke—all her cargo lost, but her crew were saved by the activity of four men, who ventured from the shore in such a boisterous wind; they were brought on shore, six in number, but were cut up a good deal by the rocks. Many of the inhabitants' houses were much injured, and one in particular was injured by the falling of a cocoanut tree. Mr. Vere's wharf house was blown down. The waters arose to so great a height that the walls of some buildings were blown down. Messrs. Mason and Tuills' schooner boat met with some distress at Little Bay. She became a wreck, with dry goods and provisions. Fish were caught on dry land to the length of twelve inches and more. Coal came down in abundance, with many other birds, which were also caught on the land."

SPAIN.—The Spanish mail steamship Isabel II arrived at Havana on the 30th ult., bringing dates from Cadiz, to the 8th, and from Madrid to the 4th of October. We copy from the correspondence of the Diario de la Marina the following items:

A royal decree of the 4th of October opens a credit on the treasury of the Peninsula (Spain) of $100,000, in favor of the sufferers by the earthquake at St. Jago de Cuba.

The jury which tried the five suspended newspapers in Madrid, had declared the editors not guilty of the charges preferred against them by the Ministers.

The sailing of the steamer was delayed one day, in consequence of a dispatch from Madrid. The correspondent says:

"I have just learned that this delay is only for the purpose of shipping 600 carbines and some munitions of war for your island.

"By the decree yesterday we received another decree which demonstrates the great ability of Senor Bravo Murillo to avail himself of circumstances to benefit the interests of the country, without prejudice to, and in fact favoring the interests of individuals.

"By the decree the holders of the deferred debt are authorized to solicit the conversion of their scrip in such manner and quantity as the Government may determine, into a consolidated 3 per cent. stock. The Council of Ministers will fix every six months the rate of conversion and the amount which may be converted. For the first six months, the Council have set the rate at 55, consolidated stock for 100 of deferred scrip, and the amount at $20,000,000. This will bring a saving to the State of nearly $800,000 yearly.

"Another not less important decree emanates in Madrid a general fund separate from the public treasury, to be under the control of a special administration. The fund to consist of two classes of deposits—forced and voluntary. The first to be deposits made by order of the courts, and the second, individual. Interest to accrue at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum for fixed terms, and 3 per cent. for money payable on demand.

"In politics there is nothing important. We are daily expecting the convocation of the Cortez on the decree of their dissolution. One or other measure will soon be taken, as their Majesties are in Madrid."

Great funeral honors had been paid in Spain to the Duke of Ballen, whose death coincided so nearly with that of Wellington.

The Duke and Duchess of Montpensier had returned from their Summer palace at San Lucar to Seville. The Duchess is in good health and promises soon to present her consort with another heir.

LATER FROM PORTO RICO.—The Diario de la Marina, of Havana, has advices from Porto Rico to the 20th ult.

The brig Rainbow was driven ashore at Arrago, dragging her anchors, but was afterwards got off. The crops promise a more abundant yield than for many years. Rains had been copious.

The customs returns for the year 1851 had been published.

The imports amounted to $6,073,870, being an increase of $851,840 on the previous year, and the exports to $5,761,075, being a decrease of $115,341 on the previous year.

The number of vessels arrived and cleared show an increase of 118.

The duties collected amounted to $1,063,418, being a decrease of $110,582. This decrease is caused by the abrogation of the export duty and diminution of the rates of tonnage dues.

INTERESTING FROM BRAZIL.—The papers from Rio Janeiro to the 18th September, received by the way of New York, contain some interesting items, although they are not as late as we have received direct to this port. The Emperor and Empress of Brazil had an excursion on board the American propeller "City of Pittsburg," (from New York for San Francisco,) in the harbor of Rio Janeiro, on the 14th September. Nearly all the Ministers of the Empire, and a large number of naval officers, in the Brazilian service, were on board. Captain Foster seems to have done the honors of the occasion in a style that does him credit as a genuine son of the sea. Many ladies of the Court were also on board, including the Empress, the sister of the King of Naples. They were received on board by Mr. Kent, the United States Charge, and on their arrival strains of music from the band of the United States frigate Constitution, which had been obtained for the occasion, greeted them. Every thing passed off in the best possible manner, and in honor of the excursion every fort and man-of-war sent forth their loudest booming. Their Majesties were charmed, and the Empress remarked that beyond all question the Americans were the Kings of the Sea.

The Imperial Government has contracted, through the Plenipotentiary of Brazil, at London, with the commercial house of Rothschild, of that city, a loan of £1,000,000 to pay the Portuguese loan that Brazil guaranteed when its Independence was acknowledged. The Portuguese loan was to be paid only in 1853, but the Brazilian Government chooses to pay it when favorable for Brazil to obtain the money under favorable conditions.

Thrilling Incident.

DETROIT, Mich., October 14, 1852.

An incident occurred on last Thursday afternoon, which filled the town with much excitement, and which called forth many a legend of the kind remembered by the oldest inhabitants.

A few boys, who had been out on a hunting excursion, called at one of their neighbor's and began shooting at a mark. A little girl about eight years old, who had formerly had an illness that had affected her head, got alarmed at the firing, and ran into the woods.

In short time she was missed, and it was remembered that she had been rambling towards the woods, and consequently a search began, but night came on, and with it rain, which rendered further search for her that night impossible. Morning came, and yet the little wanderer had not returned. Its frantic parents, with one other child, made further search till the sun had passed the hour of twelve, and yet no tidings of the lost one were had. The neighborhood was alarmed, and dogs, horns, and every instrument of the rustic kind, were marshalled for the search; but again night, with its Egyptian horrors, fell without restoring the little cherished one. Minutes seemed hours, with its distracted mother.

At length the long wished for morning came, and with it a hundred men and boys, who, notwithstanding the still continued storm, went forth into the depths of the woods, in search of the child, with an eagerness that was commendable beyond the compass of words to express! and yet again night set in and still the lost was not found. What the agonies of the mother were, as the marshalled force returned without her little charge, tears, shrieks, groans, incoherent ejaculations, and a picture of despair, can only portray, words are inadequate. Another dreadful night was passed. An increased force was raised, who marshalled themselves with the dawn of the Sabbath, before the door of the bereaved parents. Prayers were offered to almighty God, and the aid of heaven invoked, to direct in the search. The preliminaries being arranged, a long line was formed upon the section lines, and the march renewed. Hour after hour passed, and not a vestige of the missing was discovered.

Every tree, stump and log, possessing a suspicious entity, underwent the closest scrutiny; every bush and thicket, thickly foliaged, every fir and cradle knoll, was visited as the band pressed onward. Long and ardent was the search, and many fears for the lost little one were entertained. The sun had far passed the zenith, and was hastening behind the western hill, when an elderly man and his son, partly discouraged, as well as wearied with the search, were drawn, as by the hand of an invisible pilot, in an opposite direction, far from the band, and while standing and discoursing upon the propriety of abandoning further search, a distant sound broke upon their ear. They listened in the direction from which the sound proceeded, and having traveled as far as practicable, they halted and listened a few minutes very intently; again that sound was heard, and turning a few steps in another direction, what was their surprise to behold the little object of their search sitting upon the ground, having just awakened and arisen from a bed of leaves, which it had collected by the side of an old log. There the little innocent sat, in her tattered dress, sobs and sighs heaving her little bosom, and large tears rolling down her swollen cheeks.

As she caught the first glimpse of her deliverers, she asked for something to eat. "Oh, dear," said she, "I have been obliged to go to bed two nights without my supper; please to give me something to eat." They took up the little sufferer, and started for home, which was about four miles distant. While passing through a small of tall grass, they asked the girl if she had passed through any such grass. "Oh, yes," said she, "I have traveled a great way through much taller grass than this, and I would call for my father to come and get me, but he would not; I would call for my mother to come and get me, but she would not; then I would call for my little brother, and he would not come after me. So I traveled on." On being then asked if she slept warm nights, said "yes, but the first night my little brother went to bed with me, and in the night he pulled off all the clothes, so I got cold." Arrived in sight of the house, the distracted mother rushed forth, her haggard countenance now irradiated with the gratitude of heaven for the deliverance of her child, and as she received and pressed the little wanderer to her breast, exclaimed, "my daughter is safe."

MR. WEBSTER'S FARM.—The farm of the late Hon Daniel Webster is probably one of the most notable and extensive in America. It was well that so great a man should have so great, so kingly a domain. It stretches over eighteen hundred acres of land, the northern border ending in ranges of towering hills, the southern extending to the waving sea. Upland, woodland, forest, stream, field are spread out almost as far as the eye can reach. It is worthy of remark that it was Mr. Webster's dying wish that this wide domain, in all its worth and beauty, should be kept sacredly in the family. We are gratified to know that his wish will be religiously complied with, an assertion guaranteed by the pecuniary condition of Mr. Webster's affairs. Mr Webster's farm—originally 300 acres—was purchased of the late Captain John Thomas, one of the old colonial families. A descendant, Mr. Charles Henry Thomas, who now resides in Duxbury, was a great personal friend of Mr. Webster. Mr. Thomas has had the superintendence of the erection of the tomb.—[Boston Bee.

The News by the Pacific.

We have full details of the news brought by the steamer Pacific, the most important feature of which, is the return of Louis Napoleon to Paris.

Louis Napoleon made his grand entrance into Paris on the 18th October. Of course the journals in his interest represent his reception as the most brilliant and enthusiastic display ever witnessed in that city. Even the correspondents of the London papers admit that it was of surpassing splendor. But they deny that much feeling was exhibited by the spectators. The most moderate description is that in the London News, which, after referring to the various triumphal arches and inscriptions, says, at the moment he left the station a balloon rose from the arena in the Place Mazas, from which was suspended a figure of an eagle, which hovered for some time, and appeared to flap its wings over his head.

On the Boulevards du Temple and Filles du Calvaire were stationed deputations from various departments of the Seine and Oise, with banners inscribed "Vive l'Empereur." The procession passed at a rapid pace, the Prince being mounted on a charger that walked five miles an hour. The reception, as he passed, without being enthusiastic, was as good as could be desired. Cries of "Vive l'Empereur" there certainly were, and plenty of them, and no other cry was heard. As the procession proceeded westward, into the quarters inhabited by the more educated and wealthy, the cries were fewer.

On the Boulevards Montmartre and Des Italiens, although a good many handkerchiefs were waved, and several bouquets were thrown from windows, it was evident that the majority of the spectators were coolly enjoying a very pretty sight, and were not under the influence of any excitement or affection. Still it is beyond question that this reception is the best that Louis Napoleon has ever met with in Paris, and he must be heartily delighted with it. He arrived at the Tuileries at 25 minutes past three.

A belief was prevalent all day that the Empire would actually be proclaimed in the evening. Nothing of the kind, however, has taken place. I have not heard that the Senate has made any proposition for treating the street acclamations and devices upon triumphal arches as tantamount to a more formal declaration of the nation's will, and although the transformation is now only a question of a few hours, I believe you will yet see decrees signed Louis Napoleon, "President of the Republic."

The public buildings and some few private houses are illuminated this evening. An immense number of foreigners and visitors from the departments are in Paris, and the Boulevards are still very crowded. The shops were universally closed to-day, even in quarters the most remote from the line of procession. Every body flocked to the Boulevards and the Tuileries, and all other parts of Paris appear deserted.

It was remarked that none of the foreign ministers took any part in the ceremonies of to-day.

In reply to the speeches made to him by the authorities of the city of Paris, the Prince said:

"The wishes that you express in the name of the city of Paris are the most pleasing to me, because the acclamations which receive me here are but the continuation of those of which I have been the object during my journey. If France desires the Empire, it is because she thinks that this form of Government will best secure her greatness and future welfare. As for me, under whatever title I may be permitted me to serve France, I shall consecrate to her all my strength, all my devotedness."

The pillars, and other ornamental works, are thus described by one writer:

"At the corner of the Rue de la Paix four light elegant pillars, extending across the Boulevard, supported by festoons of oak leaves. Half way up the two central pillars were placed effigies of men in armor, intertwined with the central festoon, was on the western side the inscription, "Vive l'Empereur," and on the other, "To Napoleon III., the First, Battalion of the National Guard." Throughout the length of the Boulevards might be seen at intervals decorations bearing similar inscriptions on behalf of the different battalions of the National Guards. At the corner of the Chaussee d'Antin was a banner bearing the absurdly anonymous inscription, "To his Imperial Highness Louis Napoleon III., from the Administration of the Fetes Dansantes of Sa, Seclle. Vive l'Empereur!"

Opposite the Rue Lepelletier, four handsome Corinthian pillars surmounted with eagles, supported a rich crimson canopy, studded with bees, with the inscription, Napoleon III., Emperor." This, one of the most elegant decorations of the fete, was the joint work of the publishers of the Opera and of the Opera Comique, whose theatres, by the way, is announced, will from this day forth be called the "Imperial Academy of Music," and the "Imperial Lyric Theatre." At the entrance of the Rue de Richilieu a large flag waved, with the inscription, "L'Empire c'est la paix." This favorite motto I saw repeated in many places.

The entrance to the Rue Vivienne was filled up with a green and gold banner, erected by the tribunal of commerce. On the Boulevard St. Denis an imperial crown of colossal proportions, surmounted by an eross, was suspended at a great height above the centre of the causeway. On the Boulevard St. Martin was a very fine arch, which, to all outward appearance, was a worthy rival of the solid marble structure close at hand—the Porte St. Martin. On the top of this arch was displayed an enormous spread-eagle, under which was the motto: "May God protect the Emperor."

Another arch, of equally handsome proportions, on the same boulevard, presented the following devices and inscriptions; A cross; a crown; L. N., 7,000,000; "Ave Cæsar Imperator;" a bust of Louis Napoleon; "France is contented;" "The Empire is Peace. Both the Porte St. Denis and the Port St. Martin were gaily dressed with tri-colored flags. On the wall of the Ambigu Comique was a crowned eagle—"Vox populi, 7,500,000, Vox Dei;" and the following quotation:

Di patri indigestes et Romule vestaque mater
Quæ Tuscum Tiberim et Romana palatia cervas
Hunc saltem everso juvenem succurrere sæclo
Ne prohibete! [Virgil I. Georg.

On the Boulevard du Temple there were two arches erected by the management of the theatres of the Cirque National, Folies Dramatiques, Funambules, Gaite Delassements Comiques, Lazzari, and Concert de Paris. On one of these arches was—"Vive Napoleon III.," on the other, "A Napoleon III."

THE LATE TERRIBLE RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—The telegraph has already announced the occurrence of a terrible accident on the Boston and Springfield Railroad, on the 30th ult. It occurred at Windsor Locks, thirteen miles from Springfield. The Boston Bee gives the following particulars:

The accident was caused by a portion of the rail, on an abrupt angle, being forced from the track, by which three passenger cars were thrown off. The rear car was thrown with tremendous force, some fifteen feet below into the basin of the canal, in which there was about twelve feet of water. There were upwards of twenty passengers in the cars, several of whom were ladies. The train was going at full speed at the time, and so tremendous was the collision of the rear car, that in its descent to its watery landing, it made one entire revolution, striking wheels downwards.

The car almost immediately filled with water, but by great effort of the male passengers, the doors were forced open, and the persons, one by one, drawn from their terrible and death-threatening confinement. The top of the car was opened as soon as possible with axes. In several places, when two brothers, named Parker, belonging to Pawtucket, R. I., and having just returned from California, were taken out dead. It was generally thought that several others were killed, but subsequent investigation happily proved the report untrue.

Among those in the car, which was made to perform this dreadful aerial tour and watery submergement, were Rev. Mr. Ellis, Unitarian clergyman, of Charleston; Rev. Mr. Fox, of this city; Mrs. Whitney, wife of Jos. Whitney, of this city, who had an arm broken; her son, Mr. Henry Whitney, and a grand daughter; the wife of the Spanish Consul, in this city, Mrs. J. A. Falon; Rev. Mr. Clarke, of Uxbridge, Mass; Mr. W. Preston, of the firm of McKim & Cutler, booksellers, Charleston, was seriously injured. Mrs. Preston, of this city, had her arm broken. She also received severe bruises on various parts of her person. All of the passengers were more or less injured.

The revolution of the cars is said to have excited, in the hearts of the passengers, the most terrible and indescribable emotions. It was but a collision, a bound, a revolution, and a submergement—all in the rapidity almost of a thought.

The two young Californians had been absent in the land of gold for three years, and, our informant states that they had frequently, on the railroad passage, spoken most fondly of the meeting and greeting that soon was to follow between themselves and wives.

From the Liverpool Standard, October 11.

THE EXODUS FROM LIVERPOOL.—The emigration from Liverpool this year bids fair to show a very large increase over that of last, or of any preceding year. The following are the monthly returns of the first three quarters of 1851 and 1852, as made to the custom house by the government emigration officer:

	1851.		1852
	Ships.	Passengers.	Ships.	Passengers.
January	38	12,126	26	7,749
February	39	11,060	31	11,849
March	53	17,571	53	20,460
April	82	25,417	67	25,492
May	60	23,067	70	50,827
June	61	17,203	55	20,849
July	48	13,778	60	23,525
August	44	16,717	61	24,196
September	55	20,219	62	26,289
Total	487	156,174	485	179,736

Increase in 1852, 2 ships and 23,560 passengers.

The total emigration of last year, ending the 31st of December, was 166,692. That of nine months of the present year, therefore, is only 16,170 below the whole of 1851. Two other facts may be noted, connected with these returns.

In the first place, they do not include cabin passengers, of which there were 968 sailed from Liverpool last year; and it is most certain that there will be a great increase of this class in the present year, composed of the most respectable emigrants in Australia. In the second place, it should be borne in mind that the return purports to give only the number of adults, not persons; that is, it counts no one adult the proportion of children allowed according to the scale laid down by law. We may, therefore, safely add one-fifth to the number returned, as the total number of human beings who have left their country the past nine months. We have no means of knowing at the precise number of emigrants who have gone to Australia. On very good authority, however, we may state it has passed and may be safely put down at 15,000.

This, then, accounts for part of the increase of 23,590; add, adding those who have been shipped thence by the emigration commissioners from their depot at Birkenhead, and the increased German emigration, this, the Irish exodus to the United States, would not seem to have increased. There are, however, two lights in which to regard this fact. If we could be certain that the present rate of emigration from Ireland to America was at its culminating point, there would be a reasonable ground of hope that it would in time cease. We are not certain of this fact, however, and are more inclined to think that Irish emigration is limited only by the means of the people, and that the drain of population will be a regular one for years to come, until the bulk of the Celtic race of that country has been poured into the wilds and prairies of Western America.

MR. WEBSTER'S IDEAS.—We understand that at a recent meeting of a medical society, some of the more striking results of the examination were stated and formed the subject of an interesting scientific discussion. The cerebral organs were of the very largest known capacity, exceeding, by thirty per centum, the average weight of the human brain; and with only two exceptions (Cuvier and Dupuytren) the largest of which there is any record. It is also worthy of remark that a well marked effusion upon the Arachnoid membrane was discovered in these investigations, although there were no perceptible evidences of any lesion during Mr. Webster's lifetime. It is supposed to have been caused by his severe fall from his carriage in Kingston last spring. It is a remarkable physiological fact that an injury that would have impaired the intellect, if not at once caused death, in another, should in this instance have been attended with so little external evidence of so important an injury to a vital organ.—[Boston Post.

A reliable medical work now before us states that if super-carbonate of soda be given with calomel, the usual salivating effects of the mercury will be dispelled.

THE TURKISH GOVERNMENT.—The National Intelligencer says:

Those who have read the interesting letter of the Rev. Dr. Bacon, while on his recent tour, will recollect his being robbed by a Kurdish chief, and his life, with those with him, endangered. The facts in the case were made known to the Turkish Government, and the result is given in an article in the "Independent," of last week, which we subjoin:

THE ROBBERS IN KURDISTAN.—The robbery of Dr. Bacon and Mr. Marsh by a Kurdish chief named Mahil Agha has not been forgotten. Our friends have often inquired whether the property has been recovered, and whether Mahil Agha and his associates have been in any way punished by the Turkish Government.

Mr. Williams, one of our missionaries at Mosul, says in a letter dated August 30, 1852: "I have just received 4500 piastres from his excellency Ilemly Pacha, for the spoiling which the Kurds did your party a year since."

Three cannon and three hundred men were sent up there and collected this money, refusing to take the articles, as the owners were in the United States, and the articles probably injured. The troops also brought back 70,000 piastres Government arrearages, and secured 200,000 more, which is to come down after the rice harvest." Mr. W. also writes that as soon as the 200,000 piastres still due to the Government shall have been received at Mosul the robbers will be punished.

This is a great lesson to the plundering barbarians of the mountains. A lesson which they will not be likely soon to forget. Other travelers may be able to pass through those wild districts in safety, in consequence of the people having been taught in this way how sacred is the duty of hospitality to strangers.

In this act of restitution we have a new instance of the friendly disposition of the Sultan toward American citizens, whether they visit his dominions as merchants, as travelers, or as Christian missionaries. Thanks to his Imperial Majesty! Our thanks are also due to his excellency the Pasha of Mosul, for the energy and fidelity with which he has executed the orders of the Supreme Government at Constantinople.

Mr. Rassam, the British Vice-Consul at Mosul, has promptly and generously done all in this matter that could have been expected and he been in the service of our own Government; and the result now announced is due in no small measure to his hearty and uncompensated interposition. He, in the first instance, acting as the agent of a friendly power, took up the wrong that had been done to citizens of the United States, and made a communication on the subject to Sir Stratford Canning, (now Lord Stratford,) the British Embassador at Constantinople. Nor from first to last has anything been wanting that he could do to obtain the restitution which has now been made.

BEAUTY OF CHRISTIAN LOVE.

Christian love is pre-eminently beautiful. ause it is akin to the love of heaven. The air of that country is that of love. e anthems celebrated in that land are s of love. The society to be met with in r happy region is the society of love—love oken and eternal. The enjoyments real- in the paradise above are those spring- from love, pure and perfected love. The gements which occupy the mind, awa- and concentrate its powers in their best condition, are all identified with love— prompting every employment, mingling s, and hallowing the performance of every . The beauty, the crown, the glory of land of immortality, the abode of the teous—"the sunny kingdom" of "the ts in light," is love—love, nothing but And what love! How pure in its char- ! How benign in its aspect! How de- ful in its expressions! How happy and rm in its development! How sublime holy in its issues! Now, we affirm, with Word of God before us, and the spirit and lopment of the heavenly country there so ly portrayed, that the love of the real ples of the Lord Jesus towards each er is consonnat with the love of heaven. re is a resemblance; and, unquestionably, re must be; for how true it is, that "The saints below, and those above,

But one communion make;
All join in Christ, their living head,
And of His grace partake."

e are painfully aware that the love of vers towards each other now, but fitfully responds with the love of the glorified to- s one another, and their Lord; still, re is a correspondence. It is imperfect in character and degree—fitful, defective, oken in its manifestations. In the best sen, under the most favored and happy umstances, there is, frequently, by no ns a pleasing development; it is marked many variations, infirmities and impedi- ts it is often clouded, narrow, distorted, rmed; it frequently wants fullness, ex- siveness and elevation—still, after making y concession, and recurring to every back, there is a resemblance between ine of believers in Christ Jesus towards other now, to that which they will mu- y cherish in heaven, and cultivate to all ity. In the character exemplified in spirit breathed in the hims required by ove, it must be the same unbidden by Church on earth, as will be forever ex- ted by the Church triumphant in heaven. ce the peculiar beauty of Christian love re it is possessed, devoutly and habitually ivated. Who would not have the spirit of Heaven glowing within him?"

The beauty of Christian love is associated this circumstance; it is permanent in its rse.

varies, necessarily, in its degree and ifestations still, when it is genuine, it is ys developed. It is not pitiful or capricious, a wayward child soon pleased and soon ded. It is not evanescent, like the flash mmer's lightning, illuminating the whole surrounding scenery by its strong yet ntary radiance. True love that which tinuity induces, endures. It is an abid- principle. Indeed, it can not die. It is ternal. It is love which "many waters not quench," which the fiercest fires can extinguish, which the greatest sufferings not diminish, which the most brutal per- utions can not annihilate.

hristian love springs from principle, and ciple of the noblest order; therefore, it et by permanent.

regards character, moral excellence, the tridy beautyful of charneter, und, consequent- ly, must endure.

It is in unison with the love of Christ, therefore, must abide. It pays supreme de- ference to the commands of the Son of God in the New Testament, and, on this ground, must be constant in its exercise.

It will regard a Christian brother at all times, in all places, under all circumstances. It will aid him in poverty, rejoice with him in prosperity, visit him in health, not neglect him in sickness, succor him in weakness, comfort him in sorrow, accompany him through life, beam upon him in old age, cheer him in the dark valley, and assure him that he will have a larger, a richer blessing throughout eternity. Now, we inquire, is not this exquisitly beautiful? Does it not unfold the divinity of the gospel? Does it not stamp a marked impress, as well as a pe- culiar loveliness on the Christian character? Does it not recommend the religion of the New Testament? Does it not show that the opposition of infidels to Christianity is most ignorant, unjust and absurd? Does it not glorify the Author of our religion, and when developed consistently and uniformly by the friends of Christ, must be instrumental in extending his kingdom, and multiplying the number of his subjects?

Dear readers, admire the spirit of Christian love. There is no temper which will bear comparison with it. No disposition is so at- tractive, so benign in every sense, so deserv- ing of your high esteem; and, indeed, of the strongest feelings of admiration.

Appreciate the divine excellence of Christi- anity in recommending and inducing this temper. No religion but that of Christ has done this. It is not characteristic of man, nor of man's philosophy, to inculcate the spirit to which we have been referring. In- deed, the temper, the maxims, the morals of men, without Christianity, without its light, its principles, its spirit, is directly the reverse. Are not these rules golden, incomparable, divine? "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ." "Be ye follow- ers," imitators, "of God, as dear children, and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us." "By love serve one another."

Let us cherish the deepest regret that we have so little of the temper of Christian love displayed; so little of it unfolded by avowed disciples in the family; so little exemplified in the Church; so little exhibited before the world. Nothing is more deeply, more bitter- ly to be lamented than the partial, the com- paratively trifling development by numbers of professing Christians, at the present period, of the true spirit of holy love. Such love, for example, as Paul manifested, when he ex- claimed: "For God is my record." (witness.) "how greatly I long after you all in the bow- els of Jesus Christ." Phil. i, 8. Or that temper which Peter recommends, when he exhorts: "Finally, be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another: love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous, not render- ing evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrarywise blessing: knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing." 1 Peter iii. 8. Or that fine spirit to which John persuades, when he writes: "My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth." "Beloved, let us love one another, for love is of God, and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not, knoweth not God, for God is love." 1 John, ii, 18; iv, 7, 8.

The perpetual exhibition of such a temper as this, by all the avowed friends of the Re- deemer, would renovate the Church and re- generate the world.

In perusing, with increased pleasure, again and again, the charming Biography of the estimable Samuel Pearce, who does not per- ceive that holy, ardent, seraphic love glow brightly in his heart, and that it was the governing, the master-principle, beautifying and regulating all his arrangements and ac- tions. His biographer remarks of him: "It is not enough to say of this affectionate spirit that it formed a prominent feature in his character: it was rather the life-blood that animated the whole system. He seemed, as one of his friends observed, to be baptized in it. It was holy love that gave the tone to his general deportment; as a son, a subject, a neighbor, a Christian, a minister, a pastor, a friend, a husband, and a father, he was man- ifestly governed by this principle; and this it was that produced in him that lovely uni- formity of character which constitutes the true beauty of holiness."

This is the Christian love we want every- where: this is the spirit we earnestly desire to see everywhere cherished. It would chas- ten all, hallow all, sweeten all, regulate all, ennoble all. It would be our fairest, our riches, robe, infinitely more costly than the imperial purple. It would be the brightest gem in our crown, sparkling with celestial beauty, with divine lustre. Where is the avowed disciple of the Lord Jesus who ought not to wish to be arrayed in this robe, and to wear this crown! Where is his true beauty without them! In a word, where is his reli- gion without them! All religion, without this love, be it ever remembered, though decked as a living body, is but a corpse.

Christians, Christians! Ministers, minis- ters! Teachers of the young everywhere! breathe more of the spirit of holy love: that will ever be your greatest recommendation, and most fascinating charm.

"Love is the golden chain that binds
The happiest souls above,
And he's an heir of heaven who finds
His bosom glow with love."

"I DON'T LIKE THE METHODISTS."

[SOMEWHERE IN LOUISIANA.]

MR. EDITOR: The subjoined is substantially what I have listened to, and if it is not too ridiculous, it seeks notoriety through your columns:

Mr. W. was returning from church; he stopped at the house of one Mrs. Allwise, a member of the Church: and after the usual salutation of friends, enquired, "Why were you not at church to-day? Had a good ser- mon."

Mrs. A. W.—I don't like the Methodists."

Mr. W.—What have you so serious against the Methodists?

Mrs. A. W.—Everything, everything.

Mr. W.—Surely madam, you do not mean what you say, for I am sure there are many things your conscience would not allow you to charge them with.

Mrs. A. W.—Very true; my conscience wouldn't let me charge them with any thing good, that's certain.

Mr. W.—You surprise me.

Mrs. A. W.—You'll be surprised worse nor that when you hear all I know.

Mr. W.—Upon my word, I would be pleased to have you specify some of their bad deeds.

Mrs. A. W.—Specify! I 'spose you mean by that you want to know what it is.

Mr. W.—Precisely so.

Mrs. A. W.—Well, in the first place, they haint got no education, and I will not go to hear a man preach who can't tell me nothing. In the next place, they don't believe in the sacrament of bread and wine.

Mrs. W. They use the bread and wine as emblems of the broken body and shed blood of the Saviour, and as often as they take it it is in commemoration of his passion and death. So you must have got hold of the subject wrong-handed.

Mrs. A. W.—No n'nt, no I nint. I am well posted up in Methodism. I have made their doctrines my study: and they don't be- lieve what you say. They don't believe nothing. But they are to be excused, because they don't know nothing.

Mr. W.—Indeed madam, you must be judging without consulting charity; for the Methodist preacher gave us a sermon to-day that would have done honor to the rector of ——, and would have been no disgrace to Bishop ——.

Just here, Mrs. Allwise's sister, "Wiseryet," entered the room, and after a few passing re- marks, declared she would not hear the Methodist preacher: no, that she wouldn't.

Mr. W. being quite satisfied with the learning and understanding of her sister, dreaded to attack her, but remarked that he was partial to the Methodists because their ministers, as a body, were men of liberal views towards other denominations. And in this he thought they had the advantage, be- cause they would hear both sides of a ques- tion. They were not afraid of testing their principles by hearing those preach who were not Methodists. But he found the case dif- ferent with the Roman Catholics and Episco- palians, with a few exceptions.

Mrs. Wiseryet.—I am a Roman Catholic, and I don't go to hear the Methodists because I don't believe any thing they say. I know all the Methodist doctrines, and and I don't believe one word of them; hence, it would be folly and time lost to go and listen to what I don't believe.

Mr. W. was well nigh "bluffed," but as one seeking wisd m, he said: "Madam, pray give me your objection to the first article in the Methodist faith, as it is in their creed."

Mrs. Wiseryet. Creed! Why I never knew they had a creed.

By this time Mr. W. felt quite informed, but believing the void in himself could be more profitably filled with a nice hot dinner which was then smoking on his own table, he arose, politely bowed, and had reached the door, when Mrs. A. W. called aloud, "Mr. W., I am going to join the Roman Catholics, and I want it to be understood that its no whim; but let it be understood that I have closely investigated and carefully compared both sides of the question.

Mr. W. Whose works did you read? Clark's, Watson's or Wesley's.

Mrs. A. W.—Do you think that I would fool away my time reading such works as Clark's, Watson's or Wesley's! They should not stay in my house.

Mr. W.—I understood you to say that you had investigated and compared their doctrine with that of the Roman Catholic, and from this I thought as a matter of course, you had read some standard work of theirs.

Mrs. A. W.—It don't require to read books to investigate and compare things like that.

Mr. W.—But if you never go to hear them preach nor read any of their books, how can you compare their doctrines with the doctrines of Popery, or any other?

Mrs. A. W.—Well enough; I reckon I have seen old Mrs. H. and heard her talk. She is eighty-four years old was what you call converted, at twelve years old, and has been a Methodist ever since, and I reckon she knows. And then I was baptised in infancy by the Rev. Mr. ——, who preached twice in Dublin and four or five times in England. And then the French Priest in our town preaches about the Methodists nearly every Sabbath; I reckon I ought to know something about them.

Mr. W. You understand the French!

Mrs. A. W.—No, I can't talk the French language, but I know its every word true, for he just lays it off.

Mr. W. again bowed and walked away, musing upon the strange things he had heard. Well, thought he, I am surprised. She don't like the Methodists, but never heard them preach. She has closely investigated their doctrines but never read their works. Knows all about their doctrines but never heard that they had a creed. Don't understand the Priest, but believes all he says! And her sister! What a blessing for the world that these two minds were thrown together!

THE USE OF BOOKS.

"O wad some power the gift to gie us
To see ourselves as we should see us!"

There! Not exactly the words of the poet, but then you can see I've either read Burns, or heard somebody quote him.

That is his idea if not his language. These lines have been ringing in my ears since I read an article in your paper of Oct. 30, and signed "Gossip." Heretofore I have had no better sense than to believe that when a no'ther writes a book it is to be read. Read, that it may be remembered, and remembered that it may be made through the reader, bene- ficial to others.

Especially so with regard to the Bible, and all written reflections on that book, which are orthodox; such for instance, as sermons, sketches and skeletons of sermons. True, I have often heard it said, we should not write the language of another, without putting it between quotation marks, but I am just at the first of being obnoxious to censure, for using the "important ideas of an author." I can only account for this complaint of "Gos- sip" by supposing some one has been using his "ideas" without permission. He says: "First, it is dishonest, it is a wrong to a writer to take the thoughts for which, per- haps, he has delved hard, and appropriate them en masse to our own use without credit." And yet, perhaps, few men read more than Gossip, consequently he has less time to think out and arrange original thoughts, than those who think more and perhaps read less.

Would it not be hard now that, in the event that Gossip prosecute for theft, the jury find the poor "luckless wight" doubly guilty, viz: that the "prisoner not only took what was not his own, but he stole from a thief!

THE MINISTRY OF THE SAINTS.

The Apostle Paul, in commending the fam- ily of Stephanus, early converted in Achaia, says that they "addicted themselves to the ministry of the Saints." Cor. xvi, 18. The word is not confined to service as ministers of the gospel, though this is not included: it rather implies that general ministering to Christ's people which is the duty and privi- lege of Christians.

Reader, what do you about this "ministry of the Saints?" Perhaps you shut yourself up in your own house, among your own con- veniences and comforts. Perhaps you seldom think of that large portion of God's people who are in want, infirmity and sorrow. Per- haps you have never known the luxury of conveying blessings to the poor with your own lips. Then I am bound to tell you, you are living amiss. We are members one of another. No one, unless himself a helpless sufferer, is exempt from this service of charity. We are to bear one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ. Gal. vi, 2. It is not enough to cherish kind wishes, and to say, "Depart in peace." And if our faith does not produce these fruits, it is "dead, being alone." James ii. 26, 17. What a new face would be put upon our common Christianity, if all professing disciples were addicting themselves to the ministry of the Saints.

BEAUTY OF JEWESSES.—It is related that Chateaubriand, on returning from his Eastern travels, was asked if he could assign a reason why the women of the Jewish race were so much handsomer than the men—when he gave the following one: Jewesses, he said, have escaped the curse which alighted upon their fathers, husbands and sons. Not a Jewess was to be found among the crowd of priests and rabble that insulted the Son of God, scourged him, crowned him with thorns, and subjected him to infamy and the agony of the cross. The woman of Bethany poured on his head precious ointment, which she kept in vases of alabaster. The sinner annointed his feet with perfumed oil, and wiped them with her hair. Christ, on his part, extended mercy to the Jewesses. He raised from the dead the son of the widow of Nain, and Martha's brother, Lazarus. He cured Simon's mother-in-law, and the woman who had touched the hem of his garment. To the Samaritan woman he was a spring of living water, and a compassionate judge to the wo- man in adultery. The daughters of Jerusa- lem wept over him: the holy women accom- panied him to Calvary: brought him balm and spices, and weeping, sought him at the sepulchre. "Woman, why weepest thou?" His first appearance, after the resurrection, was to Mary Magdalen. He said to her, "Mary!" At the sound of his voice Mary Magdalen's eyes were opened, and she an- swered, "Master." The reflection of some beautiful ray must have rested on the brow of Jewesses.

THE RAILROAD TO RUIN.—Surveyed by avar- ice, chartered by county courts, freighted with drunkards, with grog-shops for depots, rum-sellers for engineers, bar-tenders for conductors, and landlords for stockholders. Fired up with alcohol and boiling with deli- rium tremens. The groans of the dying are the thunders of the trains, and the shrieks of the women and children, are the whistles of the engines. By the help of God, we will re- verse the steam, put out the fire, annul the charter, and save the freight.

The Arabians have a saying, it is not good to jest with God, death or the devil, for the first neither can nor will be mocked; the second mocks all men one time or another, and the third puts an eternal sarcasm on those that are too familiar with him.

A little wrong done to another, is a great injury done to ourselves. The severest punish- ment of an injury is the consciousness of having done it, and no man suffers more than he that is turned over to the pain of re- pentance.

THE GREAT END OF THE MINIS- TRY.

Jesus Christ came to save the lost. He did not undervalue other mighty results of the gospel, but the grand object of his mission and ministry was the honor of God in man's salvation, the pardon and prevention of sin. "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." He hung upon the Cross, that he might draw men unto himself. Nothing less than this brought him from heaven: nothing less than this would satisfy the demands of his mission. The souls of men, saved, are to be the brightest gems in his future crown.

Paul had the same object. Why was he made all things to all men? "That he might by all means save some." Why did he go from house to house weeping? Why endure those perils, submit to that martyrdom and wish himself accursed from Christ? Was it merely to instruct men? to make them sober and moral? Was it to exhibit his profound logic and brilliant oratory? Was it that he might secure a magnificent cathedral, a thronged church, an admiring audience, a luxurious living? No, no; he could wish himself accursed, that he might save others. He ceased not to warn every one, night and day, with tears. And whether he preached on the river's bank, in the private dwelling, or in the prison, the cry of his hearers was "What shall I do to be saved?" And crowds flocked with him to the arms of the Saviour.

And this, brethren of the ministry, is our work. It is the object of our ministry, and it is God's plan that, by the foolishness of preaching, men should be saved. That ought to be the result, and if our preaching does not sooner or later eventuate in that, have we not made a stupendous failure? Our benevo- lent institutions may make flattering pro- gress; our church spires may lift their fault- less proportions to the skies; our church edi- fices may be massive piles of solid granite; they may be densely thronged; admiring crowds may hang upon our lips; they may be tenderly impressed; each pulpit may be the focus of light, the centre of all that is profound in thought, brilliant in learning, beautiful in taste:

There genius may blaze,
Imagination may soar,
Intellect may glow,
Eloquence may charm.

But are our hearers lost?—Are they on the wrong side at the judgment? Then, damna- tion is stamped upon their foreheads. They have gone away to weep and to wail for ever more, and our ministry to them is a terrible calamity.

This seems plain in other professions. Does the civil advocate lose his cause? He may the- ory and electrify the court: he may astoun- ish and move the jury: but the despairing cry of his ruined client is, "My cause! my cause!"

Does the physician lose his patients? He may be learned and aged; he may nurse the sick in a hospital, ancient and honorable, splendidly furnished and richly endowed. Every thing may be done to quiet their feel- ings and charm their senses. They may be handed down to the grave very quietly: they may recline on luxuriant couches, and look forth on shady groves and running streams. But listen to the smothered sigh of each dying man. Hear his agonized groan, "My life! my life!"

Are the preachers hearers lost? He may be learned, eloquent, active and dignified, well beloved and well sustained; but the time is coming when all around him—the very air—will be vocal with the cry of sigh- ing voices coming up from the blackness of darkness.

"Oh, my soul, my soul,
Lost, lost, for ever lost."

How bitter then, the crushing thought, my ministry was fruitless, with all its hopes and prospects; the frown and the curse of God are on my people! Would to God such allu- sions were inappropriate! But it is perfectly overwhelming to contemplate how little is accomplished for God and for immortal souls. Our ecclesiastical bodies report peace and harmony, good order and sound doctrine; but how meagre their report of men saved! [Rev. W. W. Newell.

A SINGLE IDEA.—Will Stark thus beautifully illustrates the power of a single idea. He says:

"It came to Newton as he lay under the tree, and all the stars in heaven and the sun itself yielded obedience. It came to Watt as he thought of the separate condenser, and an army of cranks and wheels more numerous than the countless hosts that sung psalms be- fore the holy city, have this day sung his praises. It came to Fulton as he thought of the paddle wheel, and every river and every sea is now blossoming with the flowers of genius. It came to Franklin as he thought of the kite, and the very lightnings came down from their thrones to do him honor. It came to Bacon as he thought of the inductive system, and the whole mental world leaped into a new existence. Philosophy turned from her beaten paths and followed him as a dog would follow his master; the physical world awoke. There came a voice from every drop in the salt ocean, and from every rock on the broad land from every trem- bling star above us, and from every sleeping fossil beneath: and rock, star and dew drop, cloud, fish and fossil all found tongues and voices to proclaim his praise."

I did not learn my theology all at once; but I have been searching deeper and deeper into truth, and to that my trials have brought me. Holy Writ can never be understood ex- cept by experience and temptations.

There are some philosophers who, in the matter between Christ and Belial, say, that on both sides there should be yielding. Let them try, and do what they can, and do not grudge them their pains; for if they make the devil religious, and one with God, they will be the first who could.

CHRIST AND ETERNITY.

THE TWO GREAT IDEAS.

We have been impressed, in reading the life and writings of Dr. Chalmers, with the influence which two great ideas had over him. His natural endowments were great, his intellectual cultivation extensive, and he would, in some way, have left his mark on society without them; but, under their influ- ence, he passed a most radiant career of be- neficent thought and action. They called the energies of his noble mind and heart into unwearied exertion, and sanctified them all. Without their influence, his life would have been brilliant and cold; with it, he has left a memorial in the hearts of men, which can never perish. It will be asked what these ideas were? and every one acquainted with his history will answer, Christ and Eternity.

The Saviour was not to him a cold abstrac- tion, filling a mere place in a system of theol- ogy: but he was the real, living, glorious source and guide of his spiritual life. And he seems to have needed only a fuller view of the duty and privilege of cultivating a per- sonal attachment to Christ, to have exceeded all the writers in our language on the work of the Saviour. We do not know, in the range of theology, a better exposition of the doctrine of justification by faith in Christ, nor it influences Christian experience and prac- tice, leading to peace and joy, and cheerful obedience, than is to be found in his writings, and he wrote, speaking that which he knew, and testifying what he had seen. God, as the great object of worship, love, confidence, and obedience, was before him, and he says: "The experience I have oftenest realized is that of the Psalmist, 'My soul breaketh for the longing it hath unto thy judgments at all times.'" In another place he speaks of the straining of mind and heart after God, which he experienced: "To him Christ was the great revealer of God—the revealed Divinity him- self—He was the way to God for him—the ground of his free pardon and acceptance; the means of his satisfaction; the pattern of his life; the source of his strength; the end of his existence; the hope of glory. His great powers and acquisition were laid a will- ing sacrifice on the altar of the Saviour, who had loved him, and bought him with his blood. Having the consciousness of redemp- tion in his heart, he worked with a giant's strength and quenchless ardor. He loved and labored as one possessing a great heart under a great moving impulse would, and he fell with his armor on, as the frosts of age whitened his locks, and its inevitable decline of strength was stealing over him. Christ lived in him, and he lived not for himself, but for Christ.

The other great idea that pervaded his life and ministry was that of Eternity. Indeed, it was this which exerted a great influence in his conversation. He was a professed preach- er of the gospel for a number of years with- out the experience of the grace of God in his heart. He was gay, thoughtless and worldly hearted, feelings and aspirations. Sickness in his family, near the grave, and fixed his brought him to engage, He recovered gaze on eternity. under the influence of this view, in an inves- tigation of the Christian Evidences which led to the acceptance of the gospel by his own heart. He became a serious man, and he lived as such. The riches, honors, pageants, coronets, and even sceptres of earth, he did not despise; but they were to him inferior things, mere trifles by the way. He became impressed, as he expressed it, with the signifi- cance of time and the magnitude of the in- terests of eternity. He lived as if time were the shadow, and eternity the reality. He did not become gloomy, but was ever most de- lightfully cheerful; he did not become an ascetic, and fly from the world, but mingled with it daily, and grappled with its most cor- rupt customs and formidable evils. He did not neglect temporal affairs, but knowing that man's spiritual welfare depends, in large measure, on his circumstances, he set himself diligently to remove the pauperism and igno- rance, and social degradation which stood like frowning barriers in the way of many to heaven. He was not insensible to domestic joys and affections, and to social distinctions, and he mingled freely with the great and titled ones of the earth; yet he looked above all their paltry and conventional arrange- ments, at the supreme value of their souls, estimated in the light of eternity. He worked like a man who felt the strong and solemn in- fluence of a believing view of eternal things on his soul. He worked not in vain. Multi- tudes were not only dazzled, but savingly benefitted by his ministry, and his influence on the spiritual welfare of his country was exceeded only by that of John Knox himself. Whatever he was for good, came from the general influence of the two great ideas, CHRIST and ETERNITY. They pervaded his ministry, and made his greatness useful to mankind. The ministry of every professed ambassador of Christ should be pervaded by the same ideas, and each one will find himself widely and permanently useful, as he comes under their influence. The piety of the Church now is selfish, lifeless, superficial, cheerless, for the want of these great thoughts. Whenever it shall be pervaded by them, it will change its aspect, its efforts, and bless the world. [Ch. Herald.

A GREAT FACT FOR TEETOTAL LECTURERS.—"We can prove," says Baron Liebig, "with mathematical certainty, that as much flour or meal as can lie on the point of a table- knife is more nutritious than five measures about right or ten quarts of the best Bava- rian beer; that a person who is able daily to consume that amount of beer obtains from it in a whole year, in the most favorable case, exactly the amount of nutritive constituents which is contained in a five pound loaf of bread, or three pounds of flesh."

As long as Christ sits at the right hand of God, we shall also be lords and masters over sin, death, devils, and all things.

AFFLICTIONS AND USEFULNESS.

True piety is never satisfied but in doing good; and, therefore, the faithful Christian never thinks his work on earth done, till his Father calls him to his glorious work above. The afflictions of the righteous have often been the means of fitting them for greater efficiency in the work of the Lord; and not unfrequently they have most effectually pro- moted the cause of Christ, when laid aside from active labor. "The Saint's Everlasting Rest" was written by Baxter, as he states, for his own use during the time of his lan- guishing, when God took him from all public employment. He says: "While I was in health, I had not the least thought of writing books, or in serving God in any more public way than preaching; but when I was weak- ened with great bleeding, and left solitary in my chamber at Sir John Cook's, in Derby- shire, without any acquaintance but my ser- vant about me, and was sentenced to death by the physicians, I began to contemplate more seriously on the everlasting rest, which I apprehend myself to be just on the borders of. That my thoughts might not too much scatter in my meditation, I began to write something on that subject, intending but the quantity of a sermon or two; but being con- tinued long in weakness, where I had no books, and no better employment, I followed it on till it was enlarged to the bulk in which it is published."

Little did Baxter then know, though he sought to be useful to his fellow-men, while sinking into the grave, what a blessing this affliction would prove to multitudes of them. The Saint's Rest was the first book he ever wrote; and, as his biographer well remarks, "if he had never written another, it alone would have endeared his memory for ever to all who cherish the sublime hopes of the gos- pel." Many a pilgrim has been cheered on his way to his heavenly home by reading this most excellent book.

Doubtless it seemed mysterious to this god- ly man, that he was laid aside by protracted disease, at a time when evangelical preach- ing was so much needed. But his Heavenly Father prevented him from preaching then, that he might preach in another way to mul- titudes in succeeding generations. We can now see and admire the wisdom and the goodness of God in those mysterious afflic- tions.

Let every Christian remember that in whatever situation God in his providence places him, he designs him to be useful there. Instead of murmuring at the hardness of his lot, then, let him, like the good Baxter, in- quire what he can do for the cause of his Re- deemer! True piety is never satisfied but in doing good; and it makes the Christian will- ing, if need be, to suffer, that he may do good. [Presbyterian of the West.

INSIDIOUSNESS OF SIN.—When a Lybian tiger, drawn from his wilder foragings, is shut up and taught to eat civil meat, and suffer the authority of a man, he sits down tamely in his prison, and pays to his keeper fear and reverence for his meat; but if he chance to come again, and taste a draught of warm blood, he presently leaps into his na- tural cruelty. He sonroe abstains from eat- ing those hands that brought him discipline and food. So is the nature of a man made tame and gentle by the grace of God, and reduced to reason, and kept in awe by reli- gion and law, and by an awful virtue is taught to forget those alluring and sottish relishes of sin; but if he diverts from his path, and snatches handfuls from the wanton vineyards, and remembers the lasciviousness of his un- wholesome food that pleased his childish palate, then he grows sick again, and hungry after unwholesome diet, and longs for the apples of Sodom. [Jeremy Taylor.

THE CLOUD OF MERCY.—How vast the range of blessing your prayers may take! Who can tell the history or trace the wan- dering of yon cloud that sails in light and glory across the sky; or indicate from what source its bosom was filled with the vapors it is yet to shed back upon the earth! Perhaps though now wandering over the tilled field and the peopled village, its stores were drawn from shaded fountain in the deep forest, where the eye of man has scarce ever pene- trated. In silent obscurity that fountain yielded its pittance, and did its work of pre- paring to bless the far-off lands that it shall yet be glad for. And even thus it is with the descending Spirit. Little do we know of- ten of the secret origin of the dews of bless- ing that descend on the churches of God. In the recesses of some lowly cottage, in the depths of some humble heart, may be going on the work of pious intercession, in answer to which the grace of heaven descends on us and our joyful pastor, and on the hearts of the far heathen, till the wilderness and the solitary place are glad for them. [Dr. W. H. Williams.

The great art in preaching is simplicity. Our Lord in his preaching, speaks of tilling the ground, of mustard seed, of vines, of sheep, and trees, etc.; thus making use of the common and simple similitudes.

TRUST GOD.—I could write down twenty cases, says a pious man, when I wished God had done otherwise than he did; but which I now see, had I my own will, would have led to extensive mischief. The life of a Chris- tian is a life of paradoxes. He must lay hold on God, he must follow hard after him, he must determine not to let him go. And yet you must learn to let God alone. Quietness before God is one of the most difficult of all Christian graces; to sit where he places us, to be what he would have us be, and this as long as he pleases.

THE THRESHOLD PRAYER.

It has often opened the door with a wide welcome to the servant of God, visiting from house to house: and opened the hearts of those within for his message.

In that simple narrative of Leigh Richmond, "The Young Cottager," occurs a passage of beautiful and excellent example. The Young Cottager is sick and her pastor goes to visit her. He knows not how he will find her mind disposed; he hopes, well. He is deeply concerned as to the result of the counsels he is going to administer, and is properly solicitous for a happy result. It is the time of sunshine and flowers. Arrived at the cottage, with a true eye for nature, he looks upon the rustic loveliness of the scene and honeysuckle clambering over the humble place: "As I entered the house-door, its flowers put forth a very sweet and refreshing smell. Intent on the object of my visit, I at the same moment offered up silent prayer to God and entertained a hope that the welcome fragrance of the shrub might be illustrative of that all-prevailing intercession of a Redeemer, which I trusted was, in the case of this little child, as a sweet smelling savor to her Heavenly Father."

Intent on the object of his visit: that prompted the prayer, the fervent ejaculation to God. His object was "single." He went not on a "call:" it was not a visit of pastoral ceremony. The object was not to escape a lonesome hour by seeking company or to pass an agreeable one in conversation. No: he went as he would have gone into the pulpit; it was to be the visit of an ambassador for Christ. And he was "intent" on it. His heart was full of the holy business. How natural he should pray to be prospered in it! The pause on the threshold invited the silent prayer and God heard it. Every faithful pastor, watching and laboring in love, for the souls of men sees in this a description of his own experience. Many are the occasions, besides visiting the sick when his heart fervently and almost involuntarily utters the threshold prayer.

A member has erred. Perhaps sin may be in his house. His course is hurtful to the Church, hurtful to his family and ruinous to himself. By potent example, or the "teaching that causeth to err," other members of the family may have been implicated. It is become a family sin. From the pulpit it can not be reached. Out of the family the reproof and remonstrance can not be administered. The pastor or pious friend must even go to the house and ask an entrance. A delicate and a painful mission this. He goes, but many fears are suggested by the way about reception. Will it be kind or cold? Will the affectionate but ungracious errand succeed? These misgivings become quite distressing as he nears the scene where he must throw himself upon the double indulgence of visitor and reprover. Who can tell? They may confess and amend and be gained, or they may meet him with a frown, their alienation may be complete and his embarrassment may be added to by insult and embittered by mortifying failure. O, if he might but gain them! Resolving these doubts he will hardly pass that threshold without a prayer then breathed out that God would give them repentance to the acknowledgement of their sins.

By a stroke of Providence a door of entrance has been opened to him into a house hitherto the abode of thoughtless luxury, revelry and worldly mindedness. No prayer is made there. No fear of God is there. But the shadow of death has lately darkened it. Sorrow mantles it. Grief and woe have subdued proud hearts for a season. The servant of God follows this providential opening, but not without fear; it may be heart-sinking timidity. If properly guided in his address and conversation, his entrance there may form a happy era in that house-history. However this conviction may have been entertained and prayed over, it is renewed with force as the interview approaches. Upon the new and strange threshold these thoughts will likely crowd upon him. A word in season may be as a nail in a sure place. Right words are forcible, and under God may give favorable and lasting turn to the whole tenor of that family. Intent on the object of his visit, and feeling a depressing sense of inequality to its issue, he will not cross that threshold without a prayer that God would put right words in his own mouth, and give him favor in their eyes for their good, and dispose their hearts to receive the tidings he bears. He covets them all for his Divine Master, and yearns over the souls for which Jesus died.

It may be that the Christian is on his way to warn some hardened sinner, whose case lies heavily upon his conscience; to visit the sick or welcome a stranger, or admonish a brother. This going to any mortal with the purpose of doing his soul good is so high in its consequences, so great in its import, one may well shrink from going alone. When we meet men in the Church, or on the street or highway, we are then on equal and common ground. But the case is different when duty calls us to go to their houses. This, to every sensitive mind, complicates and immensely increases the embarrassment. It must sometimes be done, however, notwithstanding the delicate and uncertain issues involved. And now the visitor, intent on his object, and yet alive to its difficulties and the many slight and probable causes that might work miscarriage of his dear hopes, treads on the threshold and waits an answer to his summons. As the sparks fly upwards, so does his silent prayer. The crisis is at hand and he feels the need of his way opened and prepared by Him who has even the king's heart in his hand as the river of waters and turneth it whithersoever He will. He can dispose the heart to receive unwelcome words. "The preparation of the heart in man is from the Lord."

It is not for us to know what the Lord is doing in other people's hearts. It is not uncommon to find those humbled and docile whom we expected to confront in indifference or hardness, or even in contumacy. Surprising as was the news to Ananias touching the persecuting Saul, it was all true. "Behold, he prayeth." He entered into the house and found it so.

When Nehemiah, the pious Jew in the land of captivity and cup-bearer to Artaxerxes, was about to prefer a great request to the king—even for permission and aid to return to the city of his fathers' sepulchres, that he might build it—prayer was the secret of his successful diplomacy: "O Lord, prosper thy servant this day and grant him mercy in the sight of this man." And the very moment of royal hesitation upon which the great affair turned, was space enough for a fervent and silent prayer "to the God of heaven." The king's heart was strangely favorable and the measure carried.

The Christian, and especially the visiting pastor, will find many occasions for the threshold prayer. He falls upon many impediments which only yield to prayer. Before this, obduracy melts, heedlessness attends, pride and haughtiness come down. God attends the steps of his praying servant beyond the threshold. He enters the house with him and converts it into a house of prayer. Thus intent on the object of his visit, upon entering and never losing sight of it, he does not recross that threshold without leaving behind a good impression and a savor of godliness.

The threshold prayer then: Let it not be forgotten. How much visiting from house to house is vain for want of it, and only amounts to performing a dry, pastoral function. It is but a weary go-around, instead of a lively means of doing good. Let it not be forgotten, whether the massive portals open into the spacious halls of the rich or the hand is reached out to uplift the latch of the cotter's door. The messengers of God, whether we are being ushered into the chambers of the rich, or the abodes of health, into the home-presence of the great or the humble, into the house of mourning or the house of joy, let us not forget the Threshold Prayer.

A WORD ALL ROUND.

The editor, after preparing the editorial matter for this week's issue was taken sick and therefore the Receipts up to this date which he supervises do not appear. He hopes in a few days to be at his post again. The Receipts will be published next week and so published that subscribers may see up to what date they have paid. They will then be advised when to renew their subscription for the next year promptly.

It is a time when the friends of the New-Orleans Ch. Advocate and the cheap religious press, must be friends not in word only but in deed. The present subscription list cannot sustain the paper at the present price: this was evident when the present low rates were fixed. But an enlarged and greatly enlarged circulation was confidently looked for, and thus it can be sustained.

A few persons have already set an example in the way of doing good, by means of the religious press, that we hope will be extensively adopted. They have subscribed and paid for themselves, and for half a dozen others. The low price invites. Benevolent reader, try it. Invest five or ten dollars or more in that way, for your neighbors and friends. Are there not some rich among them who need but will not pay for a religious paper: and some poor who do much wish but cannot pay for it. Present it to them. To have a religious paper entering their families every week may accomplish great good. You who wish to do good while in this world, TRY IT.

Tract Society.—A movement has been made in the M. E. Church, North, to form a Methodist General Tract Society.

Commendable Liberality.—The N. York Medical College, and the College of Physicians and Surgeons, N. Y., have tendered free tickets for their lectures, etc., to all who intend to become missionaries.

Increase of the Church.—Dr. Baird recently observed that the number of communicants in the evangelical churches of the United States is ten times greater than it was fifty years ago.

The vulgar trace faults in others which they themselves possess, but have no idea of excellencies to which they have no pretensions.

CONVERSION OF THE YOUNG.

Is it not so that the most that some who are engaged in our Sabbath Schools hope to do for their pupils, is to prepare them to be converted hereafter! To have them ready, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord. Little hope is entertained of leading them in repentance and faith to a knowledge of sins forgiven, while in the Sunday school. This is seed time only—no expectation of reaping. Foundations are being laid—no thought of building. The time for fruit-bearing is pitched forward to that indefinite term, "maturer years." By what authority is this? Indeed, the conversion of human beings while young has yet to occupy its proper position in the policy of the Church. A deep conviction of the practicability and importance of this early movement upon mankind and a general, direct and hopeful effort for it must take place in the Church before the Church prevails with rapid spread and powerful sway over the world.

Rev. S. Jackson, in urging the religious education of the masses upon the English Wesleyans, that they should undertake the work of converting the children as though they intended to do it, makes these remarks. May they sink deep into the hearts of American Wesleyans:

"No church can permanently subsist exclusively upon the principle of adult proselytism, however successful in that department. Matured sinners, when converted, are highly prized by Christ, but have to a sad extent disqualified themselves for his service on earth. With few exceptions, the efficient agents in advancing Methodism, whether lay or clerical, have been persons converted to God in childhood, and trained in the bosom of our families and churches. If Methodism succeed in her 'enlarged mission,' her youth will be 'renewed as the eagle's.' If she fail, 'gray hairs are here and there upon her,' and her days are numbered.

His Testimony.—The two column leader of the Ch. Ad. and Journal is devoted to the Haomerite movement. An editorial on Daniel Webster coincides with our own views, as given last week, on the nature of his testimony to the Christian religion. Of course this adds not a jot or tittle to the stability of the Christian's religion. His experience on this subject is more than all theory. His "unction of the Holy One" is worth more than all human knowledge. But such testimony, from such a source, ought to have its weight. The editor says:

If he was practically a Christian, he has been sadly misrepresented; but that he was not an infidel, or even a sceptic in regard to divine revelation, is certain; and this is a fact which is of no little importance to the world. He was not a man to take opinions upon trust. Perhaps he never adopted an opinion in his life without careful scrutiny; and of his ability to investigate any subject deemed worthy of attention there can be no doubt. He had, moreover, read the Scriptures carefully, and was aware of the objections and arguments of those who have rejected their divine authority; and having weighed the arguments on both sides, his gigantic intellect decided in favor of the claims which the Bible makes on universal credence, as containing a revelation from God.

Let it be remembered then, that the powerful mind of Daniel Webster received, after thorough research, and careful scrutiny, the Bible as a credible record of divine revelation.

Allow us now to ask the infidel if he deems himself better qualified to examine and decide on the evidence upon which this belief rests, than Daniel Webster was? Or whether any one of the most celebrated infidel writers of former or present times, excelled him in ability in this respect? Did Hume or Bolinbroke, or does Baron Holbach excel him in reasoning power, knowledge of the rules of evidence, or ability in applying these rules to any subject which came under his investigation? We think no one will answer in the affirmative. Why then, it may be asked, did these confessedly great men come to such opposite conclusions as to the truth of the Holy Scriptures? We answer that, in the first place, Hume acknowledged he had never read the Scriptures with attention; and from Bolinbroke's and Holbach's writings the same thing may be readily inferred. Mr. Webster, on the contrary, had devoted so much time to the reading and study of the Bible, that he could readily quote long passages from it on every suitable occasion.

The Biblical Institute.—This institute at Concord, N. H., the only one of its kind among American Methodists, held its Commencement on the 3d inst. Dr. Dempster is President. Bishop Baker was elevated from one of its Professor's chairs, to the Episcopacy. Already one hundred and twenty ministers have been admitted to the enjoyment of its advantages. Thirteen have just graduated making seventy-four now in the regular work of the ministry, once its students; four of whom are missionaries in a distant field. The Institute appears to be prosperous. The number of students have increased one-sixth over any former year. The editor of Zion's Herald attended the examinations, and remarks thus:

We returned to the chapel and listened with gratification to a very satisfactory interrogation of the class in polemic theology. Prof. Vail, with his fine, hearty, and benevolent face, then took the chair, and conducted the examination of a class in Hebrew, which we did not hear; but we did listen with great pleasure to the answers of his class on the book of Romans. The clear analysis its members gave of the argument in each chapter, their readiness in translating particular passages, and their promptitude in answering various exegetical questions, proved them to possess no little knowledge of that masterpiece of the Paulino epistles.

While witnessing these exhibitions of intelligence, we were impressed with a conviction of the vast benefit derived from the training of this institution, to the young men who enjoy its privileges. They have evidently acquired such a comprehension of the whole field of theology, such a wide view of the ground covered by polemical controversies, such clear conceptions of doctrinal definitions, such knowledge of systematic divinity, of ecclesiastical history, and of Church discipline, as have introduced them into a mental world, larger, more bountiful, and more densely populated with great and symmetrical thoughts, than they would have ever entered without this or a similar training. We deem them far better fitted to make deep marks of blessing on the world—to move forward in undeviating lines of usefulness and fidelity to Methodism, than they could have been by any process of unassisted self-culture. But for this Institute, modelled as it now is, most of these young men would have entered the ministry with no higher preparation than the literary help to be obtained at our academies and seminaries. Very few of them would have entered a university or have enjoyed any theological training whatever. Who, then, will question the utility, and even necessity of such an institution, at the present epoch of our church history?

The Church, North, are not all agreed as to the utility of the Institute. Some look upon it with distrust, others as a nuisance, others again as the sine qua non. It is thought to take the inflamability out of the young men who submit to its three years' course—securing correctness at the expense of tameness. But the Biblical Institute seems to be making headway. We should prefer to the district Institute, an able theological professorship, in connection with our principal colleges. The editor of the Herald prefers this too, but says: "At present we cannot do this. Our New England ministry, certainly, must be replenished, chiefly by young men whose limited means absolutely exclude them from the walls of a university, but not from the economical and valuable instructions of the Biblical Institute. Shall we, then, deny them the latter, because they can not reach the former? Nay! Rather let us make the latter efficient, by ample endowments, until its destiny is accomplished."

Receiving the New Preacher.—Our friend on the Arkansas side of the Memphis Advocate, now the people are looking for the coming of the new preacher from Conference improves the occasion in telling how he should be received. The picture of want and care he draws is not confined to swamps and river bottoms, but is witnessed "in the hill country," and in full many a village and city. It is an "o'er true tale:"

It may be that you will have a married preacher sent you. As soon as you ascertain this fact, if it is your intention to take care of your preacher and provide for him comfortably, have a meeting of the Stewards, appointed to meet your preacher as soon as he may come upon his work. Hear whether he wishes to board or keep house. If the former secure a boarding place for the year, with the express stipulation that the Church and not the preacher, is to be responsible for its payment; and thereupon secure immediately by subscription, payable quarterly, the amount needed to cover the board. If he intends to keep house, do you on the Church's responsibility, rent or otherwise procure a house for him, a servant and provisions for the year. Do all this immediately, that when the preacher's family arrives, they may commence the winter as comfortably as yourselves. The preacher has enough to do, the Lord knows, to open his work in the midst of the winds and rains and snows of winter, without having to ransack the country for meal and bacon.

Mercy on us! how is it that some stewards and church members can toast their shins and read this blessed Advocate by the side of a big, blazing fire, while the Circuit preacher is trudging through the swamp, holding his blanket up to his nose and eyes to keep out the drifting sleet, trying to study out his sermon, and how to get wood and pork for his family, at one and the same time? Only look! there he goes, poor fellow; splash! splash! through the river bottom. He has began to study his text. Thus he soliloquises: My text is found—bacon, ten cents a pound in Romans: havn't but a few pounds in the house—fifth and first verse—let's see, two dimes and twenty-five cents—therefore being justified—that's forty-five cents—by faith—Humph! wish the people would show their faith by their works—we have peace—yes, that's true, would have more peace if we were fixed for the winter—with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ—and there's the meal toe—first head—bacon—peace—second—head—meal—justification; third head—by faith—fourth—head—through Christ—and then there's the house rent—application—No! no! can't locate. Just here his meditations become so intense, that he plunges unawares into a mud-hole, and so ends his soliloquy. Now we ask, if a preacher's mind, thus burdened, can be in a proper state for preaching? Can he fully execute his mission, while the cares of the Church and of the world heth rest so heavily on his heart?

Now here is good advice and reasonable. We hope the Church generally will take it:

But let every thing, in the way of table expense, be prepared at the outset, that he may commence his work with cheerfulness and alacrity.

These table expenses are a distinct thing from quarterage. When you have arranged them, then strike out for quarterage, and prepare to meet the first quarter in full. Get the first quarter met, and it will warrant the rest. Indeed, you might more than meet it, for just then is the time when money begins to circulate.

Not so bad.—The Spirit of the Times tells the following as a good joke. It may be questioned whether the conductors of that facetious sheet could give as fair an account of faithful obedience as the negro preacher. The Times says it is too rich "to be confined to private circles:"

"A negro preacher was holding forth to his congregation upon the subject of obeying the commands of God. Says he, "Bredren, whatebber God tells me to do in dis hook, (holding up the Bible) dat I am gwein to do. If I see in it dat I must jump troo a stone wall, I am gwoin to jump at it. Gwoin troo it 'longs to God; jumpin at it 'longs to me!"

Rev. J. M. Pease.—This gentleman, who has acted in the South so efficiently in behalf of the Colonization Society, has lately been promoted, and worthily too, to the Corresponding Secretaryship of the Pennsylvania Col. Society.

The Liquor Law.—A bill, providing for the repeal of the liquor law, was offered the other day, in the Rhode Island Legislature, and promptly rejected, by a vote of 49 to 14. This settles the liquor law question in that State for the present.

Thanksgiving Day.—The Governors of several States in the Union have appointed Thursday, 25th inst., as a day of public thanksgiving and praise.

SHREVEPORT CORRESPONDENCE.

For this long time have I been waiting for "something to turn up," but nothing of the marvelous has occurred of late, albeit certain of the mesmerists and rappers have been amongst us. Owing probably to atmospheric and psychological causes, they made no impression; and they have gone elsewhere to retail their lying wonders, and to make merchandise of their delusions. There are more people living by their wits in this age than in any other. Notions, whether Yankee or otherwise, make up the chief trading capital of the times. Many might be enumerated, but mesmerism and knockings are now uppermost. It is really singular what a host of brainless idlers catch up these crudities of philosophy and faith, and penetrate the whole land with their wares of jargon and nonsense. Like the frogs of Egypt they are croaking every where. No town or village, or cross-roads, is exempt from the plague. These vagabond magii aim at no particular or general improvement in morals, religion or science, and are a remarkable compound of avarice and laziness.

Besides these we are bored and sawed from time to time by those literary gypsies, called lecturers, who sport every dignity from the cravat-clerical to the ferrule-gravity of the pedagogue. These reverends, doctors and professors, prophets of science, literature and moral reform, pour out their miscellaneous erudition and philanthrophy upon our devoted heads without stint or abatement. The fact cannot be disguised that the public mind is surfeited with their indigestible nomenclatures, and absurdities, and any plausible plan to rid the country of them would entitle its author to the lasting gratitude of world.

This has been a year of elections with us, and so it is likely to continue till the end. The great canvass is now over, and peace and harmony reign where, but a little time ago, all was confusion and strife. Just here the loftiest aspect of the contest rose no higher than a scratch and bite between the cock and coon. Nevertheless there was the usual display of patriotism and barbecue dinners, in torch-light processions and coffee-house oratory. It is well for the quiet-minded that these demonstrations have an end, and that political repose ensues so speedily.

The license question was recently submitted to the citizens of Shreveport, and the liquor interest obtained an easy and decided triumph. Only 48 votes were given for no license, whilst 130 were polled on the contrary. These together constitute about half of the legal voters. There were, therefore, as many who did not go to the ballot box, and their absence from the polls lost us the question. Probably no place in the United States is so grievously grog-ridden as this, and the responsibility must now rest upon the majority of its citizens. The coffee-houses control every interest, commercial, political and professional, and merchants, politicians and professional men, either directly court their favor or avoid encountering their ill will and opposition. This reveals the secret of the vote upon the license question. The proprietors of the exchanges were early at the polls with their besotted dependents, and hundreds were awed away, or persuaded to vote against the dictates of conscience and the true interests of the town. A further evidence of this fact is seen in the reflection that there are probably over 150 total abstinence voters within the corporation, and of the 48 who had the nerve to vote no license, not more than two-thirds were pledged men. Where were these ultra temperance advocates on the day of election? They were at home. They could cease to use ardent spirits themselves, and assume the obligations of the Division and Temple, but they had not the courage to lift their hands for the extirpation of the monstrous nuisances which threaten our Union, and prey upon the vitals of our prosperity.

Sometimes this measure has been opposed, and I will not take it upon me to say that it has not been honestly opposed, as an infringement of individual rights. This has long since been thoroughly exploded, and was not pleaded in the contest here. Moral cowardice in those who thought and felt right upon the subject, lies at the bottom of the disastrous result, and I am particular to make this issue for two reasons. That the culpable may stand upon definite ground, where they may be pointed out and showed up in their true colors; and that other corporations are about to test the question, may know where to direct their chief endeavors against the enemy. Upon the grounds of morality, abstract right and expediency, the licensemen can never meet their opponents. It is against alcoholic despotism that they must direct their efforts, and the constrained and silent courtesies of exchange influence are those whom they have most to fear. Deliver us from these and the cause is every where triumphant. But for them Shreveport would be free from intemperance, and the cause of a blighted commerce, and a poisoned and infectious society would be withdrawn.

One horn of the beast, however, would have been left—the enormous wholesale whisky trade. Our merchants, with some honorable exceptions, are largely engaged in the traffic—some regarding it as a necessary evil, whilst others are not careful to enquire or to be concerned, that it is an evil ut all. Its influence is not materially felt here, except as far as it may be showed, that it impoverishes customers, and makes insolvent debtors, but it plants Eastern Texas with thousands of cabarets, which fill as many thousand neighborhoods with the vices and miseries of drunkenness, besides its deplorable effects upon the slave population. Nothing but the "Maine law" can reach this fearful phase of the liquor evil. The late act of the Legislature goes as far as is practicable for the present, but temperance philanthropists should regard it as the forerunner of a stronger and more adequate measure. The history of the temperance movement, from first to last, indicates that the Maine law is its true and mature development. I do not mean that the advocates have all the time been advancing with masked batteries upon this subject. Their movements at first were cautious and experimental; but these movements, running through many years of profitable experience, have now met in the demonstration, that the Maine law is the eureka of the cause. They have arrived at these all-important results, that it is a legitimate matter of legislation, and that legislative agitation is the most effectual way of bringing about right public opinion and popular action upon the subject.

The battle in Louisiana must be fought upon these principles ultimately, and though victory be slow, it will be worth something when gained. The State is literally flooded with whisky. The Western distilleries pour it down upon us in floods, and threaten to submerge the land. Unless these serpents and mouths can be stopped, we shall sink beneath the inundation, or be carried away of the flood. The Sons, as an order, are nearly obsolete in the country. Not a single Division in this part of the State retains its charter. Like the lost Pleiades they have disappeared, and their memorial has perished with them.

Sometime in 1849, you may remember to have witnessed a considerable pageant here, during the session of the Annual Conference. At that time the ladies of Shreveport presented a large and flourishing Division with a banner of much beauty and cost. The Division is no more, and the spiders, with sacred industry, have shrouded the banner with their webs. This Division was of remarkable longevity, and fell after all the rest had fallen, and now not one is left.

The Sons attribute their union in part to the Temple, which divided their strength, and opened the way to an invidious rivalry that proved destructive to the fraternity of the whole organization. The Temple may have broken down the Division, but it is likely that both have made a mistake. The temperance reform must stand upon the single basis of itself, and the largest popular element should be peculiar to all of its organizations. In these respects both the Temple and Division were deficient. Temperance became but one of several objects, and their pledges and costly machinery of initiations, and degrees, took away the popular element entirely. Your "reform league" is a better model. Let one be formed which shall aim at the emancipation of the entire State, and it will bring out the whole strength of the temperance cause, and direct it to one magnificent issue.

Our levee is thronged with boats, and the wharves groan beneath an unusual accumulation of freight. It is now estimated that upwards of sixty thousand bales will be shipped from this point the present year, and nearly twenty thousand are already in the market. The picking season has been less favorable than last year, owing to frequent and heavy rains, but a heavy crop will be gathered notwithstanding. The weather is now prime—cool, clear, and healthy. Red river is in good navigable condition, and first class boats for travel and freight, are plenty.

REMINISCENCES.

Just back of our old church was the graveyard. A volume of interest might be written about the sleepers in that quiet spot. Two funerals that I attended in that church-yard, when a child, made quite an impression on my young mind and heart. One was the funeral of the Rev. Mark Moore, a man "mighty in the scriptures," whose "praise was in all the churches." I have only a very faint recollection of "Father Moore" as living, but I remember well his burial day, the stiff looking coffin, and the hymn that was sung, especially two lines of the hymn.

"The toil, the wise, the reverend head,
Must lay as low as ours."

Child as I was, the hymn seemed very appropriate, for I knew that he who lay there had been a "prince and a great man in Israel," and all that was left of him lay there, prisoned within the narrow bounds of that black coffin—soon to be lowered into the grave, and covered with the clods. A funeral was an incident of wonder to me then, for I had attended but few. I looked with childish wonder and sorrow on the dead, and at the sorrowful group of grown-up people surrounding the sad receptacle that must open sooner or later for all of Adam's sons. I kept repeating to myself,

"Princes, this clay must be your bed
In spite of all your towers."

I was at a camp-meeting where Father Moore was made the instrument in producing a powerful effect. It was evening, the mild lingering rays of the sun shone around his reverend head, the silvery locks of which were as a "crown of glory," he stood in the rustic pulpit, and was acting as ambassador for God. It was at Bethel, a place that is a Mecca of Methodism in South Louisiana and Mississippi.

He was urging on the young the importance of consecrating themselves to God, and of making that the time of their decision, to return to God. After an impassioned and thrilling appeal, he leaned over the side of the stand, stretched out his arms as if to gather in all the young who were so dear to him, and who loved him so well, and exclaimed in a voice attuned to harmony and love, "Home! children, home!" Not often has been witnessed on this earth such a scene as followed. Almost all the young people of the congregation with one simultaneous influence, rushed to the altar and asked an interest in the prayers of the Christians. Eternity only can develope the important issues which hung upon the decisions of that hour. Many of the young people who decided from that hour to live for God, have gone home to glory, and some are workers in God's harvest-field. Why can we not see such times now as were seen at Bethel on that sweet, calm evening? Is it because our preachers have fewer helps to efficiency now? Have there not been many pages written to teach preachers how to reach the hearts of their audience? Alas! the preachers many of them need the unction that our fathers had, and our young congregations lack praying, faithful mothers and relations who would keep their hearts in frame to be reached by appeals to their judgment and feelings.

Another, who lies sweetly, sleeping in Christ in that old church-yard, was a quiet unobtrusive Christian woman; a kind, faithful mother; a provident and thoughtful mistress, and a constant friend. She might have sat for the portrait of Solomon's virtuous woman; "The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her; she openeth her mouth with wisdom, and in her tongue is the law of kindness.—She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, he praiseth her." Her house was my other home. I saw her die—years have passed away since her burial day, yet memory keeps the "record fair" of all her worth and of her triumphant passage over the waters of the cold flood. The picture of that death-bed scene is more vivid and firmly fixed in my recollection than many events of more recent date. I child, almost unnoticed and forgotten the sad group surrounding that bed noticed them all, and remember what said and looked. Her husband, sisters dren, mother-in-law, and old nurse gathered there, all sad, some almost grief.

Her mother-in-law kneeled near of the bed on one side, and her old the other. Her mother-in-law said teen years has she been my daughter never yet has she hurt my feelings." old nurse seemed overwhelmed; said "Many a time have I carried you back, and must you go first!"

The dying one had done with lay perfectly calm, except when a of pain would distort her face for a It constituted one of these contrasts frequently see, the dying so calm, who are left are full of passionate grief.

In the evening, before she got too talk, she said to her sister, "Martha, this? I always dreaded death, but ing is all gone now." "Yes, dear, you had kept grace in your heart to and God did not forget to give you die with.

"The sandle of the Lord shone round path." No; that is too weak: the righteousness illumined all the dark and it was light.

"Our dying friends are pioneers to the rugged path to death." 'Tis sweet look beyond the dark valley and the flood to our bright home in Heaven, our "loved and lost" are safely harbored.

BE YOUR OWN EXECUTOR.

Those who hoard up and get, and get and keep it all fast, with the avowed intention of doing some great thing at the are very generally and justly suspected leving filthy lucre more than the luxury doing good. Like Samson, they are in sense—achieving more in their dying than all their living. Death may be thanked grace, for their liberal bequests, their endowments, etc. To give money, and lands and houses, in lifetime to the poor orphan, and poor widow, and the poor college, and the poor fund, would be to decide between the claims of these objects and themselves. Self-denial may be here to grace the gift. But give the same bounty to the same objects by last will and testament, is only deciding between the claims of these objects and the claims of heirs. There is no self-denial in this.

Upon those who are God's stewards by much or little, we would urge that what their hands find to do, do it quickly.

Besides the necessity of this lifetime liberality, in order to its possessing an essential element of virtue, there are two other potent reasons recommending it. We find them well expressed in connection with a practical illustration. The Secretary of a leading Missionary Society reports:

"A brother, whose signature is 'Zac,' sends us $500, 'as an appropriation for the extension of the knowledge of Christ among men.' This he has done repeatedly before, under an impression that whatsoever his hand findeth to do, he should do quickly; and with a conviction that a man ought, as far as practicable, to be his own executor. He assigns two wise and sufficient reasons for this course: first, the pleasure of seeing the fruit of one's own benevolence; and, secondly, to be sure that his intentions will take effect. This last reason has acquired great weight with him recently by seeing (he heathens live,) bequests for benevolent purposes set aside by courts, and thus the obvious intent of the testator failed to take effect."

Declination of Rev. Dr. Hawks.—It is stated that the Rev. Francis L. Hawks, who was elected to the Bishop of Rhode Island, with the rectorship of Grace Church Providence, has declined the acceptance. He will remain, as at present, over Calvary Church, in New York city.

Missionaries for the Pacific.—Eight missionaries with their families, twenty-two in all, were to sail last week for California, in the clipper-ship Trade Wind, from New York, under the auspices of the American Home Missionary Society. Their names are as follows: Rev. Messrs Obed Dickinson and Thomas Condon, for Oregon; Rev. Messrs. Samuel B. Bell, John O. Hall, Silas S. Hamar, James Pierpont, Wm. C. Pond and Edward B. Walworth, for California.

Rev. J. McCarty, D. D., who was chaplain to Gen. Scott in the Mexican campaign, and who distinguished himself therein, by his intrepid and pious devotion to duty in the midst of danger, was, on Tuesday, the 9th inst., ordained by the Board of Domestic Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church, as Missionary of Oregon.

The Mammoth Cave.—Its Cost.—In one of Mr Webster's recent letters to the Home Journal is the following paragraph relating to the original purchase of and the amount paid for the Mammoth Cave in Kentucky:

"Col. Creghan, to whose family it belongs, was a resident of Louisville. He went to Europe some twenty years ago, and, as an American found himself frequently questioned of the wonders of the Mammoth Cave. Since he had never visited, and of which, at home, though living within ninety miles of it, he had heard very little. He went, there immediately on his return, and the idea struck him to purchase and make it a family inheritance. In fifteen minutes' bargaining, he bought it for $10,000, though shortly after he was offered $100,000 for the purchase. In his will he left it up in such a way that it must remain in his family for two generations, thus suspending its celebrity to his name. There are nineteen hundred acres in the estate—three square miles above ground—though the cave probably runs under the property of a great number of other land owners. For fear of those who might dig down and establish an entrance to the cave on their own property, (a man's farm extending the cave on their own property, (a man's farm extending the cave on their own property, (a man's farm extending

Obituary.

Died—On the 2d instant, at the residence of her brother-in-law, Mr. Ira Bowman, of Tensas Parish, Mrs. Margaret S. Bowman, wife of Robert Bowman, Esq., of Clinton, and youngest daughter of Col. John G. Richardson, St. Mary's Parish, in the 26th year of her age.

Her disease, consumption, was long in working out its fatal result; and, consequently, she suffered a great while, as well as severely. Up to the commencement of this disease, she had seemed to possess an unusually healthy habit of body, and great vigor of constitution, animated by remarkable vivacity and activity of mind—affording to short-sighted human observers the promise of a prolonged enjoyment of life by her. But, alas! how early were these flattering indications found to be treacherous in the hopes of those who loved her! She had scarcely attained to full maturity of womanhood, when the dark shadow of her destiny fell upon her pathway of life, and wrapped it in still-thickening gloom to the end. What a lesson on the vanity of human life, and of hope in earthly good! During about three years were her suffering protracted; and, though, as is usual in this flattering disease, there were times when both she and her friends indulged some hope of a favorable issue, the progress of the Destroyer was steadily onward, towards the dissolution of the fair and well-built fabric on which his ruthless hands were laid.

Happily for the doomed Margaret, she had, ere yet she was agonized by strong pain, or her mind had been weakened by long-continued sufferings, turned her attention and given her consent to the claims of religion upon her. And, though, as she afterwards deeply lamented, she had not so devoted herself uniformly to the satisfying of those claims as to secure the amount of consolation that religion proposes to confer, the measure, in which she had responded to them, acted conservatively upon her principles, and formed a ground-work upon which she was afterwards enabled to rear a structure of scriptural piety and of hope reaching into the very heavens. That piety consisted in "repentance towards God," for sins committed—"faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ," for pardon and salvation from sin—devotion to the service of God—and unrepining submission to the allotments of his providence: and, that hope laid confident, though humble, claim to "an inheritance, incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away—in heaven."

The fruits of this piety, and of this hope, were abundantly seen in the closing struggle, which resulted in her death. That struggle was long, and most of the time, it was exceedingly severe. Throughout its whole course, however, she was so "strengthened with might, by the Spirit, in the inner man," as to be able to say, with cheerful acquiescence, "It is the Lord—let Him do what He will!" She looked to and conversed concerning her death with calm serenity and humble confidence; and, though she felt that to "depart, and be with Christ were better," for her, than to remain in the ruins of her dissolving and agonized mortality: yet, she was willing to wait her "appointed time, when her change should come." For days together she was dying; during all which time she was resigned, cheerful, and happy—"happier," she declared, "than ever in her life before." She dwelt, with delight, on the "preciousness of her Saviour, and on the never-ending felicity with Him," of which He had given her "the full assurance of hope." To all about her, she addressed admonitions, exhortations, and consolations, appropriate to what she believed to be their condition, relatively to their duty to God, and to their salvation. And, thus, confident in her Saviour, devoted and resigned to God, "rejoicing in hope of the glory of God," and earnestly laboring for the salvation of those about her, she "finished her course," and "slept in Jesus." We can harbor no doubt that she rests in the paradise of God; in the society of a pious mother, who "entered into that rest," very shortly after having brought her into that world, in which she was to suffer so much, but from which in the end, her departure was a scene of triumph, through the grace of her Redeemer, compared with which, all earthly triumphs are valueless. Thus would we die!

Centreville, Amite, Miss., Nov. 16, 1852.

Died, Sept. 21st, 1852, in Greene co., Ala., Miss Sarah K. M. Casey, aged 27 years.

Her death-bed sickness was protracted twenty-one days, yet she bore it with Christian resignation. Her class-leader, with other Christian friends, visited and conversed with her about death and the future; they found her peace deep, joy full, mind calm, and stayed upon the Saviour. Seeing an only surviving and much afflicted sister weeping, she bid her dry her tears and weep not. The last moment came, and all being well, the work wrought, the conflict over, with an unclouded prospect, she whispered, "I am ready, I am ready," and fell to sleep in Jesus.

General Intelligence.

Report of the Charity Hospital.—The report of this institution for the week past is as follows: Admissions, 352; discharged, 301; deaths, 60. There were but eleven deaths from cholera, and seventeen from yellow fever.

The Crescent City Affair.—New York, Wednesday, Nov. 17.—The steamer Black Warrior has arrived here, having left Havana on the 11th instant. She reports that when she left, a Spanish war-steamer was cruizing off the port of Havana, with instructions from the Government to prevent the Crescent City from entering the harbor at all hazards.

The guards stationed on a former occasion to prevent the entrance of the Crescent City into the harbor have been arrested and imprisoned for neglect of duty.

The Macon Bridge.—"Yesterday," says the Savannah Corrier of Friday, "the first train of loaded cars passed over the new railroad bridge, at Macon. The work has been slightly delayed, owing to the difficulty of procuring laborers, and the sickliness of the season; but we understand that the structure is one of the finest ever put up in the State. Too much praise cannot be bestowed upon those who have charge of the work, for the energy which they have shown in pressing it to an early completion. Henceforth the breaking of bulk, and the portage of Macon, will be entirely dispensed with. This will facilitate the transportation of merchandize and produce, and no doubt greatly increase the business of the season.

The Butter Trade of Cincinnati.—Cincinnati is a great distributing point for butter and cheese for the south and southwest, and the annual receipts of butter by public conveyance alone, for ten years past, amounted to nearly half a million of dollars. The exports are large, the city consumers depending mainly upon private conveyances for their supplies. During the year ending September 1, 1852, the receipts and exports were as follows, in pounds: Imports, 3,412,000 pounds; exports, 2,321,250 pounds. Excess of imports, 1,091,350 pounds. The Price Current estimates the consumption of Cincinnati and vicinity at about four millions pounds per annum, and the receipts by private conveyances at about three millions, making seven millions pounds as the ready supply of butter from all sources, the value not less than a million of dollars, or nearly one-third the value of the hogs disposed of in the pork city.

The Upper Rivers.—The St. Louis Republican of the 11th inst., says: The river above and below may now be said to be in good navigable condition. Boats down report four and a half feet water in the Missouri from St. Joseph down, from four and a half to five feet in the Upper Mississippi from this point to Keokuk, with also a fair stage above, and a little short of five feet in the Illinois from Lasalle down. The Ohio, as we learn by telegraph, continues rising, and we may expect the next boat in to report a fair stage of water there. The Cumberland and the Kentucky rivers are also reported rising, the latter quite rapidly. In fact, we have now a fair prospect of a good stage of water in all our western rivers, for a short time at least. In the Missouri, however, the swell comes too late to do much good, as the business is nearly, if not quite over for the fall in that region. Upper Mississippi and Illinois boats are doing a fair business, the travel on the latter having, since the improvements in navigation, begun to be quite considerable. At this point the river is rising steadily, and is now about four feet above the point at which it stood when the present rise commenced.

A Railroad Company Failure.—The Hudson and Berkshire Railroad Company in NewYork having failed to pay the interest on their bonds, a mortgage will be taken by the bond-holders on the road.

Statistics of Odd Fellowship.—From the official reports made to the Grand Lodge of the United States for the year ending 30th of June last, we learn that there are in the United States two thousand seven hundred and twenty-nine Lodges, with nearly two hundred thousand members. The revenue of the Order during the year is about one million two hundred thousand dollars, of which some five hundred and fifty thousand dollars were disbursed for benevolent purposes, viz: for the benefit of sick members, widowed families, of the schooling of orphan children.

Important Improvements.—Prof. Grant, a gentleman well known in scientific circles, has exhibited to the editor of the NewYork Sun a model of an invention of his own for making available the momentum acquired by cars drawn by horses in starting them again after they have been stopped to take up or set down passengers. The Sun says the invention is simple in construction, and its effectiveness is very apparent, even to the unpractised eye. The principle is applicable also to omnibuses, and this would be quite a desideratum on the smooth russ pavement.

A Terrible Duel in California.—By the Santa Clara Register, we are informed of the following particulars of a duel which came off in Santa Clara county, near Gilroy's rauch, and which, in ferocity and desperation, we find no parallel for in the State. It occurred, says the Register, between a Mexican and a native Californian, about a game of "monte," and Colt's navy revolvers were the weapons used in combat. Nine shots were fired, and four of the balls took effect in each of the combatants. Both parties expired immediately, and they were each ushered into the presence of their Maker, to answer for the murder of the other. After the second or third shot, the Californian crawled on his hands and knees nearer his antagonist, and fired, in order to make sure of his victim. The shot took effect in the abdomen of the Mexican.

The Whaling Business.—A vessel fitting out at San Francisco, for a whaling cruise, is furnished, beside the usual implements for catching the leviathans of the deep, with arrows, each of which is an iron tube, about eighteen inches long, with a keen, triangular point, fastened with India rubber. These are to be charged with two ounces of gun-powder, with a thirty second fuse—and they are to be fired from a gun about two feet in the barrel, which is half an inch thick, and has the calibre for a two-ounce ball. The gun has a brass stock, and is fired from the shoulder. The weight of the piece is nearly thirty pounds. The arrow will penetrate a whale at thirty yards and there explode, killing him immediately, as it must tear and lacerate him dreadfully.

Successful Treatment of Cholera in Germany.—In Germany and Austria the hot air bath has been called into requisition by some eminent medical gentlemen when patients have become too weak for the administration of medicine internally; and in the majority of cases where this has been done, it appears, by accounts published in the German newspapers, that a speedy recovery has followed, even notwithstanding symptoms of the worst character had presented themselves, and threatened a fatal termination. Of course the air is previously impregnated with medicinal properties of sufficient strength to act powerfully on the system. There is, unfortunately, a great dislike among medical practitioners in this country to travel out of the old beaten track, even though new modes of treatment are proved to be both efficacious and in skilful hands, free from danger; but it is to be hoped that the above simple plan will not be lost sight of if this frightful disease should once more devastate our population.

Putty Dispensed With.—Some down-east operator has got a way of setting glass without putty. The window sash is made entirely of wood, the outside permanent. The inside is framed in such a manner that the parts can be readily removed for the purpose of inserting the glass, which is placed between slips of India-rubber, which, when the parts of the sash are replaced, causes the glass to be perfectly firm. The movable parts of the sash are secured to their place by a knob-screw, which makes a pretty finish.

Railroad Statistics.—Some very useful and interesting statistics in relation to railroads in different States, have been recently published by the Superintendent of the Census, derived from the recent census returns. From the tables thus furnished, it appears that there are now in the United States 10,814 miles of railroads finished, and 10,808 miles in the course of construction.

It also appears that in relation to the miles of railroads finished, and in the course of construction, the following are the results, as compared with the number of inhabitants:

Connecticut—1 mile of railroad to every 458 inhabitants.

Illinois,	"	"	568 "
N Hampshire	"	"	593 "
Massachusetts	"	"	860 "
Georgia	"	"	920 "
Maryland	"	"	1163 "
NewYork	"	"	1204 "
Pennsylvania	"	"	1291 "

As compared with the number of square miles in several of the States, the result is as follows:

Connecticut, 1 mile railroad to 5¾ square miles territory.

Massachusetts	"	"	6¾ "
NewYork	"	"	17¾ "
NewHampshire	"	"	17 9-10 "
Maryland	"	"	18 6-10 "
Pennsylvania	"	"	23 6-10 "

From the foregoing, it appears that, of the railroads finished and in course of construction, the State of Connecticut has the largest number of miles in proportion to its inhabitants, and also in proportion to its area.

If only those roads are taken which are actually finished and in operation, as to the number of inhabitants, New Hampshire is first—there being one mile of railroad to every 650 inhabitants: Connecticut is next, being 1 to 670 and Massachusetts 1 to 913 inhabitants.

And in relation to finished railroads, Massachusetts has one mile of railroad to every seven square miles, and Connecticut one mile of railroad to every eight miles of territory, which is a much larger ratio than in any of the other States.

Ship Race from China to England.—The English ship Chrysolite, 104 days from Whampoa, has arrived at Liverpool, with the first cargo of the new tea company. This is one of the new English clippers which left China about the same time for England as two of our American clippers, and no little interest is felt in England about their respective passages. The British clipper Stornmway, for London, left on the 9th of July; the American clippers Race Horse, for Liverpool on the 15th, and the Surprise, for London on the 19th.

Later from Texas.

By the arrival yesterday at the steamship Louisiana, Captain Smith, we have received Galveston dates to the 12th instant, and a portion of our exchanges from the interior:

The Cotton Crop.—The Houston Telegraph says: We visited Anglin and Washington counties a few days since, and were surprised to notice the quantity of cotton still whitening the fields, and which, we were informed, could not be picked out for want of hands. Most of the planters have raised much more cotton than they can possibly gather, and they are offering enormous wages for hands to pick it out. We are informed that some planters had offered a dollar and a half and two dollars per day for good hands, to pick the cotton, and few could be obtained at these rates. A considerable quantity of cotton was also stroyed in the fields by the late storm, but it caused no uneasiness. An intelligent planter stated that it would be better for the planters if all the cotton now in the fields were destroyed.

The Rivers.—The Huntsville Item of the 6th says that there has been a considerable rise in Trinity river, which is thought to be permanent for the season.

Extra Session.—The State Gazette contains the proclamation of the Governor, convening the State Legislature in extra session, on the 10th of January next.

Political Rencontre.—On the 9th inst., the democrats of Galveston celebrated the victory of their party in the Presidential election, by firing out a gun for every State that had voted for the Pierce and King ticket. In the evening a procession was formed and marched through the principal streets, accompanied with music. Loud cheers were given to those who had illuminated their houses in honor of the victory. Mr Craycroft was injured, though not dangerously, by the explosion of a petard, which he had prepared for the occasion, and undertook to fire off. The affair passed off peaceably, and, with this exception, no accident occurred.

Fannin, Ky. Pass.—The San Antonio Western Texan says: Capt. Shulman and Wallace arrived on Friday last with the mail from Santa Fe and El Paso. Mr. J. C. French and several other gentlemen came in with them. The train found grass and water abundant.

We received neither papers nor letters by this arrival. We learn from a gentleman who came passenger, that they have had a tolerably good crop in the vicinity of El Paso, and have raised good crops of corn and wheat. Grapes and other fruit are quite plenty.

The Indians continue as troublesome as ever. But a short time since they stole seventeen government animals from Fort Webster, at the Copper Mines.

A party of sixty Indians were met at the Pecos. They met the mail train under a flag of truce. They stated that they were on their way to Presidio to trade—to steal, they doubtless meant. It was generally believed they were part of the same band that attacked Capt. Walker on his way out. One of the chiefs was dressed in full regimentals. Their animals were all fresh.

Commissioner Bartlett left El Paso on the 10th for the lower Rio Grande, by way of Chihuahua, under an escort furnished him by Col. Van Amburg, the Mexican military commander.

Mr. McManus's merchandize, by way of Santa Fe after passing through the custom-house at El Paso, paying all the duties required, (six and a half cents per yard) and receiving the proper papers, was seized, on reaching Chihuahua, by order of the military commander. His were all foreign goods.

The goods taken out by this route, by Miller and Almendares, had passed through the custom-house in the same way, under protest, by order of Gen. Conde, the military commander.

The parties are taking the necessary steps to lay the matter before our Government through the American consul.

The Upper Rivers.—The St. Louis Republic of the 13th says: The river at this point was still slowly swelling at sunset yesterday evening, up to which time it had risen about two inches in the preceding twenty-four hours. Reals up from below report from eight to nine feet on the principal bars below to Cairo. At last accounts the Missouri was still swelling, and the Illinois receding at Lasalle. The Upper Mississippi is falling at Keokuk and below, boats down from all the upper streams report very cold weather for the season. Snow has fallen on both the Upper Mississippi and the Illinois, and though no ice has as yet been met in either river, there is a fair prospect of it in a short time, unless the weather should moderate.

Telegraphic Items.

Particulars by the Atlantic.

New York, Monday, November 15.

The general news brought by the Atlantic is of little importance. The following being the principal items gleaned from her accounts:

England—Buenos Ayres Cotton Annihilators Burnt.

The English papers chronicle the arrival at Manchester of a few bales of cotton, the export and production of Buenos Ayres.

The large establishment at London, built for the manufacture of Phillips' Fire Annihilator, had taken fire and was destroyed, with a large number of the annihilators, which produced but little effect on the flames.

France—Reduction of Interest—Conspiracy.

Louis Napoleon has issued a decree reducing the rates of certain stocks, and fixing the legal interest at 2 per cent. It is said that a conspiracy against Louis Napoleon exists at Fontainbleau among the military.

British Markets.

Some of the circulars study the decline in Cotton previous to the departure of the Atlantic at 1-16@⅛d, and quote as follows: Fair Orleans, 6¼; Middling Orleans, 6⅛@6¼; Fair Mobile, 6¼@6⅜, and Fair Uplands, 6¼d.

Wheat had declined 2d. per 70 lb, and Flour 3d. per bbl. Corn was unchanged

London and Manchester.

Trade at Manchester was less active, and prices had slightly declined.

In the London Money Market there was an advance in Consols, and the closing rates were 100¾ to 100⅞.

There was a large speculative business doing in the Rice Market in London, and prices were firmer.

Liverpool Cotton Market.

The Cotton market at Liverpool was quiet on the day of the Atlantic's departure, (Wednesday) and the sales were estimated at barely 6000 bales. Prices were without further change.

Further from Havana.

NewYork, November 17.

The Black Warrior reports that when she left Havana, there were several ships of war lying in the harbor, including the British steamer Highflyer, two British sloops of war, and three French war vessels. There was no American vessel of war present, a fact which occasioned much remark, under the circumstances.

The authorities were determined that the Crescent City should not enter Havana.

The Republic and George Law.

Washington, November 17.

The Republic of this morning contains a long article in reply to George Law, in which it denounces his course as a filibustering device to involve the two countries in a war. It declares that Law's repeatedly sending Smith to Habana, is a disreditable attempt to bully the Captain General into a surrender of the position that he had rightfully taken and held throughout.

The article concludes with the assurance that the President will not fail to uphold all the rights of commerce, to vindicate all proper privileges of citizens of the United States, and to guard and protect those visiting Cuba, but that he is not disposed to question the prerogative claimed by the Cuban authorities relative to the exclusion of Smith.

The Republic, however, considers the refusal of the authorities of Cuba to permit the landing of the mails and passengers of the Crescent City, as an act at once unjustifiable and offensive to both the government and country

Important from Spain.

Baltimore, November 19.

A letter from Madrid dated Oct 20 says:

I can inform you from a most authentic source that a secret treaty has been concluded between the Governments of Spain and France, by which the latter power has pledged itself to protect Spain in the possession of the Island of Cuba. The Commanders of all the vessels of war belonging to France, now on the trans-atlantic stations, have received orders to place themselves at the disposal of the Captain General of Cuba. Three vessels of war have for some time past, been kept in Cuban ports, and in the squadron on that station the Steward, of 86 guns, will shortly be added. The Republic of this morning announces that the Lobos Island difficulty has been satisfactorily settled.

Three Sundays in Egypt.—Friday is the Mahomedan Sabbath; Saturday is the Sabbath of the Jews; and the next day the Sabbath of the Christians. This is frequently a source of delay and inconvenience to the traveler. Mr. Smith, of Boston, for example, arrived at Alexandria on Friday, a day on which no quarantine or custom-house business can be transacted with the officials of the country, who are Mahomedans. On Saturday he could do nothing at the bankers, who are Jews. On Sunday the consular offices were closed—the Consuls being Christians. It was not till Monday morning therefore, that he could set about the arrangement for his tour. We may take occasion here to remark that the Doctor's "Pilgrimage to Egypt," from which we learn this curious fact, is at once the worst written and most interesting book of oriental travel that we have read for many a day. It is crammed with incidents and information, conveyed in a style the most slovenly. In spite, however, of its careless style, the book is full of excellent matter. Dr. Smith is one of the most phegyatic, inquisitive and mischief-imaginative Yankees that ever went abroad. [Home Journal.

The following poem from the New York Tribune has reference to the recent death of Downing, the horticulturist, and was written at his place at Newburgh:

MUSINGS IN THE MOONLIGHT.... By C. P. Cranch

In the clear September moonlight
Dark the Western mountains rise,
And the river calm as ever
Pours its broad lake of silver ice.

Like a frame the leafy garden
Clasps the dusky picture round,
And I gaze and gaze forever
By the spell of beauty bound.

O'er the water's tarnished mirror
Darkly glide the shadowed ships,
So the gloomy past is shaded
By our gibbing thought's eclipse.

Bright, fond River—flow forever
In the moonlight to the sea,
But those joyous days thou never,
Never can'st bring back to me.

See! the frame the leafy garden
Arches round the pictured scene,
Like a cypress wreath is growing
Dark—too dark for this—I ween.

One who wreathed the lovely landscape
With these green and shady bowers,
Past away—away forever
With his fleeting golden flowers.

And the lawn beneath the linden,
And the shrubs and vines so green,
And the fragrant beds of roses,
And the winding paths between;

And the house, in beauty bowered,
Rare in beauty of its own—
Never again may hear the music
Of those days forever flown;

Never again shall hear the murmur
Of the joyous company
Whom those festal days of summer
Crowned with mirth and melody.

Silent River—sadly flowing!
Shadows lift like thoughts of pain
Slowly cross thy gleaming silver,
But they catch the light again

Darkly bend the mountains o'er thee,
Firm and dusky in the night,
But their summits woo the moonbeams,
And are touched with heavenly light.

Life is rich and Nature lavish,
Providence is large as fate,—
Many a joy they hide in secret
For the lone and desolate.

After sunset clouds of crimson,
After twilight comes the moon,
After moment still the starlight,
Still the morning's daily boon.

And the cloud that lowers the darkest
Holds the blessing of the rain—
And the grief that stuns the deepest,
Hath another touch than pain.

Later from Liberia.—Loss of the Bark Ralph Cross, of Baltimore.—By way of England, we have advices from Liberia to the 1st of August. A letter from H. Teague, Esq., dated Monrovia, August 27th, gives information of the wreck of the bark Ralph Cross, at Cape Palmas, late in July. She sailed from Baltimore, May 1, with a large company of emigrantes, about 150 in number, including several missionaries. These were landed at Bassa Cove, after four weeks' detention, and the loss of a boat and some goods, but no lives. The goods sent out by the American Colonization Society for the aid of the Republic of Liberia, were all lost. We make the following extracts from Liberia papers:

Monday, the 26th of July, the fifth anniversary of the independence of Liberia, was celebrated by rejoicings in the usual pleasant and consistent manner.

We learn that for the last few weeks there has been a cessation of hostilities between the Veys and the Gedarbs. We are not informed as to the probable cause of the cessation. Dear-boo-bah, who, up to this time, had acted only on the defensive, is now prepared to make aggressive movements. He has concentrated a numerous body of mercenary warriors, and will, no doubt, attempt the destruction of Boombo and all his followers.

We have later advices from the leeward counties:

The health of the emigrants by the ship Ralph Cross was as good as could be expected. There was nothing to disturb the peaceful state of affairs which have, for the last few months, so happily existed. The saw mill at Simon was in operation, and in October next the proprietors of the one at "Buchanan" will be prepared to fill contracts for lumber in any quantity.

It affords us much pleasure to notice the return from England of Rev. E. W. Stokes, Rector of St. Paul's P. E. Church, of this place. Mr. S. succeeded in procuring some funds from England, for the building of a church, and he will proceed immediately to make arrangements for the purpose.

Commodore Lavolette, Commander-in-Chief of the United States Naval forces on the western coast of Africa, was quite ill about the 1st of July.

The Cape Territory, adjoining Gallenas on the north, has been purchased by the Government.

Hon. Dereriue T. Harriss has been engaged in writing a commentary on the Constitution of Liberia. It is expected to be ready for the press in October.

The receipt of an invoice of merchandize amounting to $5340, from the American Colonization Society to the Government of Liberia, is gratefully acknowledged. Of this amount, $5000 is appropriated to assist in defraying the expenses of the late military expedition, and the remainder to paying for territory.

Two or more slave vessels were hovering about the coast during the first week in June. The British cruisers kept on the look out, but did not capture the marauders.

Later from California.—The steamer Illinois arrived at NewYork on the 12th instant, with three hundred passengers, two millions dollars in gold dust, and four days later intelligence from California. The Baltimore Sun has the following telegraphic summary of her news:

She brings San Francisco dates of the 20th ult., and the mails brought by the Cortes at Panama. Among her passengers is Lieut. Gillise, of the Navy, bearer of dispatches from Mr. Clay, U. S. Charge at Lima, relative to the Lobos Island difficulty.

The Illinois made this trip in less than twenty-three days.

Com. McAuley arrived at Callao on the 30th ult., and reports that a severe earthquake occurred at Valparaiso on the 3d of October.

The Panama Star of the 4th contains a proclamation from Com. McAuley, dated Lobos Islands, October 20, in which he informs citizens of the United States that he has been instructed to abstain in protecting them in forcibly resisting the laws of Peru

The steamer Oregon left Panama on the 4th for San Francisco, with a full complement of passengers.

The City of Pittsburgh was at Talcahuano on the 15th, to sail the same day for Panama.

A re-discovery had been made in the Province of Chiriqui of gold mines that were worked in the times of the Spaniards, and were said to be as productive as any in South America.

The steamer Oregon, which arrived at Panama on the 1st inst., brought down three hundred passengers and $2,400,000 in specie.

The Golden Gate arrived at San Francisco on the 19th, in thirteen days from Panama.

The Northerner will sail for San Francisco on the 30th ult., and the California on November 1.

The news from California possesses little interest. The indications were favorable for a thriving fall business. Large arrivals from the Atlantic States had unsettled prices of merchandize.

A Chamber of Commerce had been formed at Panama. The British steamer Southgo had arrived at Panama, with Valparaiso dates to October 15. Business was unusually dull. Sales of flour at $8. Freights were dull at $15 to San Francisco or the United States.

Two vessels full of passengers had sailed for Australia. Another shock of an earthquake was experienced on the 7th ult.

The damage caused by the earthquake at Valparaiso was supposed to be very great.

Catherine Hayes was about giving concerts at Panama.

Australian advices to the 14th of August state there was no abatement in the yield of gold. Many ships were leaving for London with large quantities of the precious metal. The current from the mines arrived on the 5th, with 18,000 ounces. Flour brought £23 per ton; wheat 6s. to 8s. 0d. per bushel.

Circumstances of the Shooting of Mr. Thos. Carneal.—We have obtained thus long from giving any notice of the sad affair which resulted in the death of Mr. Thomas Carneal, the son-in-law of the Governor of our State, that we might get the particulars. It seems that the steamer C. E. Watkins, with Mr. Carneal as a passenger, landed at or near the plantation of Judge James, in Washington county. Mr. Carneal had heard that the Judge was an extremely brutal man to his slaves, and was likewise excelled with liquor, and upon the Judge inviting him and several others to take a drink with him, Carneal replied that he would not drink with any man who abused his negroes; this the Judge resented as an insult and high words ensued. The company took their drink, however, all but Mr. Carneal, who went out upon the bow of the boat and took a seat, where he was sought by Judge James, who desired satisfaction for the insult. Carneal refused to make any, and asked the old gentleman if any of his negroes would resent the insult if he was to slap him in the mouth? To which the Judge replied, that he would do it himself, if his sons would not. Whereupon Mr. C. struck him in the mouth with the back of his hand; the Judge resented it by striking him across the head with a cane, which stunned Mr. C. very much, causing the blood to run freely from the wound; as soon as Carneal recovered from the blow he drew a bowie knife, attacked the Judge with it, inflicting several wounds upon his person, some of which were thought mortal. Some gentlemen in endeavoring to separate the combatants, were wounded by Carneal. When Judge James arrived at his house, bleeding and in a dying state, as it was thought, he instantly seized a double-barrel gun, loaded it heavily with large shot, galloped to where the boat was, hitched his horse, and deliberately raised his gun to shoot Carneal, who was sitting upon a cotton bale. Mr. James was warned not to fire as Carneal was unarmed, and he might kill some innocent person. He took his gun from his shoulder, raised it again and fired both barrels in succession, killing Carneal instantly.

It is a sad affair, and Carneal leaves, besides numerous friends, a most interesting and accomplished widow to bewail his tragical end. [Vicksburg Sentinel.

THE PASTOR'S DAUGHTER.

An ivy-mantled cottage smiled,
Deep-wooded near a streamlet's side,
Where dwelt the village pastor's child,
Its all her maiden heaven and pride.
Proud suitors paid their court and duty
To this romantic sylvan beauty:
Yet none of all the swains who sought her,
Was worthy of the pastor's daughter.

The town gallants crowd hill and plain,
To seek the groves of her retreat,
And many followed in her train,
To lay their riches at her feet.
But still, for all their arts so weary,
From home, they could not lure the fairy,
A maid without a heart they thought her,
And so they left the pastor's daughter.

One balmy eve in dewy spring,
A bard became her father's guest;
He struck his harp, and every string
To love vibrated in her breast.
With that true faith which cannot falter,
Her hand was given at the altar,
And faithful was the heart he brought her
To wedlock and the pastor's daughter.

How seldom learn the worldly gay
With all their sophistry and art,
The truest and gentle princess-way
To woman's fond, devoted heart:
They seek, but never find, the treasure,
Although revealed in jet and azure:
To them, like truth in wells of water,
A fable is the pastor's daughter.

A REMINISCENCE OF THE ISTHMUS.

LITTLE CHARLIE'S DEATH.

In the Whig Review for November, we find a peculiar sketch, written by a traveler on the Isthmus of Panama, on his way, with others, to California, in which the most affecting and affective traits of adventurous life on the shores of the Pacific are described, in a most graphic and unique manner. From this sketch we extract the episode which follows. It is at once touching, and, no doubt, truthful. The hotel mentioned by the writer was at Palenquilla, and the night on which the occurrences narrated took place was as stormy as the most merciless Spanish guerrilla, or unconscionable innkeeper, could have desired. The writer in the midst of the thick darkness, had reached a building dignified by the name of hotel, and, scraping the mud from his boots, retired to rest in the attic. What followed is thus narrated:

I must have been very tired and sleepy, for I can only recollect one moment when the cracking of the cane floor beneath my step chimed in beautifully with the pattering of the heavy rain-drops on the roof, and I think slumber seized me even as I settled down upon my primitive couch. I had hardly lost myself, as the expression is, when I was again roused to consciousness by voices in the apartment below. The first was that of a woman, low and shrill, impressing me as coming from a heart in bitterest warfare with its destiny, and curiously at variance with the lulling sound of the rain, and the dull, heavy, mournful gustiness of the wind.

"John," it cried, in tones of agony, "do not let him die—he is my little angel! John, oh! I cannot let him die!"

"Hush, dear," said another voice—the rough and hard voice of a man—"why should we ask to have him spared? Has our life been so very pleasant, that we should pray for a like boon for him?"

The words, and the tone in which they were uttered more than the words themselves, revealed to me a picture, suddenly illuminated as it were by a flash of heaven's lightning, in which I noted all the details of one of these unhappy lives so commonly led by the sensitive and poor. It was with no hope of turning back the tide of hurrying events, and yet certainly with no idle curiosity, that I crept along over the cane floor of my chamber toward the aperture, whose I could leisurely inspect the scene below. Oh, what would I not have given for the power and appliances of the painter, to have stamped its lineaments upon the canvas, even as I saw them then! A man and woman had entered, and were seated side by side on two rude boxes, stationed in a corner of the apartment, which was possibly the most comfortable locale, if such an epithet may be applied to premises so utterly wet and cheerless. These two persons seemed in full possession of the house. The proprietor had either gone out, or was called away to sleep in some corner hidden to my view. A second glance revealed a third person, a child of apparently not more than five or six summers, whose emaciated and spasmodic frame was almost wholly concealed by the protecting arms of the man, evidently his father. This group of three was so disposed, with the feeble candle light falling full upon them, that, in my desire to read the story in their faces, I almost immediately saw their each minutest line, while all the world beside became nothing but the blackest void, and my ear ceased to take note of the rain and gusty wind, and heard nothing but the outpourings of these forlorn and seemingly forgotten spirits.

The man was apparently rather under what is termed the middle age, of small stature, wasted and thin, as if from long care and self-denial. His attire, even in the abandon of that out-of-the-way spot, somehow bespoke the gentleman, and just as plainly, too, the poor gentleman. As he sat holding his frail burden, every moment, alas! becoming fraller, vainly trying to smoothe it to a moment's repose, and after each unsuccessful effort turning his beseeching eyes to heaven, I could read in his sharp, pale face, his high, projecting, but not broad forehead, his quick, restless eye, flashing with a certain fire withal, and the unsteady working of his mouth, the plainly written story of a high-hearted, disappointed man. There was something in his whole demeanor which bespoke the man of pride, of principle, of genius, too, but also of irresolution—the most unhappy man of all God's images on earth—the men who, seeing the prizes with which life's lottery is teeming, and knowing the way to reach them, yet lacks the nerve to follow therein, because the cowardly doubt is still there, as to whether, after all, the highest good is thus to be obtained.

The woman, like the man, in one respect, at least, was "not new that which she had been," and yet there were traces of her former better self flickering occasionally in her face and mien. Although so smile played upon her lips, which were once beautiful, but were now thin, and drawn tightly together, as if to shut out from her heart the atmosphere of a world that had never seemed to love her, and no especial brilliance flashed upon you when the lids were raised from eyes around which were drawn dark lines, and stood out in painful prominence from wasted cheeks; and although her costume was of the simplest, suggestive of a dull routine of daily tasks, and nothing of the dashiness and bravery of life, yet there was something, not exactly visible to the outward eye, which showed that this was not the destiny to which she was born; else why should I have seen her, as in a mirror of the past, sweeping with gallant grace adown a gilded drawing-room, or reusing to wild gayety, a sea-shore or hearth-side party, by looks and tones fraught with fire-side electric sparks? Even now, and in that worn, slender, compressed frame, there was secreted a possibility of fascination, which needed only the showers and beams of sympathizing hearts to awaken to active being.

And the little child, who was overleaping all this weariness and misery of life, and was soon to be a little cherub—I actually found myself chuckling over the idea that he was cheating the old deceptive villain of a world, and was eluding its clutches, even by a stolen march to heaven. So frittering away of the beauty and glory of his young life, by unmanly cankering cares. The lustre of his roguish little eye was not to be dimmed, the rosy fullness of his mischievous mouth was not to be wholly wasted, his laughing curls were not even to be cut, till he had lain them all in the bottom of the rotting earth, which was their mother. I have said that he was a child of some five or six summers. There was none of the frostiness of winter about him—nothing even in his form, worn by disease, suggestive of cold or barrenness. He was a delicate summer flower, and now that he was being crushed to earth, it was a summer storm that did it—a rude gale, that might break his fragile stock, and scatter far and wide his fair frail petals, but which would none the less certainly waft the essence of his fragrance and loveliness far beyond the clouds.

The father sat with the child in his arms, not with any hope of keeping him from the grasp of death, but gently rocking him, as if trying to lull him off to slumber, as he had often perchance done after frolicsome days, when sleep came with a soft and welcome tread, bringing pleasant dreams and angel whispers in her train. Then the sweet vision of the morrow awakening danced before the father's brain, and now——

The mother sat by his side, with her hands clenched, firmly knit together. She was trying to feel physically the agony of sitting helpless there, while her child died. She could not bring herself to feel it, and so she kept rising up, looking wildly round, but, seeing no succor in any quarter, would settle into her seat again with an agonizing groan.

"Oh, John," she would gasp out, at times, "tell me, will he live; will he be better soon; will he know his mother again? God forgive me, but I can not—eh, no, indeed, I can not let him die!"

And then:

"Oh, why is it, why must it be so? When we left every thing else, and our other children behind us, we could not leave little Charlie. He was to have been our good angel, to make every hardship light and pleasant. Tell me, John, if there is any meaning in this blow."

It is the penalty we pay for being poor," answered the man bitterly.

A dark shadow, as of remorse, settled suddenly down upon the woman's brow, as she continued wildly:

"But I thought it was enough when we buried little Arthur; you said God had taken him, and it was better for him and us. But Charlie, he has been longer with us, and he is different from all the others; we can never love anything again as we have loved him. Oh, see him now—see his little limbs how they twine. O God, do not let him suffer thus! Take him, if thou must, but do not let him linger thus!"

And the father answered solemnly, while the child's limbs were stiff, and beat in a last convulsion, and the old look of life was fading away in his upturned eyes, and great drops of agonizing sweat stood upon his little brow, and while greater drops came upon the father's face—a face whose every line spoke a voiceless prayer to God to shorten the death struggle—thus he answered:

"Yes, Mary, this suffering is very hard—almost too hard; but hear me, Mary, and thank God with me that our Charlie shall never know a suffering ten thousand times greater than this, which you and I could not have seen and felt for!"

"He does not suffer," said another voice close by. "Even now your child Charlie rejoices with the angels in the paradise of God."

As the voice spoke, the painful gurgling ceased in the child's throat, his limbs gradually straightened and resumed their native grace, while a lovely radiance illuminated his beautiful countenance, as if it had caught a reflex from the happy spirit hovering there a short moment to bid adieu to its late tenement of clay. A peaceful, easy drawing of n breath or two, and the last chapter of this little life on earth was closed.

There was silence for some minutes. The rain was ever, the winds were at rest, and a broad square of moonlight came in through the doorway of the ranch, lighting up the spot where sat the figures of the scene.

It was only natural that the last comer should have been Arthur Orrington. It was particularly fitting that he should have come at that moment—I had no curious sensation how or whence—to form as it were a connecting, reconciling link between those afflicted spirits and the higher order of existence, of which their child was now one. And when, taking a hand of each within his own, he knelt before them in prayer, I could not help feeling indeed that something of the spirit of him, coming down from heaven, took upon himself the likeness even of us, and "went about doing good," yet lingered in the form of our humanity.

His prayer was no idle expenditure of words. It rose up from his soul like spiritual incense; and, as it ascended, a like incense from other souls mingled and rose with it, an acceptable offering at the throne of the All-perfect. Oh, what an odor of tearful joy, and gratitude, and hope, seemed to float upward and outward from our hearts, making the atmosphere about us redolent of all pleasant things, when that clear, soft, solemn voice repeated the words of our Saviour, "suffer little children to come unto me;" and then the ineffable peace and faith which overcame us, how can I describe it, when there followed the blessed assurance that "of such was the kingdom of heaven!" But when, for the first time, the absolute certainty of their child's eternal bliss broke upon the parent's brain; when, following the spirit of the prayer, they saw him sitting with the white-robed cherubs at the feet of Christ, and know that there should he his home forever, the measure of their thankfulness was full. The great glory of the thought, that while they were going about in quest of treasures on earth, other hands than those of men had been gathering treasures for them, worth more than all the worlds of space, and laying them up in those regions "where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal," was enough. The corpse of the child, lying in its last composure, as if fauned to slumber by an angel's wing, was but typical of the perfect peace and gladness of those two spirits, bowed and silent in the presence of that sublime revelation.

It was long after the departure of Arthur Orrington ere a word was spoken on either side. The man and woman sat in their respective seats, almost motionless, while the former still held in his arms his still precious burthen. At length a loud, long sob burst from the woman, and as she turned her face full towards me, catching meanwhile upon her husband's arm, I saw the lines of tears streaming down her cheeks.

"John," said she, in a tone most thrillingly sad, yet earnest, "I feel that I have done a great wrong, but God has forgiven me. Can you forgive me also?"

The man changed not his posture in the slightest, and she continued:

"Whom you were in trouble, John, when the world grew dark around you, when you hadn't a friend, John, because you hadn't money; but when a little money would have made you free and happy, I had it, and kept it back from you."

The man turned upon her a countenance full of emotion, but in which was no sentiment of anger.

"Yes, John, I had money, money inherited from a relative, that you did not know of—and I kept it back. But, oh! believe me, I did not keep it from avarice or mistrust—I kept it because I would have been too wise, and was a fool."

In the man's countenance was an expression of earnest, searching inquiry, which the woman interpreting, went on:

"Yes, John, I saw you suffer day by day; I saw you despised by men, unworthy men, and I kept back the money which might have made you independent of them all. But oh, John, I did not keep it back for myself—I kept it back for him; yes, for him, that I might have it to keep off the evil of his dark day. Oh! I thought it would come as yours had come, when he was handsome, light-hearted young man, and I could not bear to think of him crushed, and disappointed, and despised of his companions. So I said, I will save it for him, and when his dark day comes, and he shall say to me, "Mother, I have no friends, and no position in the world, and I must die," then I would bring it forth and give it to him, and be repaid by his kisses and his tears for all that you and I have suffered. Oh, what a fool I was!"

The woman's tears fell in gushing rivers, but her sobs were less wild and violent. The man wept too, but calmly; and taking her by the hand, he said, in a voice so touchingly tender and sad that I found my own tears falling likewise:

"You are my own dearest Mary. I love you better, ten thousand times better than ever. Let us thank God together that Charlie's dark day has come and gone: he will never, never see another—never another shadow through all eternity!"

"But, John, it was wrong to let you suffer as I did, and wrong to wish to thwart the providence of God, and keep my idol from his share of the world's sorrow. Let us try to understand this lesson. Let us go back to those who are left to us. We shall have enough left to begin life with somewhere, and we will live together, all of us. There is certainly a place for us somewhere in the world, and no matter how humble we live. It seems to me that there cannot be any poverty or hardship left, now Charlie is dead. Dear Charlie, he left us nothing but his dear sweet memory, and yet how rich are we in the love which he has already sent to us from heaven! Let us go back, John, to where our home was, and not care for such wealth as gold may more."

"Be it so," said the man; and he bowed his head and imprinted a passionate kiss upon the pale forehead of his dead child, as if the little one, whose every word and act had been lovely and endearing during life, had taught a yet lovelier lesson by his death.

Afterwards, when a native woman came in, and, removing the corpse tenderly from the father's arms, laid it upon the counter and proceeded to wash its face and smooth down its tumbled locks, but did not remove its clothes, for the mother by signs and looks forbade, thus leading me to think that it was a favorite suit, perchance the very one which he wore to church, hand in hand with his proud parents—proud of him—humble enough in so much else—on the last Sabbath of their sojourn in their native land—the fact of her appearance, I say, was somehow associated in my mind with the idea of Arthur Orrington, as if he had sent her to do this. Calmly, as she performed her skillful task, and tearlessly as, having prepared the body even for burial, she threw over it a fragment of a cotton robe bound with a deep fringe of elaborately wrought lace, and then taking from a box upon the floor two tallow candles, and lighting them, placed them at its head and feet, it required no subtle powers of penetration to see that she worked not for hire, unless, indeed, payment was to be taken in looks of heart-gushing gratitude and love. What mattered it that she was black, and that her features were not delicately carved as those about her? In the dusky shadow of the great Reaper's presence, forms and colors were alike, and God, who seeth deeper than these, knows if at that moment her spirit likewise was not pure and white as theirs.

I left my chamber noiselessly, and crept out unseen. The day was just beginning to break. It was a fresh, clear, breezy morning. As I slid along downward toward the beach, merry shouts came rolling up to greet me, and when I arrived amongst them, all was activity and bustle. The "poco tiempo" principle of the natives was for the time ignored by the resolute gold-seekers, determined to get on. Our matin hymn was "Waku up, there," "Go a-head," "Clear the Kitchen," and it rose to the melodious accompaniment of tin pans and portable cooking-stoves. Each was striving to be off first, and not a little gouging was going on in consequence, mingled with hard words and some unimportant skirmishes. Nevertheless, the scene was pleasant and enlivening, so suggestive as it was of cheery life and healthy hope.

But I could not keep my thoughts from recurring sometimes to the bereaved couple whom I had left in the ranch upon the hill. In imagination I saw them fulfilling their last duties towards the precious remains of their darling babe, putting them beneath the ground, hiding them from their sight forever, and then, with faces turned homeward, going, in quite another way from the rest of us, down the windings of that melancholy river alone.

ADVICE TO YOUNG LADIES.

BY FANNY FERN.

When the spirit moves you to amuse yourself with "shopping," be sure to ask the clerk for a thousand and one articles you have no intention of buying. Never mind the trouble you make him; that is part of the trade. Pull the fingers of the gloves you are examining quite out of shape; inquire for some nondescript color of some scarce number, and when it is found, "think you won't take any this morning;" then keep him for an hour hunting for your sunshade, which you at length recollect you "left at home," and depart without having invested a single cent.

When you enter a crowded lecture room, and a gentleman rises politely, (American gentlemen always do,) and offers to give up his seat, (that he came an hour ago to secure for himself,) take it as a matter of course, and don't trouble yourself to thank him, even with a nod of your head. As to feeling uneasy about accepting, that's ridiculous! because, if he don't fancy standing during the service, he's at liberty to go home; it's a free country.

Should you receive an invitation to a concert, manage to accept it, (conditionally) leaving a door for escape, should a more eligible offer present itself.

When solicited to sing at a party, decline, until you have drawn around you the proper number of entreating swains; then yield gracefully, as if it were a great sacrifice of your timidity!

Flirt with an admirer till the last end of the chapter, and then—"be so taken by surprise" when he makes the declaration you were driving at! As "practice makes perfect," every successive attempt of this nature will render you more expert in angling for hearts, besides exerting a beneficial effect upon your character.

As to cultivating your mind, that's all waste powder—you've better ammunition to attack the enemy; and as to cultivating your heart, there's no use in talking about a thing that's unfashionable! So always bear in mind that all a pretty woman is sent into the world for is to display the fashions as they come out; waltz, flirt, dance, sing and play the old Harry generally!

LOUIS NAPOLEON IN NEW YORK CITY.

The Brooklyn Daily Advertiser, moralizing upon the rapid ascent of Louis Napoleon up the ladder of ambition, from positive poverty, to superlative grandeur and power, recalls some reminiscences of his sojourn in New York city many years ago. The editor says:

"What strange events have occurred within a few years in reference to that man! We knew him while he was residing in New York, at a lodging house in Reade street, then kept by a gentleman who now occupies a high official position under the French Government. At that time he was very poor, and very dissipated. Notoriously profligate in his habits, and without the peculiary ability to indulge to the full beat of his inclination the culpable propensities which characterized him, he was frequently expelled from certain places in which he obtruded himself, and more than a dozen times was the occupant of a cell at the old jail in the Park, long since torn down.

"Not long prior to his leaving the United States, he was arrested for a misdemeanor committed by him at the disreputable house of a woman whose establishment he often visited, and the writer of this article was employed professionally by him to save him from the threatened consequences of his recklessness and indiscretion. We little supposed at that time that the thoughtless gay young man who was then our client (and who is still indebted to us for counsel fees and disbursements) would become Emperor of France. Such, however, is now his 'manifest destiny,' although we believe that his realization of his ambitious hopes and aspirations will but hasten the sceptral doom which unquestionably impends over him."

STORM ON LAKE SUPERIOR.—The steamer Baltimore, on Lake Superior, encountered a severe northwest gale on her passage from St. Mary's up to the lake, on Sunday. She had on board a heavy freight, and a large number of passengers. When within fifty miles of Point Keweena, the gale struck her, and after endeavoring to stem its fury for a few hours, she was compelled to run before the wind.

Running in for shore, with the expectation of making a harbor at Grand Island, the Captain found himself out of reckoning, and within five miles of the perpendicular cliffs known as the Pictured Rocks. The headway of the steamer was checked, and she continued to drift towards the rocks. The planking over the guards were torn away, and the vessel was in a desperate condition.

Another attempt was made to reach Grand Island, but a few heavy seas carried away both smoke pipes, down even with the hurricane deck. The passengers were in a high state of dread and excitement, as the boat lay in the trough of the sea, the waves constantly dashing over her, and there was danger of fire from the broken smoke pipes. The captain proved brave and cool, and kept up his fires, and sustained a constant vigilance to prevent accidents.

The boat was finally headed down the lake, and worked several miles in great danger. Finally, while the passengers were urging the captain to run the vessel ashore, the anchors were let go, the boat headed to the storm, and rode it out, the anchors holding fast, for twenty hours, when she returned to the Sault. A large number of cattle on board was saved, in all this trouble. [Baltimore paper.

THE LAST BUT ONE OF THE MAUCHLINE BELLES.—Christiana Morton, (or Mrs. Patterson) one of the heroines of the poet Burns, died at Mauchlino, Scotland, on the 18th of October, in her 87th year. She was one of the six beauties celebrated in the poet's song:

"In Mauchline there dwells six proper young belles,
The pride of the place and the neighborhood a';
Their carriage and dress a stranger would guess,
In London or Paris they'd gotten them a'.
Miss Miller is fine, Miss Markland's divine,
Miss Smith is a wit, and Miss Beaty is braw;
There's beauty and fortune to get wi' Miss Morton,
But Armour's the jewel for me o' them a'."

"Armour" was the "bonnie Jean" of later days, and all the others married soon after the poet had obtained his "jewel." Time rolled on, and the rival beauties became mothers, and some of them ultimately grandmothers—"thus runs the world away." In 1850 only two of the famous belles (for the simple and somewhat rude lines of Burns have been fame, and will be poetic immortality to them,) remained in the land of the living. These were Mrs. Candish and Mrs. Patterson—the latter, she whose death we have just recorded. So, out of the six belles alluded to, but one, Mrs. Candish, now remains "to tell the tale."

BEAUTIFUL INCIDENT.—A writer in the Times, having been at Marshfield, tells of two young elm trees standing side by side, on the farm, which were planted there by a father's hand in memory of the loved children who preceded him to the spirit world. One morning, a few months ago, Mr. Webster had been missing from his study for an hour or more, when he made his appearance with two small elm trees and a spade in his hands. Summoning the attendance of his son, he went out upon the lawn, planted the young trees, and then turning to Fletcher, said, in a subdued voice, as he turned away, "My son, protect these trees after I am gone; let them ever remind you of Julia and Edward." Their sear and failing leaves now seem to typify participation in the mourning which marks this scene of sorrow. The flower garden—enclosed with a neat and ornamental wire fence, on which are trained choice rose vines—occupies nearly an acre of land east of the mansion, and contains the richest and most beautiful varieties of plants and shrubs of every description, including numerous exotics.

From the same correspondent we get another incident, which we have heard before, but it will bear repetition in this connection:

"When he (the boy Webster) first arrived at the academy of Mr. Abbot, his personal appearance, in his limiting, home-made, homespun garments, together with his shy, awkward manners, created much merriment among the boys, and many jokes were cracked at his expense. Young Daniel's sensitive nature could ill brook this; and, after suffering from it two or three days, he went to the teacher and told him he must go home. The teacher inquired the cause, and Daniel made a clear breast of it. The former bade him not mind it, but keep quietly at his studies, and his turn would come by-and-by. He obeyed. And, at the end of the week, he was placed at the head of the class that had ridiculed him. After two months had passed in hard study, the teacher, at the close of the school one day, called him up in presence of all the scholars, and told him he could not stay there any longer—to go and get his books and hat, and leave. Poor Daniel's heart sunk down to his shoes. He had studied hard, hearing patiently the ridicule of his mates, and now to be turned off in disgrace was more than he could stagger under. The teacher waited a moment to watch the astonishment of the school, and then added: 'This is no place for you; go to the higher department.' That was probably the proudest hour in Mr. Webster's life. He had triumphed over his companions, and that by outstripping them in his studies."

BUSINESS OF CINCINNATI.—The Cincinnati Gazette estimates, upon apparently rellcbia data, that the aggregate capital employed in the wholesale business in that city is $10,920,000, and that over ten thousand persons are directly employed and supported by this important trade. The number of dealers is between four and five hundred, of whom one hundred are wholesale.

MYSTERIOUS CIRCUMSTANCE.—More than a year ago, two men called at the house of Mr. Joseph Miller, in Ohio co., Va., and induced him to take charge of a trunk and box until they called for them. They then left and never returned. A few days ago, in the presence of several neighbors, Mr. Miller had the trunk and box opened to ascertain their contents, and found the trunk to contain shirts, pants, a hat, and sundry other articles of wearing apparel; also, a bloody shirt, in which was wrapped a new hatchet, of the largest size, also bearing marks of blood. In the box were a set of peddler's harness and other articles. In the trunk was found a pocket-book containing a paper upon which was the name of John M. Zimmerman, and it is supposed that the trunk was the property of a man of that name. About the time they were left with Mr. Miller, a peddler, named Zimmerman, was murdered in Greene county, Va.

FEMALE M. D.'s.—There are now in the Female Medical College at Philadelphia, thirty students, and among them two ladies preparing for the missionary work among the heathen. One of these young ladies is a Baptist—the other, Presbyterian or Congregationalist, sent by the A. B. C. F. M. She has been on missionary duty for the last three years, and is now studying medicine to prepare for greater usefulness.

PUBLIC LANDS IN MICHIGAN.—The Commissioner of the General Land Office has authorized the agent of the State of Michigan to select 750,000 acres of land, in tracts of from a township down to a forty acre lot, for the purpose of building the "800" Canal. This will give the State a good chance to pick up farms and mines in the Lake Superior country.

VALUABLE RECIPE.—In compactly built cities especially, more or less annoyance is experienced from the proximity of cess-pools, sinks, etc., and in warm weather health often suffers. We have reason to know, says the New York Journal of Commerce, that a pound of copperas, (six cents' worth) dissolved in a bucket of water, and thrown where the effluvia prodeede from, affords an effectual remedy, by changing the gases into an unvolatile concretion.

SEA ISLAND COTTON CROP.—A friend writes to the Savannah Georgian as follows, from Liberty county:

"I have recently traveled through Chatham, Bryan, Liberty, Tattnall, Montgomery, Emanuel, Bullock, and Effingham, and from personal observation I am satisfied that the crop of long staple cotton will be short. My opinion is that it will fall at least one fourth below an average crop.

"It is said, and I expect with truth, that Liberty county makes two-thirds of the long staple cotton of the State, and it is certain that the crop here will be short, though some few individuals, on account of a concatenation of favorable circumstances, may make average crops."

COMMERCE OF SMYRNA.—According to the returns of the Turkish Custom-house in Smyrna, the imports there for 1851 amounted to about $5,200,000, and the exports for the same period amounted to $6,700,000. The imports from America amounted to about $500,000, of which about one-half of which was rum, coffee and cotton manufactures. The exports to America amounted to about $700,000, and were chiefly dried fruits, opium and wool. Among the exported articles, of which little or none went to America, were madder, (of which England took near $1,500,000 worth,) emery, a value of which has been opened within five years; scarus, a species called valony, for tanning, and silk in cocoons.

FEMALES IN JAPAN.—The best proof of the real civilization of the Japanese is to be found in their treatment of the female sex. Their condition is unquestionably superior to that of the women of any other Oriental country. They are subjected to no seclusion and hold a fair station in society. Their manners are kind, polite and chaste, and their purity is proverbial. "A faithless wife," says a well informed writer, "is, we are universally assured, a phenomenon unknown in Japan.

A GOOD SPECULATION.—A short time ago a young man, a clerk in a house in San Francisco, having $5000 to spare, sent it to China and invested it in rice. He sold the cargo (to arrive) at twenty-two cents per pound, and made the handsome sum of $37,000 by the operation. The purchaser was a Chinaman, and it so happened that the cargo arrived the very day after it was purchased. The Chinaman made $65,000 on his bargain. The large sum of $102,000, therefore, was cleared on an investment of $5000.

PROFITABLE PICKINGS.—It is stated that, in addition to the vast quantity of valuables found in the Crystal Palace, in London, by the police, a large number of gold, silver and copper coins, purses, gold and silver headed canes, rings, lockets, etc., have been found by the workmen who took down the edifice; and as the contractors gave them permission to keep what they found, some of the men have made out tolerably well. One of the purses picked up contained between seven and eight pounds sterling. These articles slipped down between the boards, and were thus past recovery, except when the boards were removed.

PROGRESS OF BLOOMERISM.—Mrs. Bloomer, who edits a paper called "The Lily," published monthly, at Seneca Falls, New York, undertakes, in the last number of her journal, to give the winter fashions of the Bloomer dress, in reply to several letters of inquiry which she has received. Among other peculiarities of her style of apparel, she urges her lady friends to wear suspenders, the same as those worn by the men, and in the same manner. These, she says, are preferable to straps; and she remarks that they are now worn to a considerable extent. At a meeting which was held at Seneca Falls on the 14th ult., some fifty ladies, from different parts of New York State, attended in Bloomer dress.

CLIMATE OF MINNESOTA.—A North-western correspondent gives the following account of the climate of Minnesota:

"Although the cold in Minnesota is so severe in winter, those who have lived a length of time in these regions assert that it is far from being unfavorable to health, there being no wind stirring, even when the thermometer has fallen thirty-five degrees below zero before breakfast, as it does sometimes, or when even the mercury congeals—the weather not having those sudden changes which are so uncomfortable in our latitude. The cold season sets in about November, and there is little cessation to a still, clear, cold, bracing atmosphere for about six months, and then an uninterrupted spring advances vegetation with a rapidity quite surprising, till before we are aware we are thrown into the lap of summer."

MARYLAND STATE FAIR.—We learn from the Baltimore American, that at the late Fair of the Maryland Institute, the amount received during its continuance for admission alone, was $12,500. To this are to be added the sums of $8,050 for new memberships, and about $50 from depositors who brought their goods after the fair opened, making an aggregate sum of $20,600 received at the result of the exhibition. During the previous annual exhibition the receipts were: For admission, $11,028; new memberships for the year, $6,924; total, $18,822. The number of depositors of goods for exhibition during the recent fair was 2,578; during the fair of last year 2,041. The value of the premiums, awarded to depositors of articles at the late exhibition was about as follows: Ladies' premiums, comprising a variety of silver ware, fancy articles, etc., $1,000; 28 gold medals worth $12 50 each, $350; 444 silver medals, $5 each, $720; 128 bronze medals, $1 75 each, $221. Total, $2,294.

Ohio sends two farmers and one carpenter to the next Congress.

EMIGRANTS FOR LIBERIA.—The Richmond (Va.) Whig says: We learn with pleasure that our American Colonization Society, who were intending to send 175 emigrants to Liberia in a vessel which was to sail from Norfolk on the 4th inst., have found that the number of these people ready and anxious to embark is suddenly swelled up to no less than 480; some of them from North Carolina, and some from South Carolina—but the largest part from our own State; 125 from about Norfolk, and 60 or 70 from other places. In this state of things, the society—who have actually promised passages to as many as 350—are now preparing to send out two vessels, one from Norfolk, on or about the 13th, and the other from Wilmington, on or about the 20th instant.

COMMERCE OF BOSTON.—During the quarter ending the 30th September, there were 1151 foreign arrivals at the port of Boston, being an increase of 172 over the same quarter last year, although the amount of duties exhibit a decrease of $30,117.

The African slave trade with Brazil being extinct, there remains but the Spanish West Indies as a market for slaves. In these the foreign slave trade is also against the laws of Spain, but the Spanish officials allow it to be carried on in a contraband manner, as they receive large sums of money thereby.

COWS WORTH HAVING.—Mr. D. E. Billings, at La Orange, N. Y., has two cows which have given a sufficient quantity of milk to furnish his family with milk and butter besides which, he has sold in six months and six days, 200 pounds of butter, amounting to $80. The cows have had no other food than pasture.

THE MONUMENT TO COL. RICHARD M. JOHNSON.—The Cleveland Plaindealer states that on the 30th ult., there were brought to that port, fourteen boxes of marble, and four boxes of granite, intended to be erected as a monument over the remains of the late Richard M. Johnson, in Kentucky. One of the boxes contains four cannon, and another an eagle, sculptured in marble.

A commodious and splendid brick edifice has just been completed—ninety-seven by forty-seven feet, three stories—which for stability, convenience of arrangement, and for number, size and comfort of private and school rooms, is not surpassed by any similar one in the country. The Principal resides in the building, and with his lady and competent female assistants, superintends the Boarding Department. A lady will reside in the Seminary, who faithfully discharges the duties of Matron, Nurse and Governess, so that at all times, pupils will find the comforts, kindness and attentions of home. The Principal, with the aid of female teachers, who also live in the Seminary, diligently guard and form their morals, manners and habits of the pupils. Being under his charge at all times, they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations, respecting neatness, order, punctuality, economy and regularity, calculated to give a safe and vigorous development to character. The appliances of home and family are not removed by this arrangement, but perpetuated and strengthened.

The ensuing scholastic year will commence on Thursday the 23d of September, 1852. Pupils can enter at any time during the year, chargeable from the time of entrance. No deduction will be made but by special arrangement with the Principal.

Boarders study at night under a teacher. They are required to retire 0 o'clock at night, and rise early in the morning at a given signal, and to take frequent and wholesome exercise.

Private rooms are large, conveniently and comfortably furnished. Pupils are required to keep their wardrobes and private apartments in neatness and order. A proper officer weekly takes charge of their clothing, inspects its condition, and every Saturday morning instructs them in plain sewing and necessary repairs of clothing. Every article of clothing must be marked with the owner's name.

Bi-monthly reports are sent to patrons, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and deportment of pupils.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, or any amusement calculated to interfere with their studies.

Visitors are not received by pupils, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from patrons.

The Principal must have certain information respecting every correspondent. Pupils are required to attend Church and Sunday School on Sabbath.

No accounts will be opened in Marion but with the expressed permission of patrons. When articles are to be purchased, the lady of the Principal must approve the purchase (who experiments their trading), and thus expenditures will be controlled. Patrons should anticipate and supply the wants of pupils as far as is practicable.

Dental operations will not be performed but by special permission from patrons.

Patrons are earnestly requested to encourage economy in all the expenditures of pupils—clothing, pocket money and jewelry.

The Institution has graduated forty-four young ladies since its organization, and arrangements are being made for furnishing, improving and increasing its Library, Apparatus, Cabinet and Herbarium.

The Professors of Music, Drawing, Painting and Modern Languages have been engaged in this Institution for the last five years, with decided acceptability—are superior Musicians and splendid performers on Piano, Harp, Guitar, Organ, Melodeon, Violin, etc., and highly accomplished in other departments.

Should parents be unable to accompany their children to the Institute they need not hesitate about sending them on account of boarding, as the President of the Institute will carefully see to it that they are provided with good boarding houses.

Parents are requested to send their children in time for them to be ready to enter upon their studies the first day of the session. This is highly important as the pupils will experience, through the whole course, the benefit of beginning with their classes.

The healthy location of this Institution—its entire exemption from local causes of disease—the moral and religious character of the community—the prohibition of the sale of ardent spirits in the village, and for two miles around it—its central position and convenience of access and facility of communication (having a daily mail, Sundays excepted,) together with the established reputation of the faculty in their several departments of instruction should ensure to this Institute a liberal patronage, and the Trustees confidently recommend it to parents and guardians who have children to be educated.

THE ARGOSY.

In the emerald meadows,
Below a leafy hill,
A child had launched his navy
Of lilies on the rill;
A precious little argosy,
Those lilies fresh and white:
As on the dancing waves they rode
He shouted with delight.

He watched their dainty beauty,
As they gaily floated on,
Now toying round the velvet banks
And rocking in the sun;
And then, like silver arrows,
In waves of whiter light,
A flashing down the foaming fall,
And shooting out of sight.

The birds sung pæans o'er him,
The sky was fragrant still;
Bright butterflies sailed round his ships,
Soft winds crept from the hill;
His loose locks floating in the sun,
He warbles with the stream,
For life there in the meadows,
Had the glory of a dream.

Beside a mighty river,
Where it meets the sounding main,
An old man saw his stately ships
Floating off to sea again.
Winds nestling in their great white wings,
And rainbows arched each prow,
With streaming banners on they speed;
Why clouds his furrowed brow?

The old man sits and ponders
When night winds vex the sea,
And booming pillars pain his ear
With awful prophecy.
Alas! his treasures bring no joy,
His sleep is not repose—
Like the deep rush of the river,
His restless being flows.

His stately ship returns no more,
He bends beneath his care,
But still looks out upon the deep
To see if they are there;
His brain grows faint with thinking,
For thoughts like spectres rise,
Till the soothing hand of slumber
Softly shuts his aching eyes.

He sports now by the streamlet,
In the meadows green and wide;
He sees his ships of lilies
On the sunny ripples glide;
The soft breeze wantons with his hair,
His heart leaps bright and free—
But hush! no breath—a shoreless main
Bears on life's argosy.

LETTER FROM FRANCE.

PARIS, Oct. 25, 1852.

It is rather late to announce to the readers of the Advocate that the French Republic is rushing out its last, whilst the egg of the Empire will soon be hatched. Steam and electricity have no doubt already given you news of the President's return to Paris, after five weeks of a triumphant voyage (so the papers say) throughout the most important provinces and cities of France. Like every body else, I went on the Boulevards to see him arrive, and I had an excellent view of His Royal Highness (now styled.) I was pleased to see that he was punctual to his time, that he appeared to be in excellent health, and that he showed not the least symptom of fear, for he rode quite alone, on a beautiful steed, the members of his military staff riding a few yards behind.—The crowds that had assembled to greet him were immense; they seemed pleased with the fine weather, with the numerous processions of bodies and of villages, with the sight of the infantry, artillery and horse troops, of which there were many thousands; they certainly enjoyed themselves, but there was nothing that could be called enthusiasm for the President. He was present: so much the better, for it added one man more to the show; but had he been away, I have no doubt it would have been a fine holliday, for the people just as much, the enjoyment would have been nearly the same. When he passed the place I was standing at, many cries were uttered, but so confused that I could not distinguish what they were, and I may truly say that I did not hear one distinct cry of "vive l'Empereur."

Speculators made use of this return with a boldness and an art to be found in Paris only. For instance, amidst the numerous bills placarded over the walls of the city, was an immense one, which attracted every body, for, even at a distance, it read thus:

"THE EMPIRE
COMES,
FOR EVER
IT REMAINS."

What could it be? Simply the announcement of a sale. By means of lines of small prints, which were interpolated between the large head words above mentioned, and which one could only see by drawing near, the reading was to the following effect: Under the empire of cheapness, competition is impossible, it therefore COMES to pass that Messrs. —— will sell by auction, etc.

It may be useful to sum up in a few words the principal incidents of the President's voyage:

1. The speech at Lyons, which I mentioned in my last letter.

2. The discovery at Marseilles of an infernal machine, destined to kill the Prince and his suite. An acquaintance whom I can fully trust, told me that one of his intimate friends was with the President on board one of the Rhone steamers, near Avignon, when the Prince was told of this conspiracy. He did not seem alarmed in the least, and rode but an hour or two afterwards in an open carriage, with as much unconcern as if no one had ever dreamed of taking away his life. He believes that he is "destined" to accomplish a great work in France and that he will necessarily live to accomplish it.

3. The favorable reception he made to the Protestants in the South, at Valence, at Nimes, at Montauban and at Saintes. At Valence he told them that, although he was a good Catholic, he was firmly determined to maintain religious liberty. At Nimes, he even put off the laying the foundation stone of a Romish Church, in order to favor with a private interview the President of the Protestant Consistory, and after a long conversation with him, his last words were to the following effect: "In cases of local persecution, do not apply to my ministers, but directly to me, and I will see that your rights be respected." At Saintes, when the President of the Protestant Consistory of the town delivered a message to the Prince, in which he said, "We are assured that you will always maintain the rights of conscience," the Prince interrupted him by saying, "As to the liberty of conscience, 'tis but your right." This confirms the opinion I expressed a month ago on Napoleon's intentions with regard to the Protestants. I am glad to say that a religious and evangelical paper which appeared yesterday, views the matter in the same light, and says: "We infer from all this, that if, in some departments, the liberty of worship has been violated, it is contrarily to the will of the Chief of the State, and that the best way of preventing new facts of the same kind from happening, is to lay at once a complaint before the Prince Louis Napoleon himself."

4. The speech at Bordeaux, in which for the first time Louis Napoleon acknowledged that the Empire was at hand, and gave a programme of what it would be, namely, peace with foreign countries, and at home, commercial activity, agricultural pursuits, and an active war made on poverty, ignorance, superstition and irreligion. "In this war," said he as he finished, "ye all are my soldiers." The effect of this speech was immense in France and in all Europe. Even the greatest enemies of the Prince acknowledge that he spoke skilfully and well. The public funds rose at once. It is now a general rumor that the the President will begin to put this programme into execution by reducing the army.

5. Lastly, the release of Abdel Kader. It is well known that this renowned Arab chief gave himself up to General Lamoriciere, in 1847, on condition that he would be transported with his family to Alexandria or St. John of Acre. This condition was accepted by the General, and by the Duke of Aumale, then Governor of Algiers, but the government of Louis Philippe refused to comply with it, and the provisional government of the Republic coming in soon after shut him up first in the Castle of Pau, in the Pyrenees, and afterwards in the Castle of St. Amboise, near Tours, on the river Loire, where he was unlawfully detained until last week. As a proof of the resolution and secrecy of the acts of the President, I may state that no one, not even his own secretary, knew of his resolve to release Abdel Kader, until a quarter of an hour before the same, when he told his ministers, as he was on his way to the Castle.

The result of this voyage has been the convocation of the Senate for the 4th of November, in order to examine whether a change of government be desirable or not. Should the Senate answer in the affirmative (which is certain) the question, "The Empire or the Republic?" will be submitted to the vote of the people by universal suffrage. The result is not doubtful, for the Empire is generally hoiled with pleasure. When it is considered that since Napoleon, in December last, made the "coup d'etat," and took the power into his sole hands, credit has returned; work has been given to the operatives, and the public funds and railway shares have increased from 25 to 50 per cent, when it is known that now confidence is restored, and that more business is likely to be done this winter than has been done for the last five or six seasons; no one will wonder at the majority of the people wishing to see this state of things permanent and desiring to keep as long as possible the man who, by briaging about this mighty change, has been, as they think, and with a certain show of reason, the "saviour" of their credit, their fortune and their lives.

It must, however, be remembered, that the triumphant and, to all appearances, patriotic reception which the President is said to have met with every where in his journey was not always the result of the feeling of security and contentment I have just described. In many cases it was sheer flattery. The French are first rate flatterers, and they have shown it in this instance. As a proof of it, I may only say that in one of the towns where the Prince was most enthusiastically received, an election has just taken place for the local authorities, and all the councillors are men well known to be opposed to the President.

I am sorry to have to add that these flatteries have some times partaken of a most sacrilegious character. The mayor of a small town had the impiety to present to the future Emperor an address which was simply an ingenious paraphrase of the Lord's prayer!!! Amongst the mottoes and devices which were inscribed on numerous houses on the Boulevards when the President returned, was the following one: "I tell you that if these should hold their peace, the stones would immediately cry out!"

The Prefect of the Aisne continues to oppose the opening of a place of worship at Tresney de Grand. In consequence of his declaring that there were no Protestants in the locality, an inquest was held, and forty-one heads of families, from amongst the most respectable in the place, declared upon oath that they were Protestants or wished to become so. The Prefect then said that the religious feeling of these persons was null, that they were moved by political reasons, that they were not sincere in their declarations, and that most of them were men without any morality, "who had had no religion for a long while." Now these accusations are altogether false. But supposing they are true, they only prove that Popery has been unable to make of them good and pious men. The pastors have protested, and the affair will probably be brought before Louis Napoleon.

The deputation sent to Tuscany in order to plead for the Madiais, is now in Florence. It is composed of three representatives from England, one from the United States, two from France, two from Switzerland, one from Prussia, one from Holland and one from the Kingdom of Wurtemberg. Prayer-meetings were held in their behalf in England on the 11th of this month, and in Paris last Monday.

A petition said to be from the pen of Archbishop Whateley of Dublin, is being covered with signatures from persons requesting the Queen to interfere and ask the Grand Duke for the pardon of the Madiais.

In the meanwhile, new persecutions are announced in Florence. A whole family is said to have been exiled for the crime of the Madiais, and a girl of seventeen has been thrown in the same cell as a young man condemned for theft.

SHORT SERMON.

BY A LAY-PREACHER.

The expansive field which the science of astronomy has opened to the contemplation of the Christian philosopher, is overwhelmingly resplendent with the power and glory of the Creator. While gazing upon the magnificent orbs detected by our telescopes, and contemplating the myriads more that shine in regions beyond the ken of mortals, the human intellect cowers, and the awe-stricken spirit devoutly exclaims, "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty!"

Can it be that these massive globes, compared with which our's dwindles to a point—are unattended, unpeopled by sentient creatures! It cannot be. On the contrary, analogy confirms the stupendous conjecture that of unnumbered worlds of rational existences, formed by the divine skill, this earth is but a particle of matter. To imagine, then, that this mole-hill of ours, with its handful of tiny inhabitants had engrossed all the care and benevolence of the Great Creator is an impious reflection upon His paternal goodness.

It is true that in the revelation made to us, nearly all that relates to other immortals is suppressed, or concealed from us, as being unimportant to the happiness or safety of our race; but then we are assured of the existence of other rationals besides man, and are not without some intimations concerning their destiny.

It is often said, and without reflection, by way of extoling our favored condition, that the "fallen angels" had no Saviour—no offers of mercy are, or ever were made to them. How can fallen man be sure of this? Have we, of this sin-cursed earth exhausted the compassion of Deity? Has he no bowels of mercies for any of his creatures but man? Very far from it. It cannot be doubted that the fallen angels enjoyed a probation or state of trial. Concerning the particular mode of moral discipline, or the means used for developing moral character, we know nothing. But we can reasonably infer that they had a season of probation, as we have, inasmuch as they, like us, are to be the subjects of the general judgment. This subjection presupposes a previous state of trial, or some conditions of moral training from which they must pass to the judgment.

The "fallen angels" are now "reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." Jude, 6th. But whence came they? and how were they precipitated into such direful conditions! We learn that these miserables once enjoyed their Creator's favor in a hopeful probation, called their "first estate" or "habitation;" as it is said they "kept not their first estate but left their own habitation." This "first estate" was doubtless based upon principles of Divine equity, and tempered with mercy as great as any exhibitions ever made to the creatures of this earth. But how left they their good estate? Just as father Adam left his, by REBELLION; for "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness to be reserved unto judgment." Peter ii, 4.

It may be enquired, then, was the Devil—the chief among the apostate angels—once an innocent and happy creature, enjoying the favor and love of the Creator? Without a doubt he was, and passed through a period of moral training as wisely adapted to the circumstances of his existence, and as favorable to his final safety and happiness as that of any human being ever was. That "he was a murderer from the beginning," can be true only as respects the beginning of this world, for God never created a murderer as such. On the contrary, it is said, "he abode not in truth," John vii. 44, from which we must infer that he was once "in the truth," as were others of his fellow-existences. He had fallen from the truth before the beginning of this world, but was any thing but a devil when he came from the hands of his Creator. Therefore let not the creatures of this diminutive earth flatter themselves with any fancied exclusiveness or favoritism of the Divine rectitude respecting their condition, for the same essential SIN that delivered the rebel angels "into chains of darkness" will infallibly furnish similar quarters for all apostate men.

From these scraps of the revealed history of angels—who may be the highest in the scale of subordinate rational creatures—viewed in connection with the history of man—perhaps not the lowest among such existences—we may reasonably conjecture that all intermediate and inferior rationals are, or have been under similar moral discipline and government. That they will have enjoyed the sympathies, supervising care and compassionate succours of the same glorious Prince who has been exalted to give repentance to the Israel of this earth—and that they from their shining orbs will pass with us to the same general judgment.

What a peerless thought is here presented to the imagination of man! When to the aggregate of all ages of all nations of this earth, is added the rationals of all periods, of all worlds, of all systems of worlds! when all these shall be gathered to the Grand Assize, what a concourse! We know not what powers of computation may be possessed by other and higher grades of intelligences, but certainly no line of numerical proportions, or mathematical quantities known to this earth, can reach the sum of the myriads which shall go up even from the dust and ashes of this earth's broad surface, much less to compute the inconceivable aggregate of so many millions of worlds as may then be arraigned for their final doom.

HERE AND THERE.

M. S. R. BOWMAN.

How narrow the sea that divides this world of shades and shadows from the world of light and joy—the world where the fountain of wisdom and love will be fully opened to our hearts and minds. Here we are absent from home. The spirit—our true self—is so walled about with thick clay, that we cannot see. It can peep out at the eyes, those windows of the body, through which the soul gains some faint ideas. It can listen with the ears, through which the spirit can catch some faint sounds; but the spirit is manacled and imprisoned. Thank God for that spiritual religion, which touches us how to carry our hearts and spirits to the Father of spirits; and that God can, and does communicate to our spirits, light and love; that religion, which helps us to join our spirits with those of our kindred on the "other shore," in humble adoration before the throne. Jesus has made here and there come very near together. Yes, it is but one Kingdom with two departments—that of Grace and Glory.

We never realize how nearly the two worlds approach, until we stand by the dying bed of one of our friends who is falling asleep in the arms of Jesus. Come with me to the dying couch, on which is laid one, who, if warm love could keep us here, would not have to die. The chill blast from the wing of Death's angel has reached her, and she is passing away from among those who love her here. Her dying eyes are bright, her countenance full of satisfaction. She is fixing her hopes in Heaven. Yes, they are anchored "within the veil." Here are many dear, many lovely objects. Must she leave them all? Here is the green earth, with its sweet flowers—the bright sun, with its warm beams—the sweet, pale moon, which has seemed to look so kindly down on her happy hours; and the stars, those twinkling lights of the blue ether. Here, stretched out before her, is a long life, full of bright hopes. Here is her old father, to whom she has always been the "pet lamb"—the youngest—the one that was left to his care, a tender babe of six weeks, when his Margaret was called away to be with Jesus. Ah! who can tell how the tendrils of his heart have ever clung around this Margaret! Here are her sisters, who feel for her all a sister's love, and a mother's tenderness; who have cared for her, and watched over her ever since her mother was taken from her. Here is her loving, beloved husband, her dear brothers, and her many friends. Must she go? Beyond the flood are the tree of life, the waters of the river of life, and the city of New Jerusalem. There are bright angels—friends who have gone before—a sainted mother, who died before she could know her face; who left her in God's care, and who is now going to receive her again; and best of all, Jesus, our elder brother, stands ready to go with her through the dark waters; he comes to the edge of the sea, and reaches out his hand to uphold her, and to walk with her through the cold flood.

Shall she dread the waves of death now? Hear what her testimony is: "I never was so perfectly happy in my life; the sting of death is all taken away—the gloom of the grave is all gone. How precious the Saviour is. I ought to have a big soul, to love him for making me so happy." And when almost gone, she squeezed her sister's hand with great earnestness, which was the signal that she had promised, of her trust at the last. And so her spirit left the clay tenement, and went to the land of realities. If she had remained here, many dangers would have beset her path. Serpents lurk around the most flowery paths, and sometimes they "strike their teeth in the heart." There, in the land where she has gone, graves are not. Sorrow cannot enter there; "the inhabitants say no more, I am sick," and the Saviour is the light thereof.

And will we set up our homes in the land of shadows? Will we build on the storm-rocked coast, when just over the sea is a country, firm, fixed, and immovable—where there is a city built of precious stones? Let us keep our hearts and minds—our real selves at home, on the other shore. Let us not give our thoughts to shadows, so as to forget the real, the enduring life. Our dying friends have told us too often that the world beyond is full of true happiness, for us to doubt it. And it seems to me that God has of late been particularly kind to us, in causing a host of witnesses to leave a testimony behind them, of the reality of spiritual religion. Those who knew M. S. R. Bowman will rejoice to know that Christ, by the Holy Spirit, went with her over the waves of Jordan—that she felt that at the last she was safe. Let us rejoice that the same grace which was granted to her, may be ours. Oh! that while here, exiles from our true home, we may live as strangers, and as pilgrims ought, having our "lives hid with Christ in God," looking to our home over Jordan for fruition of happiness.

Clinton, La., 1852. MARY.

GOD RECONCILED IN CHRIST.—When we look through a red glass, the whole heavens seem bloody, but through pure uncolored glass you receive the clear light that is so refreshing and comfortable to behold. When sin unpardoned is between, and we look on God through that, we can see nothing but anger and enmity in his countenance; but make Christ once the medium, our pure Redeemer, and through him, as clear transparent glass, the beams of God's favorable countenance shine in upon the soul. The father cannot look upon his well beloved son but graciously and pleasingly. God looks on us, out of Christ, sees us rebels, and fit to be condemned; we look on God as being just and powerful to punish us, but when Christ is between, God looks on us in him as justified, and we look on God in him as pacified, and see the smiles of his favorable countenance. Take Christ out, all is terrible; interpose him, all is full of peace. [Leighton.

FALSE CHRISTIAN LIBERALITY.

MR. EDITOR: My attention is daily called to the question, Ought Christians to observe the law of self-preservation! and if so, to what extent? And if it be right to observe this law in individual cases, will it not apply to individual denominations? The Saviour says, "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet and turn again and rend you." Matt. 7, 6.

This passage of scripture has been properly transposed thus: "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, lest they turn again and rend you; neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet."

Now, sir, it must be clear that the above passage of scripture was intended for a guide for the disciple that he might be preserved in feelings and in person as well as character. Then ought we, as Methodists, to observe this rule, or ought we to "trample it under our feet!"—In other words, if our Church has a denominational enemy who, by word and deed, publicly and privately declares his determination to destroy us, should we assist him? Is it right? Are the Methodists or any other denomination of Christians under any moral obligation to give assistance to one publicly and privately seeking their extermination? Or are they not morally obligated to forbear? Does not the law of self-preservation speak in such a case, and demand that you "give not that which is holy unto the dogs, lest they turn and rend you?" True, the scriptures enjoin that we pray for our enemy, but the same scriptures enjoin that we "watch" as well as pray.

But, says one, we must be liberal. Just so; but true Christian liberality does not seek the destruction and extermination of self or a neighbor; for Christian liberality like the golden rule, has two ends, and works with as much force to the one as it does to the other. Then let us not be hoodwinked with the word "liberality." For when we have an avowed enemy who seeks our destruction, to aid him in the work is worse than suicide. It is treachery and suicide combined. Let us not be so spell-bound with the word "liberality" as to leap into the serpent's mouth. We should be liberal in our feelings towards other Christian denominations; but we should not cast the pearl of liberality before those denominations who will trample it under their feet, and who will take shelter under the word only that they may destroy us. But how blind are some Methodists to the law of self-preservation! I say blind, for if they aid their denominational enemies understandingly, I charge them with doing worse than "running with the hare and holding with the hounds."

In a village of my acquaintance where the Methodists have a Sabbath school, a Methodist family send their children to the Sabbath school of another denomination—a denomination which denies that the Methodists have even the right to exist. The only reason the parents give for fostering their children in the bosom of such an enemy is, they "can't think of being so illiberal and selfish as to send their children exclusively to a Sabbath school under the control of the Methodists." They think it would be "inconsistent with Christianity." They "can't be so sectarian as to send their children to a Methodist Sabbath school!"

I am reminded of Sambo when his mistress came from church, extoling the new preacher. Sambo asked "what Church he belong to?" "Oh, he didn't belong to any of your sectarians." Sambo taking a long breath, said, "Well, when I see a man all black, I like him very well—and when I see a man all white, I like him very well; but when I see a man neither black nor white, I don't like him so well. MELCHISEDEC.—Melchisedec appears on the face of the Old Testament history without any record of his parentage, without any genealogy, as was usual with the Jewish priests, and without succession. He appears: none appear before, none after him; or, as St. Paul says, "without father, without mother, without descent." This Priest was made like unto the Son of God. Designed, then, to represent Christ's priesthood, that priesthood must centre only in Christ. Christ Jesus can admit none to share his proper priestly work. He transfers to none the peculiar functions of his office. So that for man to say they sacrifice "in the person of Christ," and are "invested with the character of Christ," is to contradict the apostle's reference to Melchisedec. Christ is proclaimed to be in his own glorious person, and by himself, the Great High Priest between the souls of men and God. Accordingly, at his coming in the flesh, and at his session, as the abiding Priest upon his throne in glory, all the symbolic actions of the inferior Levitic priesthood cease, and the work is realized in him. Henceforth all proper priestly agency departs as the evening shadows before the dawn, and dies away; or, if renewed, as in the Papal Church, becomes a fearful sin, an anti-christian thing. It is the glory, the prerogative of Emanuel, to be alone in his great work; to be the one all-perfect, all-sufficient, merciful and faithful Priest, called after the order of Melchisedec. [Simpson's Lectures.

SELF EXAMINATION.—Every day which you live is an additional proof of God's mercy towards you. He gives you one day more that you may advance nearer towards heaven as you advance nearer to the grave. It is your duty, therefore, to form a habit of daily self-examination, by which you may perceive whether or not you are growing in grace.

[From the French of Count Marsay.]

HOW BELIEVERS MAY KNOW THE WILL OF GOD.

The infallible way of knowing the will of God, is, first to have a heart disengaged from every other desire and intention, but to sacrifice one's self without reserve to that holy will, without any other view than to follow it, without regard to profit, or any interest whatever. In a word, we must lay down, for a foundation, a will entirely free from all manner of bias, that has nothing but God alone, and his will, purely and solely in view. Taking this foundation for granted, it will be easy for a soul, on all sorts of occasions, to know the will of God, or what he requires of her. If she abandons herself to his providence in outward things, or suffers second causes to act, taking from the hand of God what happens to her by means of the creatures, or from events that often fall out unforseen. If, besides this, she takes heed to the profound and secret bias or instinct of her heart, what it inclines her to: if it is a person already advanced, this instinct of the heart will not fail her; for it is her inmost ground; where God resides, that inclines her, and she will find by experience, that God will direct by his providence, or manage all things from without in such a manner, as that the attraction or instinct of her inmost ground may have its effect. She will wait patiently till all is unraveled, will precipitate nothing, and will remain equally poised, and free from every desire and every inclination. God often, in order to purify her, and to make her flexible and pliant, will permit the face of affairs to change many times, so that she is tossed on all sides, tempted and afflicted every manner of way; that a thousand contrary events befall her, which seem to operate quite the contrary of what she knows, and what her inward bias inclined her to. But if she remains in tranquility, forlorn and abandoned to all, always in the intention of renouncing all self-will, in order to follow the will of God, without choice or reserve, God will conduct her securely, and will himself accomplish that holy will which she desires, and is the only motive why she is abandoned to all.

But to take good heed to ourselves; let us present ourselves before God with sincerity and without hypocrisy. We that say incessantly, "O, that I knew the will of God, I would obey it cheerfully!" let us examine ourselves, I say, we who pretend to have so great a desire to know it—who ask it at others in the counsel we will needs have them give to us! If we will do justice against ourselves, shall we not find that we have some secret interest that pushes us on? We perhaps would fain shake off the yoke of a cross which is too heavy to bear; we shun contempt and loss; we covet some advantage, either with regard to temporal or spiritual things; a thousand subtle views of self-interest creep into that which we desire to do, or that we are afraid of, and from which we would fain excuse ourselves. God alone, in the bottom of our heart, will abundantly discover to us in silence the wiles of our own heart; if, as I have said, we have nothing but God only, and the accomplishment of his holy will in view.

A FRAGMENT.

We find the following article from the pen of "Fanny Fern," in a New York paper. We wish that lady's articles were always as unexceptionable in style and sentiment:

"This is a heartless life to lead," said Mabel Gray, as she unbanded her long hair, and laid aside her rich robe. "It is a life one might lead, were there no life beyond. When I left the heated ball-room to-night, the holy stars, keeping their tireless watch, sent a thrill through me; and the little prayer I used to say at my dead mother's knee, came unbidden to my lip. There's Letty, now; she's happier than her mistress. Come here, child; unbraid my hair, and sing me that hymn of yours:

"Jesus, I my cross have taken."

That will do, thank you child; now you may go. What a sweet voice she has; either that, or my tears, have eased my heart. I'm too restless for sleep. How softly the moonlight falls to-night; and years hence, when these myriad sleepers shall have sunk to their dreamless rest, earth will STILL be as fair, the silver moon will ride on as triumphantly. How many sad hearts she looks down upon to-night; and never a thanksgiving has gone up from my lips for countless blessings. Soft sleep with balmy touch has closed these thankless eyes; the warm fresh blood of youth, and health, has flowed on unchecked by disease. I have sat at the table of 'Dives,' while Lazarus has starved at the gate. The gold and purple robes of sunset have been woven for me; the blue vault of heaven arched over my head; the ever-changing fleecy cloud has gone drifting by; the warm sunlight has kissed open the flowers of love; the green moss has spread a carpet for my careless foot, and I have reveled in all this beauty and luxury—the Lord forgive me—unmindful of the Giver!"

Dear reader, shall it be only at "Bethesda's Pool" that you seek your Benefactor? While your life-cup overflows with blessings; when the warm blood courses swiftly, shall there come no generous response to that still small voice, "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by."

Prayer, says McCosh, when engaged in spirit and truth, free from pride, and the troubles of the passions, contains within itself its own answer, in the heavenly calm and repose which it communicates to the soul. * * The man who cultivates a devotional spirit is like the earth in its orbit—guided by a central light, and carrying every where a circumambulate atmosphere, with a life-giving and refreshing influence.

A diamond with some flaws is still more precious than a pebble that has none.

MODERN INFIDELITY.

We are indebted to an article in Blackwood's Magazine for the following: "We should like to see, in some of the modern periodicals devoted to the destruction of the Christian religion, a fair, four square review of the New Testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. If the Gospel, so called by the Christians, is not the wisdom of God, and the power of God unto salvation, it would be quite as easy to prove it in a bold, manly, and scholar-like review of the book its believers rely on, as by petty, half-and-half, true and false, philosophical essays in the newspapers and the quarterlies. The time was when Infidelity had a bold front and a foemen steel. It marched up to the strongholds of christianity, and struck at the heart of the system. True, it made a failure of it; but the world is wiser now than it was then; and 'progress' is the watchword of the Infidel party in this country and abroad. Why, then, do we have to track the enemy as you would the enemy through the forest, who fears to leave a footprint lest you should run him down? Why must you tie him to a definition, and then force him to explain himself, before he will admit he is the opposer of revelation? Why does he contend that he believes Paul was inspired, and then confess that he believes Milton and Tom Moore were inspired also? Why does he insist that he believes in God, and then say that every thing good is God, and he believes in all alike? Why does he profess to receive the New Testament, and then pretend to tell you what is true and what is false in its pages? Why do they admit the Old Testament to be from God, and then call it a 'Hebrew reservoir of all possible inconsistencies?" Why do they lay the slighest claim to faith in Christianity, and then discuss the question whether Jesus was mistaken, or his evangelists have misrepresented him in the reports of his lectures? All this, and more, we are free to charge upon the modern opponent of Christianity, and in this we have reason to complain that the enemy does not show his colors, and stand up to the fight. The evidences of Christianity have been luminously set forth by various writers in the last and present generation, so that in a fair field, the infidel would have small chance of making a successful stand. Instead of meeting him there, we see him sneaking into the reviews, magazines and newspapers, under the cover of progress, reform, and independent criticism, making a dig under the fifth rib of religion, as he says—'Art thou well, my brother?'"

GROWTH IN GRACE.

He who seeks the spiritual advancement of his own character, seeks what contributes to the higher dignity and honor of his own soul. He seeks just what his soul was made for, viz: the ever increasing knowledge and enjoyment of God. He seeks what most entirely accords with the will of God. "For this is the will of God, even our sanctification." He seeks what is urged upon him by the most endearing and powerful motives that infinite love can employ. He seeks what God pledges his love and power shall not be denied. The love of progress in holiness has all this to give him confidence of success. What could he ask more?

The lover of money may be unsuccessful in the pursuit. He cannot claim the sympathy of God in the mere pursuit of gain. But the lover of holiness throws himself directly into the channel of all the commands, counsels and promises of God. He follows the path pointed out by infinite wisdom. Of nothing in the universe can he be more assured than that the favor and smiles of God shine directly on the path he is pursuing.

Now, as to success in promoting the spiritual improvement of his soul, nothing can be more certain. Striving to rise from the low groveling paths of sin, he will rise. Panting and laboring for highor holiness, he will gain it. Determined in triumphing over his sinful passions, nothing can be surer than a victory. Lifting his eye and heart upward, and aspiring after a more heavenly mind, heavenward in his affections he certainly shall go. Ravished with the beauty and lowliness of the Saviour, and panting to be more and more like him, who shall say he will not gain his end? God is for him—who can be against him?

Why are we not justified in saying there is no object of pursuit that can be brought before an immortal mind where success becomes a matter of such certainty. There need not be a moment's misgiving as if labor might be expended in vain. The mariner, the merchant, the architect may see disappointment and ruin follow in their path, but never, no never, can there be failure of success on their part, who love and labor to rise higher and higher in communion and fellowship with God. The very desire is of God, and all the efforts it inspires, he is pledged to bless, so that nothing can be more certain than that he who aspires to it, "Shall shine more and more unto the perfect day." GONE TO BED.—An eminently holy man thus wrote, on hearing of the death of a child:

"Sweet thing, and is he so quickly laid to sleep? Happy he! Though we shall have no more the pleasure of his lisping and laughing, he shall have no more the pain of crying, nor of being sick, nor of dying. Tell my dear sister that she is now so much more akin to the next world; and this will be quickly passed to us all. John is but gone an hour or two to bed, as children used to do, and we are very soon to follow. And the more we put off the love of this present world, and all things superfluous, beforehand, we shall have the less to do when we lie down."

The purest joy that we can experience in one we love, is to see that person a source of happiness to others.

STARS AND STOCK-COMPANIES.

Under the head of Theatrical Items, a leading daily, at the close of the last season said: "This season has been rather brilliant than otherwise. It proves one fact about theatres—that "Stars" are not the thing. Stock-companies well managed will draw larger houses and heavier receipts."

Not knowing theatrical phrase we still supposed we understood the above. As for Stars, there is no question what they are. Stock-companies we take to be a "regular etage set"; some of them very brilliant, but all well acquainted with their parts, passable in talents, industrious players, never doing greatly, yet, always doing their best, and the whole conspiring to produce an effect.

Now there is a parallel to this: and the parallel lies in a very different region from the theatre: even in the pulpit and the ministry. Some of the same great philosophical and psychological reasons obtain in both cases. Without resenting the parallelism let us trace it out.

There is the pulpit "Star"—a commodity like the diamond, precious rather for its scarcity than intrinsic worth. The Church is crowded, the sexton is astounded at the rush of the people. The Star blazes. The audiences are thrilled astonished, convulsed or carried away—just as the language of eulogy may happen. The Star culminates and then—rises some other where: culminates again and so goes on shining and dazzling, rising and culminating. While the Star is about—the pulpit Star—everything in the way of church system is suspended. The ear absorbs the hearer and the Star works everything and every body into instruments of producing one grand effect. The best about are only second best and must act second part. The class-meeting is forgotten; the prayer-meeting is only a prayer-meeting—no fine speaking there. The sick are not visited, the weak and the erring not cared for. Even the prayer of faith stands a chance to be neglected, for what need of help from on high has he—the Star! Let the Star blaze on.

Few Conferences can stand more than one Star or so. Few congregations can stand a regular Star long. The finest are soon run down by them. A church-membership right well to do can be so used up by a Star, that in the course of a pastoral year they will hardly know where to find themselves. And their desolation can only be equalled by their astonishment that such a thing could take place under such preaching.

Now for the Stock-Company. Here are men that do not undertake to fill the whole round of the minister's duty by preaching alone. They are sound theologians, they prepare well for the pulpit, they know their parts, and now and then may preach a considerable sermon. But that is not their stopping place. They count their work not all done with a sermon. Even in the pulpit they are used to ask help of God, and throw themselves on the prayers of the congregation. They watch, they sing, they pray, they visit, they go out and come in before the people. All departments of the Christian ministry get their attention.

A church that has well nigh collapsed under a Star, recuperates under the labors of such working men. The chapel may not be overrun, but it will have a respectable, attentive, serious collection of worshippers—not Star-gazers. Religious meetings will be generally and equably maintained. Godliness will grow apace. And by-and-bye, when the pastoral term expires, the church is left in a healthful condition. There is order and compactness, instead of itching ears and confusion.

Let those who will crave Stars—give us the Stock-Company: the band of self-denying men, not eloquent, it may be, but safe; not brilliant, but able to teach; not abounding in rhetoric, but in good works; not dazzling orators, but industrious pastors; not models in declamation, but models in pureness, in faith and holy living: men sound in mind and respectable in attainments, well read in the Bible, and urged on by a greater zeal for doing good than catching applause: men who work side by side with their fellows, and give God the glory: men who preach, and having preached, come down from the pulpit to look after all the interests of the church of God. Moreover, Stars come high. One Star costs twice as much as a member of the stock company. And it sometimes takes a deal of special bargaining to secure a regular "star."

It is worthy of observation that those sections of the church blessed with the ministry of such a body of ministers, enjoy a more stable and healthful prosperity, are in sounder and happier condition, than those favored spots blessed with Stars. This is the ox that treadeth out the corn and makes it too. Others, the Stars, may bear off the honors, they bear the burden. It is our duty to receive all God's gifts with thankfulness, and even Stars may have their use. But give us the 'Stock-company.' If a church is to be punished, send them a regular Star. Happy for that church if the cure does not kill. If ever they get well over it and indite a petition to the Bishop, it will be in substance this: "Send us any of the many good, faithful, working pastors who have put themselves at your bidding, to supply the church; we will receive him, heed him and support him; but do not send us a 'Star.'"

"A Partner Wanted."—Those having the capital to invest, would do well to look after these words, in our advertising columns. Having seen the premises, and knowing the man, we would recommend both to whom it may concern.

The New Book Store.—Mr. Fleming's card, on 4th page, will inform the readers of good books where they can supply themselves, and on good terms. He invites not only city custom, but country orders, which he is prepared to fill.

PREACHING TO THE NEGROES.

A style of successful ministry among the servile population is not apt to be adopted on first trial. Such at least is our own experience, and that of judicious persons with whom we have exchanged views on the subject. Negroes form an excitable audience. This readiness of emotion is grateful to one who has been preaching to phlegmatic hearers that would not feel, and he is disposed to administer to it. The same or an equal manifestation of emotion in an audience better instructed and differently constituted, would indicate an encouraging degree of spirituality, and therefore he is liable to be deceived by it. Dwelling on the promises and the gorgeous descriptions of Revelations—the white robes, the golden streets, the jasper walls, the winged angels, etc., will keep a negro audience lively and awake and shouting happy, when a large portion of the same audience would sleep soundly under the plain and forcible teachings of Christian duty. And yet it is a question readily answered—which style of preaching, in the long run, does the most good? What are the results?

Every one who has any personal knowledge of this important work—preaching to negroes—will coincide with us in saying that there may be a great arousement gotten up by a discourse that does not touch the plague of the heart, nor disturb the Devil in the quiet possession of it. With many the manifested feeling will be genuinely religious—they live close to God and are prepared to receive the promises; but others who make the greatest show of joy may never have had the deep of their hearts broken up by a godly repentance; they may be living than in great and habitual sins.

The carnal heart must be dealt with plainly and its deceitfulness searched out by the candle of the Word. The cloak of sin must be torn off. The Commandments must have a hearing, backed with their awful sanctions. Purity, honesty, truth and their correlatives must be talked of, and that in no "unknown tongue." If these things be slurred or skimmed over that the pathetic peroration may be brought on—"the morning cloud and early dew" will be but too fit emblems of the apparent good results. The preaching is vain.

This course will not be so popular as the one hinted at and warned against. Instead of the loud response and the beaming smile there may be even a look of sullenness and offense upon that part of the congregation whose hearts are being probed, whose secret sins are hunted out and exposed and denounced; but if a real reformation be accomplished the case must be so dealt by.

We have noticed that those colored preachers whose style is after this thorough, searching sort—and there are many of them—are not favorites. But their labors testify of them. They do the good that is done. The same is true of the white preacher that commands his speech to the conscience. There is depth and stability in the reformations taking place under such ministrations and under such only.

We touch this matter with diffidence. There are enough, besides ourselves, to preach against undue excitements and all that. Far be it from us to suppress or check the emotional in religion; but when this lies so near the surface, as in the case of our servile population, there is need of exhortation to guide it in a proper channel and warning lest the weighty matters of the law be lost sight of. To convince of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment to come, may be less pleasant than rejoicing; but such convictions must precede all rejoicing that is good.

Chalmers' Prayers.—The London Quarterly Review, October, 1852, has been received from the re-publishers, Leonard, Scott & Co. Of its eight articles, the fifth, on the "Memoirs of Dr. Chalmers, by Dr. Hanna," by an able, discriminating, but not over friendly writer, has most interested us. Once we were struck at the statement of a former student of Dr. Chalmers, that while Divinity Professor, he usually wrote out and read his prayers before the class. It seems, from this article before us, that from his youth he used finished and profound preparation in the composition of prayer. It was the custom, in the Scottish Colleges, for the students of divinity to conduct the public worship of the class, by turns; and each in assuming this office, was supposed to extemporize a prayer. Chalmers, in his public prayers, (then unconverted,) attracted more notice than any other student. Awake to the beauty and force of the Lord's prayer, he invariably paraphrased it.

Young Men's Christian Association.—The preliminary meeting, last Tuesday night a week ago, was well attended, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. The addresses were short and to the point, and an encouraging, good-will feeling characterized the proceedings of organization. A committee of one member from each congregation of the evangelical churches of the city, was appointed to draft a Constitution. This will be reported to the Association on next Tuesday night, and acted on. It is important that there be a full meeting at that time. Place of meeting the same—the church at the corner of Prytania and Calliope streets.

In visiting the sick, three things should be steadily kept in view: the influence of what may be said upon the person, if dying; the influence it may have on him, should he recover, and the influence it may have on persons in health about him.

ONCE MORE ABOUT THE PAPER.

Punctuality.—The manner of the published Receipts, as seen this week, has been adopted for the convenience of all concerned. It will greatly help subscribers in being punctual, when the advance payment for the coming year is due. Evidently, we can not dispense with or in any instance waive the cash plan. If payment in advance be not received at the office or reported as in the hands of an agent, the paper will be discontinued. None can find fault with this.

A convenient date.—The first day of January next falls on Saturday, the day of publication. The whole number of the Advocate issued on that day is round, even 100. What a convenient date and number for subscribers to reckon from! It will be easy to keep the run of their accounts. There will be no forgetting and mistaking. We look for a large entry on the Advocate books by the 1st January, 1853.

A correction.—We endeavored to give the terms distinctly, in the papers of Oct. 30th and Nov. 6th, in the following sentence:

"All new subscribers, on and after November 1, (next Monday) and all old ones whose subscriptions are renewed then, will be charged $1 50, strictly in advance."

This seems in a few cases to have been misunderstood in reference to old subscribers. If the year for which they had paid in advance expired on or before the 1st November last, of course their subscription could be renewed at $1 50. But if it expired before the 1st Nov., and they began another year from the time of that expiration, still receiving the paper, they renewed under the previous rates—$2 50.

Can it be sustained?—This is the anxious inquiry addressed by many friends of the Advocate, who fear on this point (a material one) while they are highly gratified at the adoption of a favorite principle, "low price and large circulation." It is not a question for us to answer any further than this—We shall do "our best."

The full answer lies with others. It consists in such communications as this, cheering as laconic: "Before leaving A. I made an effort for the Advocate, and here is the result."

The result was thirteen "names" and $19 50. That is a real letter, reader—an E pluribus unum letter. Such as that will assuredly "sustain."

A MORAL NECESSITY.

Aware that the cause of Sabbath Schools in our Church has been committed to a distinct and most efficient department of the periodical press, the "Visitor," we nevertheless take occasion to put in a word now and then about them. An agency that originated within the last fifty or sixty years under benevolent individuals, it has become generally adopted into the Churches as a part of their systems of evangelization. A mark of their appreciation is seen in Sabbath School operations forming a fixed and permanent feature in the Church statistics now gathered.

The Sabbath School is no longer an experiment; nor is it for any Church to take it up or not. It is a necessity. The Church that despises it will soon be despised. Let any one in the land, though at present ahead of every other, try it; abandon the Sabbath School as a specific plan; dismiss the teachers and the pupils, and throw itself upon adult proselytism however zealously. In fifty years that Church will have changed its relative position from van to rear. The rising generations have been drawn away for them. No steady and wholesome accession has supplied the waste and decay of backslidings and of death. Less than half a century might be allowed such a Church for working out its doom. It would fall behind the age; its aisles would be deserted, and "Ichabod" written on its altars.

A Moral Necessity is the Sabbath School to any Christian Church. The strongest cannot neglect it and live, while others keep it in operation. It is not a question of expediency, but existence. Take any village, town or country neighborhood, and the various Churches as they now stand there. Other things being equal, that which has connected with it the best system of Subbath School instruction, supervised by faithful and capable teachers, and encouraged by the aid and sympathy of the congregation, may be safely calculated on, not many years hence, as first in numbers, first in influence, and first in enlightened, consistent piety.

In view of this pleasant, yet commanding necessity, we would urge it upon our congregations and societies to look after their Sabbath Schools. Lay hold of this instrumentality—this means of church building, and of conversion—of gospel propagandism and of religious indoctrination, in earnest. Volunteers are called for to begin and to carry on the work. Hear the counsel of the late and lamented Dr. Olin on the subject: "Let the Church remember that the Sunday School is its right arm. Neither the pastor nor the official men will, if they are wise, look coldly upon the Sunday School. It is the nursery from which tender plants are to be removed, by-and-by, into the Church. It is the feeder of the Church. It is the pioneer of the preached word. Never suffer the Sunday School to want any thing for its complete efficiency. Better have preaching but half the time. Better have your Church but dimly lighted. As soon close your class-meetings. What you expend in this way is seed-wheat, which will return you, some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold."

Prayer is the golden chain of union between heaven and earth, and it keeps open the blessed communication.

A BEAUTIFUL EXAMPLE.

In addition to the obituary of Miss Evelynn Vaughan, published in this paper a month since, an incident beautiful in its example, is told in a letter of Rev. J. C. Keener to Dr. Lee, enclosing $10 for Mrs. Taylor, wife of the missionary to China. The deceased intended sending it, but died with the gift in her hand. Her father carried out her intention. This is his testimony and the self-denial that appears in her life is the more striking and lovely to those who knew her as the favorite daughter of a wealthy planter:

"When at school her letters to us were always filled with religion. She has been regular to her prayers ever since she was five years old. I never knew an old member of the church so much so. She read her Bible regularly morning and night, and occupied much of her time in her devotions. She fasted every week from dinner on Thursday until supper on Friday. Her charitable donations and subscriptions, she never would allow me to pay for her, but gave her brothers lessons in music, for which I paid her a stipulated amount, and with this she paid off her subscriptions for building of arches, quarterage, etc. She said it would be making no sacrifice on her part if she allowed me to pay these sums, that she must work for it, earn it and give it herself. The night that she died, though delirious, she again reminded me of the amount we were to give the missionary's wife and other appropriations, to be made for her of a like nature."

SONTAG AND THE PREACHERS.

Mme. Sontag has "roped in" the New England clergy. Strange things those Northern preachers can get up—from a fugitive slave law Indignation Meeting, down (or up) to a sentimental scene with a strolling stage singer. That "dignity that doth hedge about" a minister of the gospel in the city of Notions, is a something by itself. Wonder if any clerical attentions were shown to Lola Montes. Lola must have felt herself slighted. Let him who can read this moving description by a secular paper, without a smile. It steals out of both sides of our mouth. "She stoops to conquer." Ye who have tears—prepare:

Sontag and the Boston Clergymen.—On the 17th, a dress rehearsal was given by Sontag, at which the clergymen of Boston and the vicinity were invited, and nearly 400, of all denominations, with their families, were in attendance.

The scene was one of great interest, and she sang most divinely, and gave several sacred pieces among the rest.

At the close of the rehearsal, the Rev. Mr. Bernard moved a vote of thanks, and Dr. Sharp, who was called to the chair, addressed Sontag in appropriate and touching terms. Sontag replied by signs, and kneeled to the venerable Dr. Sharp with tears streaming down her cheeks, who, placing his hands on her head, gave her his blessing, the whole audience expressing the deepest apparent interest in the scene being enacted before them. On rising to her feet, a little girl presented her with a garland of flowers, which she received and withdrew.

The Protestant clergymen present presented her with a handsome bible, and the Catholic clergymen with another, the blank pages on both containing autographs of the clergymen present.

Reformers at Your Posts.—"Woodsman" last week told how the vote on the License System, in a Northern portion of Louisiana, was lost to the temperance cause; not by the strength of its adversaries, but the indifference of its professed, and even its vowed friends! They let the golden opportunity of staying the liquor plague slip through their fingers. They must hereafter look upon it, with all its evils, as perpetuated and upheld by themselves. Unpleasant and discreditable as it may be, this responsibility is theirs. Henceforth, they are particeps criminis.

"Curse ye, Meroh—curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof." Curse them for what? For doing nothing. "Because they came not to the help of the Lord—to the help of the Lord against the mighty." They were neutrals.

Coincident with the State election under the new Constitution of Louisiana, 27th December, the question of "License or no License" will be submitted to the voters of New Orleans. Christians, moral men, good citizens, let not your counting rooms, your trades, or company, or weather, keep you from the polls on that day. Cast the ticket, "No License." Save others, if you can. At least, make your protest against the present organized system of evil; and if it must be maintained, let it be another's sin, not yours.

Virginia Conference.—The following statistics were collected during the past conference: 247 Sabbath schools, 313 superintendents, 1,782 teachers, 11,645 scholars, 26,021 volumes in libraries, $1,248 41 collected for Sabbath schools, $722 16 collected for the Bible Society, and about $8,000 for missions.

There were reported 32,995 whites, and 6,039 colored members. This is a small increase of white members and a small decrease of colored members, as compared with the minutes of the former year.

New Magazine.—We have received the prospectus of a new miscellany, to be published and edited by Rev. Isaac Ebbert, at Memphis, Tenn., and to be called the "Memphis Monthly Miscellany." It will be devoted to education, agriculture, manufacture, internal improvement, and family reading. First number to be issued January 1st; terms $2 a year. Dr. Ebbert was late editor of the Memphis and Arkansas Christian advocate: hope it will be successful.

A New Advocate.—A prospectus has been sent out of the "Central Christian Advocate," to be published by the M. E. Church, North, in St. Louis, Mo. Peter Cartwright, Chairman of Publishing Committee, Rev. Mr. Trotter, editor. Publication to be begun when three thousand subscribers are obtained.

THE TRUE BAPTIST.

We have received the Prospectus of a monthly periodical, to be published in Jackson, Miss., by the above name. It is to be devoted to the discussion of Baptism—its mode, design, subjects and collateral points. Terms, $1 50, in advance. From the reputation of the prospective editor, Rev. A. Newton, D. D., we doubt not the style of the monthly will be able, chaste, dignified and tolerant. A friend thus writes on the matter:

"This water controversy, in the language of Bishop Andrews, "is the controversy of the age," in the United States at least. Nor is it to be concealed that the bold, arrogant and proscriptive assumptions of immersionists have acquired much of their force and effect from our silence, from our misjudging of a course so singularly ad captandum and denunciatory on their part.

I rejoice that Dr. Newton has undertaken this good and necessary work. It is loudly and imperatively demanded, so much so, that it is now a desideratum, and I doubt not but he will do good and most acceptable service in this contest for the "truth as it is in Jesus;" for the cause of our holy Christianity in its obvious and embracing provisions. From an intimate and personal acquaintance with Dr. Newton, I knew he is the man for the work. I do not hesitate to say that he will serve the cause of truth, of the Allhile, of God, as a "workman that needeth not to be ashamed"—as one that will "rightly divide the word of truth." Such is his extensive and varied learning, such his close and extensive investigation of Christian Baptism in all its phases and claims, that I regard him as every way master of the whole question; therefore, he will, I am sure, present, and with ability, that all will acknowledge, maintain the Pædo-baptist view of this subject.

Most earnestly do I recommend "The True Baptist" to every reader of the N. O. Christian Advocate, who is anxious to know scriptural teachings on the subject of Christian Baptism. O. L. N.

Canton, Miss., 1852.

PERSONAL.

Rev. J. L. Sanders and family sailed from this port on Monday morning, in steamship Philadelphia, for California. He is sent out and supported by Enon Ct., Ala. Conf.

Rev. F. S. Petway is now in the city en route for the Texas Conference, to which he was transferred from the Tennessee. He is accompanied by Rev. Mr. Ledbetter, destined to the same field. In a few days another transfer will pass through on his way to Texas. Rev. J. L. McGhee went before a month ago. Our brethren of the "Lone Star" State are drawing to them a good share of transfers, and they such as are helpers, indeed. We congratulate them.

EDUCATION.

By reference to advertisement, the Faculty of Lagrange College, and notices will be seen. President Hardy's appointment meets the universal and hearty approbation it deserves.

The Methodists of Tuskegee, Ala., have taken steps to establish there an educational institution of high order. Where such men as Judge Dougherty lead off, something will come of it.

Rev. W. F. Samford, A. M., has taken the Presidency of Oak Flowery Female College, and presents a full Faculty.

ANNUAL MISSIONARY APPROPRIATIONS

OF THE M. E. CHURCH SOUTH.

Last week we gave the aggregate. The Secretary's Monthly Circular is now before us, with interesting details. Our brethren, North, have received from us a good provocation in the liberality of their gifts, and they return us a good provocation in the system with which those gifts are dispensed for the propagation of the Gospel. We like the well considered manner in which these appropriations have been made. The best counsel of the entire Church was brought together, and that without regard to expense or distance. Surveying the missionary field, laying plans to approach and occupy it, are things, just now, of vast concern; and there is room for our improvement in this respect.

By the way, the Board of Managers of the Church, South, had its annual meeting for fixing appropriations, a month or two since. The aggregate, $100,000, for the fiscal year, has been published, but nothing of detail that we have seen. Perhaps details and specific appropriations were published in some one of the Church papers, and the publication has escaped us. We have looked closely for it, but as yet in vain; for it was something we felt much concerned to be informed about. In the absence of any official statement, we published one from an individual no way connected with the management. The Church ought to know these things, and that officially. The various Conference Missionary Societies have confidence in the Board of the Parent Society, but they like not to work in the dark. Doubtless all is right—but then let there be light on the subject. To say no more, there are various ways in which $100,000 may be appropriated, and many doners would prefer some of these to others in giving directions to their contributions. We respectfully call the attention of the Board and Secretary to this matter.

So much by the way. Here is the extract of the Circular of Dr. Durbin, we set out to introduce:

The General Missionary Committee met in the Mission Rooms, New York, November 8. Present—Rev. Dr. Bangs, Chairman; Rev. Messrs. J. F. Wright, of Ohio; H. W. Reed, of Iowa; W. H. Collins, of Michigan; G. Gary, of the State of New York; and G. Webster, of Maine. Rev. G. H. Houts, of Missouri, was detained on the Ohio river, and did not reach New York in time. Rev. Bishops Waugh, Janes and Scott, and the Treasurer and Corresponding Secretary, were present to assist in the deliberations of the Committee.

After an almost uninterrupted session from 9 o'clock, on Monday morning, to 4 o'clock, Tuesday afternoon, during which time each mission now under the care of this Church was passed in careful review, the Committee reached the following conclusions, and reported the same to the Board for its approbation:

Appropriations.
Regular work in Liberia, Africa	$20,000
Monrovia Seminary	1,500
Education of promising col'd youths, male or female	1,500
For visit of Bishop Scott, and for an enlargement of the work in and beyond the Republic	3,000
China Mission	10,000
German Mission	10,000
South American Mission	4,000
Total for Foreign Missions	$50,000
German Missions	43,000
Foreign populations other than German	10,250
Indian Missions	13,500
English Domestic Missions, including Oregon and California	74,250
Total for Domestic Missions	$141,500
New Missions.
For the work in France	$2,500
For the commencement of a mission in Bulgaria, in Turkey	5,000
For the commencement of a mission in India	7,500
For the work in Sweden and Norway	750
Total for new Foreign Missions	$15,750
Special Appropriations.
To institute a mission to the Germans in California	$2,000
Sundry small appropriations	950
Total of appropriations	$210,000

The Board of Managers assembled at 4 o'clock, to hear and consider the report of the General Missionary Committee. By order of the Committee, the Secretary read to the Board the minutes, and a tabular view of the appropriations. The Board took up each division of the general appropriation proposed, and each particular foreign mission, and each new mission, and each special appropriation, and gave its concurrence. The bishops present concurred, and thus the joint work of the Missionary Committee, the Board, and the Episcopacy, was complete.

We shall take occasion hereafter to give the Church some information of the new missions proposed. In the meantime we may say—

1. The contributions to the treasury during the last six months had increased throughout the Church about ten thousand dollars, and would still increase. This brings somewhat to the end of our missionary year, which will be, under the revised constitution, December 31st next.

2. In view of this increase, the joint meeting of the Board and General Committee advanced the appropriations over last year ten thousand dollars. The treasury will be in debt some ten thousand dollars on the 31st of December; so that to carry out the whole missionary work, as proposed in the above appropriations, the increase in the contributions to the missionary treasury for the year 1853, over 1852, must be $20,000 at least.

METHODIST PRESS.

Effects of Doctrinal Instructions.—Some time last summer, (as our readers may remember,) a family of the name of Winston were murdered in Richmond, Va., by two negroes—a man and his wife. They were both members of one of the Baptist churches in that city. It is even affirmed that the man, John Williams, was a preacher to the colored people, and his wife was regarded a pious woman among them. The number of colored people of the Baptist denomination in Richmond is very large. One Church, composed of them entirely, is under the pastoral care of a very estimable man, Mr. Ryland, and numbers over 2500 members. The details of the murder were horrid, and under the excitement of it, it was even proposed to raze the African Baptist Church. The unwise proposition was not carried out, but the matter has led the community to a serious consideration of the practical effects of certain doctrinal inculcations upon the colored population. The state of public opinion has called out from the pastors and deacons of the Baptist churches of the city a document to arrest judgment and censure. They are men and ministers standing high and blameless. They say in their publication—

* * "Our views on the subject of baptism are peculiar; but of all the Christian denominations, the Baptists are the last that should be charged with ascribing an undue efficacy to baptism. We neither teach nor believe baptismal regeneration, nor the remission of sins in baptism. Opposition to these sentiments constitute a portion of our known denominational peculiarities. We hold and teach, as explicitly as words can teach, that none are fit subjects for the ordinance but penitent believers in Christ, who bring forth fruits worthy of repentance; that in no case has it any saving efficacy, and that none are any way benefitted by it who do not habitually, and to the end, lead a life of piety. If the slaves, or others, who tend our ministrations, are ignorant on this point, they are wilfully and stupidly so; and to prevent the perversion of God's truth and ordinances is not within the compass of mortal power. With ample opportunities of knowing, we have not discovered among them sentiments opposed to our teaching on this subject; and if they hold such views at all, it must be to a very limited extent, and in spite of every effort of their religious instructions to the contrary. But is it an unheard of thing, that Church members should commit crime! We would it were so. It were an easy, but invidious task, to show that the members of other communions, as well as of the Baptists, not slaves merely, but intelligent and respected white persons, have committed gross crimes, for which they have been punished, or have deserved to be."

The Richmond Christian Advocate, publishes the document at length. The editor believes that neither the ministers nor the members of the Baptist churches of the city, or elsewhere, would inculcate doctrines among the colored people prejudicial to the development of pure and undefiled religion, or to the maintenance of due subordination on the part of the colored population, and the established rights and relations between masters and servants. If their religious teachings are perverted to any improper purpose by their colored members, he acquits them of all blame, as to their intentions, and their honest convictions of their doctrine in agreement with the Holy Scriptures in the premises.

But still he questions the influence of these teachings, as handled by the servile population. The following remarks are his:

"The observations of many years' and frequent conversations with members of different Churches, have induced the opinion that there is something singularly pernicious in their influence on the negro character, in the doctrines held and disseminated by the Baptist church. The doctrine of the impossibility of falling from grace, or in common language, 'once in grace, always in grace,' which is the cherished creed of the Baptist denomination, is, of itself, sufficient to corrupt an ignorant mind, and to weaken the power of divine grace in the heart of intelligence. Besides, the doctrine of baptism by immersion seals and confirms the soul in a state of grace, and that it renders the soul invincible against sin; that nothing it does is sinful in the sight of God's and which gives rise to another doctrine, that when such a baptized believer does fall into sin, whatever its nature or turpitude, it is the flesh, not the spirit, that sins; or, as we have often heard it expressed, 'it is not My but my flesh that sins;' we have in the element of a creed that must, in its ordinary workings among ignorant people, induce the most vice and licentiousness that common fame affirms to be a common development among the members of the African Baptist churches all over the land. Many cases of such development have fallen under our personal observation, or come to our knowledge by the statements of reliable witnesses. We have been in communities where persons would not, for such reasons as these, allow their servants to join the Baptist church; and where the actual monetary value of a slave was disparaged by such religious connexion. We have never heard of any such imputations or objections to the colored members of the Episcopal, Presbyterian or Methodist churches. While then we exonerate the Baptist church from desiring or designing to produce such a state of things, we think the facts are unquestionable, and commend themselves to the sober and prayerful consideration of those who have the charge and government of the spiritual interests of so many of the colored people of our city and country. Numerous facts might be adduced in illustration of the practical effects of these cherished doctrines upon the moral deportment of those who embrace them. And the reported exclamations of those of like faith, who surrounded the scaffold on which Jane Williams paid the penalty of her crimes, 'she was a good christian,' 'she died true to the faith,' 'she's gone to heaven for true,' etc., etc., are but the fruit and confirmation of the doctrine of 'once in grace, always in grace,' that immersion only is baptism, and one thus baptised cannot sin—doctrines most surely held and propagated amongst the colored members of the Baptist church: and it is only of them, not of the whites, that we predicate such fruits of the doctrine."

A General Lovefeast.—Unfortunately it happens sometimes that the most cordial fellowship, while existing between the individual members, does not exist between the different congregations of same Church in large cities. The spirit of rivalry gets up, or interests seem to clash. Zion's Herald notices an excellent cure for this state of things abroad, and recommends it at home:

Our New York brethren are holding a series of love-feasts, in which portions of the members from all churches meet and mingle their testimonies, their sympathies, and their praises. Three such love-feasts have been held. They are described as seasons of unwonted spiritual enjoyment and profit.

Don't be Ashamed.—The Boston Ad puts it on this wise:

An exchange paper says: "A wealthy fashionable young lady in Philadelphia is dying from mortification at the accidental discovery that her father was a soap boiler."

She is not the first fashionable young lady that has been ashamed of her hard working old fashioned father. Some can be found nigher home than Philadelphia, that would blush as ruddy as a rose, if their fathers were to step into some circles where they claim to be at home. Ben Franklin's father knew how to make soap and candles. Shame on the foolish pride that is ashamed of the very means to which many young ladies owe their present advantages.

The Property Case.—Our Northern and Southern exchanges differ toto cælo in their views of the decision in the Western Book Concern case. The Northern Advocate, after giving a synopsis of Judge Leavitt's opinion says: "This is a common sense view of the subject," and by way of contrast turns a word back upon Judge Nelson:

No wonder that a Judge who could mould Conferences and Courts to his own liking should do what he pleased with so small a thing as the Methodist Book Concern. We ought to be thankful that he did not give it all to the South. But error has its day. The business has fallen into different hands at the West. We have from legal gentlemen there, such an analysis of our Church policy as a Methodist need not be ashamed of.

The Same.—The Southern Advocate thinks the real issue in the case not reached by Judge Leavitt's decision—he "fights shy." Our cotemporary shows, however, that if the Judge was correct in giving the property in suit to the Northern Church, justice has stepped short of its mark. Our Northern friends have not got enough! We agree with him:

The decision of the Ohio judge in that the withdrawal of the Southern and Southwestern Conferences has forfeited to those Conferences all the rights of property originally pertaining to them. "In withdrawing," he says, "they take with them none of the rights of property pertaining to them while in the Church." Now an argument which proves too much, or a decision which goes too far, is self-destroyed. To keep the Southern Church out of its rateable share in the Cincinnati Book Concern, the withdrawing Conferences are simply classed with ordinary seceders. In that category they forfeit all rights of property, and as a matter of course, all claim to the Book-room property. This is verily a compendious method of meeting the difficulty. It will, however, involve the dear Northern brethren in worse difficulties than if they had quietly given up the property claimed by the South. There are millions of dollars worth of property now in quiet and undisturbed possession by these "withdrawing Conferences"—church edifices, parsonage houses, cemeteries, colleges, schools, conference funds, and even publishing establishments. All this property, the Ohio court proclaims to the world, has been forfeited. This is actually the case, on the principles according to which justice is meted out in the Cincinnati case; on no other however. According to Judge Leavitt, the Northern Church is bound by duty to God, to itself, to posterity, to sell out our churches, turn us out of our

HYMENEAL.

MARRIED—On the 11th inst., near Gaston, Sumpter co., Ala., by Rev. Alex McBryde, Mr. JAMES P. CARR, formerly of N. C., and Miss ANN JANE LARKINS, eldest daughter of John M. Larkins, deceased.

OBITUARY.

DR. JOHN S. HESTER, formerly of Ala., but late of Caldwell Parish, La., died of consumption, 11th October last.

He was a successful physician, and an amiable young man, beloved by all who formed an acquaintance with him.

During his sickness he became much concerned for the welfare of his soul, and having a correct knowledge through the Spirit of his being a sinner in the sight of God, he was made to cry for mercy. This caused him weeping and lamentation, until Jesus was manifested to him as his Saviour, when he lost his burden of sin and guilt, and hope sprang up. He now became exceedingly anxious to be baptised by an Old School or Primitive Baptist preacher, and for which purpose I was sent for. I attended, and remained with him a part of two days, and a night. He gave me every satisfaction of his happy change from nature to grace. I viewed him a proper subject to receive the ordinance, and was preparing for the administration of the same, when he was taken with a severe spell of coughing, and sunk so much under it, that I was convinced it would not be prudent to undertake to administer the ordinance. He agreed to dispense with it, and made a request relative to his burial, and that I should preach his funeral at his grave. I have never witnessed stronger faith in a dying hour, and although his sufferings were great, he bore them all with the greatest patience. I complied with his request, and preached his funeral from the 5th chapter of John and 25th verse, to a large and attentive congregation.

Dr. Hester truly was my friend and brother in the Lord Jesus Christ, consequently I mourn my loss, but I know it is his gain. May the Lord smile upon his bereaved friends and relatives, and by grace prepare them all to meet him in heaven, where all is peace and love. THOS. MEREDITH.

THRILLING INCIDENT.—A few years ago, the inhabitants of Seville read with surprise in the advertisements of an approaching bull fight the unusual notice: "When the third bull shall have attacked the picadors, and receives three pairs of banderillas, a young peasant, by whom he has been brought up, will appear in the circus. He will approach the bull, caress it, and after removing the banderillas one after another, will lie down between his horns."

The announcement of so singular feat attracted an immense crowd to the amphitheatre. The third bull appeared, an animal with splendid horns, and very brave; he slew four horses, received the banderillas, and became furious.—Then, contrary to custom, all the torreros retired from the ring, leaving the bull stamping about, and shaking the bloody darts that hung from his neck. All at once a long whistle was heard. The bull paused and listened. It was repeated. He approached the barrier, and a young man leapt into the ring, calling the bull by his name, "Mosquito! Mosquito!" The animal knew its master, came to caress him, and was appeased. The peasant gave him his hand to lick, and with the other began to scratch it behind the ears; an operation which seemed to afford the poor brute much pleasure: he then gently removed the banderillas which annoyed the neck of Mosquito, made it go down on its knees, and placed his head between its horns. The grateful bull seemed to listen with pleasure to a pastoral melody sung by the master. The admiration of the multitude, hitherto suppressed by surprise, burst forth with Andalusian vivacity, and shook the building. Hearing this phrenzied applause, which had accompanied all his sufferings, the bull, till then under a charm, appeared to awake and return to reality. He suddenly rose, bellowing; and the peasant tried to escape. But it was too late. The animal, as though furious at being betrayed, tossed the young man into the air, received him again on his horns, gored him, trampled on him, crushed him to pieces, in spite of the efforts of the Torreros. The junction was suspended; and, a phenomenon in Spain, the horrified public quitted the circus in silence. [March's "Walk into North Spain."

ANOTHER EXPLORING EXPEDITION.—The National Intelligencer gives the outline details of the plans and objects of the exploring expedition now lifting out for the Pacific. It will be recollected that the last Congress appropriated $125 000 for this expedition, and the results of it are looked upon as highly important. It is highly probable that it will arrive in the China seas in time to co-operate with Commodore Perry. The Intelligencer says:

"The expedition will consist of—First. The sloop-of-war Vincennes, Commander Cadwalader Ringgold, with Lieut. F. A. Rudd and other officers not yet designated, and 175 men. This sloop is now at New York. Second. The steam propeller John Hancock, Lieut. John Rodgers commanding, with 60 men. She is now undergoing thorough repairs at Boston. Third. The brig Porpoise, Lieut. H. P. Davis commanding, with 60 men. She is now at New York. Fourth. A tender to be called the Pilot, with about twenty men. We believe her commander has not yet been chosen."

Newspaper reports have frequently confounded this expedition with that to be commanded by Commodore Perry, and destined for Japan direct.

CONFORMATION OF THE MOON.—Every object on its surface of the height of one hundred feet, is distinctly seen through Lord Rosse's telescope. On its surface are craters of extinct volcanoes, rocks and masses of stone almost innumerable. But there are no signs of habitations such as ours, no vestige of architectural remains to show that the moon is, or ever was, inhabited by a race of mortals similar to ourselves. No water is visible, no sea, no river; all seems desolate.

LIBERIA.—President Roberts, of Liberia, recently visited Paris, where he had an interview with Louis Napoleon, who received him in the kindest manner, presented him with a vessel of war, and offered him any ammunition, ordnance or military clothing that he might stand in need of. The British Government also, some time since, presented him with a small vessel of war.

GENERAL INTELLIGENCE.

The Funeral Ceremonies Ninth December.

All the various societies, military, firemen, ect., are active making arrangements for the proper observance of the day. Our firemen have accepted the invitation of the Committee of Arrangements, and will make a very large turn out. We learn they have employed ten bands of music for their division of the procession. Of course the Fire Department will dispense with their engines and hose carriages on this occasion, but will appear with their numerous banners in mourning, and also their horses will be in the procession with mourning trappings. The Portuguese Benevolent Society will turn out in full force, as also the Italian Benevolent Association, Shamrock Benevolent Society, St. Patrick's Society, St. Joseph Society, Association of Printers, Grocers' Association, St. Andrew's Society, and numerous other associations. We hope the Screwmen will also join in the parade.

The Board of Directors of the Public Schools of the First District have resolved that the boys and male teachers of the schools join the procession, and the Board of Directors head that division of the procession. We presume the directors of the other districts will take the same action. The Masons have been ordered out in strict funeral regalia, and will appear in large numbers.

The Grand Lodge Odd Fellows and the Grand Encampment held a special session last evening, and resolved to unite in the procession. A committee of arrangements was appointed to procure music and to prepare a badge to be worn on the occasion. This body never paraides in full regalia at a funeral, and on this occasion there will be no distinction of rank, but all white as one body with their banners beautifully decorated with crape and the funeral badge. It is estimated that they will turn out fifteen hundred men. The Directors of the Odd Fellows' Hall will decorate their building on the day in a splendid manner.

The Kentucklans will probably make a better show than any other State organization. They are having a beautiful banner painted and have engaged Messemer's Brass Band. The funeral marches have been composed by Mr. Messemer to be performed by his band on the occasion.

RECEIPTS OF COTTON.—It will be seen by the cotton statement in our commercial columns, that the receipts of that staple from the 1st of September to last evening, have been 510 8.8 bales Of this amount, 100 327 bales have been received since the 1st instant. Last season the receipts from the 1st of September to the 21st November, were 310 627. Showing an excess this year of over 200.000 bales. The receipts of the first twenty-one days in November last year, were 97.278 bales, only a small fraction over one half the amount received for the corresponding period this year.

The receipts of the week ending on Saturday evening, as appears by the books at the Merchants' Exchange Reading Rooms, were 70,949 bales, brought to this port by sixty-nine steamboats.

CHARITY HOSPITAL.—The following is the report for the past week:

Admissions	412
Discharged	257
Deaths	75

There were 32 deaths from Yellow Fever. There now remains 912 cases under treatment in the institution.

The following statement comprises the deaths in some of the Atlantic cities for the week ending November 13, and their proportion to the population:

The Slave Case Decision of Judge Paine.

[Specially prepared for the Courier.]

Mr. Lemmon vs. The New York Colored Emigrant Society.—In the New York Superior Court, Judge Paine's decision and that in the New York Court of Common Pleas, decision was mainly based will be rescinded at the ensuing session of the Legislature, if the Governor's recommendation will accompanied by a recommendation to pay Mr Lemmon for the property robbed from him in that city. Immediately the demand for emancipation will be heard from Mr Lemmon's claim is the most conspicuous one, but with some small exceptions, every slave which was carried into the State of New York by Southern masters, will be able to claim his freedom. The constitutionality of the Missouri compromise line, by the decision of Judge Sampler Scott's celebrated Dred Scott case, will also be settled. The Lemmon case is a very important one, and will be watched with much interest by Southern men. Mr Lemmon owns three blacks—the mother and two children—and left Richmond, Virginia, with the intention of residing in the city of Richmond, and transfer every thing on board of the steamer Memphis. He and his family were on board of the steamer Memphis, and when they arrived at the city of Richmond, and every soul two blacks came ashore, which he stated had been ordered by him, and into which myself, family and slaves got, under his direction, he saying to me that they were to convey me to the steamer Memphis.

The blacks, then, instead of proceeding to the steamer Memphis, drove round to his office in South street. Here I was told that I must pay our fare before being put on board of the Memphis. I then paid the amount, being $40 00, as soon as this money was paid, the hack drivers rushed to take me to the steamer Memphis, but carried me against our entreaties, to the Custom House, No. 3 Cedar street, dragged me down upon the cobble walks, and drowned. It was now dark, and we being utter strangers in the city, were compelled to stay at that place till morning. The next morning, the 5th inst., the steamer Memphis sailed, leaving my wife, family and slaves, and whilst she was departing from the wharf, word was sent to me that my slaves had been taken into court. The result of the proceedings in court has shown me of all my property, amounting, in all, to $5,000. JONATHAN LEMMON.

NEW YORK, Nov. 17, 1852.

In this case, as stated in the Journal presumes it is, it shows that on "one and plea has been raised of his property, some $5000 in value, being all that he had in the world, he an infant, following the course of the Legislature of the State of New York in its liberal treatment of slaves brought into that State by their masters, and finally to the steamer Memphis, but in leaving to go from the steamer to the Memphis was defrauded of his property, and the robbery was effected by means of an infamous fraud. When our citizens go professedly to take Mr. Lemmon and his family to the steamer Memphis, but in reality to stop them down in Carlson street, strangers in a strange city, that they might not be able to depart in the steamer, public. And had the slaves been intercepted with the property of their master, and taken into the strangers in Carlson street, instead of going to the dock where the Memphis was lying? It is clear that somebody told a string of falsehoods in order that a $5000 robbery might be committed under the forms of law. We hope that the authors of the mischief, whoever they may be, will be ferreted out, and punished as they deserve.

The Journal of Commerce of the 18th adds:

The proposition to raise $5000 by voluntary subscription to indemnify Mr Jonathan Lemmon of Virginia, for the loss of his slaves while touching at this port a few days since, on his way to Texas, has been universally approved, so far as our information extends. Pledges exceeding $500 in the aggregate have been sent to us by responsible citizens as a part of the fund, on condition that the whole sum will shall be raised."

INFERIOR AVERAGE DURATION OF LIFE.—Professor Buchanan in one of his recent lectures before the Mechanics' Institute of Cincinnati, makes the following observations upon the average duration of life, the effect of which upon the medical science. He says that in the latter part of the sixteenth century one-half of all that were born, died, and in the years of age, and the average longevity of the whole population was but eight years. In the seventeenth century, one-half of the population died under twelve. But in the first sixty years of the eighteenth century, one-half of the population lived over twenty-seven years. In the latter forty years, one-half exceeded the sixty-two years of age. At the beginning of the present century, one-half exceeded forty years, and from 1838 to 1843 one-half exceeded forty three. The average longevity of these successive periods has been increased from eight ten years in the sixteenth century up to 45,7 by our last reports.

Deductions are derived from the medical statistics of Berlin. Applied to the country such an improvement as is here exhibited from 1500 to 1843 would make a saving of 500 in our bills of mortality of more than half a million of 1500 deaths daily.

KOSSUTH.—The great Hungarian has delivered an invitation to address a public meeting in England, on the condition and prospects of Europe as democracy. He says that the time for oratory has passed, and that action is demanded. He speaks favorably of the condition of public sentiment in England towards the cause of European freedom.

A MAN THIEF.—The Chelsea (Mass.) Telegraph states that a gentleman residing in that vicinity has been of late sadly puzzled at the unaccountable failure of an excellent cow of his, to give her usual quantity of milk. But one morning last week on going to the yard where the cow was kept, he found his dog, a two year old Terrier, busily engaged in extracting from the readily yielding cow the milk that belonged to her master.

OCEAN ACCOMMODATIONS AT SAN FRANCISCO.—A line of omnibuses has commenced running from the Oriental Hotel, corner of Market and Mission streets, San Francisco, to the Kendall Hotel, on Stockton street, for only the single charge of twenty-five cents only. For a single dollar, the omnibuses will take passengers, with their baggage, to and from any of the principal hotels and thus protect the public from the exortionate prices of hack drivers.

CALIFORNIA contains four hundred thousand square miles. This would give eight States as large as New York State, fifty as large as Newjersey and fifty-seven as large as Massachusetts. With a population equal per square mile to that of Newjersey, California would support eighteen millions of inhabitants; if equal to New York, twenty millions, and if equal to Massachusetts, forty millions—or fifteen millions more than the present population of the entire United States.

CHOCTAW CATTLE.—A drove of cattle from the Choctaw country and the plains, some 1500 miles distant, passed through Winchester, Va. Their unusually large horns and size of horns attracted many observers.

FRENCH VESSELS OF WAR.—In the five naval ports of France, there are at the present moment on the stocks, in the process of construction, eighteen ships of the line and twenty-two frigates.

BREAD FRUIT.—A specimen of the bread made from bread fruit, has been exhibited in the Boston Exchange. It is a thin, semi-transparent sheet, of a bright brown color, and in no respect resembles any preparation of bread among us.

NEW MILITARY POST.—A correspondent of the Baltimore Sun, writing from Fort Snelling, says that "An order has been issued for the building of a new post on the Upper Minnesota river, large enough for three companies. It is supposed that the site will be selected at the entrance of Little Rock river into the Minnesota."

ARKANSAS LEGISLATIVE ELECTIONS.—Hon Wm. K. Sebastian has recently been re-elected, by the General Assembly, to the United States Senate, for six years from the 4th March next, which is the present term will expire.

CHIEF JUSTICE OF ARKANSAS.—Geo. C. Watkins, Esq., of Little Rock, has been unanimously elected by the joint vote of both Houses of the General Assembly, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.

GERMAN EMIGRATION.—The German emigration of 1852 numbered only 2200; and 1850 there was but one person when it amounted to 15 000. In 1852 it rose to 21 000; in 1837 to 35 000; and if in 1851 to 250 000, the number then of persons who, during the decade closing with the year went in quest of a better fortune averaged about 100 000 annually. From that time forth there has been a rapid increase in the extent of the emigration. In 1841 it rose to 45 000; in 1842 to 57 000; in 1843 to 70 000; in 1844 to 78 000; in 1845 to 80 000; in 1846 to 82 000; in 1847 the immense number of 250 000 persons emigrated from Germany. In 1848 it is computed at 100 000. In 1849 it is estimated that the emigration reached 200 000 persons. It is calculated that the emigrating capital in the year 1847 was 250 000 000.

THE MAINE LAW.—A memorial is in circulation for signatures in Washington to be presented to Congress, asking such an amendment of the city charter as will empower the corporate authorities "to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors except for mechanical and medicinal purposes, within the limits of the corporation."

Later from Texas.

By the arrival yesterday, of the steamship Texas, Capt. Lamb, we have received Galveston dates to the 19th, and our exchanges from the interior.

LOCAL MATTERS.—The San Antonio Western Texan favors the opposition for leasing a portion of the Slaidsdamm to the General Government for the use of the Indian traffic on the border. It will tend, it is thought, more than any other measure that can be adopted, to cope with Indian depredations, and encourage the settlement of the northwestern territory.

The papers throughout the State are bitterly severe upon the late acting Secretary of State, Mr Conrad, for his action relative to the wounded Rangers.

It is admitted, says the Nueces Valley, that our Indian frontier was better protected and more peaceable while guarded by Bell's regiment of Rangers, during the Mexican war, than at any period since. Mr Conrad however holds the opinion that the Rangers create hostilities, and that the Texan frontier is now amply protected by Uncle Sam's forts, infantry and bold dragoons.

HUNTSVILLE.—The Sl the Gazette of the 13th says:

The Austin Railroad Association was organized on Monday evening last by the election of Wm S Hamilton President; A J Hamilton Vice-President; Jas T Swisher, Treasurer, T Scott Anderson Recording Secretary, then W Paschal Corresponding Secretary.

Executive Committee—Wm Pelham, R F Caruthers, Edward Grumbles, John R Banks Thomas J Duval.

A resolution was adopted in lavor of connecting with the Houston road and co-operating in our labors with that company. This settles the preliminaries, and after Tuesday, we presume the Association will at once take steps to enter vigorously upon the work before them.

PECANS.—Jails are shortly to be built in Hallettsville Lavaca county, and Columbus, Colorado county. These are strange, yet true signs of progress.

SALE OF LANDS.—The sale of San Antonio city lands commenced on the 8th inst. Of the sixty or twenty lots sold, all but six or seven brought considerably over the appraisement. Lands on the Leon, six and eight miles from the city averaged from six to ten dollars per acre. One tract of seventy-four acres brought $1000.

RAILROAD MEETING.—A meeting of the Commissioners of the Texas Western Railroad was held at San Augustine on the 25th ult. It was determined to collect fifty cents on each share of stock subscribed, for contingent expenses, to close the books on the first of April next and the time for paying the first instalment of ten per cent was fixed on the 1st of July next. This railroad is intended to connect with the Nacogdoches and Opelousas road, and to pass through Burkville and San Augustine.

The Austin Railroad Association was organized on the 8th inst, by electing W. S Oldham, President; A. J. Hamilton Vice-President; J. O. Swisher, Treasurer; T. S Anderson, Recording Secretary; George W. Paschal, Corresponding Secretary; and Messrs Pelham Caruthers, Grumbles, Banks and Duval, Executive Committee. A resolution was adopted to operate in connection with the Houston Company.

CURES.—The following extract from Dr Gaillard's work exhibits the Chinese in a somewhat new light in Foreigners, who know nothing about the internal state of the country, are apt to imagine that there reigns lasting peace. Nothing is, however, more erroneous; insurrections of villages, cities and districts, are of frequent occurrence. The refractory spirit of the people, the oppression and embezzlement of the mandarins, and other causes, such as dearth and demagogues, frequently cause an unexpected revolt.

Arrival of the Falcon—Later from California.

The U. S. mail steamship Falcon, Lieut. Henry Rodgers U S Navy, commanding, arrived yesterday from Aspinwall. Navy Bay, bringing dates from San Francisco to the 1st inst., ten days later than was received at NewYork by the Illinois, and fifteen days later than we have received direct at this port.

The Falcon brought 250 passengers who came down by the steamers California and Northerner, and $350,000 on freight and in the hands of passengers.

The Falcon left Aspinwall on the evening of the 10th inst. The steamers Georgia and Northern Light sailed on the evening of the 18th for NewYork via Kingston. The Georgia had about 300 passengers who had a large amount of gold dust, besides which, she had $2 500.000 on freight. The Northern Light had about 100 passengers. There is no news of interest from Aspinwall. The health of the city is good, and there is a good prospect of a fine winter's business.

Among the passengers by the Falcon, is Senator Gwin of California. The famous troupe of Chinese Jugglers also came by the Falcon. The company consists of twenty persons, male and female, and their performances are said to be astonishing in the extreme.

MINING INTELLIGENCE.—Parks' Bar.—Island Bar Company is doing tolerably well: Though not so well as they have done heretofore. Their receipts for the last week's operations amount to something more than $2000.

The company adjoining seem to be cursed in all their attempts to get into the river. Most of what has been done has been undone some two or three times, and thus they are kept out. This company is called Parks' Bar Mining Company.

The Spaul Company, also in order in the river, is entirely broken up, there being no ore to be found. It is believed, however, difficulty, and that determination necessary to a successful issue is the great cause of failure. Other companies following the Spaul are doing well; and the Mokelo Company just about getting in, is expected to astonish the natives. It adjoins the celebrated Dry-wing-dam, which, during three days' operation ending Saturday, have taken out eighty-six pounds of the precious.

Matters are waiting up on Ohio Bar.

The Perry-wing-dam took out last night, October 10th, 175 ounces of dust—they are working night and day.

HEAD DIGGINGS.—Mr. Bradley, of Bush's Bar, informs us that a company of three persons are now engaged in transporting dirt by railroad from the summit of a lofty hill at the junction of the North and South Forks, to the river. Their claim, which is over three hundred feet above the stream, is extensive, and the dirt yields on an average ten cents to the bucket. The company have already dug down to the depth of eight feet, and the earth is said to increase in richness the lower it is found. The deposits consist of seale gold, similar to that of the bars [Sacramento Union.

The Terry-wing-dam Company at Parks' Bar took out of their claim on Wednesday and Thursday of this week, 86 pounds of gold, or at $16 per ounce, the immense sum of $16512. A few days ago it was supposed they would in a little time get into their claim this season on account of high water, and shares were sold at a low price. Quite a change. [Marysville Herald.

QUARTZ MINING.—Lately, very little has been done in this branch of business. The large operators having been unsuccessful, has caused the working man to devote his whole time to the rivers and placers. It is well known, however, that our county abounds in rich quartz veins which will eventually be worked with advantage to the holders, to the vicinity of Independence Flats, we are informed, there are a number of rich veins, which have been taken up by different companies, no doubt encouraged by the success of the New Hudson Company. These it is supposed, will be worked in the course of the next spring or summer, when suitable mills will be erected on the South side of The Mokelumne river. This section of country, it is hoped, will shortly be one of the most populous and important mining sections in this county. [Calaveras Chronicle.

The Chronicle says that the Mokelumne Mining and Canal Company will have their works in operation in the early part of December. The whole neighborhood will then be supplied with water.

A lump of gold weighing nine pounds, six ounces and eighteen pennyweights, was lately found in Mad Ox Canon It is valued at $1 850. Several very large lumps have been found in the same canon.

SHASTA NEWS.—The United States troops sent forth under the command of Major Fitzgerald, have done but little towards fulfilling the objects of the expedition. They are stationed in Scott's valley, where they are awaiting the arrival of provisions and necessary equipments. In the meantime, Major Fitzgerald has proceeded with a small escort to the station of Capt. Wright, about fifteen miles east of Yreka. As soon as he has himself acquainted with the country, he his intention to decide upon a movement, in concert with Capt. Wright, and order his command to a place of action. It is not anticipated that much will be done before winter as the snow will then drive the Indians into the valleys, and necessarily lessen their chances of escape.

One of the strongholds of the Indians, against whom the expedition is likely to have been contending, is a lake destitute of small islands. It has been their habit, when closely pursued, to resort to this lake, and thus cut off pursuit. To remedy this, the citizens of Yreka have built two small boats, which they will shortly forward to the spot.

The sickness, which prevailed to an alarming extent among the immigrants, has entirely ceased. There have been twenty-six deaths in all, from the 1st of September to the present time, and the total number of immigrants who have arrived during that period is 3,000. The number of deaths is small, when it is considered that the immigrants, who have arrived, have come through a country destitute of provisions, and have suffered much from hunger and fatigue.

Other accounts say that the sickness has not entirely ceased. There have been losses about Yreka, which have had a very salutary effect upon the health of the country.

Three quarts millsare in operation in Scott's valley, one of which is producing an abundance of gold.

George Thompson who was shot through by one Cist, in the Arcade Saloon in Shasta a few weeks since, was subsequently arrested on a charge of horse-stealing in El Dorado county. It was intended to have sent him off to the scene of his exploits in the stage yesterday morning, but while his guard was taking a stronge Thompson made his escape. He was leader of a gang of horse-thieves and murderers, and is now probably in this city. One of his accomplices, in his last act of thieving, is a man known as Black Jack.

Ira Tatum and Thomas Bates, charged with the murder of a man named Francis Mitchell, near Shasta, on the 7th of September, have been before the District Court, and found guilty.

The authorities of Sacramento propose to erect a new city hall and prison—the building to be 60 feet front by 100 deep. The prison to be in the basement story, and the Council Chambers, Recorder's, Clerk's, Treasurer and other offices, on the second floor. The estimated cost of the work is $150,000.

A fire had occurred at Beale's Bar by which the splendid saloons of Messrs Bodley & Fisher were destroyed.

The rainy season is supposed to have set in. Heavy rains had fallen at San Francisco and Sacramento, which were supposed to have extended to the mines.

The U S sloop-of-war Portsmouth arrived at San Francisco on the 20th ult. The captain and crew of the Portsmouth first took possession of San Francisco in the name of the United States.

The Placer Herald says that the work upon the telegraph line is progressing finely. The posts are all out and upon the ground to within many miles of Grass Valley. In two weeks more the posts will be ready for erect in a line as far as Nevada City. All that is now necessary is the wire which will soon arrive.

The Sacramento & Co., of Sacramento, have completed the following statistics of emigration across the Plains. It includes those parties who had left the Missouri first prior to June 6:

Men	10.562	Mules	4,686
Women	3 242	Hogs	1
Children	4 200	Cattle	59.892
Wagons	5.329	Sheep	10.523
Horses	6.538	Turkeys	150

These were on the south side, and do not include those that went to Council Bluff.

Catherwood, the artist and traveler, has arrived at San Francisco.

A wire suspension bridge is to be thrown across the Stanislaus river at Table Mountain ferry.

Efforts are being made by some of the temperance people of, an Francisco, to pave the way for the adoption of the Maine Liquor law by the next Legislature.

MY FOREST HOME.... By Mary Harris.

Yes, I love Nature I love my wild forest home,
'Tis dearer to me than wealth's proudest dome
'Tis humble and lowly, from the gay world apart,
Retch! 'tis the shrine of my soul, the home of my heart.

'Tis nestled away, mid green waving trees,
Where nature's wild voice is borne on the breeze;
Far removed from the thraldom of fashion and art—
Is this tranquil retreat, the home of my heart.

I've revisled mid scenes of the gayest delight,
Where beauty and splendor and genius unite;
But never have found in Pleasure's gay mart
A spot half so sweet as this home of my heart

Full often I wander at day's early close,
When nature is hushed in sereenest repose;
My spirit how blest, as the bright stars impart
A hale of light round the home of my heart.

Shelby County, Ala., October, 1852.

THE FIRST CROSS WORD.

"You seem happy, Annette, always. I have never been in a family where the husband and wife seemed more so."

"Well done, Kate," said Mrs. Huntington, laughing, "you have used the word seem only twice in that short sentence. And now you have a begging way about you, as if you were really in earnest to hear something about married life, before taking the fatal step. It is well Henry is not here to see the look of sadness in the eyes of his bride elect. He might fancy her heart was full of misgivings instead of wedding fancy."

"Don't laugh at me, Annette; talk with me as you used to do. I love Henry, you know, and yet I have many misgivings about married life. I see so few who are really happy in this relation—I mean happy as I should wish to be. You seem to come nearer to it than any one else. Don't you ever—"

"Quarrel? no, not often, now. We had our breaking in. I believe it must come to all, sooner or later."

"Do tell me about it, will you Annette?"

"Yes, if you are very desirous of it. You may learn something from it. I was a romatic girl, as you well know, Kate. Some few friends I had, whom I loved dearly; but these friendships did not quite satisfy my heart. Something more it craved. I hardly knew what, until I loved my husband. When we were first married, I used to ask myself—now, do I find in this life all which I expected to find? Am I as happy as I thought I should be? My heart always responded, yes, and more so. With us, the romance of married life, if I may call it so, laid on a long time. For my part, I was conscious of a pleasurable excitement of feeling when we were together. I enjoyed riding and walking alone with him. The brightest hours of the day were those in which we sat down alone together, to talk or read. For a long time I felt a gentle restraint in his presence. I liked to be becomingly dressed, and to feel in tune. When dull, I made an effort to be social and cheerful if he was present. I had a great fear of getting into the way of sitting down stupidly with my husband, or of having nothing to talk about but the children and the butcher's bill. I made a business of remembering every pleasant thing which I read, or heard, or thought, to tell him, and when all these subjects were exhausted, we had each of us a hobby we could ride, so that we were never silent for want of something to say. Thus we lived for a year or two. I was very happy. I think people were often surprised to see us continue to enjoy each other's society with so much zest.

"But there was this about it. As yet I had nothing to try me. We were boarding; I had no care, and his tenderness and interest was a sovereign panacea for the little ills and roughnesses which must fall to us in our best estate. This could not last forever. He became more and more occupied in his business, and I at length had a house and a baby to look after. Then, for the first time our mutual forbearance was put to the test. Hitherto we had been devoted to each other; now the real cares of life pressed upon us so as often really to absorb our energies. I was the first to feel the change. It seemed to me as if something was overshadowing us. Sometimes I would get sentimental, and think he did not love me as he once did. As I look back now, I am convinced that here was my first wrong step. Indulgence in these moods weakened my resolution. It was an injustice to him of which I ought not to have been guilty. It left me, too, with a wounded feeling, as if I had been wronged, which began to affect my spirits.

"I had for some time carried about this little sore spot in my heart. I kept the matter all to myself, for I was in part ashamed and in part too proud to speak of it. Here was another wrong step. There is no security of happiness in married life, but in the most perfect confidence.

"There came a season of damp, chilly weather. One morning I got up very irritable. I had taken cold; my head ached, and my baby had been worrisome during the night. In my kitchen I had a newly ignorant servant girl; and on this particular morning she had done her very worst for breakfast. The beef-steak was burned to a cinder, the eggs were like bullets, the bread was half baked, and the coffee, which was our main stay, was execrable. My husband was very patient with all this, until he came to the coffee, and said in a half vexed tone,

"'I do wish we could ever have any good coffee, Annette, why cannot you make it as mother does?'

"This was a drop too much for me, and I boiled over.

"'You never think anything on our table fit to be eaten,' said I, and I almost started at the sound of my own voice, 'you had better live at home, if you are not satisfied, or else provide me with decent servants. I cannot do everything—take care of my baby all night, and get the breakfast too.

"'I did not know before that I was so very unreasonable,' said he, in a tone of injured feeling.

"He sat a few moments, then rose, left his untasted breakfast, put on his hat and went off. When I heard the door shut behind him all my temper left me. I went into my room, locked myself in, sat down and cried like a child. This was the first cross word I had ever spoken to my husband. It seemed to me as if some sudden calamity had befallen us. I worked myself up to such a pitch of feeling, that I walked about the room wringing my hands.

"'O, it is all over with us,' thought I; 'we shall never be happy together again in this world.' This thought made me unspeakably miserable. I felt as if a black pall had fallen around me, and in the future there was only darkness. In my misery I sought to comfort myself by blaming him. 'He need not have spoken so to me, at any rate,' said I, out loud; 'he might have seen how I felt; it was too much for any one to bear. It really was not a bit kind in him.' It is plain enough he does not care for my comfort as he once did. Then to be always telling me what nice things his mother cooks, when he knows I am trying to do my very best to learn to please him. It is really too bad.'

"'Don't look so dreadfully sober, Kate.' My baby cried just here, and I had to run before I was through with my catalogue of grievances; yet I had gone far enough to get well on the wrong track again. I began to calm myself with the reflection, that if there had been a great wrong done, I was not the only one to blame for it. I was dreadfully sorry that I had spoken cross to him, but I thought he ought to be sorry, too. Before my baby had finished crying, I came to the conclusion that I would exhibit no signs of penitence until I saw some in him.

"So I bathed my face, that no traces of tears might remain, dressed myself with unusual care, and went down to old Bridget to give some very particular directions about the dinner. I did this with a martyr-like spirit. I meant to try my best to make him sorry for his injustice. I resolved to reproach him with a first rate dinner, good as his mother could cook. To whet the edge of my delicate reproach, I made, with my own hands, a most excellent cup of coffee.

"One o'clock came at last, though I thought it never would; the door opened, and I heard his quick step in the hall. Of all things in this world, he was whistling! He came to the table with a bright face, from which every trace of the morning's cloud had disappeared, and as he sat down he looked around with a pleased expression.

"'Why, Annette,' said he, 'what a nice dinner.'

"'I am glad you are pleased,' said I, in a subdued tone.

"'Capital,' said he, 'the best roast we have had this season.'

"He was so much taken up with my delicate reproofs as not to notice that I was out of spirits. I was half pleased and half provoked; but I kept rather still, making little conversation excepting in reply to him.

"After dessert I handed him his cup of coffee. He was astonished. 'Why, Annette,' said he, 'I do believe you went to work to-day to see what you could do.'

"He had hit the truth, though without the least suspicion of the cause. My first impulse was to be honest and out with it by replying, 'Is it as good as your mother makes?' This would have given him the key to the whole story—he would have ferreted it all out, and we should have settled it there; but I felt ashamed to. I sipped my coffee in silence. The golden moments passed, and my good angel took its flight—pride had the day. I even began to be vexed at his enjoying a good dinner so much, and so easily forgetting what had caused me so much suffering. He was very busy on that day, and did not stay with me as long as usual to chat, but went off whistling even more cheerily than when he came.

"I went up into the nursery and sat down to think it over. Baby was asleep; the rain was pattering against the windows, the wind was rising, and to me the world looked dreary enough. I had tired myself all out getting up such a dinner, and now the excitement was over, and I felt the re-action, I began to ask myself what I had got for it. Just nothing at all. My husband either did not or would not see that there was any thing to be reconciled about. I blamed him for his insensibility. 'Once,' thought I, 'he would have noticed any change in my voice or my shadow which came over my spirits; now, I can really be cross to him and he does not mind it at all.'

"I had a doleful afternoon of it. I was restless enough; trying first one employment and then another, but finding nothing which would suit. I went down to tea, farther, if anything, from the right point than I had been at noon. I sat dejected and silent. My husband tried once or twice to engage me in conversation, without success.

"'Annette,' said he at length, in a kind tone, 'do you not feel well to-day?'

"'Not very,' said I, with a sigh.

"'What is the matter?'

"'My head aches; the baby kept me awake almost all night.'

"This was the truth, but only in part, and I felt guilty as I said it. Then he begged me to go and lie down on the sofa in the parlor; and said he would read to me anything which I would like to hear.

"I felt that this was kind in him. It was like old times; the new times, you see, had been but a day, but to me it seemed very long; yet it was not what I wanted. I wished to have the trouble cleared away, not bridged over; and I determined to hold out until it should come to this, and he should see and feel that I could not be made happy after a cross word, without a scene of mutual contrition and forgiveness; so I would not stay and be read to, but told him I must go to bed. I left him in his easy chair, with his study lamp, and book and bright fire, in regular old bachelor style, and went off into the nursery, and then to bed, and cried myself to sleep. You laugh, Kate, as if you thought I was a fool. I think so myself, now."

"How did it all end, Annette?"

"I held out a week, becoming every day more sad and sulky, I may as well call it. When I was left alone, I used to take my baby up and cry over him, as if my husband was dead, and the child was all I had left in the world. Dear me! how unhappy I was, and every day added to it. I would find something in his conduct to pain me every time we met. Either he was too attentive, or not attentive enough; talked too much or too little.

"He bore with my ill humor most patiently, thinking I was ill. One day he came home, and told me he had obtained a week's leave of absence, and had engaged a conveyance, and I must fix up myself and baby, and be ready to start off in an hour. He was going to take me home to my mother's. 'We may as well have a journey as pay doctor's bills, Annette,' said he, 'and as to having you drooping about in this style any longer, I am not going to. We will send off old Bridget, lock up our house, run away from all cars, and have some fun.'

"He looked up so kindly, I could have fallen upon his neck and wept my heart out, to think how ugly I had been; but there was no time then to talk it over. I hurried away to pack, but before I was half through with the packing, I resolved that I would tell him the whole story, from beginning to end. The moment I came to this determination, the load was gone; my heart seemed as light as a feather; the expression of my countenance changed, and the tones of my voice were light and cheerful. I was conscious of it, and his noticed it as soon as I joined him at the appointed hour.

"'Why, Annette,' said he, 'getting ready has cured you. We may as well stay at home now.'

"That will do, Kate. The rest of the story will sound sentimental to a third party."

"No, no, Annette, that would be leaving out the very cream of it. Tell me how you settled it."

"Well, we rode on enjoying the change until towards dark. Baby then fell asleep. It was a very quiet hour—every thing about it was beautiful and peaceful. Tears of real penitence came into my eyes, and before I knew it, they were dropping down upon the baby. My husband turned and saw them."

"'Why, Annette,' said he, with the utmost surprise, 'what is the matter?'

"'O, I am so sorry,' said I.

"'Sorry for what, love,' said he, 'are you not happy? Does anything trouble you?'

"'I am so sorry,' said I, 'that I have been so ugly this week.'

"'What do you mean?' said he, looking more and more puzzled.

"'How can you help knowing?' said I. Then I began at the beginning, and told the whole story. How I rose feeling irritable, and was provoked to speak the first cross word; how he told me my things were not as nice as his mother's, and went off vexed; then how he got over it, and forgot all about it, and would not help me to feel good natured by saying he was sorry. How I had brooded over it all the week—how it had festered away in my heart and poisoned all my enjoyments. What torrents of tears I had shed when alone, as I thought it was all over with us, and we never should love again as we had once loved.

"He heard me through without making a single remark, and then burst into a loud laugh. 'I want to know, Annette,' said he, 'if this is what has oiled you all this week?'

"'Yes,' said I. Upon this he checked our Dobbin and began to turn around.

"'What are you going to do?' said I.

"'Going back,' said he, 'if this is all which is the matter with you.'

"I laughed heartily as he did, for now my sin was confessed, I felt happy; but I pulled the other rein, and drew the whip lash over Dobbin's ears, and away he went like a bird towards my mother's home.

"But we made a resolution then, Kate, that if either had aught against the other, it should be settled before the sun went down; that we might go to sleep, if not 'at peace with all the world,' at least at peace with each other, forgiving and forgiven. This resolution we have faithfully kept, and I have never seen another week of such misery as I have been telling you about, and I trust I never shall. I hope you will find in your new relations, Kate, all the enjoyment we now do. This is the best wish I can offer you—and that your first cross word may also be your last."

The Fur Trade.—The New York Journal of Commerce states that the furriers are beginning to do a pretty brisk fall business, and furs will be generally worn during the coming winter. Some of the best descriptions bring extravagant prices—$150 or $200 not being unfrequently given for a set. A large proportion of the most valuable imported furs go east—the Boston ladies paying high prices rather more readily than New Yorkers. The stock of furs now in New York is supposed to be worth not far from two millions of dollars. The largest traders have stocks on hand ranging from $50,000 to $100,000. While American ladies cannot be united with anything found this side of Hudson's Bay, Greece or Germany, European ladies are equally anxious to get furs from the United States, and the rough skins of the fox, fisher or mink, form the interior lining of the garments of the Russian nobility

The Jesuits have again taken possession of Loyola, their ancient seat in Spain. Fifty to sixty fathers of the order will reside there in charge of the missions in the Kingdom. The order has six houses in Spain, but no College for the instruction of youth.

In England they bring men before the police courts who attempt to get upon a railway train when it is motion, and impose upon them fines and costs. It is just. People ought not to be permitted to make shocking spectacles of themselves by getting under the cars' wheels.

The State of Franklin.

Before the establishment of this government, and before or about the time that the territory which now constitutes the State of Tennessee was ceded to Congress, the inhabitants of the eastern part of that territory established a government for themselves, and called it the State of Franklin. They adopted a very good constitution, divided into the usual branches of legislative, executive, and judicial power. They laid and collected taxes, and performed other usual acts of legislation. They had, for the present, it is true, no maritime possessions, yet they followed the common forms in constituting high officers; and their governor was not only captain-general and commander-in-chief, but admiral also—so that the navy might have a commander when there should be a navy.

The currency in this State of Franklin became very much damaged. Specie was scarce, and equally scarce were the notes of specie-paying banks. It became necessary to pass what we would call the civil-list appropriation bill.

The preamble of that law begins by reciting that the collection of taxes in specie had become very oppressive to the good people of the Commonwealth, for the want of a circulating medium. It recites, further, that it is the duty of the legislature to hear at all times the prayer of their constituents, and apply as speedy a remedy as lies in their power.

Acting under the influence of these sound opinions, the legislature of Franklin passed a law for the support of the civil list, of which, as it is short, I have sent you a copy:

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Franklin, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, That from the first day of January, A. D. 1789, the salaries of the civil officers of this Commonwealth shall be as follows, to wit:

"His excellency the governor, per annum, one thousand deer skins.

"His honor the Chief Justice, five hundred deer skins.

"The Attorney General five hundred deer skins.

"Secretary to his Excellency the Governor, five hundred raccoon skins.

"The treasurer of the State, four hundred and fifty otter skins.

"Each County Clerk, three hundred beaver skins.

"Clerk of the House of Commons, two hundred raccoon skins.

"Members of the Assembly, per diem, three raccoon skins.

"Justice's fee for signing a warrant, one muskrat skin.

"To the Constable for serving a warrant, one mink skin.

"Enacted into a law, this 18th day of October, 1788, under the great seal of the State.

"Witness his Excellency," etc. [Florida (Tallahassee) Sentinel.

French Women.—We extract the following from "Parisian Life and French Principles," a very readable work recently published by the Harpers:

"A 'female rights orator' has asserted that if women had more of the occupations of men they would be more virtuous. By that rule, the women of France ought to far excel in that respect their sisters of America. I will say nothing of their laboring in the field, their driving huge carts through the streets of Paris, and other rude labors, which seen rub out of them all female softness, but confine myself to the more agreeable duties which they have usurped from man. Indeed, a man is but a secondary being in the scale of French civilization. The 'dames a comptoir' are as essential to the success of a Parisian café as the cook himself. More hats are doffed at their shrines than before the gayest belles of the metropolis. My boot maker, for the head of the establishment, is a woman; my hatter, also; my landlord is a dignified specimen of 'fair, fat and forty;' my porter is of the same sex, older in years and worse in looks; my butcher, milkman, and the old-clothes woman, nay-sboy and rag-gatherer beneath my window, ditto. They are waiters at the halls, doorkeepers at the theatres, ticket-sellers, fiddlers, chair letters at the churches. They figure in every revolution, and have a tongue and arms in every fight; in short, they are at the top and bottom of every thing in France. They have so pushed aside the lords of creation that for some time my sympathies were really alive to know what men had left to do, until I finally discovered that they had the resource of becoming chambermaids.

"But there is one discovery the reformist of this sex can make in Paris, to which I beg particularly to call their attention; and that is, how to preserve the freedom of their 'limbs' and their petticoats also. Bloomerism has no chance of success. A French lady, by a sleight of hand in lifting her dress, can cross the dirtiest streets, promenade through mud and mire, and bring home unsullied the whitest stocking and purest skirt. She does it, too, with a natural grace and modesty which is perfectly charming."

Paper on Bed-room Walls.—Many a fever has been caused by the horrible nuisance of corrupt size used in paper hanging in bed-rooms. The nausea which the sleeper is aware of on waking in the morning, in such a case, should be a warning needing no repetition. Down should come the whole paper, at any cost or inconvenience; for it is an evil which allows of no tampering.

The careless decorator will say that time will set all right—that the smell will go off—that airing the room well in the day, and burning some pungent thing or other at night, in the meantime, will do very well. It will not do very well; for health, and even life, may be lost in the interval. It is not worth while to have any one's stomach impaired for life, or one's nerves shattered, for the sake of the cost and trouble of papering a room, or a whole house, if necessary. The smell is not the grievance, but the token of the grievance. The grievance is animal putridity, with which we are shut up. When this smell is perceptible in our chambers, down should come the paper; and the wall behind should be scraped clear of every particle of its last covering.

It is astonishing that so lazy a practice as that of putting a new paper over an old one, should exist to the extent it does. Now and then an incident occurs, which shows the effect of such absurd carelessness. Not long ago a handsome house in London became intolerable to a succession of residents, who could not endure a mysterious bad smell which pervaded it when shut up from the outer air. Consultations were held about drains, and all the particulars that could be thought of, but in vain. At last a clever young man, who examined the house from top to bottom, fixed his suspicions on a certain room, where he inserted a small slip of glass on the wall. It was presently covered, and that repeatedly, with a sort of putrid dew. The paper was torn down, and behind it was found a mass of old papers, an inch thick, stuck together with their layers of size, and exhibiting a spectacle which we will not sicken our readers by describing. [Dickens' Household Words.

Scene in a Court Room.—The Richmond (Va.) Republican, of the 1st inst., relates the following scene in a court-room in that city:

"On Friday last, while John A. Johnston was undergoing a trial on the charge of feloniously killing a negro, a scene took place in the court-room that can never be effaced from the memory of those who witnessed it. Mr. Thos. P. August, one of the counsel for the defence, had just closed a beautiful and touching appeal to the court and the jury, and Mr. Young, for the commonwealth, had arisen to end his duty, when Mrs. Johnston, the wife of the prisoner, leading her infant boy by the hand, walked up to Mr. Y., and with her arms outstretched to heaven, her cheeks suffused in tears, fell upon her knees and begged him for God's sake not to prosecute her husband. The little boy, too, as if understanding that his protector was in danger, sobbed aloud for mercy.

"Such a scene in a court-room we have never before witnessed. The prosecutor himself turned deadly pale, and stood as if transfixed to the spot, his feelings and his sense of duty apparently struggling for the mastery. Scarce a dry eye could be seen in the room, and business was entirely suspended until Mrs. Johnston was removed. But her appeal to justice had not been lost. The pent-up grief of a wife had burst the bars of conventionalism, and, like an electric spark, had found a lodgment in the hearts of the beholders. For the moment we felt that if we had the power, though the prisoner were doubly guilty, the self-sacrificing devotion, the unlying love, the public interocessicu of that wife had sufficiently atoned for the crimes of the husband, and we would bid him go in peace and sin no more.

"When the manifest feeling of sympathy, which exhibited itself on every countenance present, had somewhat subsided, the prosecution proceeded, the case was given to the jury, and a verdict of not guilty returned.

"May the scene we have attempted to describe ever burn fresh upon the memory of Mr. Johnston, turning him aside from vice and crime, whenever it shall present itself, is our earnest, heartfelt prayer."

From the Louisville Journal.

THEY TELL ME HE IS CHANGED.

They tell me he is changed—that time
Has thinned his hair, and marked his brow,
And altered him so much, that I
Should scarcely know him now.
It may be so—yet it were strange
If time had left no trace behind,
Whereby the memory of a friend
Might some remembrance find.

It may be so—they say that grief
Has stolen the bloom of health away,
Yet left a flush in either cheek,
As if to mock decay
They say that hope care has been
At work within his heart so long,
That the free thoughts of youth are lost
Its tangled web among.

They hinted that his early love
Was lingering in his bosom yet—
Strange that in man, faith should be found,
That he should not forget!
It may be so—but much I doubt
If such indeed the truth can be;
'Tis so unlike all that has passed
Within my memory.

They tell me he has toiled for wealth,
And found it in a foreign land;
But fortune's treasures have been bought
Full dearly at his hand.
For health is wrecked amid the hopes
Which float upon life's treacherous wave,
And now, they say, his gold may buy,
Perhaps, a stranger's grave!

They speak of it in careless tones,
And coldly breathe their prophecy:
As it the thought of losing him,
Were nothing, but to me.
They do not know the loneliness
Death has already round me cast,
The gloom upon the future thrown,
The difference of the past.

But ah, they tell me he is changed!
That memory would in vain recall
The looks, the smiles of other days—
That he has lost them all.
It may be so—I cannot tell—
The outward signs I do not see;
An altered heart is all I fear,
For that were all to me.

Purser Smith Abroad.

The aid of Louis Napoleon invoked against the United States, in case of a War with Spain, for Cuba—Attitude of the British Ministry on the question, etc., etc.

[From the London Times of the 28th.]

It has been obvious, since the discomfiture of the Lopez expedition against the Island of Cuba, that the people of the United States were only waiting for an opportunity to gratify the double passion of acquisitiveness and revenge, and that the very first opportunity would be eagerly seized to implicate. If possible, the American Government in their culpable designs. Upon the return of the American prisoners, who had received a free pardon which they had not deserved from the clemency of the Sovereign whose dominions they had wantonly invaded, these adventurers were received with enthusiasm in the cities of the South, as martyrs for the cause of Cuban independence, and their presence and harangues served to stimulate the passions in which their lawless enterprise had originated. A secret society was formed, under the title of the "Lone Star," which was the ensign of Lopez, and this association is reported to have its ramifications in all parts of the Union. We can scarcely credit the statements which have been transmitted to us of the power and extent of the combination; but it is extremely discreditable to the American people that such a body should have been formed at all for the deliberate purpose of plundering a foreign State; and there is no act of aggression which such an example would not justify. Under these circumstances, it was certain that a repetition of the attempt on Cuba would be made, and in the meantime all means were employed to show dissatisfaction in the Island, and to engage the United States, as a nation, in the undertaking. In fact a conspiracy to promote these objects has recently been discovered at the Havana.

The Spanish Government has, of course, been roused by this palpable danger to prepare, as best it can, for the defence of its possessions; and the present Governor of Cuba has thought proper to resort to the strongest repressive means which could be employed. Numerous arrests have taken place, the connections and relations of Lopez and his gang have been closely watched, and the external communications of the Island with foreign ports have been more than once closed by the police and military authorities of Spain. In the discharge of this duty, as the Governor of Cuba no doubt conceived it to be, it is asserted by the American agitators that even the flag of the United States has not been respected. A search was made on board the Cornelia, an American merchant vessel, which led to the seizure of some correspondence implicating persons of the rank in the Island; and, soon afterwards, the passenger steamer Crescent City was warned off altogether, and not allowed to land either goods or passengers, because she had on board as purser a Mr. Smith, who had taken some part in these treasonable schemes. This occurrence has kindled afresh the madness of the American people, or rather, it has been laid hold of by the unscrupulous conspirators who had already staked their lives on this enterprise, and the consequence is an amount of excitement which may drive the present Government into hostile measures, or will at any rate concur with the Presidential election to pledge the new Administration to further acts of violence. At such a moment especially, a candidate professing moderation on this subject will have little chance of obtaining the suffrages of the American people.

The Governor of Cuba may have acted with violence, and it is indiscreet on his part to run the risk of converting this affair into a national quarrel; but as far as we are acquainted with the particulars, there is nothing in principle on which he acted which can be attacked on legal grounds. It is the unquestionable right of every sovereign power to prohibit access to its territory, to aliens, or rather all access to the territories of a foreign State is the result of a permission granted by that State, which may at any time be withheld or withdrawn. It is proper, however, that notice of this prohibition should be duly given by the refusal of passports or some such means.

We cannot wonder that the Spanish Governor of Cuba, who receives public information by every mail from the United States of meetings and associations formed for the express purpose of wresting the Island entrusted to his care from the crown of Spain, should look with great vigilance and suspicion on all persons who arrive from that quarter, and should endeavor to intercept a treasonable correspondence, if he can. Suppose that, at a moment when an insurrection was impending in Ireland, American vessels should arrive in the ports of that country, strongly suspected of a design to open communications with the disaffected, and having on board men who had already been obliged to fly the country; it cannot be doubted that the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland would be justified in sending back such vessels to the place they came from, for his first duty is to preserve the tranquility of the Queen's dominions. But, if such an act were resorted to, it could never be admitted that the offending party is entitled to take advantage of its own wrong, and to resent as a national insult what is no more than a legitimate measure of defence. We find nothing in the existing treaties between Spain and the United States to limit this right. By the 7th article of the treaty of 1795, it was stipulated "the subjects and vessels of the two States should be subject to no embargo or detention on the part of each other, either for any military expedition, or any other private or public motive;" but this clause does not extend to a refusal of access to a suspected vessel.

In the case of the Cornelia, it seems that the ship was boarded by the Cuban authorities in their own waters, just after she had weighed anchor for NewYork. Two persons were taken out of her, the one a Creole named Hinman, who was conveying letters from the Island to NewYork, and the other a runaway engineer. These persons were detained, and the vessel proceeded on her voyage. This step may have been harsh and imprudent, but it cannot be termed an illegal outrage. A foreign man of war flag does not shelter a vessel from search for persons suspected of a violation of the laws, as long as she is in the waters of another country. The vessel is subject to all the regulations of police as long as she remains there. Suppose, for instance, a runaway slave were to take refuge on board a British ship in the port of NewOrleans; it would be no outrage to the British flag if the American authorities searched the ship and detained the fugitive. This question, however, will not be disposed of by the rules of international law. The passions of the people and the political interests of the two States are touched; and even these incidents may bring on a collision, which the present temper of the United States will not suffer to be permanently averted.

Powerful as the American people unquestionably are in the defence of all that belongs to themselves, no nation has in these days the strength or the means to run riot in the world, and gratify its own lusts and caprices at the expense of others. This rash and dangerous course will, if adopted, bring them into collision with other States besides Spain, and they would enter into such a contest degraded in the eyes of the world by the popular violence and injustice which have dictated these aggressions. The conquest of Cuba will not easily be effected by a mere band of freebooters, if indeed, another Lopez expedition were allowed to quit the shores of the United Seates. But we fear that the American Government will be gradually led on to do, as it did in the case of Texas, what every man of honesty condemns. Let them not suppose, however, that such measures are to be taken with impunity because Spain is no longer what she once was. Spain has still the means of destroying the trade of America with the Mediterranean, and of inflicting tremendous losses upon it by means of letters of marque all over the world. Except Cuba and Porto Rico, she has now no western colonies, and no important trade for American vessels. Moreover, upon a question of this magnitude and importance to all the maritime State Spain does not stand alone.

We do not pretend to be acquainted with the views of our own Government upon this subject, though it is evident that the acquisition of the Havana by the naval power of the United States would be a change which no British Minister could view with indifference. But the course which France may pursue is still more obvious. Louis Napoleon has every inducement to defend the interests of Spain, and to strengthen the relation between his own Government and that of Madrid. Nothing would better suit him than an opportunity of display and augmenting the naval power of France, by espousing the cause of Spain against such an antagonist; for such an expedition would flatter the country, and occupy the public mind, with no serious risk to any French interest. However this may be, the firm and collective resolution of the maritime powers of Europe to oppose the aggressive policy of the United States, when it extends even beyond the North American continent to Cuba and to the Sandwich Islands, is the safeguard of peace, which might otherwise be sacrificed to the outcry of an "indignation meeting;" and the rashness of the American democracy could hardly commit a greater act of folly than to provoke such a contest, without being assured of the countenance, or even of the neutrality, of any of the Powers.

A lady, who, by her professional attainments, has won the admiration of the world, recently said to us, "It is flattering to be lionized and applauded, but one smile from my father is better than all." Of such sweet stuff is the heart of woman composed. Better one sunbeam than volumes of admiation, or heaps of gold. [Buffalo Express.

A farmer, when fingellating two of his eldest boys, was asked what he was doing. "Thrashing wild oats," was the reply.

A Settled Question.—I entered a log school-house once, where a "Debatin' Society" was holding forth upon the question, "If a man saw his wife and mother in the water drowning, which should he help out first?" The question was considered with animation upon both sides for a while, when a "buckwardness" began to manifest itself. The president desired debaters, if they had anything to say to continue on. After a pause, a peaked looking man in the back part of the house got up, and said, with considerable confidence and embarrassment: "Mr. President—I think if a man saw his mother and wife in the water drowning, he ought to help his mother out first; because, you see, if his wife did get drowned, he could get another one; but he couldn't get another mother, not easy!"

"I'll settled the question, and the verdict accordingly."

Trial for Rape.—A laborer on the railroad at Staunton, Va., has lately been tried and convicted of the crime of rape, and sentenced to forty years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary. The case will be recollected by many of our readers as one of the most revolting on record. A young man and his betrothed were on their way to be married, when they were attacked, the young lady dragged from the carriage, and violated in the most brutal manner. Notwithstanding the unfortunate occurrence, the parties have since been united, and are now living happily together.

The Hog Trade.—The Cincinnati Commercial of the 13th says: A few cold days have given a new impulse to business. The weather is now highly favorable for driving, as well as for killing and packing pork, and the proceedings in the pork market are sanguinary in the extreme. The hogs that come in are in prime order, and the sales brisk.

Agreeable.—It is stated that the President elect receives about two bushels of letters per day from applicants for office.

A commodious and splendid brick edifice has just been completed—ninety-seven by forty-seven feet, three stories—which for stability, convenience of arrangement, and for number, size and comfort of private and school rooms, is not surpassed by any similar one in the country. The Principal resides in the building, and with his lady and competent female assistance, superintends the Boarding Department. A lady will reside in the Seminary, who faithfully discharges the duties of Matron, Nurse and Governess, so that at all times, pupils will find the comforts, kindness and attentions of home. The Principal, with the aid, of female teachers, who also live in the Seminary, diligently guard and form their morals, manners and habits of the pupils. Being under his charge at all times, they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations, respecting neatness, order, punctuality, economy and regularity, calculated to give a safe and vigorous development to character. The appliances of neatness and cleanliness are not removed by this arrangement, but perpetuated and strengthened.

The ensuing scholastic year will commence on Thursday the 23d of September, 1852. Pupils can enter at any time during the year, chargeable from the time of entrance. No deduction will be made but by special arrangement with the Principal.

Boarders study at night under a teacher. They are required to retire 9 o'clock at night, and rise early in the morning at a given signal, and to take frequent and wholesome exercise.

Private rooms are large, conveniently and comfortably furnished. Pupils are required to keep their wardrobes and private apartments in neatness and order. Parents are requested to send their children in time for them to be ready to enter upon their studies the first day of the session. This is highly important as the pupils will experience, through the whole course, the benefit of beginning with their classes.

TRUST IN GOD.

To thee I turn,
When sorrow droops the wing,
And winter has no spring,
And every spring is dry
That ran in gladness by:
To thee I turn.

To thee I turn,
When friends I love forsake,
And bends the heart to break—
And on each face I see
The smile of treachery:
To thee I turn.

To thee I turn,
In every hour of pain,
When help from man is vain;
And find a sweet relief,
While joy gives place to grief:
To thee I turn.

To thee I turn,
My Saviour—turn to thee,
And love and pleasure see;
When glory fills the skies—
When every pleasure dies—
To thee I turn.

From the French of Napoleon Roussel.

THE CHURCH OF THE POPE

Is neither Catholic, Apostolic nor Roman; and were she Catholic, Apostolic and Roman, she yet would not be the Church of Jesus Christ.

There is here no paradox, but a simple truth; and in order to be convinced of it, you have only to listen to me.

You know that Catholic signifies universal: now to say that the Church of the Pope is Catholic, were to affirm that she fills the universe. But there are at present in the world—

500 millions of Pagans;
5 millions of Jews;
100 millions of Mahometans;
60 millions of the Greek Church;
60 millions of Protestants.

Consequently, unless we hold that 725 millions go for nothing, we cannot say that the Church of the Pope is Catholic—that she fills the universe.

Has she, then, been in former times what she no longer is? No. For in former times Jews and Pagans divided the earth; in former times the Pope did not even exist; and in all probability his Church did not exist before him.

Will this Church, then, become some future day what she is not yet? This may be affirmed: but affirmation is not proof: and until we have seen that future day, let it be acknowledged that at present the Church of the Pope is not Catholic—does not fill the universe.

But perhaps it is meant that this Church, without filling the world with her disciples, has at least disciples in all parts of the world. In this sense the Jewish Church were Catholic, for we find Jews in every land; nay, in this sense Infidelity were the Catholic Church, for infidels are met with in all countries. And so one might go on. But even in this sense the Church of the Pope is not Catholic, for she does not extend to all kingdoms. The greatest of all, the Chinese Empire—which contains, in itself alone, a third of the population of the globe—has no Papistical organization. In Africa, Protestants occupy the south, Idolators the centre, Mahometans the east and west; and it is only in the north, in Algeria, that a few Europeans are found. India is almost exclusively of the religion of Brahmn or Buddha; and the European army which is there, is Protestant. Thus, even in the most limited sense, it is untrue to say that the Pope's Church is universal. No doubt a few stray missionaries, a few scattered converts, may be found in every continent, and in every kingdom; but that no more constitutes the Catholicity of the Papal Church, than the presence of a few Germans in France, a few English in Germany, a few Spaniards in Italy, constitutes the catholicity of any of those nations. And if, in short, the point be insisted upon, and the title of universal given where it is best merited, we must accord it to Idolators, for they are four times as numerous as the Papists; and consequently, the true Catholics, in the Pope's sense of the word, would be found to be the Pagans.

Strange pretension! In the face of more than seven hundred million souls, the Church of the Pope, which numbers about one hundred millions, exclaims—"I am Catholic! I am universal! and you, five hundred million Idolators—you, five million Jews—you, sixty millions who follow the Greek Church—you, sixty million Protestants—taken altogether, you do not count in the population of the globe; you are not in the world, you are not men! We—we are the universe! True, you are ten to one; but your ten stand for zero; one, one alone, has any value. We, though few in number—we are all! You, incumerable though you be—you are nothing!"

Must not the power of habit on the intellect be great indeed, when such pretensions as these can be patiently listened to! But so it is. Men have always satisfied themselves with words, instead of things. The Papists call themselves Catholic—that suffices; they are not so—that does not signify! There is nothing like putting a bold face upon a matter.

But if the religion of the Pope is not universal, is it at least apostolic? We shall see. I think that by the word apostolic is meant, that which is conformable to the conduct and teaching of the apostles. Now, Gregory the VIIth, who insists upon the Emperor shivering, bare-headed and barefoot, for three whole days at the gate of the Papal Palace Alexander the IIId, who obliges the monarch to hold his stirrup, and puts his foot upon that monarch's throat; Calestine the IIId, who, after having placed the crown upon the head of a kneeling king, kicks it off again; are these Popes much like the apostles? like Peter, who humbles himself and weeps bitterly? like Paul, who calls himself "one born out of due time?" like John, who, having to speak of him "whom Jesus loved," avoids even naming his own name?

And John the XIIth, who made of his palace a place of prostitution, and violated women in his very churches; John the XXIVth, deposed by a council as an adulterer and a Sodomite; Innocent the VIIIth, the father of sixteen children, and surnamed the Father of Rome: are these Popes much like Paul, who will not even have impure subjects so much as named? like James, the lawful husband of one wife only? like Peter, who condemns even outward adorning?

And Paul the IInd, who sells ecclesiastical offices to the highest bidders; Julius the IInd, who buys the Pontifical throne in the open to sell it by retail; Leo the Xth, who squeezes Europe to enrich his own court: have these Popes much in common with Paul, laboring with his hands to gain a livelihood, rather than be chargeable to any of the churches? with John, declaring to a beggar that silver and gold he had none? with Peter, rejecting in horror the price offered by Simon Magus for the Holy Spirit?

And Benedict the IXth, who in thirteen months poisoned six Popes; Boniface the VIIth, who occasioned two other Popes to die in prison; Alexander the VIth, the poisoner "par excellence," father and uncle of poisoners, and himself poisoned by the poison he had prepared for another: have these Popes any resemblance to St. John, who characterizes as murder a thought of hatred even? to St. James, who places the surest evidence of faith in works of charity; to St. Paul, who lays down his very life for his Master!

To sum up—all these Popes, astrologers as they were, denying God, selling themselves to Satan—have they any thing in common with the apostles, worshippers of God, and humble disciples of Jesus Christ?

And if I am told that, in taking the title of apostolical, the Popes do not pretend to call to mind the conduct of the apostles, but only their doctrines, I thus reply: What connexion is there between the doctrine of the Popes, instituting the celibacy of the priests, and the apostles (married men themselves,) speaking about the wives of bishops? What connexion between the doctrine of Popes, proclaiming that a few drops of water poured on an infant's head do away with sin, and the doctrine of the apostles, saying, "that the baptism which saves us is not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the answer of a good conscience towards God?" What connexion is there between the doctrine of the Popes, who cause masses and vespers to be sung in Latin, an unknown tongue to the people, and that of the apostles, who declare that they would rather speak five words in the Church with understanding, that they might teach others, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue!" What connexion between the doctrine of the Popes, forbidding meat, and that of the apostles, who say, "Whatever is sold at the shambles, that eat, asking no questions for conscience-sake?" What connexion between the doctrine of Popes (and of the present Pope, also, be it remembered,) forbidding the circulation of the Bible in the vulgar tongue, that is, in the only language understood by the people, and the doctrine of the apostles, who wrote that Bible, addressing it to the people and writing it in the language at that time most universally known? What connexion between the doctrine of Popes, which pronounces anathemas against all who deny that man is saved by his own works, and that of the apostles, who declare that salvation comes "not by works of righteousness which man has done, but by the grace of God?" To conclude: What connexion can there be between the Papal doctrine, which makes of saints, male and female, thousands and thousands of intercessors, and the apostolical doctrine, that affirms that there is only "one Mediator between God and man," namely, Jesus Christ?

But if you have neither the conduct nor the doctrine of the apostles, what have you of theirs? Is it the name? But that is claimed by all other Churches, as well as by you! Is it their writings, their Epistles, their Gospels? But all Protestant communions have these books also; the difference between the Protestants and you being, that they read the Bible and you do not, they distribute it and you do not. Are you apostolical because you inhabit certain towns to which the apostles came, either to live or die there? But in those same towns Pagans have lived and died; are they therefore apostolical like you? or are you Pagans like them? Confess that you are neither apostolical nor Catholic; and it only remains to me to shew you that you are not even Roman.

Where does the weary traveller find the purest water?—in the stream that has long run through a muddy channel, or at the source of that stream? Where does the scholar find the most exact version of the writings he studies?—is it not in the author's own manuscript? Well, then, in the same way, where shall we find the true Roman Church? Will it not be at its source? Where shall we find the most exact statement of its faith? Will it not be in the document which itself founded that Church—that is to say, in St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans? Most certainly. Let us then compare what Popes teach the Romans of the present day, with what St. Paul taught the Romans of old; and, in order that we may not be thought to attribute to St. Paul or to the Popes any doctrines which are not really theirs, let us quote on one side St. Paul's own letter, the decretals of the Council of Trent.

In the fourth session, the Council of Trent places in the Old Testament certain books (the Apocrypha, for instance, which they call deutero canonical,) which were not admitted by the Jews; and yet St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, declares of the Jews, that "to them were committed the oracles of God." Therefore the Council of Trent, received by the Romans of the present day, adds something to those oracles of God which the Romans of old possessed.

In the following session, the Council declares that the Virgin Mary is exempt from sin; while on the other hand, St. Paul in the 3rd chapter to the Romans, declares absolutely, that "all have sinned." Therefore the doctrine of primitive Rome differs again in this point from that of modern Rome.

In the Council of the Pope, we read, "If any one shall say that man is justified by faith only—let him be anathema." Now St. Paul in his letter, concludes "that man is justified by faith, without the works of the law." According to the Pope, then, St. Paul is anathema!

The Council adds, "If any one shall say that the justification which has been granted is not increased by good works, let him be anathema. Now, as St. Paul, declares, it is by grace, then it is no more of works: and "if it be of works, it is no more of grace." Once more, according to the Pope St. Paul is anathema!

Again, hear the Council: "If any shall say that to a penitent sinner, who has received the grace of justification, there remains no longer any penalty to be paid, either in this world or the next, let him be anathema." But St. Paul exclaims, "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus (Rom. viii. 1;), and thus, according to the Pope, St. Paul is still anathema!

In short, when in order worthily to conclude this achievement, we see the 255 Popish bishops joining to repeat the cry of anathema! anathema! while at the close of his Epistle, St. Paul says to the Romans, "Bless bless, and curse not," we are well entitled to conclude that there is nothing in common between this saint and those bishops, and that the church of the Pope is not even Roman.

But it will be said, if the Church of the Pope is neither Catholic, nor Apostolic, nor Roman, what is she then? The answer is an easy one: THE CHURCH OF THE POPE IS POPISH, AND NOTHING MORE.

You think, no doubt, that I am going to triumph over this conclusion, and at the word Popish, to apostrophise the Pope and his acolytes? No, indeed! I have, it is true, grounds for doing this, but I have too much the advantage in argument not to be generous. I will then conclude what is not true; namely, that the church of the Pope is Catholic, Apostolic, and Roman, and I maintain that even were this so, she still would not be the church of Jesus Christ. I might point out to you that in all the discourses of our Saviour, in all the Gospels, in all the Epistles, in all the New and all the Old Testament, there is never any mention made either of the Roman Church, the Apostolic Church, or the Catholic Church, and that from that very circumstance alone, one might well marvel that a church not even named in Jesus Christ's Bible should be the church of Jesus Christ. But let that pass, for we have something better to say. We will then suppose the Papal church to be Catholic, we will suppose it the religion of the greatest number; and we say, it is precisely for that reason that we recognize it not to be the church of Jesus Christ. For Jesus, speaking to his disciples, has said, "Fear not, little flock." If then, the church of Jesus is a little flock, the church of the multitude cannot be the church of Jesus Christ. In another place our Lord hath said, "Many are called, but few are chosen. Enter ye in at the strait gate, for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat; because strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." If then the church of Christ be compared to a narrow way, into which few enter, the church that resembles the broad way, where the multitude travels, cannot be the church of Jesus Christ. Again, the Saviour has said, "When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on earth?" If at the end of the world believers are thus rare, those who at this present time pretend that they are sufficiently numerous to deserve the name of Catholic, cannot constitute that church which believes in Jesus Christ. The Revelation of St. John foretells in the latter days the almost universal reign of Antichrist, and the reduction of Christians to a very small number. If then we are approaching a period when the church of Antichrist will cover the earth, the church which already boasts itself universal cannot be the church of Jesus Christ. The more Catholic she is, the less is she the chosen flock; the more does she resemble that of the multitude who perish, the nearer does she come to the church of Antichrist. In that sense the church of the Pope has every possible claim to catholicity.

Will she then gain anything more by calling herself apostolic! No; for the Apostles nowhere speak of their church, but every where of the church of Jesus Christ. To have spoken to St. Peter or St. Paul of the apostolic church, would have appeared to them blasphemous; and Peter, who so eagerly rushes forward to prevent Cornelius kneeling to him; Paul, who counsels the Corinthians to be called neither after Cephas nor Apollos, would both of them, no doubt, have answered indignantly that there was no other church than that of Jesus Christ. The apostles are but the channel, Christ is the water of life. If you are a channel and a dry one, you are nothing. The apostles are earthen vessels, Christ the treasure they contain. If you are earthen vessels and empty, you are nothing. Give us that living water, and we will repair to the channel; show us the treasure and we will accept the earthen vessel; but without that, you have of the apostles only that which is human, material and insignificant—the body, the form, the name; these do not constitute Christianity.

I know, indeed, that you take the word apostolical in another sense as well, and that you claim to deserve it, by having succeeded to the apostles. You have succeeded to them in time and place, as the men of our day have succeeded to the generations that preceded them. But of what avail is such a succession as this! Did not Robespierre in this sense succeed to Louis XIV.! As for any other accession from them, you have no other pretensions to it than all other churches claim. You descend, you say, in a direct line from the apostles, and therefore you take his name. But this is just what the Anglicans, whom you condemn, say of themselves: this is what the Greeks, who separate from you, pretend to, on their part. It seems to me but the best way of proving yourselves legitimate successors of the apostles would be to preach their doctrines and to practice their virtues. Now on these two points we have already seen that.

I leave you also your title of Roman. Yes, you are Roman, inasmuch as your throne is at Rome, that your subjects are in Italy, that for ages past you have thundered forth from the Vatican, bulls and interdicts against the world: but in order to recognize the church of Jesus Christ, it were at least necessary to find that some words relating to Rome and to its rights were inscribed in the Bible; it were at least necessary that Jesus, or one of his apostles, should have said the Roman Church is the church of Jesus Christ. But no: there is nothing, absolutely nothing of the kind! I know, indeed, that your Popes and your church, being yet unborn when the last page of the Bible was written, Jesus Christ and the apostles could not speak of your actual existence: but since you were to come, why did they not foretel you, at least name you? . . . I am mistaken: the Apocalypse, a prophetic book, does speak of your city upon seven hills: and this is what it says of it: "The seven heads are seven mountains, upon which sits the woman clothed in purple, having in her hand a golden cup full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication. Upon her forehead was a name written, 'Mystery, Babylon the Great, Mother of Harlots, drunken with the blood of saints and martyrs." Rev. xiii. 17. See whether these titles approve the Roman Church the church of Jesus Christ.

But after all, what does it signify to me whether I am a Catholic or not? Believers, heretics, Infidels, Pagans, Jews, Mahometans—have they not all been by turns few and many! And why should I call myself apostolic, when Paul the apostle blames those Christians who took the name of Peter the apostle! And, lastly, what do I want with the title or the insult of the word Roman? Have not all towns alike produced miscreants and saints! No! there is one thing only of any real consequence to me—to be a Christian, to believe in Christ, to live like Christ. I will then read His book, the gospel: I will love His family, my brethren; I will pray to His Father, my God; I will invoke His Spirit, the Holy Spirit: and thus, without concerning myself about places or about men, I will place all my religion in Jesus Christ. And oh, how much more firm my hopes will be, resting them no longer upon men, but God! How much more simple my faith, confining myself thus to one book only! How easy it will then be to escape the passions of men who dispute about such and such teachers, and in order to justify them, adopt their faults, and embrace their errors! I will have only one Teacher, only one Master, Jesus Christ, speaking to me Himself in His holy Gospel. Yes; I will hold fast to my Bible: I will concentrate all my religious studies upon it, without allowing myself to be distracted by the clamorous pretensions of men. Are a hundred councils worth one Gospel? are a thousand Popes worth one Saviour!

Reader, believe me: take a Bible, or at least a New Testament: read it with prayer, humiliation and perseverance: and be sure that you will find there something better than the church of the Pope; you will find the church of Jesus Christ: better than the fear of purgatory—you will find the assurance of salvation: instead of penances, you will find the pardon of your sins: and all this, not on the authority of a priest, but on that of God Himself!

An agent of the Society in one of our States, recently formed an auxiliary, and with the committee began to collect funds. They called on a religious professor who had much money, but did not like to part with it. He told one of the agents to look out for that agent, and not pay him money; he would no doubt run run off with it: they would never hear from him again. The agent received some forty dollars from the society, and promised to forward the amount in books from New York.

In the course of three weeks the books came on, all in good order. The cautious prophet was called in to see them, and the failure of his prediction. As he was beaten here, he next attacked the society for making such extravagant books for the poor. Holding in his hand an embossed duodecimo—"See," says he, "what a costly book this is to give away. Why could they not make a plain, cheap one!" He was asked what he supposed the price to be? He said, "It must have cost a dollar, if not a dollar and a quarter—a waste of money!" He was told that the price was but twenty-five cents the cost price. "Now," says he, "I know there is something wrong in this business; it never was made for that money, and there must be cheating somewhere." So he would not be convinced, and kept his money. THOUGHTS FOR THE TIMES.

Mr. Editor: A good deal has been said and written of late concerning Methodism, both by friends and foes. No doubt the purest motives prompt what has been said by the friends of the Church, although some things have had a contrary effect to that which was intended. Our prescience is quite limited, and therefore men are not always to be blamed for the consequences of what they say or do. In attempting to write any thing suggestive, now-a-days, men lay themselves liable to the charge of innovation, if nothing more. Still, Methodism is progressive, and opposed to "old fogyism," as politicians say: and he who thinks otherwise, has certainly studied the genius of our economy to little profit. Methodism, in the days of Wesley, was far in advance of the spirit of the age. Nor, indeed, so far as purity of doctrine, true Methodisty of spirit, and the true Apostolic character of the organization are concerned, is Methodism behind any other Church at the present time. Nay, more, she still leads the way, and God is yet crowning her with glory and honor. But discerning men can see the day ahead when others will overtake, if not go before us, unless we greatly improve. There is room for improvement. I propose no change in the polity of the Church. No: but a faithful and efficient observance of the rules and regulations of the Church, from the highest functionary to the humblest member.

The greatest evils of which any can complain, grow out of the executive administration of the Church. There is inefficiency in this department. We have not Bishops enough by half. The next General Conference ought certainly to add as many more to the number we have already. The venerable Asbury and McKendree had not so much to do as the Bishop of our times, the travel excepted. There is nearly as much more to claim the presence and attention of a Bishop in the bounds of a single conference, as in the entire Methodist connexion in the days of our fathers. There is far more for a Bishop to do than merely to preside in the Conferences. Any Presiding Elder is eligible, and could do thus much. And is a man required to leave his family, and travel six months at a time, and over half this Union, simply to lay his hands upon the heads of those elected to the different orders of the ministry in the several conferences? But this all our Bishops can well do, under existing circumstances.

In the absence of a Bishop, an efficient Presiding Eldership has proved to be indeed a wise provision. I say efficient. I mean that, and nothing less. And what constitutes efficiency in this department? Not age, alone; nor is it always true that men of the highest order of talent are most useful in this place. A man that loves ease, and, is not ready to work, is not suited for this, or any other department our itinerancy. Men who are tied down to a certain place, and who are so entangled with the affairs of this world that their minds have no rest from worldly care, are in rather poor condition for an itinerant life.

We have the best system in the world for the spread of the Gospel, and building up of the kingdom of God. And after all there might be some modifications that would prove advantageous. But the first thing is to carry out Methodism according to its original design. Rotation in office, or at least in appointment, has been one of the chief secrets of success with the Methodist Church. There is no office to be held in perpetua, but that of Bishop. The fact however, that we have a stereotyped Presiding Eldership, a standing delegation to General Conference, etc., are such palpable violations of the spirit and genius of Methodism, as cannot fail to leave their mark upon the page of the history of the several Conferences.

There is an ambition which is laudable and praiseworthy, in the Churches, as well as elsewhere. A desire to be useful, and if possible to reflect, through grace, honor upon the cause we love, is according to the present principles of Christianity. This ought to be encouraged, especially wherever there are any "signs of promise." But what is there in some of the Conferences to encourage this laudable ambition? Young men are taught by the example before them, that they need not aspire to any thing beyond graduation to Elders, Orders, and then to be a "Circuit Rider," till the present incumbents in higher position shall have died and gone to their reward, or unfortunately may disgrace themselves and the cause of Christ by some act that perchance results in their expulsion from the Church. It would seem reasonable that if a circuit or stationed preacher wears out in two years in any one place, that a presiding Elder must be an extraordinary man to do well for more than four years, upon a district. But we have some who have presided over the same territory, (allowing an occasional and very brief interim) for three or four times the number of years allotted by the Discipline. And any man who will take the trouble to inquire, can soon satisfy himself that this is one chief cause of the inefficiency of Methodism, wherever there is any just ground of complaint on this score.

After the present generation has passed away, there will be but few men qualified to assume the high trusts of the Church, unless they are inducted into place, and guided by our fathers while we have them. I heard of an eccentric man who was present at the election of delegates to General Conference (from a certain Annual where there was an eminent and deservedly popular D. D. who had always been a delegate,) very coolly asking, "What will the —— Conference do when Dr. —— is dead and gone?" "There is no one to fill his place," and no one being prepared to fill it.

Let the preachers be changed whenever their disciplinary term is out, at least, and when men cannot, from age or infirmity, do the work efficiently; the Church ought to provide for them, and let men who can do the work efficiently, undertake it, and let them be held to a rigid account for the performance of their duty, and then the Church will at least rejoice in the removal of one or two causes of inefficiency.

LET US ALONE.

"Let us alone," Mark I, 24. This was a prayer of devils, a prayer well befitting the character and circumstances of those who offered it: the door of mercy had been closed forever against them; a sentence of perpetual banishment from the heavenly city had gone forth, never to be revoked; and though they may be said to believe it was to "believe and tremble," not to "believe and be saved."

But what a sad truth it is that this prayer, "Let us alone," is not confined to devils; it is a prayer which has been echoed, and is re-echoed continually in many a poor sinner's breast; the language of the unrenewed heart is, "O conscience, let me alone; yet a little sleep, a little slumber, a little folding of the hands to sleep; rouse me if you will when death knocks at my door, but let me alone now." Such a prayer may not have been expressed in words, but has it not been conceived in the heart? If so, be entreated, O sinner, to pause, and for a moment think how you would like to be classed with devils. Their present home is a region of despair, where not one ray of the sunshine of hope can ever penetrate; there it is all blackness and darkness forever. But is it so with you? No, you live in a region of hope, the hope set before you in the blessed gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, an open door by which you may enter the kingdom of heaven, if you are only willing; and it is the Holy Spirit's office to make you willing, and one method which he employs is by the word, and through conscience. And when you ask to be let alone, it is just bidding the Holy Spirit depart, and quenching the light which can alone guide us to heaven.

The answer to such a prayer may come at a time when you look not for it; ere you are aware, God may pronounce the fatal sentence, "My spirit shall not always strive" with that sinner; he "is joined to idols: let him alone." "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God." It is a fearful thing to live and die unblessed, unpardoned, unsaved, unsanctified; and O! it is a fearful thing to be let alone, to be allowed to sin on without one feeling of compunction, or sorrow, or repentance; to be, in short, without God and without hope in the world.

A poor traveller in an Alpine country, where perpetual snows cover the face of nature, overcome by drowsiness, would gladly lay himself down to sleep; but would it be safe, would it be kind in such circumstances to let him alone? Certainly not, for his sleep would be a never waking one; it would be a fatal slumber, and however harsh might be the voice that awoke him, or rough the arm that laid hold of him, the sound and the action would both be recognized as most friendly. We are all travellers in the journey of life; there is many a snowy region through which we must pass, and yet cold and dreary as this world's atmosphere is in reality, it has so many attractions that fain would we let alone, that we might take up our rest in it and sleep on in sin, forgetting that "sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."

Be entreated, then, fellow-traveller, to keep awake; listen to the still small voice within, listen to God in his word, for he gives you that to be "a lamp to your feet, and a light to your path;" listen to God in his providence, the voice may be a rousing, startling one. Hear too, the rod, and him who hath appointed it—appointed it, without doubt, in love to your soul; for what is the word, what are providences, what are afflictions, but means to an end, and that end your life, your salvation, and the glory of the Lord your God? May the life-giving Spirit of all grace move every reader's heart to offer this prayer, "Lord, leave me not alone;" and may He so convince each one of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment, as to compel him by his grace and love, to flee from the wrath to come, and to lay hold on eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord. PULPITS.

Who knows what becomes of all the old pulpits? What curious tales might be told of some of them; and if they could speak or write, what curious tales could they tell! But, as a matter of curiosity, we should really like to know whether any of the pilgrim pulpits, for instance, are in existence, and where? Let some of the good brethren rub up their memories, and let us see what is known about these old stand-polats.

To give an idea of what we mean, here are three or four facts about pulpits in Europe. In a closet near the door of the church of St. Nicholas, at Leipsic, is the pulpit in which Martin Luther, the Reformer, preached.

The pulpit of the celebrated Richard Baxter is still preserved in the vestry of the Unitarian church of Kidderminister, and was occupied by the writer a few years ago. It is small, of the octagonal form. In the front of it, near the top, are the words, in yellow letters, "Praise ye Lord;" and on the four front panels are the words, "Daw widow gave this."

John Bunyan's pulpit was removed many years since from Belfast to London, and it is feared is now lost. His vestry chair is yet preserved in the vestry of the present church. His pulpit Bible is in possession of a distinguished family of the Whitebeards, who purchased it for a large sum, and his large awkward pulpit candlesticks are in the pulpit of the Baptist church at Irthlingboro, in Northamptonshire.

The pulpit of the excellent Dr. Isaac Watts was sold a few years ago in London and is yet used in a small place of worship in that city.

The pulpit used by George Whitfield, in his open air efforts on Blackheath, was carefully preserved until a very few years since, when it was borrowed by a careless preacher, and broken.

THE OLD SEXTON.

Nigh to a grave that was newly made,
Leaned a Sexton old on his earth-worn spade.
His work was done, and he paused to wait
The funeral train at the open gate.
A relic of by-gone days was he,
And his locks were gray as the frosty sea;
And these words came from his lips so thin—
I gather them in—I gather them in.
Gather—gather—gather—I gather them in.

I gather them in—for man and boy,
Year after year of grief and joy.
I've builded the houses that lie around,
In every nook of this burial ground.
Mother and daughter, father and son,
Come to my solitude one by one;
But come they strangers, or come they kin,
I gather them in—I gather them in.
I gather them in—I gather them in.
Gather—gather—gather—I gather them in.

Many are with me, yet I'm alone.
I'm King of the Dead, and I make my throne
On a monument slab of marble cold—
My sceptre of rule is the spade I hold;
Come they from cottage or come they from hall,
Mankind are my subjects—all—all—all!
Let them loiter in pleasure or toyfully spin,
I gather them in—I gather them in.
I gather them in—I gather them in.
Gather—gather—gather—I gather them in.

I gather them in, and their final rest
Is here, down here, in the earth's dark breast!
And the Sexton ceased as the funeral train
Wound mutely over that solemn plain;
And I said to myself, when time is told,
A mightier voice than that Sexton's old
Will be heard o'er the last tramp's dreadful din:
I gather them in—I gather them in.
Gather—gather—gather—I gather them in.

FOR PROMOTING HARMONY AMONG CHURCH MEMBERS.

1st. To remember that we are all subject to failings and infirmities of one kind or another.

2nd. To bear with, and not magnify each other's infirmities. Gal. i, v. 1.

3rd. To pray one for another in our social meetings, and particularly in private. James v. 16.

4th. To avoid going from house to house, for the purpose of hearing news, and interfering with other people's business.

5th. Always to turn a deaf ear to any slanderous report, and to lay no charge brought against any person until well founded.

6th. If a member be in fault, to tell him of it in private, before it is mentioned to others.

7th. To watch against shyness of each other, and put the best construction on any action that has the appearance of opposition or resentment.

8th. To observe the just rule of Solomon—that is, to leave off contention before it be meddled with. Prov. 17, 14.

9th. If a member has offended, to consider how glorious, how God-like it is to forgive, and how unlike a Christian it is to revenge. Ephes. iv. 2.

10th. To remember it is always a grand artifice of the devil to promote distance and animosity among members of Churches; and we should, therefore, watch against every thing that furthers his end.

11th. To consider how much more good we can do in the world at large, and in the Church in particular, when we are all united in love, than we could do when acting alone, and indulging a contrary spirit.

12th. Lastly—to consider the express injunctions of Scripture, and the beautiful example of Christ, as to those important things. Ephes. iv. 35; 1st Peter, ii, 21; John xiii, 5.

A SISTER'S LOVE.—There is no purer feeling kindled upon the altar of human affections, than a sister's pure, uncontaminated love for her brother. It is unlike all other affections; so disconnected with selfish sensuality; so feminine in its development; so dignified, and yet, withal, so fond, so devoted. Nothing can alter it, nothing can suppress it. The world may revolve, and its revolutions effect changes in the fortunes, in the character, and in the disposition of her brother: yet, if he wants, whose hand will so readily stretch out as that of his sister? and if his character is maligned, whose voice will so readily swell in his advocacy? Next to a mother's unquenchable love, a sister's is pre-eminent. It rests so exclusively on the tie of consanguinity for its sustenance, it is so wholly divested of passion, and springs from such a deep recess in the human bosom, that when a sister once fondly and deeply regards her brother, that affection is blended with her existence, and the lamp that nourishes it expires only with that existence.

A PET FISH.—The Carrollton (Miss.) Democrat says there is a man at Greenwood, in that county, a fisherman by trade, who has a pet catfish, weighing about forty pounds, and gives the following account of it:

It was first discovered, as we are informed, by the fisherman's wife, who lives in a flatboat on the Yazoo river. The process of taming was as follows: She had been washing one day, and as the clothing was placed on a limb of brush in the edge of the water, the fish was first discovered while in the act of trying to eat or swallow some small article. The lady, on approaching the water's edge to protect her "dry goods" from the encroachments of her strange visitor, observed that his catfish majesty had evidently been engaged in a severe conflict of some kind, it having had a huge gash cut in its head, which extended from "ear to ear." As the fish showed no signs of being alarmed at the near approach of the lady, but continued to pull at the clothing with its mouth, and seeing the wound in its head the generous sympathies of her sex was excited in its behalf. Instead, therefore, of making an effort to scare the fish, and supposing it to be hungry, she stepped into her floating castle, procured a piece of bread, threw it into the water beside the fish, which it eat with the avidity of a half-starved hyena. The humane lady repeated this act of kindness, until the fish's morbid appetite appeared to be gratified, when it moved slowly off into deep water.

The fisherman during this time had been absent. Upon his return, the wife related to him her adventure with the fish, and exacted a promise from him not to molest her "pet," in case it should again return in quest of food. Sure enough, the next day, at about the same hour at which it was fed on the day previous, the fish returned, and they fed it as before. This was repeated from day to day, until now Mr. Cat is as "gentle as a cat." He has become completely domesticated. The fisherman has it so trained that he can call it up at almost any time by simply patting his hand on the water, where he is in the habit of feeding it. It will eat from his hand, will permit him to handle and caress it, and they appear to be as fond of each other's company as if they were "bone of one bone and flesh of one flesh."

EDUCATION—TEACHERS.

An all-important step towards the promotion of the great interest of education, is to increase the number of competent teachers. No price, within the bounds of reason, should be regarded as too dear, to induce the first talents to engage in the business of education. And, further, the public mind ought to be educated to pay a higher regard, and to manifest a more marked consideration towards those who are engaged as educators of youth. We think, (if we may venture an opinion,) that a great advance must be made in this respect, before we can hope to secure and retain such talents and attainments as the great interests involved in education demand. We think that it is too much the case, that teaching is engaged in as a mere incidental occupation, instead of a permanent profession in which men expect to gain honor and reward. Thousands teach as a matter of mere expediency to sustain themselves, while preparing for some other profession; they have no expectation, and, consequently, can make but little effort to distinguish themselves as teachers. Nearly all the teachers in the valley of the Mississippi, save those few who have presidencies and professorships in Universities and Colleges, are looking forward to some other pursuit as the road to wealth and distinction. It is allowed, on all hands, as an abstract truth, that the profession is an important and useful one; but it is felt that it does not give elevated social importance—that it is not the road to opulence—so, although as a mere abstract truth, it is allowed to be a very respectable and useful vocation, it does not pay, in that profitable and elevated sense, which the aspirations of well-educated Americans demand. What, then, can be done to remedy the evil, and secure the best natural and acquired abilities? In no way, that we can conceive of, but by exalting the dignity, and by increasing the emoluments of the profession, so as to make the profession equally honorable and profitable. Unless this is done, the great body of the teachers will never be what they ought to be; they will teach as a mere temporary expedient, until something better can be done. Educated and talented men will pursue no profession that duty does not imperatively bind them to, unless it hold out to them a fair prospect of independence and reasonable distinction.

Of all economy, it is ultimately the most expensive and injudicious to so reduce the compensation of educators of youth, as to drive from the business those who alone are competent to do honor and justice to the profession. We will not let a botch shoe a horse—he might lame him; we will not let him make a coat—he might spoil the cloth. Let us have master-workmen, then, to fashion and give character to the intelligent and immortal mind. Let men of spotless virtue and ripe scholarship, be induced, by suitable rewards and honors, to assume the profession of teacher, than which there is really no more honorable or important earthly office. There is nothing on earth so noble and glorious as the intelligent and immortal mind; and its present and everlasting destiny will, in no small measure, be affected by the character of its teacher. Parents should all but impoverish themselves, to induce the first and best of men to become the teachers of their children. To this end, they should sacrifice show and luxury—they should economise every where else, that they might be liberal here. It would be wisdom—it would be love, to eat the simplest food, and wear the plainest clothes, if in no other way they could secure to their children the best and most thorough instruction. No language can portray the folly—yea, more, the cruelty of those parents who economise and toil to leave their children rich in lands and money, while their minds are left in all the darkness and poverty of benighted ignorance. A good school is, and should be regarded in any community, as a blessing above all price. The school-house is alike the temple of religion and learning; it is "a fountain of living waters that makes glad the solitary place," and the "desert to rejoice and blossom as the rose."

The secular newspapers of Texas deserve great credit for the zeal with which they are advocating the cause of Internal Improvement, general education, temperance, Sunday Schools, and other means of mental and moral improvement.

There is no branch of moral culture more important than Sabbath School education. We rejoice to learn that it is in such a flourishing condition in our State. [Texas Patriot.

The Western Christian Advocate makes the following judicious remarks under the head of "Infidel Christianity."

"Professor Norton is one of those extreme Rationals of the Priestly school, the author of several discourses on 'Liberal Christianity,' 'The Extent and Relations of Theology,' 'On True and False Religion,' 'Views of Calvinism,' 'The Latest Form of Infidelity,' and 'Objections to Christianity,' as resting on historical facts and critical learning.' Mr. Norton's faith in revelation consists in giving it as little as possible to reveal; and after all, taking only as much of it as suits his convenience. He is said to be a very ultra divine: and in one of his tracts he informs us that in 1819, when he was elected Professor of Biblical Literature in Harvard University, Dr. Channing, who was then a Trustee, objected to giving him the title of Professor, 'on account of the injury it might be to the College, to make so conspicuous its connection with one holding such opinions.'

"Dr. Pulfrey's academical lectures on the Jewish Scriptures, just issued, Vol. III, is another of this same school. The Pentateuch he believes to be the work of Moses, and to be the sole authoritative oracle of Judaism. All inspiration in the Old Testament was confined to the Jewish lawgiver; and all subsequent Jewish writers bore the same relation to the Pentateuch, that the Christian fathers bore to the New Testament. He finds no evidence of supernaturalism or inspiration from Moses to Christ. He thinks the Jews in the one case and the Catholics in the other gradually overlook this distinction. The Reformation which asserted the exclusive authority of the apostolic records among Christian writers, he thinks should have done the same for the Mosaic among the Hebrew Scriptures. The prophets are excluded as supernatural teachers, and their predictions of future events are, according to him, 'nothing of the kind.' They misunderstood Moses. Their Messianic rhapsodies were strikingly inapplicable to Jesus of Nazareth, whose divine mission, however, is all the more powerfully sustained by these discrepancies, and by his own accordance of all reference to the fabled Messiah, and of all attempts to resemble so fanciful a being. These are Dr. Palfrey's opinions, clearly stated in his lectures to students in divinity in Harvard University, supported with a show of extensive learning and bold criticism, though with no just philosophical discrimination or sagacity. Few, after all, will believe that inspiration produced Leviticus, but not the Psalms and prophecies. Professor Norton rejects the Pentateuch, but receives the prophets. Dr. Palfrey's notion is, 'Not Isaiah but Moses;' yet he would say, 'Not Paul but Jesus.' It is easy for Protestants to reply to Dr. Palfrey, that as he does not mutilate the New Testament, neither do they the Old—that as he retains the apostles, so they the prophets—that as he finds the Christian fathers outside the one canon, he might have found the Apocrypha outside the other—and that the Reformation was consistent in the adoption of their canon. Thus we have infidel Christians, and infidel Christianity of the American school, derived from heterodox Christianity."

We extract from the Buffalo Christian Advocate the following, on the prices charged for the necessaries of life, forty years ago.

How favored is our age. Money is twice as plenty, and necessaries only half as dear as they were forty years past. This, under the Providence, is the result of the vast improvements in machinery, and the development of the resources of immense and fertile regions. The poor and middle classes never enjoyed so many comforts. Christians have never had it in their power to do so much, with so little personal self-denial and discomfort, for the cause of God. "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required."

Prices, Forty-two Years Ago.—An English cottager communicated to a gentleman, recently, a list of prices of the necessaries of life in 1810, from which it appears that most articles in cottage use have become much cheaper than they were formerly. In 1810, a cottager's Sunday hat cost twenty shillings; it now costs only seven shilling. A new shirt then cost ten and sixpence, which can now be bought for three shillings. Calico, which was then two and ninepence a yard, is now sixpence. Brown holland has fallen from twentypence to fourpence a yard; a bushel of flour, from one shilling to fivepence; bacon, from eighteenpence to eightpence a pound; tea, of an inferior quality, from eight pence to four; brown sugar, from tenpence to fourpence; butter, from one shilling to eightpence; soap, from two and sixpence to sixpence; staroh, from two and sixpence to eightpence.

The Christian Guardian, a Wesleyan paper, published at Toronto, Canada, holds the following language in relation to the recent reception of the Protestant pastore at Niems France, by Louis Napoleon:

"There is one aspect presented by the conduct of Louis Napoleon on the occasion referred to, that affords some reason to hope that the influence he possesses may yet be employed for the furtherance of the cause of truth. He seemed to have efficient penetration to discern the artifices of the Romanist party, and enough of firmness to withstand and thwart the policy by which they were seeking to accomplish their purpose. And it is not impossible that after all his political sins, and the assistance he has rendered to Popery by his interference with Italy, he may, in the marvellous workings of Jehovah, be yet employed as an instrument in opening the way for the spread of that word of truth which is destined sooner or later to destroy the 'Man of Sin.'"

What one Man can do.—Dr. C. G. Y., of Greenwood, La., a physician in constant and successful practice, spontaneously organized five Sunday Schools in the parish of Caddo, Louisiana, obtaining the requisite publications from the Texas agent of the American Sunday School Union. Now mark the result! In the very first year after their organization, there was a revival of religion in connection with nearly all of those schools.

California Missions.

The dedication of the Chapel at San Jose, 7th ult., was signalized by a readiness and largeness of contribution hard to be beat, if even beat in the old States. California is beginning to show signs of paying back all, and more than all expended on her. Let Dr. Boring tell it as it was:

"On Sunday, the 17th instant, according to previous notice, the church recently erected by the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the city of San Jose, was dedicated to Almighty God. The building is thirty-six by fifty feet, built of bricks, well plastered, having a hard finish, and is fitted up in handsome style, with carpets, lights, etc. Altogether this is the best church edifice we have seen in the State, and does honor to its pastor and the citizens of San Jose. But the best is yet to be told. The house, though a fine one, and of course costly, was entirely paid for, before the dedicatory prayer was offered up. The preacher, Rev. A. M. Wynn, under whose untiring efforts the enterprise had been thus far carried on, reported to us at the close of the sermon, that the whole property, (lot, building and fixtures,) had cost $5,350, of which $1,750 had been paid, leaving a debt of $3,600 to be provided for. This was a formidable sum to parade before an audience of 300 persons—but knowing the liberality of Californians, and the indomitable energy of San Jose Californians, we presented the debt, and asked that it should be met, before the house was offered to God. No undue means were used, no excitement created, and yet, in a short time, the whole was consummated by the presentation of the very handsome sum of $3,600. It should be noted too, that owing to some unexpected delays, the church was not completed by so much as a week's work. This is a rare example—a church not only not left in debt, but paid for before it is finished. We feel no hesitation in saying, that this is the best, the very best contribution we have ever known in proportion to the number of persons present.

"Wicked as California is supposed to be by our Atlantic friends and brethren, and little worth the "vast expenditures of money" in the missionary enterprise of the Pacific, we challenge them to present a parallel to the example of these worthy San Jose friends.

"We note with great pleasure, the fact, that this extraordinary contribution was lead off promptly, and encouraged at every step by young men who were not members of the Church, and that the men of the world generally, with remarkable liberality and promptness, undertook and carried out the enterprise. There are some whose names we should like to announce, but for the appearance of invidious distinctions, and the fact that all—both old and young, in the Church and out of it—seemed determined alike, to blot out the debt. One case, we cannot, in justice to our feelings, omit. There was one present, a lady, a lone woman, with whom we had met and tarried a night near three years ago at the Half-Way House, on the Isthmus, between Chagres and Panama, when on our way to this country—we stared her hospitalities, read the word of God and sang and prayed in her tent, in that strange land. She was on her way to the land of gold, as she said, "to make money to give to God and His cause." She has prospered in her labor of love, and being present at the dedication was amongst the first to give $100. We had not seen her since parting at the door of her tent on the Isthmus, and under her blessings, until her name broke upon our ears as the contributor of the above sum. The recollections and emotions awakened at the moment were of an inexpressible sort. God bless Miss ——, and wherever the influence of Pacific Methodism are felt, may this worthy example be spoken of as a memorial."

"Could ye not watch one hour?"

The Dying Prayer Meeting.—It had been feeble several weeks, and the symptoms grew more and more alarming. Now and then there was an indication of vitality that gave fresh hopes to the few who had resolved not to forsake the place while hope could be cherished. There were petitions offered to the great physician of souls, in view of the solemn event in prospect, and those who were apparently oftenest at the mercy seat were the true mourners on the occasion. There were some, it is true, who occasionally inquired if life was still remaining—but a large proportion of the professed followers of the Saviour were "busy here and there." It was surprising to witness the indifference of the church on earth to this mournful scene. We cannot doubt but that the great head of the church, who, when he was in the flesh, was "whole nights" in praying for his people, was a witness of this event—angels, saints, in light, doubtless were interested in it.

Alas! the prince of darkness, with his legions of emissaries, were awaiting the last struggle with fiendish joy, in the hope of a temporary triumph.

On a certain morning when "two or three" had met in the chapel where "prayer was wont to be made," the pastor announced that the crisis had come, life was so nearly extinct that further effort was in vain. Who can trace the consequences of this event? Zion languishing, iniquity abounding, souls perishing, while the surest instrumentality, to which is annexed the promises of a covenant-keeping God, is laid aside.

Christian professor, have you looked with calm indifference on the exit of this prayer meeting? If so, are you ready to meet at the last tribunal the souls of friends, neighbors and citizens, who may enter the eternal world "without hope," and who might have found their names recorded in the "book of life," had you sacrificed a short half hour to implore their salvation at the prayer meeting? [Congregationalist.

In Hungary there is scarcely a cottage among the Protestants without its Bible; well read too. All religious exercises and meetings are very carefully observed by the population. But especially is the tendency seen in the popular poetry and language. The "God of the Hungarians" is appealed to, as the Israelites might have prayed to Jehovah, "their God," the protector of the nation, the father of each individual. The high morality and truthfulness of the race, I must consider as very much the result of this sentiment.—Bruce's Hungary in 1851.

Notes on the Douay Bible.

It is well known in English history, that the Pope excommunicated Henry VIII and Edward VI, of England, in consequence of their defection from Popery; but the heaviest curse was reserved for Elizabeth. She was excommunicated, her subjects absolved from their oath of allegiance, and the throne of England was given to the King of Spain. In order to prepare the way for this, the notes on the Douay Bible were penned. The great Spanish armada was to take possession of England. The notes of the Douay taught rebellion to the English, and thus these notes were intended to prepare the minds of the English for this transfer; and hence to massacre, as aforetime, if necessary, in order to carry out this scheme. When the notes were republished, in 1816, a similar end was in view. But the British press assailed the rebellious and murderous notes with such force that the very prelates which authorized them were compelled, by the force of public opinion, to deny what they had done, and retire from their work. But as the doctrines of Rome will not allow of change, the same doctrines contained in these notes are still their doctrines, though they may deny them, or cease to own them formally. We will here give some specimens of these notes:

"Confess your sins to one another." James v. 16. Upon this the note says: "That is, to the priests of the Church, whom he had ordered to be called for, and brought to the sick."

On Matthew x. 41, the note reads, "He that receiveth a heretic into his house, and a false preacher, doth communicate with his wicked works."

On Galatians i. 8, the Douay note reads, "Hieronymus useth this place, wherein the apostle giveth the curse or anathema to all false teachers, not once, but twice, to prove that the zeal of Catholic men ought to be so great toward all heretics and their doctrines, that they should give them the anathema, though they were never so dear to them; in which case, saith this Holy Doctor, I would not spare mine own parents." Thus the notes teach that Catholics should not spare their own parents, if heretics.

On Hebrews v. 7, the annotaters, speaking of the translaters of the Protestant English Bible says, "But if the good reader knew for what point of doctrine they have thus framed their translation, they would abhor them to the depths of hell."

On Revelation xvii. 6, drunken of blood, the Douay note says, "The Protestants foolishly expound it of Rome, for that there they put heretics to death, and allows of their punishment in other countries; but their blood is not called the blood of saints, no more than the blood of thieves, man-killers, and other malefactors; for the shedding of which, by the order of justice, no commonwealth shall answer."

On 2 Corinthians ix. 6, the note says, "You may see hereby that the spiritual power of bishops is not only in preaching the Gospel, and so by persuasion and exhortation only, as some heretics hold, to remit or retain sins, but that it hath authority to punish, judge, and condemn heretics, and other like rebels." "They," the heretics, "would gladly draw this power from the lawful successors of the apostles to themselves, their ministers, and consistories, which are nothing else but the shops and councils of sedition and all the conspiracies of this time, against the lawful princes of the world."

On John xx. 23, speaking of penance or absolution, the note of the Douay says, "It followeth necessarily, that we be bound to submit ourselves to their judgment for release of our sins. For this wonderful power were given them in vain, if none were bound to seek absolution at their hands. All which God's ordinance, whosoever condemneth or contemneth, as heretics do, or neglecteth, as some careless Catholics may perhaps do, let them be assured they cannot be saved."

On John xxi. 17, feed my sheep, the note says, "Peter is actually made the general pastor and governor of all Christ's sheep; for though the other ten had authority to bind and loose, to remit and retain, to preach, baptize, and such like, as well as he, yet in these things, and all other government, Christ would have him to be their head, and they to depend on him as head of their college, and consequently of the flock of Christ: no apostle nor no prince in earth, if he acknowledged himself to be a sheep of Christ, is exempted from his charge."

Western Ch. Advocate.

Death of the Hon. John W. Crockett.—The Hon. John W. Crockett, formerly connected with this paper, expired after a short but violent illness, at his residence in Memphis, on the 24th ult. The Eagle and Enquirer is in error, in stating that he established the Crescent; but he was, as we have already said, for some time connected with it as one of the editors and proprietors. The Enquirer, in speaking of Col. Crockett, says:

Our lamented fellow-citizen, John Wesley Crockett, who has so suddenly gone from amongst us—was the son of the Hon. David Crockett, the great pioneer of the West and hero-martyr of the Alamo. He was born in Franklin county in the middle part of this State, on the 10th day of July, 1807, and was consequently 45 years, 4 months and 14 days old, at the time of his decease. His father was a native of Virginia and had resided a short time in East Tennessee, in his progress to the then far West. When still quite young, he accompanied his father on his removal to West Tennessee, and settled in Gibson county, where he continued to reside until he became a citizen of Louisiana.

"From shadows to the sunbright land"—

At an early age, and after acquiring such an education as could be obtained in the best schools of the State, he went into the office of Judge Hamilton, of Paris, under whom he read law, and was in due course admitted to the Bar. Endowed with great natural ability, Col. Crockett was passionately devoted to his chosen profession, and pursued his legal studies, and, in fact, his researches into all kindred departments of knowledge, with such zeal and energy as soon placed him in the front rank of his legal brethren in this end of the State. His success as a practitioner, though great, would have been still more signal but for a bronchial affection, with which he was early afflicted and which ultimately compelled him to abandon the law for less congenial pursuits.

In 1827 he was married to, a daughter of his law preceptor, Judge Hamilton. Mrs. Crockett and several children survive him.

In 1837 he was elected to Congress from the Paris District to fill an unexpired term. He was re-elected for two successive terms—serving in all about five years. His career in the National Legislature was marked by the industry, conservatism, and laborious fidelity to the trust confided to him, which have distinguished his whole life. He took a leading part in all the practical, economical business which came before Congress while he was a member.

Contentious Souls.—I never loved those salamanders that are never well but when they are in the fire of contention. I will rather suffer a thousand wrongs than offer one; I will suffer a hundred rather than return one; I will suffer many ere I will complain of one, and endeavor to right it by contending. I have ever found that to strive with my superior is furious; with my equal, doubtful; with my inferior, sordid and base; with any, full of unquietness.—Bishop Hall.

For the N. O. Christian Advocate.

California Missions.

Rev. H. N. McTyeire:

My Dear Brother—It will doubtless be pleasing to your readers to hear again, and to hear through the New Orleans Christian Advocate, from the California Missions.

Since the organization and proceedings of the Pacific Annual Conference, of which you received detailed accounts through the Observer, we have been called to pass through much affliction amongst the missionaries and their families; but with one exception, the afflicted have all recovered. Brother Kelley, of the South Carolina Conference, lost a little boy—his only son, I believe.

The sickness of three of the missionaries, and those, too, who had been assigned to important places, rendered various changes necessary, all of which have been gone through, and we are able at present to report the whole Conference, with very slight exceptions, in a sound and prosperous state. Every thing appertaining to completeness of organization, as a Conference and Church we now have, I believe, as fully as those of the older Conferences in the Atlantic States. One thing only seems wanting, which is the presence and services of a Bishop, with which, in Bishop Soule, we are soon to be favored. We look with intense desire and pleasure to his arrival, and the influences of his presence in our midst. May God give him a prosperous journey.

Since the session of our Conference, there have been increasing displays of the Divine presence, and corresponding evidences of confidence and zeal on the part of the ministry and membership. For some month or two past, awakenings and conversions have been occurring at various points, and at this time pretty much our whole Church seems stirred up, and moving on to conquest. The immense emigration across the plains the present year, is adding greatly to our permanent interests in the country. Our membership is rapidly increasing, both by certificate and on probation, and we have no hesitation in believing our next annual report will more than quadruple that of the past.

Our Sabbath Schools are generally good, and I must say, to the praise of the missionaries, that they are generally active and faithful in this department. You will be surprised when I tell you that we have a number o Sabbath Schools, which have from twenty t fifty pupils each, and some few even more.

Great cheerfulness prevails generally among the preachers, and a manifest determination to "know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified," marks their labors. In this more than unexpected success, we rejoice, and will rejoice.

Really, with all my hopes and determination from the beginning of this enterprise, (and many have put me down as enthusiastic,) the reality has far exceeded the picture which my excited fancy had sketched. To God be all the glory. We can now answer those who ask of us the proofs of our claims to the Apostleship, "these are our epistles, known and read of all men." "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath begotten us again unto a lively hope," (not only) "to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled," &c., but the inheritance of fruits of immortal sort in this distant region, where, when we first came, many supposed eternal sterility to prevail.

But I cannot forego the pleasure nor neglect the duty at this place, of expressing our strong sense of gratitude to the Atlantic Church, that when at the point to perish, we cried for "Men and means," she so nobly and so profusely responded. God bless you brethren and sisters, and "fulfill all the good pleasure of His goodness and the work of faith with power; that the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God, and the Lord Jesus Christ." "Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it."

It has been from the beginning a source of strong confidence and sweet comfort, that amid all our difficulties in connection with these missions, the church has neither forsaken us nor relaxed in her efforts to sustain the work. A season long and dark has been passed through, when even our friends seemed almost afraid to claim identity with us, but never did we feel for a moment that she whose sons we are, and whom we have learned to love and trust, would suffer the "proud waters" to go over our heads. Never. We ask a continuance of the deep and prayerful interest of every Christian, and the constant remembrance of all the churches, that the work so happily begun may abound more and more, until the Islands of the Pacific and teeming nations beyond, shall swell the everlasting chorus of "Salvation to God and the Lamb."

Your brother in Christ,
J. Boring.

P. S.—It will afford me pleasure to reciprocate with you in relation to subscribers, papers, etc., in this and your country. Send out your documents. J. B.

Temperance Item—Aldermen in Difficulty.—The Grand Jury at Rochester, in a presentment made by them on Thursday last, speaks particularly of the "alarming increase of crime" in that city, which they attribute to lawlessness in the sale of ardent spirits. This it is proposed to remedy. In the presentment it is stated that the City Board of Excise granted last spring about one hundred tavern licenses to men who possess none of the qualifications required by the statute, and that at least two hundred unlicensed groceries carry on their business in open defiance of the law and its sworn ministers. The Grand Jury, by way of showing their earnestness in this matter, indicted ten of the Aldermen—members of the Board of Excise—being all who voted for the licences. The City Fathers were arrained last week in the Court of Sessions, and demanded a trial. They were required to give the usual bail. It was an affecting sight, and not without instruction.—N. Y. Evangelist.

The citizens of Houston, Texas, have resolved to raise fifteen thousand dollars for a seminary of learning. The editor of the Western Texan, San Antonio, is urging the example of Houston, to induce similar action on their part.

Houston, Texas, with a white American population not exceeding two thousand souls, contributes about four thousand dollars per annum for the support of the gospel ministry.

Missionary Reports.

We olip the following items from the last bulletin of the Missionary Secretary of the Methodist Church North:

The Annual Meeting of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church was held on the 15th instant, and resulted in the election of the following officers and managers for the ensuing year, viz:

Officers.—Bishop Waugh, President; Bishop Morris, 1st Vice President; Bishop Janes, 2d do.; Bishop Scott, 3d do.; Bishop Simpson, 4th do.; Bishop Baker, 5th do.; Bishop Ames, 6th do.; Rev. J. P. Durbin, Corresponding Secretary;* Rev. Thomas Carlton, Treasurer; Rev. Leroy Swormstedt, Assistant Treasurer; Mr. John B. Edwards, Recording Secretary.

Managers.—Francis Hall, W. B. Skidmore, J. D. Oakley, Ralph Mead, Sen., Dr. J. L. Phelps, Henry Moore, Dr. S. Throckmorton, F. Godine, Dr. A. S. Purdy, P. E. Coon, J. Rayner, O. Loveland, J. McLean, A. W. Brown, E. Wheeler, J. Falconer, D. S. Duncomb, Wm. A. Cox, Wm. Truslow, C. C. Leigh, P. L. Fancher, S. P. Patterson, Dr. W. C. Palmer, J. H. Taft, E. H. Brown, Dr. S. A. Purdy, M. F. Odell, W. W. Cornell, Edmund Driggs, B. W. Benson, T. A. Howe, J. A. Ferguson.

*This officer is, of course, elected by the General Conference.

Good Stewards.—A brother, who takes a lively interest in our German Mission, has sent us several hundred dollars toward the erection of a house of worship for its use. This man, having set himself apart to work for God, and use the power given him to get wealth for the extension of the Redeemer's kingdom, has, in the course of twenty years, been enabled to appropriate to benevolent purposes above thirty thousand dollars; and this too, we should infer, from operating with a capital of but five thousand dollars.

Another like-minded, to whom we were stating the facts as above, remarked that he had been enabled during his business life of fifteen years to appropriate thirty-nine thousand dollars! We have some opportunity to know where this brother's heart is, having again and again been enabled to found or further missions with his means.

And yet Another.—An aged brother sends us two hundred dollars, saying, "If I live a little longer I hope to do some good in this way, if my Heavenly Father will grant me the privilege. What I do in this, or any other, I must do quickly. May my Heavenly Father give me the power and a liberal heart, that I may render unto him those sacrifices and services which he requires."

Having chronicled these cases, we do not forget that there are thousands and tens of thousands whose mites, as one of the three brethren above referred to well remarks, is, after all, the chief dependence of the treasury of the Lord. Their names are written on high, and the day will declare them.

We take the following encouraging facts from an address of Dr. Schon, Missionary Secretary, to the Bishop and members of the Arkansas Conference, and published in the Memphis and Arkansas Christian Advocate:

"We take great pleasure in reporting our mission, both foreign and domestic, to be in a prosperous condition. The Church—the whole Church, with increased zeal is coming up to the work. By the surest tests can we declare, while we acknowledge our gratitude to God, that the Missionary spirit is rising in all the Southern Methodist Church. During the year past, five of the Annual Conferences have contributed more than the entire sixteen then composing the convention, did, during the first year of our separate organization. For the year ending May, 1846, the amount raised for missions was $68,529; for the year ending May, 1847, $73,697; for the year ending May, 1848, $62,613; for the year ending May, 1849, $65,495; for the year ending May, 1850, $85,973; for the year ending May, 1851, $113,801; and for the year just past, the amount is over $125,000. These facts present a most gratifying result.

Carrying the War into Mexico.—An intelligent and highly respectable young lady, connected with an Evangelical Protestant Church, has gone to the city of Mexico with a view of teaching in the higher classes of families, both Spanish and American, resident in that ancient city of the Montezumas. We trust she will be eminently useful there, not only as a teacher but as a missionary. Surely she has a most promising field for evangelical labors.

An overseer in Walker county, Texas, who killed a negro for insubordination, was found guilty by a jury recently, and sentenced by the court to one years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

The Texans are a newspaper-reading people. There are now forty-six newspapers in Texas. The Galveston News and Galveston Journal have each about two thousand subscribers.

Oysters in California.—A gentleman, some time since, planted over 3000 bushels of oysters in the Bay of San Francisco. On a recent examination of them it was found that the oysters had been totally destroyed, having the appearance of being grounded into the mud, broken up and their meat gone. It is supposed to be the work of some numerous marine fish.

Railroad Communication with St. Louis.—A corps of engineers are now making the necessary survey for a railroad from St. Louis to Terre Haute, and such arrangements have been made between that company and the Ohio and Mississippi Company—which is constructing a railroad from St. Louis to Cincinnati—that the two roads are to be run on one and the same track, from Illinoistown to Salem, a distance of about seventy miles.

Distress in Ireland.—A correspondent of the London Times draws a heart-rending picture of the distress to which vast numbers of the poor of Ireland are brought by their landlords. Speaking of the county of Mayo, he says: "The whole population of a district many miles in extent are simply turned out into the roads to go where they please, and live or die as they can."

Honors to Daniel Webster.—Wednesday last was set apart in Mobile to celebrate the funeral obsequies of Daniel Webster. A eulogy was to be delivered and all the papers were to suspend publication.

A New Discovery.—The new monster telescope of Rev. Mr. Craig, in England, has revealed the fact that what was supposed to be the Saturn's rings are not rings at all but in reality arches of the most perfect geometrical formation.

Rejected.—The Senate of North Carolina has rejected by a decided vote, a bill to give the election of clerks and masters in equity to the people. It had previously passed the House of Commons.

Judge Leavitt's Decision

Suit in Ohio.—The following is a statement of the views presented by Judge Leavitt, on which we give in his own words:

"1. That the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, or representative body, with its constitutional powers, and possessed directly or indirectly, to divide

"2. That in the adoption of the separation,' in 1844, there was exercise of such a power.

"3. That as the General Conference is prohibited from any application of the Book Concern, except for the purpose, and in a specified manner, the Annual Conference has no power to remove this prohibition, by changing the sixth restrictive rule. Conference has no power to provide the Concern or its proceeds provided for by said rule.

"4. That said Book Concern is devoted expressly to the use of traveling, supernumerary and superannuated preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, their wives, widows and children in it as an organized church, or any individual, or any number of individuals withdrawing from, or ceasing to be connected with the church, as an organized body, are not beneficiaries of the charity.

"5. That it is the undoubted right of any individual preacher or member, or any number of preachers or members, or any sectional portions or districts, to withdraw from it, at pleasure, and in withdrawing, they take with them the rights of property pertaining to them as members in the church; and, that the Methodist Episcopal Church, in the southern and south-western States, in 1845, being voluntary associations, and not having any positive necessity, as within the case here stated.

"6. That the defendants, the Book Concern, and agents of the Book Concern, being corporators under a law which required, by such law, 'to conduct the business of the Book Concern in accordance with the rules and regulations of the Methodist Episcopal Church,' in withholding from the Methodist Episcopal Church South, any part of the property of said Book Concern, have not been guilty of breach of trust, or any improper application of the property or breach of trust in keeping.

"7. That this is not a case of equity, justifying a Court of Equity in framing a new scheme for its management and administration; and that the Methodist Episcopal Church, and those they represent, have no personal claim to, or interest in the property and funds in controversy, as would warrant a decree in their favor, on the principles of equitable right."

The Empire in Fr

The latest Intelligence from France is the information of the vote of the French people on the installation of Louis Napoleon as Emperor of France. This was expected. It has been foreshadowed for some time, and even the political progress of France indicated, no doubt, the result which is now announced.

A singular phenomenon is presented to view. Upon the basis of Democratic system is established in one of the most civilized nations of the world; one of the highest degrees of culture, refinement, intellectual and moral development. By the will of the people, by an overwhelming majority, by official vote of the nation, the Napoleon ascends the imperial throne, and wields the sceptre of absolute rule. Monarchy, with its doctrine of sovereignty more complete even than the divine right of living man. And it is a fact that the nation yields it freely, spontaneously, and not only yields it freely, spontaneously, but with enthusiasm and foolish to question the accuracy of the returns, as was done by some of the journals on the occasion of the late Presidency—returns in which the votes are numbered by millions. The nation, in short, like that of the first Cæsar, in the days of Augustus, and possesses a transmitted passion for the influences of Bourbon or Orleans, which has now become even more intense.

The gorgeous spectacle of imperial splendor is now to re-appear in France, with all the associated recollections of the past. The Tuileries, the old Continental capital in Europe, the fields of Marengo and Austerlitz, the greatest achievements in arms of modern times has seen since the days of Alexander, and the enthusiasm of this grand recollections to be kept within bounds. Napoleon, indeed, in his recent tour in the southern provinces of France, declared that the Empire did not mean war, but peace, as he said, and he reiterated the declaration. Nevertheless, the surrounding nations of the Empire, under the circumstances, are warlike. The invasion of England is a dream, and the subject of nightly ridicule, but the eyes of all are turned to the great Emperor, remembering the fate of his uncle. How is the nephew to maintain the prestige of the founder of his family, and by blending his reign with the military glory of France, and with victories, give it additional estimation? So, we may ask, the world at present in some doubt as to the future of France.

The Library of Congress.—The Boston Post says: From an early hour in the morning, and throughout the day, a large number of workmen were employed in the library room, the object being to have the "annual collection" consummated at the earliest possible moment. Amid the hawking of the saw and the fall of the hammer, the plastic breathing of the bellows and the clinking of the metal; the alcoves, shelving and galleries, pillars, alcoves, shelving and galleries, from the manufactory of Jackson & Broadway, New York; the erection of which was superintended by Mr. John Skirving. The new iron work, in general, for the greater part, from one and the same general design such as will insure the highest style of beauty to the entire edifice. The precaution has been taken to prevent the possibility of damage by fire in that part of the building. In fact, we think, will undoubtedly be the case, that within two months must elapse, probably, before the library will be ready for the reception of the books. Mr. Walter, the architect, has displayed much skill in furnishing the plan, in accordance with which the work is now progressing.

Naval.—The Japan Expedition.—The Susquehanna has returned from Washington. She left Norfolk on Saturday, via Madeira, for Japan. A meeting of officers occurred among the officers of the squadron, on the subject of the Princeton having been ordered home. Commodore Powhatan, expected here every day to take the broad pennant of the Princeton in the Japan waters. Commodore Olmney, of the Mississippi, is ordered home in the Princeton. Captain Lee, of the Princeton, is to be left in command of the squadron. The balance of the officers and crew of the Princeton are to be transferred to the Mississippi and the Susquehanna, which is to be ordered to the Pacific. The Powhatan, is to be ordered to the Mediterranean. The Plymouth is now employed at New York.

The whole of these transfers have been made necessary by the defective boilers of the Princeton, which will not be found to be impossible to generate the requisite amount of steam necessary to propel the vessel. The Princeton is now in the docks and undergoing thorough repairs. The officers and crew, in the plans and management of the Princeton, have been members. We understand that there is no feeling of dissatisfaction being filled with similar feelings and that there will be no recurrence of a similar failure there on the part of the officers booked to fail in time.

The alleged war Marion has been sold at auction in New York, and is expected to sail from her present anchorage, off Africa in about a week or less days. The Liberian Constitution is waiting for the signature of Governor Roberts, and will be promulgated on the 24th Nov.

MARRIED—By the Rev. F. G. Ferguson, on Sunday morning, the 21st of November, Rev. L. M. WILSON, of the Alabama Conference, to Miss MARY H., daughter of Edward Dudley, Esq., of Lowndes county, Ala.

Obituary.

Died, on the 9th inst., at the residence of her father, John S. Childers, of Pleasant Hill, DeSoto parish, La., after a lingering illness, Mrs. SARAH E. HUDSON, in the twenty-eighth year of her age. She embraced religion at the age of ten, attached herself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, and lived a consistent member to the day of her death. Though so early renouncing the vain pleasures of the world, she never manifested any regret at the step she had taken, but ever afterwards maintained her Christian integrity. Not unfrequently does the Christian seem to endure a double share of affliction—it was so with our sister. Though short her earthly career, yet she lived to witness the death of all her children but one, and an affectionate husband. She was often comforted when she remembered the language of the Apostle, "This light affliction is but for a moment." She felt that her afflictions were "in mercy sent," and never murmured, but manifested throughout her entire illness a perfect resignation to the will of her God. She met death without the least fear, and calmly resigned her spirit to the God who gave it:

"Dearest sister, thou hast left us,
Here thy loss we deeply feel:
But 'tis God that hath bereft us:
He can all our sorrows heal."

Southern Christian Advocate will please copy.

Departed this life, near Pine Knot, in Macon county, Ala., after a very painful and protracted illness, sister HESSALINA TURNER, wife of the Rev. W. C. Turner, and daughter of the late Josiah and Silvia Brunson, of Lincoln county, Ga., where she was born on the 9th of October, 1827. She removed with her brother to Auburn in 1844.

About one month previous to her marriage, though raised by Baptist parents, she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and received holy baptism at the hands of the Rev. Wm. H. Neal, as a penitent at the altar. She remained in the churches a seeker for about five years, when God, for Christ's sake, pardoned her sins at a revival held at Pine Knot, by the Rev. Joshua Starr, under the altar direction of brother Isaac Hill, whom she ever regarded as her spiritual father. When she embraced religion she was perfectly calm, made no noise whatever, experiencing, as she said, that her load of sin and guilt was suddenly removed. From the fact that she had always regarded shouting and praising God aloud as a necessary result of the change, she was near the point of letting the devil cheat her out of her conversion, because she was not made to rejoice. But blessed be the name of God, from the instruction of Brother Hill, she was taught "That there were diversities of gifts, but the same spirit; differences of administrations, but the same Lord: and diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all." Thus she soon became strong in the faith, and so she lived, and so she died. Her's was one of the most triumphant deaths we ever witnessed in these low grounds of sorrow. It is said of the swan that she never sings but once in her life, and that's when she dies, and sings, too, we are told, sweetly and melodiously, but mournfully. Thus it was with our dear sister, though not gifted by nature in the art singing, yet when the flickering lamp of life burned low in its sockets, suddenly a heavenly radiance beamed forth from her countenance, and she broke forth in a full, clear, but plaintive voice, to sing that beautiful hymn of our dear Brother Summers: "When I am gone weep not for me," and when that was ended she sang, "Must Simon bear the cross alone." No, sainted spirit, no; the blessed Saviour in your last extremity no doubt loves you. Farewell, dear sister. You exhorted your husband, children, friends, relatives and servants to meet you in heaven. May God give them grace so to live, that they, too, may leave the world in the full triumphs of faith, and go safe home to the glory land. God bless the poor motherless children, and may they be raised in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord." Bless the bereaved husband, friends, relatives and servants all, and may we all, like our dear sister Hessalina, when life's labors are over, find a resting place in the paradise of God.

Nov. 20, 1852. W. P. MILLER.

Died, at the residence of her father-in-law, Major Henry Turney, AMANDA F. HARPER, consort of A. G. Turney, and second daughter of W., W. and M. T. Harper, in the twenty-second year of her age, on the 18th of November.

Our suffering Amanda is at rest. She "sleeps in Jesus." Calmly and peacefully as an infant nestles in its mother's breast, she fell asleep upon the bosom of her God, with the full hope of a joyous waking in that bright world where sorrows come not. For nearly five years the victim of disease and sufferings of no ordinary character, she bowed herself with unmurmuring submission to this afflicting rod. Of a temperament peculiarly buoyant and elastic, she was ever genial and happy, even in affliction and trouble. She had early sought for and obtained that holy influence which comes from God alone, and sanctifies the moral nature. Unobtrusive and modest, her piety, earnest, and heart-felt, spoke not in words, but in her life. If her life failed to convince all of the potency of the religion she lived, none, not even the most incredulous, could remain unimpressed by her death. Her last of earth was a sermon more eloquent to persuade, an argument more convincing, than ever impassioned oratory uttered. The shrinking and timorous woman, when called to "walk through the dark valley of the shadow of death," fearlessly and triumphantly met the approach of the "King of Terrors;" leaning upon the arm of her Redeemer, she "feared no evil, his rod and his staff they comforted her." With heroic submission, with unmurmuring acquiescence, the fond doating mother relinquished her idolized fatherless," soothed every anxious fear, and hushed the clamors of a mother's yearning love. When death's icy hand was on her heart, and life's pulsation was ebbing out, with rigid lips and faltering tongue she gasped forth the whispered exultation, "I'll soon be home." As the scenes of earth faded from her fast glazing eye, the spirit orb grew brighter; faith lent its wondrous vision, and the ecstatic glories of her Heaven-home bursts upon her vanished senses, just as death was closing the windows for the long "sleep that knows no waking." THE ARCTIC EXPEDITION.—A letter of the 11th ult. from Stromness, says: "The Isabel, Capt Inglefield, R N., has put in here from the Arctic regions. Capt Inglefield reports that he proceeded up Jones' Sound as far as lat 83 N., and saw open water to the northward, and the land tending to the N. W. He also entered Smith Sound, and reached at 78 28 21 N., and found the Great Polar Basin extending through seven points of the compass with a vast sea cumbered with loose ice, but was blown out of the Sound with a gale from the northward, that lasted thirty-six hours. Whale Sound was also examined, and found tolerably open. In short, Capt. Inglefield has reached within 11½ degrees of the North Pole, 190 miles farther North than any other navigator in Baffin's Bay. No trace whatever was found of the missing expedition. Captain Inglefield communicated with Sir E Belcher's expedition."

Re-Establishment of the French Empire.

THE SENATUS CONSULTUM—SPEECH ON NAPOLEON THE THIRD—JOINGS IN THE SENATE—SPEECH AND RESIGNATION OF JEROME BONAPARTE.—Our files by the steamship Hermann bring us full details of the proceedings attendant on the re-establishment of the Empire in France. The Senatus-consultum adopted by the Senate consists of eight articles:

Art. 1. The Imperial dignity is re-established. Louis Napoleon Bonaparte is Emperor, under the title of Napoleon III.

Art 2 The Imperial dignity is hereditary in the direct and legitimate descendants of Louis Napoleon Bonaparte from male to male, by order of primogeniture, to the perpetual exclusion of females and their descendants.

Art. 3 Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, if he has no male child may adopt the legitimate children and descendants, in the male line of the brothers of the Emperor Napoleon I. The forms of adoption are regulated by a Senatus-consultum. Until this adoption, his adopted children cannot be called on to succeed him until after his legitimate descendants. The adoption is interdicted to the successors of Louis Napoleon and to their descendants.

Art. 4 Louis Napoleon regulates, by an organic decree, addressed to the Senate and deposited in its archives, the order of succession to the throne in the Bonaparte family, in case he should leave no direct, legitimate, or adoptive heir.

Art 5 In default of a legitimate or adoptive heir of Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, and of the successors in a collateral line, who shall derive their right in the above mentioned organic decrees, a Senatus-consultum proposed to the Senate by the Ministers formed into a Council of Government, united to the Presidents of the Senate, of the Legislative body, and of the Council of State and submitted to the acceptance of the people. Names the Emperor, and regulates in his family the hereditary order from male to male, to the perpetual exclusion of females and their descendants. Until the moment when the election of the new Emperor is consummated the affairs of State are governed by the ministers in office who shall form themselves into a Council of Government, and deliberate by a majority of votes.

Art. 6. The members of the family of Louis Napoleon Bonaparte called eventually to the succession, and their descendants, of both sexes, form part of the imperial family. A Senatus-consultum regulates their position. They cannot marry without the authorization of the Emperor. Their marriage without such authorization entails privation of all hereditary right, as well for him who contracts it as for his descendants.

Art 7. The constitution of the 15th of January, 1852, is maintained in all provisions which are not contrary to the present Senatus-consultum; there cannot be any modification made in it, except in the forms and by the means therein prescribed.

Art 8. The following proposition shall be presented to the acceptance of the French people in the form determined by the decrees of the 24 and 14th of December, 1851: "The people wish for the re-establishment of the imperial dignity, in the person of Louis Napoleon Bonaparte, with hereditary right in his direct descendants; either legitimate or adoptive, and give him the right to regulate the order of succession to the throne in the Bonaparte family, as provided for by the Senatus-consultum of the — of November, 1852."

M. Mesnard, first Vice President of the Senate, on presenting the above Senatus-consultum to the Prince President, addressed him as follows:

MONSEIGNEUR—When a great country like France makes its voice heard, the first duty of the political body to which she addresses herself is to listen and reply. Such were the ideas of your Highness in calling for the meditations of the Senate on this sacred movement of public opinion, which has manifested itself with so much ensemble and energy. The Senate has understood that this striking manifestation is justified at the same time by the immense services which you have rendered, by the name which you bear, and by the guaranties which are given to the future by the greatness of your character and the wisdom and firmness of your mind. It has understood that after so many revolutions, France feels the want of putting her destines under the shelter of a powerful and national government, which, only holding to the past by the memories of its glory and the legitimacy of her origin, now augurs finds in popular sanction the elements of its force and of its duration. The Senate glories, Monseigneur, in being the faithful interpreters of the wishes and sentiments of the country, in placing in your hands the Senatus-consultum which calls you to the Empire.

The Prince made the following reply:

Messieurs les Senateurs—I thank the Senate for the readiness with which it has responded to the wishes of the country, in deliberating on the re-establishment of the Empire, and in drawing up the Senatus-consultum which is to be submitted to the acceptance of the people. Whenforty-eight years since, in this same palace, in this same room, and under analogous circumstances, the Senate came to offer the crown to the chief of my family, the Emperor replied in these memorable words: "My spirit will no longer be with my posterity from the day when I shall cease to merit the love and the confidence of the great nation." What now most affects my heart is the thought that the spirit of the Emperor is with me, that his ideas guide me, that his shade protects me, since by a solemn proceeding you come, in the name of the French people, to prove to me that I have merited the confidence of the country. It is not necessary for me to tell you that my constant pre-occupation will be to labor with you to promote the grandeur and prosperity of France.

Not the least remarkable feature of the Senatus-consultum is the power it gives to the President over every member of his family, and the absence of all mention of Prince Jerome Bonaparte by name, or of his son.

Prince Jerome resigned his functions of President of the Senate, on the plea that, in the new organization of the government, the Presidency of the Senate belongs to the Emperor himself. This is the ostensible, but not true reason of the resignation. The ex-King of Westphalia will, it is said, be appointed to the office of Grand Constable, or some equally high, decorative, but not laborious post; and it is to be presumed that his son will obtain some other post which may not give him much political importance. I believe my informant perfectly correct, when he stated that the mention by name, in the Senatus-consultum ou Plebiscite, would be attended with the loss of many votes to Louis Napoleon.

An extraordinary supplement of the Moniteur contains the following account of the proceedings of the Senate:

SITTING OF NOVEMBER 4.—The Senate, in conformity with the decree of his Highness the Prince President of the Republic, dated October 19, met this day at noon, in the usual place of meeting, Prince Jerome Napoleon Bonaparte acting as President. The Prince President of the Senate expressed himself as follows:

Messieurs les Senateurs—The President of the Republic has convoked us to deliberate on this important movement of such extraordinary enthusiasm, which hands the population to the re-establishment of the Empire. The Empire, for the French people, is the emblem of an immortal glory: it is the assurance of preserving intact the fundamental conquests of the revolution of 1789; it is order and honor and dignity abroad; it is a guarantee given to all interests; it is the protection and the development of the great discoveries of our time, applied to public works and manufactures; it is, in fine, a buckler against the return of the ancient régimes, and against the attempts of the men of disorder. The wish of the elective bodies, every where joined to the popular acclamations, calls for the Napoleonian dynasty. I became the expression of that dynasty in France the pledge of notable and unexpected future; and he knows, by putting an end to our civil dissensions, it will open to all an era of reconciliation. After the great act which you are about to propose, France means that there should not be for the future any incomplete devotedness, nor any provisional adhesions. Every loyal man who accepts a part in the Government is pledged to honor to support it, and must break forever with its enemies. What the French people elected in 1804 it elects again in 1852 thus showing how constant it is in its gratitude, and how just in its judgments.

How is it possible not to recognize in all this the finger of Divine Providence, who in the very worst times never ceased to watch over France. In this phenomenon of almost identical events again taking place at fifty years distance? The popular instinct which acclaimed Napoleon again displays itself at present in acclaiming, by the name of Napoleon III, the Prince who has for four years governed France with so much prudence and cleverness. Belongs to you, Messieurs les Senateurs, to give to the national will a regular consecration; and to draw up the Senatus-Consultum which will establish the basis of the Empire. It is a great and noble task, and you will perform it with that high independence which commands only the honor and glory of our country. For myself, Messieurs les Senateurs, yielding to scruples of a purely personal character, anxious to remove even the appearance of a participation which would not have exclusively in view the great interests of the State, I will leave to another the honor of directing the discussion.

Numerous marks of approbation followed M. Achille Fould, the Minister of State, who then introduced, preceded by the messengers of state, and conducted by their chief usher. The Minister took his place on the bench appropriated to the speakers of the Government and in the name of His Highness, the Prince President of the Republic, presented the message, which, having been read, the Minister of State withdrew, and immediately a proposition to modify the Constitution, signed by ten Senators, was handed to the President of the Senate, and subsequently the Government named MM. Baroch Vicefather, who "feared no evil, his rod and his staff they comforted her." With heroic submission, with unmurmuring acquiescence, the fond doating mother relinquished her idolized the Section of Legislation; and Delangle Councillor of State, to represent the Government in the discussion which the Senatus Consultum will lead to.

The Senate then withdrew to their bureaux to proceed to the election of the members of the commission, when the following were named: First Bureau, President Troplong and Cardinal Dupont; Second Bureau, Count d'Argout and Count de la Ribbiere; Third Bureau the Duke de Cadaberra and General Rennard de St Jean d'Angely; Fourth Bureau, General d'Hautpoul, and M Leverier; and Fifth Bureau, Cardinal Donnet and the Duke de Montemart. The public sitting was then declared at an end, and the committee at once met and chose as its President M Troplong.

It is said Louis Bonaparte will now certainly marry the Princess Vasa.

M Lamartine has publicly denied a report that he was to be called to the Senate under the new Government.

Jerome Bonaparte, with his son Napoleon, went to St Cloud to remonstrate with Louis against the exclusion of his family from the immediate succession to the Throne. Both were received by the President with the warmest demonstrations of cordiality. Louis Napoleon threw the whole responsibility of the rejection of Jerome's pretensions to rank as heir apparent to the throne upon the Senate. But he informed his uncle and cousin in explicit terms, that however much he should have been personally rejoiced had the Senate voted justified in coming to another conclusion, his respect for the constitutional attributes of that august body was too great to allow him to interfere with their resolution.

A TERRIBLE AND DRAMATIC HISTORY.—The gallant Labedoyere, the first defector to Napoleon on his return from Elba, was condemned to suffer the pain of death. He had twenty-four hours to apply to a Court of Appeal. This time was granted to the extremities of his family, to enable them to solicit the King's pardon, rather than from any supposed benefit to be derived from this proceeding, for he had confessed everything. A young orator of the Paris bar, then already celebrated as a political advocate, and still more celebrated since in the Tribune, Mr. Mauguin, defended this desperate cause before the Court of Appeal. He moved public opinion, he touched the judges, but he could not move them. A second sentence of death confirmed the first. Labedoyere, then certain if the influence of his noble family might not obtain from the Court perpetual imprisonment in place of a tomb, fortified his soul in his cell with the resolution of the soldier. The resignation of the Christian, and the prayers of the dying; ready for life or death according as the heart forgiving or implacable, of the King should decide at this moment on his fate. His mother and his wife besieged the portals of the palace; but, trembling lest pressure of state should prevail in the councils of the King against the natural disposition and magnanimity of the princes of the royal house, they collected fourteen francs in gold, to bribe the gaoler of the prison, for the escape of the condemned. This offer, which was rejected by the Government, was received by the keeper of the Abbaye. Nothing more than a desperate supplement remained for the better assurance of the prisoner. The most rigid orders interdicted the gates of the palace from granting an entrance to those suppliants. At length the Court from the embarrassment of an implacable severity. These guards, however, were less pitiless than the courtiers; they relaxed their stern vigilance before these two weeping ladies. At the moment when Louis XVIII, bending upon the arms of his attendants, was descending the grand staircase and crossing the vestibule, where he was to get into his carriage for his daily drive, the young wife of the condemned, only nineteen years of age, her infant in her arms, in deep mourning, with arms disjointed and eyes streaming with tears of anguish, threw herself between the princes and the steps of the carriage, and exclaimed in a voice stifled with sobs, "Pardon! Pardon!" The King drew back, at once moved and disconcerted; but the fear of refusing a satisfaction to his party, and of incurring these reproaches of weakness with which he was besieged even in his own palace, prevailed over the spectacle of this supplicant who asked him for so many lives in one. Labedoyere, pallid himself with his impassibility of countenance, and bowing with an apparent stoical nonchalance which contrasted with the rigor to the young wife: "Madame," said he, "I know your sentiments and those of your family for my house; it is painful to me to refuse a pardon to such faithful servants. If your husband had only offended me, his pardon would be granted before hand; but I owe satisfaction to France, upon which he has drawn all the evils of sedition and war. My duty as a king thus puts my hands. I can do nothing more than pray for the repose of him whom justice has condemned and to offer my protection to you and to his child." After these words, the King was before his carriages, and the windows were closed. The hapless wife fainted upon the track of the wheels.

It was six o'clock in the evening; at the same moment a carriage, escorted by gendarmes, was bearing Labedoyere to the place of execution, under a garden wall, on that same plain of Grenelle, which a few days before he had contested with the enemy. He was accompanied by a priest, who recited to him, in a low voice, the prayers in the pages of the Catholic ritual. On alighting from the coach he perceived, amid a little group of curious persons, attracted to the spot by the rumor of the execution, a faithful friend, Cæsar de Nervaux, whose visits had often consoled him in the solitude of his prison. The presence of this witness, a friend, at an hour when all else upon earth is enemies, and the consolation of dying in the presence of one, at least, who would shed an honest tear to his memory, threw a gleam of saddening joy over the countenance of Labedoyere. He advanced towards M. de Nervaux, and the two companions in arms embraced each other affectionately. They exchanged some rapid and interrupted words in a low voice. Historians assert that M. de Nervaux promised his dying friend to avenge him, but vengeance, a sentiment altogether human, existed no longer in the soul of Labedoyere, which was full of religious hope and divine forgiveness. M. de Nervaux only promised to plead for his memory in oblivion, by the fidelity and tenderness of his recollection. Labedoyere approaching the soldiers ordered for his execution and walking from the wall towards them, appeared slowly to measure the number of steps which ought to separate him from his executioners. he stopped a moment on the spot which life seemed to have chosen for his death. Then, as if a sudden thought had struck him, which called him back in life to repair a lapse of memory, he returned hastily towards the priest, whispered something in his ear, and embraced him; after which he resumed his chosen place in front of the firing party, awaiting the final blow.

The officer who commanded the veterans approached him in order to bandage his eyes, to spare him, with the customary consideration at executions, the sensation of looking on the arms directed against him. But with a gesture he declined this last act of kindness, needless to those who, like him, have been familiar with death on many fields of battle. He threw his hat upon the ground, and untying his cravat, begged one of the soldiers to accept it, as a present from a dying man, and keep it in memory of him. Then, after, though moved, declining the gift as at variance with the laws of military discipline, Labedoyere, however, insisted, and the soldier at length replied, "Well, then, I will take the handkerchief, but it shall be respectfully to cover your face after death." Satisfied with this pious resolution of the soldier, Labedoyere handed him the handkerchief, and advanced a few paces closer to the firing party, until the muzzles of their muskets almost touched his breast. The emotion, not of fear, but of lobbing for well had deprived his features of their natural color, but not of their ferm expression or intrepid look. He instinctively turned his head towards the side where M. de Nervaux was praying for him, as if to close his last look on friendly eyes. Then bailing his breast, he said with a firm voice to the veterans, "Fire, my friends!" The volley replied to his voice, he staggered and fell, pierced with a number of balls. The smoke of the discharge covered for a moment the soldiers and the body. When this was dispelled by the breeze, the priest who had attended the execution, approached the body, extended on the border of a ditch, knelt down, and steeping a handkerchief in the warm blood flowing from the breast of the deceased which he had promised to take us a relic to Madame Labedoyere, he retired.

As a preparatory step, they held a grand banquet at Manchester, on the 23d ult., at which all their great leaders were present, and many of them made speeches. About 2800 tickets were disposed of, and hundreds, it is said, were disappointed even then. That there were some creature comforts provided, as well as intellectual dainties, is quite apparent from the following sample of the bill of fare: "4000 pies; 4800 meat sandwiches; 3000 fruit sandwiches; 2000 gooseberry and strawberry tarts; 1000 black currant tarts; 200 dishes biscuits; 800 cwt. grapes; 4 cwt. raisins; 56 lbs. almonds; 2 cwt. figs, 6000 apples; 6000 pears, and 213 dozen of wine."

NEW WHARF.—A splendid wharf has been completed at Powder Horn Bayou at which, Harris & Morgan's steamers will hereafter land.

REVOLUTION.—The Western Texan learns from Brownsville, by an extract from a letter, that Paldo Pastillo, from Tampico, is stirring up another revolution. They claim to have $50,000 on the way from Tampico to defray expenses—have refused to let any Americans join them, and will have nothing to do with Carvajal.

The Mexicans fear Carvajal, because he was educated in the United States, and in many respects is an American in feeling. They cannot appreciate a man, whose visual range is ample enough to include any other country than Mexico, and who does not pretend to find all that is great and noble among their countrymen. They doubt any man who takes another government for a model. In preference by subscribing to their vague and unsatisfactory idea of republicanism. Hence its failure.

PURSER SMITH.—The following article from the New York Universe assigns an entirely new cause for the hostility of the Cuban authorities to Purser Smith:

The true cause of the difficulty in the affair of the Crescent City seems to be that in 1827, when only eleven years old, he served as a midshipman on the Mexican brig of war Correo, commanded by a Kingman, and part of the fleet with which the late Commodore Porter swept the Spanish navy from the Gulf. After one of the most severe contests in maritime war, the Guerrero was captured between Capa San Antonio and Vera Cruz, by a Spanish seventy-four, after having previously defeated two Spanish vessels of superior force. Except the brilliant achievement of John Essex in capturing the Cyane and Levant, at Valparaiso, and old Reid's defence of the Gen Armstrong at Funchal, we have no feat to compare with this.

On being taken to Havana, he with the officers of the Guerrero were placed in a miserable Spanish [illegible] and paraded through the streets with a guard formidable enough for a platoon of grenadiers, when he was taken to sign his parole. Despotic governments never forget, and now after the lapse of twenty-five years, the man is made to feel the consequences of fury and ill-feeling, excited by gallantry in a child, impotent to call forth the adulation of a Spanish Satrap.

This is really a new dodge, and a matter of serious consideration. We do not wonder that the Spanish authorities in Cuba should be fearful of an individual who was a mid-shipman at the age of eleven. Vive la Bagatelle.

Discovery of Embalmed Bodies.

A writer in the London Notes and Queries furnishes the following interesting account:

A few weeks ago in clearing out the ruins of an old chapel at Nuncham Regis, in Warwickshire, which had been pulled down, all but the belfry tower, 40 years since, we thought it necessary to trench the whole space, that we might more certainly mark out the boundaries of the building, as we wished to restore it, in some measure, to its former state. It had been used as a stack-yard and a depository for rubbish, by the tenants of the farm on which it was, ever since its dilapidation. We began to trench at the west end, and came on a great many bones and skeletons from which the coffins had crumbled away, till, finding the earth had been moved, we went deeper, and discovered a leaden coffin, quite perfect, without date or inscription of any kind. There had been an outer wooden coffin, which was decayed, but quantities of the black rotted wood were all round it. We cut the lead and folded back the top, so as not to destroy it; beneath was a wooden coffin in good preservation, and also without any inscription.

As soon as the leaden top was rolled back a most overpowering aromatic smell diffused itself all over the place. We then unfastened the inner coffin, and found the body of a man embalmed with great care, and heaps of rosemary and aromatic leaves piled over him. On examining the body more closely we found it had been beheaded; the head was separately wrapped up in linen, and the linen shirt that covered the body was drawn quite over the neck where the head had been cut off; the head was laid straight with the body, and, where the joining of the neck and head should have been, it was tied round with a broad black riband. His hands were crossed on his breast, the wrists were tied with black ribband, and the thumbs were tied together with black riband. He had a peaked beard, and a quantity of long brown hair, curled and clotted with blood, round his neck; the only mark on anything about him was on the linen on his chest, just above where his hands were crossed, on it were the letters "T. B." worked in black.

On trenching towards the chancel, we came on four leaden coffins laid side by side, with inscriptions on each; one contained the body of Francis, Earl of Chichester and Lord Dunsmore, 1653; the next the body of Audrey, the Countess of Chichester, 1652; another, the body of Lady Audrey Leigh, their daughter, 1010; and the fourth the body of Sir John Anderson, son of Lady Chichester by her first husband. We opened the coffin of Lady Audrey Leigh, and found her perfectly embalmed and in entire preservation, her flesh quite plump as if she were alive, her face very beautiful, her hands exceedingly small and not wasted; she was dressed in fine linen trimmed all over with point lace, and two rows of lace flat across her forehead. She looked exactly as if she were asleep, and seemed not more than 16 or 17 years old; her beauty was very great; even her eyelashes and eyebrows were quite perfect, and her eyes were closed; no part of her face or figure was at all fallen in. We also opened Lady Chichester's coffin, but with her the embalming had apparently failed; she was a skeleton, though the coffin was full of aromatic leaves. Her hair, however, was as fresh, as if she lived; it was long, thick, and as soft and glossy as that of a child, and of a perfect auburn color.

In trenching one side of where the altar had been, we found another leaden coffin with an inscription. It contained the body of a Dame Marie Browne, daughter of one of the Leighs, and of the Lady Marie, daughter to Lord Chancellor Brackley. This body was also quite perfect, and embalmed principally with a very small coffee-colored seed, with which the coffin was nearly filled, and it also had so powerful a perfume that it filled the whole place. The linen, ribbon, etc., were quite strong and good in all these instances, and remained so after exposure to the air; we kept a piece out of each coffin, and had it washed without it being at all destroyed. Young Lady Audrey had ear-rings in her ears—black enameled serpents. The perfume of the herbs and gums used in embalming them was so sickening that we were all ill after inhaling it, and most of the men employed in digging up the coffins were ill also. My object in sending this account is, if possible, to discover who the beheaded man is. The chapel is on the estate of Lord John Scott, who inherited it from his paternal grandmother, the Duchess of Buccleuch, daughter of the Duke of Montague, into whose family Eusham Regis and other possessions in Warwickshire came by the marriage of his grandfather with the daughter of Lord Dunsmore, Earl of Chichester. [Notes and Queries.

A BIRD TWENTY FEET HIGH.—Not many years ago a sailor presented at the British Museum a huge marrow-bone, which he desired to sell, and which he had brought from NewZealand. The officers of that institution referred him to the College of Surgeons, where, they said, he would find a gentleman—one Professor Owen—who had a remarkable predilection for old bones. Accordingly the sailor took his treasure to the Professor, who, finding it unlike any bone even he had any knowledge of, sent the man away rejoicing with a full pocket—rejoicing himself in the acquisition of a new subject for scientific inquiry. Although the bone had manifestly contained marrow, and was therefore unlike the bones of birds in general, Mr. Owen concluded, from certain structural evidences, that this bone had belonged to a bird, and a bird of a species hitherto unknown.

It was immediately figured and lithographed, and copies, with certain instructions for finding other such bones, were sent out to NewZealand, to be distributed wherever Europeans had trod among the fens of that colony. Years passed. By-and-by, a very big box arrived in Lincoln's inn-fields, London, containing congeners of the sailor's marrow-bone; some of them upwards of a yard long. Professor Owen set to work, and built up from these bones, not one, but five (ultimately eleven) distinct species of an extinct animal, hitherto utterly unknown to natural history. It must have been unable to fly, (hence the marrow, instead of air, in the bones,) and must have had uncommon pedestrian powers, (hence the necessity for marrow.)

The structure of the beak and neck indicates that its powers of wrenching and grubbing up roots must have been tremendous. Its food was fern roots, which in NewZealand are so farinaceous that the natives make bread of them to this day. It has been named the Dinornis, because it is the most stupendous of birds, (deinos, fearfully great, ornis, bird.) The disappearance of the Dinornis is easily accounted for. When the progenitors of the present native tribes first landed from the South Seas, the Dinornis must have been their only animal food; for in NewZealand no quadrupeds are indigenous. As it took no longer than a century for the Dutch to extripate the Dodo from the Mauritius, a couple of centuries would have quite sufficed to kill and cook the Dinornis off the face of New Zealand.

When these birds had been all eaten up, the Maoris took to killing and cooking one another. The next great zoological excitement to be looked for is a real, live Dinornis. If one of these gigantic birds be ever found and brought to the Regent's Park, the hippopotamus may accept the Chiltern Hundreds, and retire from the representation of the Nile, disgusted at the lead that will be taken by the honorable member from NewZealand. A TURKISH BATH.—Bayard Taylor, in his last letter, thus describes a Turkish bath, which he enjoyed at the warm springs of Brousa in Asia Minor:

The room into which we were taken was so hot that a violent perspiration immediately broke out all over my body, and by the time the "delleks" were ready to rasp me, I was as limp as a wet towel, and as plastic as a piece of putty. The man who took me was sweated away almost to nothing; his very bones appeared to have become soft and pliable. The temperature of the water is 180 degrees Fahrenheit, and I suppose the tank into which he afterwards plunged me must have been nearly up to the mark. When, at last, I was laid on the couch, my body was so parboiled that I perspired at all pores for full an hour—a feeling too warm and unpleasant at first, but presently merging into a mood which was wholly rapturous and heavenly. I was like a soft white cloud that rests all of a summer afternoon on the peak of a distant mountain. I saw nothing but peaceful, glorious sights; spaces of pure blue sky, stretches of quiet lawns; lovely valleys threaded by the gentlest of streams; azure lakes unruffled by a breath; oases far out on mid-ocean, and Alpine peaks bathed in the flush of an autumnal sunset. Then, as my frame grew cooler, and the fragrant clouds of the narghileh, which had helped my dreams, diminished, I was like that same cloud, when it feels a gentle breeze, and is lifted above the hills, moving along independent of earth, but for its

Late from Texas.

By the arrival on Monday of the steamship Yacht, Capt. Lawless, we have received Galveston papers to the 25th instant, but none of our exchanges from the interior. We received, however, a number of the Brownsville Flag, of the 17th inst.

The Galveston News contains the following queer paragraph:

The San Antonio Ledger suggests that inasmuch as slaves are unsafe in our extreme western territory, the dismemberment of a Mexican State or two may be necessary to increase the distance between our sister Republic, who pables herself in protecting fugitives, and our slaveholding population.

The Supreme Court commenced its session at Austin on the 8th instant.

A letter from Jefferson, Cass county, informs us that the Galveston Railroad scheme is rapidly gaining favor with the people in that section. There has been a great deal of sickness among the people, but it is now abating. Business, in the thriving town of Jefferson is brisk, and navigation had opened earlier than usual this season.

Pierce is known to be favorable to low tariffs and liberty of trade;" praises Mr. Fillmore as possessing "neither the gas, slop nor the enthusiasm of his fellow-citizens;" next states that the fitting out of the Japan expedition was a sham; that its real destination is Cuba; but if it be for Japan, that it is insufficient, and that the President's letter "will be read with astonishment and resented as an insult, nity."

THE MAINE LIQUOR LAW IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.—The judges of the New Hampshire Superior Court, in their decision, find the following objections to the bill:

First. The bill confers on justices an exicut of authority the constitution does not sanction, particularly in respect to the power it gives them to pronounce a sentence of forfeiture on liquors seized for a violation of the law.

Second. The bill provides for no trial by jury, or for appeal and trial by jury before a higher court. The constitution provides that in all controversies concerning property, the parties have a right to a trial by jury.

Third. The seventh section of the act conflicts directly with the constitution of the United States. This section provides that no action can be maintained in any court in the State, either in whole or in part, for intoxicating or spirituous liquors sold in any other State or county. No law of this State can deprive a citizen of the United States of the right to enforce a claim of debt before the tribunals of this State.

Fourth. Liquors are property. The law in recognizing them as such, in the fourth section, when in the hands of town authorities for sale and mechanical use, cannot, by the force of a few phrases, make property lose its character when in other custody.

Fifth. Double or increased penalties in cases of conviction undeappeal, because it operates as a penalty upon the party claiming an appeal, conflicts with his rights to an appeal, and cannot be supported by the constitution.

Sixth. The bill is designed by its provisions to demand excessive bail, and to render it difficult for the accused to procure sureties. It is also objected that the accused should not have the benefit of counsel to defend him, the parties not between the present law and the practice in England in former days, would have been complete.

Seventh. The conviction of a principal through any act of one agent is held to be unconstitutional. The accused should be confronted with the witnesses against him, says the constitution, but the liquor bill says no; and it is therefore opposed to the constitutional rights of the citizen.

Eighth. The people have a right to be secured against all unreasonable search of their dwellings, et cetera, and all search warrants must be under oath, according to the constitution. But searches and arrests may be made according to the bill, without warrants on oath, and it is thus unconstitutional.

The judges wind up by stating that some of the objections are of the most serious character. The opinion is signed by Judges Gilchrist, Woods, Eastman and Bell.

SAGACITY OF THE ELEPHANT.—In the course of my early morning rides about the vicinity of Colombo, I frequently reined in my steed to watch the quiet labors of a couple of elephants in the service of the government. These huge animals were generally employed in the commissariat timber yard, or in the engineer's department, either in removing or stowing logs and planks, or rolling about heavy masses of stone for building purposes. I could not but admire the precision with which they performed their allotted task, unaided, save by their own sagacity. They were one morning hard at work, though slowly, piling up a quantity of heavy pieces of ebony.

The tower row of the pile had been already laid down, with mathematical precision, six logs side by side. These they had first rolled in from the adjoining wharf; and, when I rode up, they were engaged in bringing forward the next six for the second row in the pile. It was curious to observe these uncouth animals seize one of the heavy logs at each end, and, by means of their trunk, lift it upon the logs already placed, and then arrange it crosswise upon them with the most perfect skill. I waited whilst they thus placed the third row, feeling a curiosity to know how they would proceed when the timber had to be lifted to a greater height. Some of the logs weighed nearly twenty hundred weight.

There was a short pause before the fourth row was touched; but the difficulty was no sooner perceived than it was overcome. The sagacious animals selected two straight pieces of timber, placed one end of each piece on the ground, with the other resting on the top of the pile, so as to form a sliding way for the next logs; and, having seen that they were perfectly steady and in a straight line, the four workers, as more rolled up the slope they had just formed, the six pieces of ebony for the fourth layer on the pile. Not the least amusing part of the performance was the careful survey of the pile made by one of the elephants, after placing each log, to ascertain if it were laid perfectly square with the rest.

The sagacity of these creatures in detecting weaknesses in the jungle bridges, thrown across some of the streams in Ceylon, is not less remarkable. I have been assured that when carrying a load, they invariably press one of their feet first upon the earth covering of the bridge, to try its strength and, that if it feels too weak to carry them across, they will refuse until lightened of their load. On one occasion, a driver persisting in compelling his elephant to cross a bridge against the evident wish of the animal, and, as was expected by his comrade, the rotten structure gave way, elephant and rider were precipitated into the river, and the latter was drowned.

Ignorance takes to dirt as naturally as it does to ugliness. In proof of this we would mention that a dealer in ashes informed us that the opening of a public school in a ward increases the sales of "yallar soap" twenty-five per cent. From this it will be seen that the more people read, the more they think, and the more they think, the more frequently they indulge in wash boilers and clean towels.

A late writer supposes that the "indifference to danger" which most people exhibit on steamboats, springs from the common-place look that every thing wears. We should think it's right. Who can believe that a thousand horses are tugging to get out of a boiler, when he sees this immense power kept in subjection by a knock-kneed man in a paper hat, and silk-kept nose.

ANOTHER NEW BOAT.—The U. S. R. W. Hill.—The Louisville Journal of the 19th contains the following description of the new steamer U. S. R. W. Hill:

While it was believed the completion of the fourth new boat which we have had occasion to describe in the past week. The Hill is of the largest class, and she is finished in as elegant a style, and her provisions for accommodating passengers are on as luxurious and extensive a scale as those of the finest boats on the western waters. Messrs. Hill & Small furnished her cabin. We had supposed they had done their utmost heretofore in furnishing boats, but we find we were mistaken. Each successive boat exceeds that which preceded it in elegance and beauty and taste in the furnishing of her cabins. So it is with the Hill. Her carpets, curtains, linens etc., are of the finest description. The furniture was made by John Slavin, and reflects credit with the elegance of her cabin. Mr. Hugh Wilkins supplied the upholstery, and it is of the very best kind. Messrs. Wright & Bridgeford did the copper work. All these firms belong to this city. Messrs. Brooks & Brown of NewAlbany furnished the crockery ware.

The hull of the Hill was built by Dowerman & Hunsacre, the cabin by Thompson & Beebe, and the machinery by Lent, South & Shipman, all of NewAlbany. The Hill is intended for the Nashville and NewOrleans trade, and has great capacity for carrying freight. Her hull has also a fine model, and her machinery is of great power, which indicate great speed. We now give her dimensions: Length of hull 250 feet, beam 40 feet, and depth of hold 7 feet. The machinery consists of two engines, with thirty inch cylinders and ten feet stroke, six boilers, each 30 feet long and 42 inches in diameter; her wheels are 40 feet in diameter, and have 24 feet buckets.

The Hill will leave for NewOrleans. She is commanded by Capt. Newell, who is favorably known in the trade for which she is intended.

SHIP CANAL.—The important ship canal which is to unite Lake Superior with Lake Michigan will soon be commenced. The Marquette Courier says:

The surveys for its location have been completed, and the ground has been found quite as favorable for the easy and speedy construction of the work as was expected. Several routes have been surveyed, which will enable the Legislature of Michigan and contractors to obtain a perfect understanding of the whole subject. The canal will be a fraction less than a mile in length. The law of Congress provides that the locks shall be at least 250 feet long and 60 feet wide, and the Michigan legislature has power to enlarge the dimensions.

When completed, this canal will enable steamers of the largest class to run from Buffalo to the head waters of the Lake without any transhipment—an improvement that will quadruple the trade of this immense lake in less than two years. Lake Superior is the largest and most magnificent body of fresh water in the world. It is a sea by itself, with islands larger than German principalities. In the way of mineral wealth, it acknowledges no equal any where. Heretofore all this wealth has been locked. Owing to the Falls at St. Mary, all the products of Lake Superior have been so hindered and taxed, in order to reach the sea-port, that it was almost impossible to make them "pay expenses."

NEW ORLEANS AND OPELOUSAS RAILROAD.—The San Augustine (Texas) Herald, of the 29th, says:

We are glad to see Mr. Phelps, engineer of the New Orleans and Texas Railroad, in our town this week; things begin to look more like a reality now, than a visionary speculation. Mr. Phelps has been examining the crossing of the Sabine at Logansport, and is now on his way to Sabine Town to make the examination there, and on down as low as Burkeville; and on his report, will much depend the crossing of the road on the Sabine. He appears to think the sandy foundation at Logansport will not be a favorable point.

FOUNDERS OF '76.—The corner stone of the Soldiers' Monument was laid in Milford, Ct., on the 28th Oct., in the presence of 1000 or 1200 persons, and an address was delivered by Gov. Seymour. The New Haven Journal says:

"In January, '77, a British ship from NewYork with a flag of truce for New Haven, constrained by adverse winds, came to anchor in Milford harbor, and forthwith landed upon the sunny beach 230 American captives. They had been suffering from confinement and hard fare on board the dreary prison ship Asia. Most were enfeebled or diseased—some died while being landed. All that did not were immediately provided for by the public authorities, or ministered to by the hand of charity in private families. But in spite of all that could be done for them, forty-six of their number died within one month, and were buried in a common grave. It is over the dust and bones of these martyrs to liberty, that the projected monument is now being erected to their memory."

ANIMALS FEIGNING DEATH.—The character for subtlety which the fox had from the earliest ages, is the main reason why his assumed or presumed inclination when in danger has been ascribed to intention; for otherwise some of the instances we have given, on this supposition, would not appear to be exceedingly well devised. In two instances which I have adduced, at least an effort at escape would have been the most judicious proceeding; and in his adventure with the countryman it seems surprising that this was not attempted. But a more probable explanation is, that the suddenness of the encounter, at a time when the creature thought of no such thing, had the effect of stupefying it, exactly as is said to be the case with birds, out of life power, and the appearance of death was the fortuitous contrivance of cunning, but the consequence of terror. And that this explanation is the true one, appears among other proofs from the conduct of a bolder and more ferocious animal, the wolf, under similar circumstances. Taken in a pitfall, it is said that it is so subdued by surprise, that a man may safely descend and bind and lead it away, or knock it on the head; and it is also said, that when it has wandered into a country to which it is a stranger, it loses much of its courage, and may be assailed with impunity. [Conde's Illustration of Instinct.

FEMALE HEROISM.—"One day," said Massena, "being at Buczendeu, I perceived a young soldier belonging to the light artillery, whose horse had just been wounded by a lance. The young man, who appeared quite a child, defended himself desperately, as several bodies of the enemy lying around him could testify. I despatched an officer with some men to his assistance, but they arrived too late. Although this action had taken place on the borders of the wood, and in front of the bridge, this artillery man had alone withstood the attack of a small troop of Cossacks and Bavarians, whom the officer and men I had despatched put to flight. His body was covered with wounds, inflicted by shots, lances, and swords. There were at least thirty. And do you know, madame, what the young man was?" said Massena, turning to me

"A woman."

"Yes, a woman, and a handsome woman, too! although she was surrounded with blood that it was difficult to judge of her beauty. She had followed her lover to the army. The latter was a captain of artillery; she never left him; and when he was killed, defended like a lioness the remains of him she loved. She was a native of Paris; her name was Louise Belletz, and she was the daughter of a fringe-maker in the Rue de Petit Lion. [Memoirs of the Duchess Abrantes.

GERMAN COWARDS.—The petty princes of Germany rather run grandeur into the ground. There are over three hundred "principalities" in the vicinity of the Rhine, not one of whose territory contains acres enough to make a squash garden. The standing army of one of these illustrious idiots consists of four men—one orderly sergeant and three cordwainers. The national brigades are composed of two sugar hogsheads, while the whole contents of the "Government Arsenal" consists of two cracked muskets and six horse pistols, which only "go off" when they are stolen.

FROM JAMAICA.—By the way of New York we have received files of the Kingston Journal of the 9th inst. The news, however, is of little importance.

Sickness to a considerable extent prevails in Kingston.

The vessels of war in Port Royal harbor were the Immum, 72 guns, Com. McQuhae, Calypso, 18 guns, Capt. Forbes, Albion, 3 guns, Lieut. Mecrel.

The Journal devotes a column and a half to sheep stealing and sheep raising. The former practice is said to be very prevalent on the Island, and stringent measures are called for to check it.

The Journal of the 4th says of the riot on parade:

The investigation into the late disgraceful riot which occurred on the parade on Wednesday, the 30th ult., has at length been brought to a close. Twenty-six military prisoners, and three civilians (females) who were recognized as being concerned in the riot and taken into custody, were held to bail to answer any bill or bills of indictment that may be preferred against them at the ensuing January Assizes. The military were bailed by Col. Hill and Capt. Hughes. The soldier charged with stabbing will be detained in custody until Richardson shall have been pronounced out of danger by the medical gentleman who attends upon him at the hospital.

THE RUM TRADE.—The Louisville Courier, of the 19th says: A large train of hog cars started for Bagdad yesterday to bring in 1500 hogs for one of our packers, which were expected last night. A train of about 400 arrived last evening.

Messrs. Clifton, Atkinson & Co., received yesterday 330 hogs from Columbus, In., by the Jeffersonville Railroad, the first receipt from that quarter.

Prices of hogs are firm at 4 cents gross, and sales of several large lots from the hooks at prices supposed to be $4 40 net. We heard of a sale of 10,000 gross hams at 7½ cents, and 1000 barrels prime lard at 9 cents.

The Madison (Ind.) Courier, of the 18th, has the following: One thousand hogs arrived last night on the cars at North Madison, from the Knightstown Railroad, for shipment to Cincinnati. We understand that some thirty thousand hogs will be sent over the Madison roads to Cincinnati this season. Heretofore, hogs from the counties lying east of the Ruth and Knightstown roads have been driven to Cincinnati.

The St. Louis Intelligencer, of the 20th, says: About 600 head of hogs were put to the knife at Ashbrook's pork-house yesterday. This is the first lot of hogs slaughtered on this side of the river this season. Accounts from above represent that the work has commenced at Beardstown, Naples, and other points on the Illinois, in earnest. The number of hogs likely to be slaughtered here will fall far below first impressions. Our packers were talking of $5 87½ and $5 90 on 'Change yesterday. We perceive that the Cincinnati market has advanced to $5 75.

The New York Crystal Palace is progressing rapidly, and the result promises to be successful.

ANTI-LIQUOR LAW.—Three townships in Hinds county, Miss.—Brownsville, Palestine and Raymond—have given a majority of 85 in favor of the Anti-liquor law.

CHEROKEE NATION.—The late Council of the Cherokee Nation, passed a law against carrying pistols, bowie knives or shot guns. The law is thought to be a good one, and one which will prevent many fatal affrays.

THE ARTESIAN WELL AT CHICAGO.—This well, which the Galena Railroad Company undertook to bore some time ago, has reached a depth of 220 feet, and no sign of living water yet.

SPECULATING.—The great abundance of money appears to have induced a speculative feeling throughout the West. Produce of nearly all descriptions appears to be on the advance.

AN EXCELLENT TOOTH-POWDER.—Dissolve gum powder in a tumbler of cold water, and when settled pour off the clear water, and the remainder is the tooth powder. Try it.—Scientific American.

INTERESTING DISCOVERIES IN PERSIA.—A mixed commission, which embraces England, Prussia and Persia, is now engaged in establishing the boundary line between Persia and Turkey, about which there has long been difficulties. Col. Williams, well known to many Americans, and a man of character and talent, is the English Commissioner, and on the authority of a scientific American writing from Persia, the Boston Chronicle relates the following:

In the prosecution of this work, the commissioners have come upon the remains of the ancient palace Shusan, mentioned in the sacred books of Esther and Daniel, together with the tomb of Daniel, the Prophet. The locality answers to the received tradition of its position, and the internal evidence, arising from its correspondence with the description of the palace recorded in the sacred history, amount almost to demonstration. The reader can turn to Esther, chap. 1, v. 6, there he will read of a "pavement of red, and blue, and white, and black marble in that palace." That pavement still exists, and, as described by Col. Williams, corresponds to the description given thus in the sacred history. And in the marble columns, dilapidated in ruins, the sculpture and the remaining inscriptions and glory that are scattered around, the commissioners read the exact truth of the record made by the sacred penman.

Not far from the sacred palace stands a tomb; on it is sculptured the figure of a man bound hand and foot, with a large lion in the act of springing upon him to devour, him. No history could speak more graphically the story of Daniel in the Lion's Den. The commissioners have with them an able corps of engineers and scientific men, and most interesting discoveries may be expected. The Persian arrow-heads are found upon the palace and the tomb. Glass bottles, elegant as those pinned upon the toilet table of the ladies of our day, have been discovered, with other indications of art and refinement, which bear out the statements of the Bible. Thus, twenty-five hundred years after the historians of Esther and Daniel made their records, their histories are verified by the peaceful adornments of the nations of our day.

A BEAUTIFUL MISS IN MALE ATTIRE.—About, two weeks since, a smart looking lad in appearance, entered an extensive clothing warehouse in the city of Boston, and applied for employment. The intelligent, honest look of the applicant instantly procured a favorable answer, and the supposed lad was set to work folding and packing goods, filling papers, etc., and remained in such employment, boarding at a "quiet" house at the north end, until Monday last, when, in consequence of some suspicion which had been excited, the pretty lad acknowledged herself a lass of eighteen. She is the daughter of an official, an excellent gentleman of NewYork city, and was induced to leave her father's house by one whom she loved, but who has since abandoned her. Being left alone, she sought employment as above. She is said to be a piquant, dashing, bright-eyed girl, full of life, and swimming is romance. Her excessive smartness, and gibness of tongue, at first led the proprietors to believe that they had found a model clerk, and of course they were no little astonished on learning he was a girl. Her hair was cut "mun fashion," as were her manners, as may well be believed by passing unsuspected through nearly a week's clerkship among some fifty men.

HUNTING IN CALIFORNIA.—The Stockton Journal says that many of our readers are not aware that some of the finest hunting grounds are within a day's travel of our town. A small party of expert hunters recently spent a few days in Crow Creek county. The attention of the party was especially directed to hunting grizzly bears, and a great many of these monarchs of the forest were found. Several were slain, one of which weighed nine hundred pounds. Almost the whole time was spent in fighting these monsters, and the sport was found sufficiently exciting to please the most enthusiastic hunter. The deer and smaller game, such as ducks, quails, squirrels, etc., were found in great abundance. Persons fond of exciting field sport, or desirous of ridding themselves of dyspepsia and all kindred ills, could not do better than to take a week's hunt in the Crow Creek country.

ALPACAS IN AUSTRALIA.—The Scientific American says: The introduction of Alpacas into Australia has been in agitation in England for some years. Lately no effort was made to get some of those animals from Peru, but without success. An inquiry into the adaptation of Australia to the purpose has also proved discouraging, the climate not being sufficiently cold. It is, however, thought that the mountainous regions in the southeastern part of Australia may be suitable, and it has been urged that the Government of Great Britain make the experiment.

LARGE FARES.—The fishermen of Swampscot, Mass., on the 20th ult., landed 80,000 weight of fish, for which, when cured, at the present prices, they will receive six cents per pound.

The obsequies of the Duke of Wellington were celebrated by the English residents of NewYork, on the 18th instant, with much pomp and splendor. A sermon was delivered in Calvary Church by the Rev. Dr. Yluton, of Grace Church, Brooklyn.

MISSOURI RIVER.—The St. Louis Evening Union, of the 22d, says: This river is decidedly fast, with scant four and a half feet in the channel from Kansas down. The weather was extremely cold when the Timour left, and ice was forming rapidly.

SUFFERING IN MADEIRA.—A voluntary committee of citizens of Philadelphia has been formed to collect money purchase food to be shipped for the relief of the poor the Island of Madeira, where the failure of the crops producing sufferiog.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON.—Prof. Hengstenberger, of Berlin, is engaged in preparing a commentary on the Song of Solomon. It will contain the canonicity of the Song, and affirm its allegorical meaning. It may be issued early in the coming spring.

A PROFITABLE MEADOW.—A farmer in Canton, Mass., has a cranberry meadow of 22 acres in extent, lying near Paukapoag Pond, from which he has raked, the present season, upwards of 1000 bushels of fine cranberries, for which he has realized $3000 cash.

The Postmaster General has decided that there is nothing either in the laws or regulations of the Post Office Department which prevents the sending of periodicals or papers to "actual and bona fide subscribers," by agents or dealers, the same as if they were mailed directly from the office of publication—all former decisions to the contrary notwithstanding. The first section of the new law embraces the case.

HUDSON RIVER RAILROAD.—When the idea of building a railroad along the banks of the Hudson river was first suggested, it was looked upon as a scheme that would bring ruin to every one engaged in it. There are as many steamboats running on the river as there were at the time the railroad was commenced, and another track is now being laid down, to accommodate the large and rapidly increasing business of the road. No stronger argument in favor of railroads is needed.

LORD DERBY AN AUTHOR.—An English paper states that "it may not be generally known that his lordship is the author of a little work entitled 'Conversations on the Parables of the New Testament, for the use of children.' A copy of that work, which was published in 1840, is now before us; and anything more simple and earnest than the piety it breathes, or more delightful than the picture it presents of a nobleman, occupying the position of his lordship, and yet having time and taste for such studies and occupations, could not be imagined."

LAND SALES AT SAN ANTONIO.—The San Antonio Ledger mentions the conclusion of the land sales, which we have already spoken of, at that place. The Ledger says: The total amount of sales, was $53,576. The number of acres sold, was 13,980½. The amount proffered for sale was 15,000. The twenty per cent. on the amount of sales will pay the city debt. Good. In addition to the reserve of school sites, a lot of 60 acres, embracing Gen. Worth's grave, was excepted as a donation to the Federal Government for an Arsenal site. The City Quarries reured for the ensuing year, for the sum of about $600.

ANOTHER STRIKE.—The steamboat hands at Mobile struck for higher wages on Friday last. Their old rate was $40 a month; they now demand $60. The laborers who discharge cargo from the boats have also struck, and ask fifty cents an hour, instead of twenty-five cents, the rate at which they have hitherto been paid. The Herald says that at the present rate of freights these wages will absorb nearly all the profits of the boats, and considering that the increase of pay demanded is equitable, in view of the increased cost of living, recommends that the owners of boats hold a meeting, and adopt a higher tariff of freights.

The high price of flour in California is urged by the Alta California newspaper as an argument for the farmers to raise more wheat, and for the capitalists to erect good flour mills. It is said that there is scarcely a first-class flour mill in all California.

During the time that the late Sir Robert Peel was Premier, Lady Jane Peel was in the habit of pasting all the articles which appeared in the newspapers against him on a screen. "Well," remarked a person, "there is nothing very singular in all that; it is but the duty of every good wife to screen her husband's faults."

All double flowers are produced by cultivation—a fact that shows marriage as necessary to rose bushes as to other people. In our opinion, a promiscuous life will ruin the character of a Dahlia almost as quick as it would a woman's. Our green house friends will make a note of this, and keep themselves within their own virtuous "beds."

A commodious and splendid brick edifice has just been completed—ninety-seven by forty-seven feet, three stories high, and admirably constructed for arrangement, and for number, size and comfort of private and school rooms, is not surpassed by any similar one in the country. The Principal resides in the building, and with his lady and competent female assistance, superintends the Boarding Department. A lady will reside in the Seminary, who faithfully discharges the duties of Matron. Nurse and Governess, so that at all times, pupils will find the comforts, kindness and attentions of home. The Principal, with the aid of female teachers, who also live in the Seminary, diligently guard and form their morals, manners and habits of the pupils. Being under his charge at all times, they are constantly exercised under a wholesome system of regulations, respecting neatness, order, punctuality, economy and regularity, calculated to give a safe and vigorous development to character. The appliances of home and family are not removed by this arrangement, but perpetuated and strengthened.

The ensuing scholastic year will commence on Thursday the 23d of September, 1852. Pupils can enter at any time during the year, chargeable from the time of entrance. No deduction will be made but by special arrangement with the Principal.

Boarders study at night under a teacher. They are required to retire at 9 o'clock at night, and rise early in the morning at a given signal, and to take frequent and wholesome exercise.

Private rooms are large, conveniently and comfortably furnished. Pupils are required to keep their wardrobes and private apartments in neatness and order. A proper officer weekly takes charge of their clothing, inspects its condition, and every Saturday morning instructs them in plain sewing and necessary repairs of clothing. Every article of clothing must be marked with the owner's name.

Bi-monthly reports are sent to patrons, which are a faithful showing of the scholarship and deportment of pupils.

Pupils are not allowed to attend parties, balls, dancing classes, or any amusement calculated to interfere with their studies.

Visitors are not received by pupils, except with suitable introduction to the Principal from pat

THE LILY OF THE VALLEY.—By FRANCIS BENNOCH

The summer breezes lend the grass,
Each wave its nestling flowers discloses.
While fitful storms that whirling pass,
Bestire the spirit of the rose;
Though crushed—returning good for ill—
Intensest all its colors rise,
As grief-worn spirits soften still
Hard hearts with loving liquid eyes.
Oh, more than rose, sweet blossom pale,
I love thee, lily of the Vale.

Beside the graceful golden broom,
And sturdy, stubborn, daggered whin,
I first beheld thy arch of bloom—
Fair virtue on the marge of sin;
So rare with chaste retiring grace,
Lo in the world's great tumult found,
In word and deed, in form and face,"
Meek loving kindness clothed her round;
And thou to her love's message bore;
Be thou love's herald evermore.

No prickly spears, or burning stings,
My fondling hand or eyes repel;
Listen! and love triumphant rings
From every tremulous silver bell.
Around thee hosts of glittering blades
Sharp-pointed, broad, and burnished green—
Thou, lovely virgin of the glades,
Art guarded, Nature's fairest queen:
Most modest gem of earth thou art,
I'll wear thee ever near my heart.

The stars above are letters bright,
By which we spell the heavenly plan;
But flowers below, when read aright,
God's goodness teach to wayward man:
Dear offspring of the luminous earth,
Fair children of the glorious sun,
Whether of high or lowly birth,
I love you all—yet love I none
Like thee, sweet blooming trembler frail,
Timid white Lily of the Vale.

LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

Since I penned my last letter I have had opportunity of ascertaining, by personal knowledge in a good degree, as well as by correspondence and conversation, the condition of English Methodism. I have traversed part of the country which has suffered most from the ravages of faction, and every where I have found that the "passion of the wilderness do spring;" and that there is once again the "clear shining after the rain." It is not my business, as your correspondent, to give any instances of the fearfully unprincipled and unscrupulous character of the proceedings of the "Reformed" and "Reforming" Committees every where, though it would be easy to do this on a large scale. But it is both my business and my pleasure to inform you, and I am sure it will give both you and your readers pleasure to be informed of the gradual yet sure recovery of our Connection from the late troubles. With the exception of two neighborhoods, and these not very extensive, the whole of Methodism may now be said to be tranquillized. The division is effected; peace is restored. With the restoration of peace and unity, hope and action have been revived or quickened; and, though we cannot look for any great increase upon our numbers during the present year, especially in the face of such an unprecedented drain from emigration as has been and is, and is likely yet for months and years to be going on, yet we hope that our figures of decrease are at an end. It is hazarding no prophesy, but I should be somewhat surprised if, at the next Conference, the Circuit returns were to show no increase. In very many places the congregations are gradually being augmented, and the number of members increasing. Of the seceders we do not expect to recover many, nor is this at all to be desired, unless their character and temper were radically changed. The contributions towards the missionary cause keep up wonderfully. If, with a loss in two years of about 80,000 members, the missionary funds had seriously fallen off, it would have been indeed a most lamentable thing, but still it would have only been a result naturally to be expected. That, in fact, the missionary income has, during the years of agitation, not only been kept up, but actually been augmented is matter of astonishment and profound thankfulness. We are encouraged, and hope that it will still be kept up in the present year. So far as my knowledge and information extends I may say that this will be the case. From Leeds, indeed, the news is most inspiring. The Leeds Methodists have outdone all their former doings and have far exceeded any thing that could be expected. Some years ago Leeds used to raise some £500, *at the time of the District Missionary ser*vices, (not by any means as the total of the year's contributions); about eight years ago the amount was raised under a specially gratifying excitement to £1000; in 1846 a wonderful series of services were held, at which the Rev. Wm. Arthur delivered speeches of amazing power, and on this occasion, if my memory does not fail me, the contributions rose to £1300; after this the amount gradually declined to less than £700. This was the year preceding the agitation (1848) and was the effect of the malurious influences out of which the agitation itself was engendered. But the following year, determined that the good cause should not suffer from the evil spirit which was abroad, the friends exerted themselves so nobly as to more than double the contributions of the previous year, and to raise an amount equal to the givings of any former year. The Rev. Thomas Jackson, the President of the year, presided at these memorable services, and was assisted by Messrs. Slattenbury and Arthur, as well as other distinguished men. The following year showed an increase even upon this amount; and the year after (the last year) by an extraordinary effort upwards of £1600 were raised.

Each year the enemies of Methodism and of open profession cause had loudly and confidently predicted that the next anniversary would and must show a signal decline. The prediction has been uttered as confidently as ever during the past year; may, it must be confessed that, looking at the very extraordinary character of the efforts made in 1851 and the unprecedented liberality of the contributions, even the friends of Methodism and its glorious mission cause had looked for a decline this present year. But the doubts of friends and the hopes of enemies have been equally defeated, and the anniversary recently terminated has, without so special an effort as that of last year, realized £40 more—the total sum raised being £1650. This is a style of liberality unexampled even in British Methodism.

Leeds, you may have heard, is often called "the heart of Methodism," and such doings as these certainly are worthy to earn for it the title. Dr. Dixon and the Rev. George Osborn have been chief speakers at these meetings. What influence such an impulse as this will have upon the meetings of the year you may easily conceive. Leeds has set the example and there will not be wanting others to follow it. Leeds has struck the key note, and many another Circuit and District will take up the tune. Wolverhampton, indeed, has already responded at a noble meeting. And a gentleman, who during the last year has been a subscriber of a guinea a day, has announced his intention for the coming year to give SEVEN GUINEAS A DAY.

New Kingswood School has just been formally opened. The establishment had been in use for more than twelve months; but all the departments and appendages had not been complete the whole of that time, and no convenient opportunity had been for formally inaugurating it. This, however, was done the week before last, a number of our most distinguished laymen and ministers, those especially who had taken the most active part in promoting the new erection, being present on the occasion. Dr. Banting was there, and spoke with simplicity, unction and force, at the meeting. He was worthily honored by the numerous assembly. His son, the Rev. Wm. M. Banting, preached (in one of the Circuit chapels) a beautiful and appropriate sermon on the occasion in the morning; he addressed himself, as may be supposed, principally to the youths of the establishment.

Old Kingswood is a famous place. Mr. Wesley made it so; and Mr. Arthur's popular work, "The Successful Merchant," of which I see a notice has appeared in your paper, and which will no doubt be as much read in America as it has been and is likely to be in this country, bids fair yet more widely to extend and perpetuate its fame. But somehow or other the impression prevalent respecting Mr. Wesley's Kingswood has been a very erroneous one. It has been supposed that out of one of the darkest places in this dark earth there had arose a very Eden of moral loveliness. Nay, it had even been imagined that the outward aspect of Kingswood had been transformed no less than its moral condition into one of order and beauty. But all this is a decided mistake. The black collieries of Kingswood have ever housed a population dark as the outward aspect of the place and inhabitants, and uncouth and barbarous to the last degree. The labors of Wesley and Whitfield effected a gracious reformation of many of the colliers about the year 1740, but the number was not large in proportion to the general population. A certain superficial impression of seriousness and ignorant awe was also made, no doubt, upon a greater number, but this soon wore away. The Calvinistic leaven and the spirit of dissension and uncharitableness began, as early as 1741, to breed mischief and spiritual alienation and decline among the reformed colliers; and from this period the prestige of Methodism in Kingswood seems to have been to a great extent lost, and the work of grace to have remained almost stationary for many years. The consequence has been that, notwithstanding the early successes of Methodism there, the general character of Kingswood depravity and barbarism has remained unchanged down to the present time. A worse site for a school for Preacher's children could scarcely be imagined. There was positively nor edeeming feature. The cottages round about teemed with a thieving, profane, and foul-mouthed population of youths and girls. The older people, though less busy in wickedness and annoyance, and more engaged in labor, were really for the most part no better. The scenery around was not at all beautiful. The immediate locality was low, damp, and unhealthy. The house, not a recent erection when Mr. Wesley purchased it, was now almost ruinous and incapable of being repaired, except at a most disproportionate expense. The accommodations were altogether insufficient for the augmented number of children, and indeed so insufficient as to be positively unwholesome—some of the sleeping apartments being so close that in a morning the candles and lamps burat very dimly for want of oxygen. And, besides all this, the estate having been undermined in every direction by coal-pits, and the water long ago pumped out, all the water used on the premises had to be "led" from a considerable distance in a water-cart.

Under these circumstances the lay-gentlemen of Methodism resolved a few years ago that the institution in its then present condition was a disgrace to the body, and that a new building must be erected in a suitable situation as early as possible. The Conference, however, clung to Old Kingswood with great tenacity. It was the place of our founder. There he had walked in his last years under the shade of the fine avenues of elms which his own hands, it is said, had planted. There he had preached in the open air under the shade of a sycamore tree standing in the play-ground, and the chapel was his own erection. The garden, especially one sequestered terrace, had been his resort for meditation. It was therefore not until after several discussions, nor until the second Conference, that the Ministers could consent to the removal of the school to another site. It was then desired and endeavored to obtain a suitable site, not very far from the original one, and between that and the city of Bristol, from which Old Kingswood School was distant about three and a half miles. But no such situation could, after long and diligent search, be discovered.

Eventually, therefore, it was decided to remove the establishment to the present site, which has been named New Kingswood. It is on Lansdowne Hill, a lofty and commanding eminence which overhangs the fair and famous city of Bath, seated in the bosom of its amphitheatre of hills, and from which the delighted eye sketches over a prospect more beautiful and splendid than any to be found in South Britian, and only surpassed in the kingdom by the panorama of Edinburgh. Here, in the midst of pure and bracing air, in a situation retired from the city, and yet within convenient reach of it, removed from every debasing influence and association, surrounded by very much that tends to refine the mind and elevate the taste, has been erected by the genius of Mr. Wilson, our accomplished Methodist architect, a structure of chaste beauty suitable to the scenery around, and admirably adapted for all the purposes of the establishment. Accommodation is provided for about 130 boys, besides governor and family, masters, servants etc The cost of the whole, including a small farm estate, and the furniture for every department has been about £16,000. You are aware, doubtless, that for more than thirty years there has been in existence a second school for Preacher's sons, at Woodhouse Grove, in Yorkshire, between Leeds and Bradford. This will now, after recent additions, accommodate about the same number of papils as New Kingswood.

Messrs. Young and Kirk (and in their company a relative of the writer's) set sail from London, for Australia, in the "Melbourne" mail steam packet, as I believe I informed you about five weeks ago. In the Channel, they were tossed about for a week by heavy gales, which proved the steamer, though warranted first-class, to be a rolling, unmanageable vessel, currently called a "tub," and not by any means seaworthy. At Plymouth she was, it was said, repaired, but on leaving port was found not more manageable than before, and running foul of sundry objects which happened to be in her way, she was again damaged, and obliged to put in once more to refit The second time, a few days more having been lost, she really did contrive to get out of harbor, and even out of the Channel. For a few days, having very fair wind and fine weather, she went on cheerily. But a fine "breeze" was more than our steamer could stand. The wind freshened in the Bay of Biscay, and all the topmasts with the jibboom went over at a snap. Then the wreck and hamper got entangled in the screw, and the clumsy vessel lay helpless, wallowing in the sea, for thirty-six hours, till at length the hamper was got clear away. Then she was off again; but anon, it was found that she had sprang a dangerous leak, which even threatened shipwreck, and which the whole power of the engine, and the labor of all hands could barely cope with. The vessel, too, was shamefully overloaded, so that the port-holes had been obliged to be fastened up at Plymouth to prevent the water from entering, an operation which also, of course, prevented the ingress of air. At the same time she was so overcrowded with passengers and live-stock that all the air that could, in any case, have been obtained would have been too little. The cabins and berths were many of them flooded with water, and the boxes, etc., were floating about. The mail-bags had been saturated by the leak. Influenza fever had begun, from causes enumerated above, to prevail, and the able medical man declared his conviction that, in the warmer latitudes, this would change to malignant fever, and be attended, in the present condition of the vessel, with terrible mortality.

Here was a pretty condition of things The captain wisely decided at once to steer for Lisbon, some five hundred miles or more; but the easiest and best port to make. There the Melbourne is now lying. She is to go into dock and be thoroughly repaired, which it will take not a few weeks to accomplish. The passengers insist upon another vessel being sent forward to take them on, or their passage money being refunded and their expenses paid. What the steam-packet company will do remains to be seen. But from a private note from a member of our General Missionary Committee, which has been forwarded to me, I learn that they have decided that the missionary party shall, on no consideration, proceed on their voyage in the Melbourne. And thankful indeed might we all to be to Divine Providence that by such a series of mishaps at the commencement this miserably conditioned vessel has been arrested thus early in her passage to the Antipodes.

The deputation to the Grand Duke of Florence on the subject of the Madiai, suggested by the Evangelical Alliance, and which has actually gone forth under the auspices of the Protestant Alliance, has met with such a reception from his Highness as might have been anticipated. The Duke has civilly, but rather loftily, declined even to see them. However it was well and right that they should go. The Earl of Roden, the principal member of the deputation, has addressed a letter to the Earl of Shropshire, announcing the result of their endeavors, which has been published in the Times. In my letter I mentioned the Hon A. Kinnaird, as one of the members of the deputation. This was according to the original proposition, if not arrangement: but as that excellent gentleman could not accept the commission, Capt. Trotter has gone in his place.

The Parliament has met. Mr. Lefevre has been re-elected Speaker of the Commons. The Queen's speech is to be delivered to-day, and then the pitched battle of parties will commence. That decided, and it must be decided speedily, the brief Autumnal session will terminate. Never was the country more prosperous than at at present. X. Y.

P. S.—So, your great Webster is gone, Our Duke's funeral is appointed for the 17th. November 11, 1852.

APOSTOLIC SUCCESSION.

The absurdity of the claim of a continuous and unbroken succession in the line of Bishops is thus demonstrated by Thomas B. Macaulay, the historian:

The transmission of orders from the apostles to an English clergyman of the present day must have been through a very great number of intermediate persons. Now, it is probable that no clergyman in the Church of England can trace up his spiritual genealogy from bishop to bishop, even so far back as the time of the Reformation. There remains fifteen or sixteen hundred years, during which the history of the transmission of his orders is buried in utter darkness. And whether he be a priest by succession from the apostles, depends on the question whether, during that long period, some thousands of events took place, any one of which may, without any gross improbability, be supposed not to have taken place. We have not a tittle of evidence to any one of these events. We do not even know the names or countries of the men to whom it was taken for granted that those events happened. We do not know whether the spiritual ancestors of any of our contemporaries were Spanish or Armenian Arian or Orthodox. In the utter absence of all particular evidence, we are surely entitled to require that there should be very strong evidence, indeed, that the strictest regularity was observed in every generation, and that episcopal functions were exercised by none who were not bishops by succession from the apostles. But we have no such evidence. In the first place, we have not full and accurate information touching the polity of the Church during the century that followed the persecution of Nero. That, during this period, the overseers of all the little Christian societies scattered through the Roman empire held their spiritual authority by virtue of holy orders derived from the apostles, can not be proved by contemporary testimony, nor by any testimony which can be regarded as decisive. The question, whether the primitive ecclesiastical constitution bore a greater resemblance to the Anglican or to the Calvinistic model, has been fiercely disputed. It is a question on which men of eminent parts, learning and piety, have differed, and do to this day differ very widely. It is a question on which at least a full half of the ability and erudition of Protestant Europe has, ever since the Reformation, been opposed to the Anglican pretensions.

It is surely impolitic to rest the doctrines of the English Church on an historical theory, which, to ninety-nine Protestants out of a hundred, would seem much more questionable than any of those doctrines. Nor is this all. Extreme obscurity overhangs the history of the middle ages, and the facts which are discernible through that obscurity prove that the Church was exceedingly ill-regulated. We read of the sees of the highest dignity openly sold; transferred backwards and forwards by popular tumult; bestowed sometimes by a profligate woman or her paramour; sometimes by a warlike baron on a kinsman, still a stripling. We read of bishops of ten years old; of bishops of five years old; of many popes who were mere boys, and who rivalled the frantic dissoluteness of Caligula; nay, of a female Pope. And though this last story, once believed throughout Europe, has been disproved by the strict researches of modern criticism, the most discerning of those who reject it have admitted that it is not intrinsically improbable. In our own island, it was the complaint of Alfred that not a single priest, south of the Thames, and very few on the north, could read either Latin or English. And this illiterate clergy exercised their ministry amidst a rude and half-heathen population, in which Danish pirates, unchristianed, or christened by the hundred on a field of battle, were mingled with a Saxon peasantry scarcely better instructed in religion. The state of Ireland was still worse. "Tota illa per universum Hiberniam dissolutio ecclesiasticæ disciplinæ—illa ubique pro consuetudine Christiana sæva subundeducta barbaries," are the expressions of St Bernard. We are, therefore, at a loss to conceive how any clergyman can feel confident that his orders have come down correctly. Whether he be really a successor of the apostles, depends on an immense number of such contingencies as these: Whether, under King Ethelwulf, a stupid priest might not, while baptising several scores of Danish prisoners, who had just made their option between the font and the gallows, inadvertently omit to perform the rite on one of these graceless proselytes? Whether, in the seventeenth century, an imposter who had never received consecration, might not have passed himself off as a bishop on a rude tribe of Scots? Whether a lad of twelve did really by a ceremony huddled over when he was too drunk to know what he was about, convey the episcopal character to a lad of ten?

Since the first century, not less, in all probability, than one hundred thousand persons have exercised the functions of bishops. That many of these have not been bishops by apostolical succession, is quite certain. Hooker admits that deviations from the general rule have been frequent, and with a boldness worthy of his high and statesmanlike intellect, pronounces them to have been often justifiable. "There may be," he says, "sometimes very just and sufficient reason to allow ordination made without a bishop. Where the Church needs must have some ordained, and neither hath nor can have possibly a bishop to ordain, in case of such necessity the ordinary institution of God hath given oftentimes, and may give place." And therefore we are not simply without exception to urge a lineal descent of power from the apostles by continued succession of bishops in every effectual ordination." There can be little doubt, we think, that the succession, if it ever existed, has often been interpreted in ways much less respectable. For example, let us suppose—and we are sure that no person will think the supposition by any means man of no principle and some parts, who has, in the course of a roving and discreditable life, been a catechumen at Antioch, and has there become familiar with Christian usages and doctrines, afterwards rambles to Marseilles, where he finds a Christian society, rich, liberal and simple-hearted. He pretends to be a Christian, attracts notice by his abilities and affected zeal, and is raised to the episcopal dignity without having ever been baptised. That such an event might happen, may, was very likely to happen, can not be well disputed by any one who has read the life of Peregrinus. The very virtues, indeed, which distinguished the early Christians, seem to have laid them open to those arts which deceived—

"Eric, though flegent of the Sun, and held
The sharp-sighted spirit of all in heaven."

Now, this unbaptized imposter is evidently no successor of the apostles. He is not even a Christian; and all orders derived through such a pretended bishop are altogether invalid. Do we know enough of the state of the world and of the Church in the third century, to be able to say, with confidence, that there were not at that time twenty such pretended bishops? Every such case makes a break in the apostolic succession.

Now suppose that a break, such as Hooker admits to have been both common and justifiable, or such as we have supposed to be produced by hypocrisy and cupidity, were found in the chain which connected the apostles with any of the missionaries who first spread Christianity in the wilder parts of Europe; who can say how extensive the effect of this single break may be? Suppose that Saint Patrick, for example, if ever there was such a man, or Theodore of Tarsus, who is said to have consecrated in the seventh century the first bishops of many English sees, had not the true apostolical orders, is it not conceivable, that such a circumstance may affect the orders of many clergymen now living? Even if it were possible, which it assuredly is not, to prove that the Church had the apostolical orders in the third century, it would be impossible to prove that those orders were not in the twelfth century so far lost that no ecclesiastic could be certain of the legitimate descent of his own spiritual character. And if this were so, no subsequent precautions could repair the evil."

A TARTAR HOT-HOUSE.—Sometimes the travelers slept in their tent, which was apt to be very cold, and sometimes in a house which was apt to be extremely hot; in fact, they slept on a furnace when in a native house. The entire household was in one large room, where all the cooking, eating, sleeping, talking and scolding went on—to say nothing of smoking and gambling. In the midst of the apartment there is always a large raised counter, on which everybody sits and lies down to sleep. In one end of this counter boilers are inserted for the cooking, and the heat from the furnace passes into the interior of the "kang," as the counter is called, affording a warm bed to every body. A reed matting, or a floor of plank, is spread under the sleeper; but, if he do not accurately understand how to place the reeds or the planks, he is likely to be "done brown" on one side while the other may chance to be stiff with cold. If this is cleverly managed, there is still much which is not exactly conducive to sleep; for instance, swarms of vermin, clouds of tobacco, and the fumes of the burning dung, of garlic, and rancid oil, such as the cotton wick is floating in. Then there is the gossip of one party, who may like to lay awake very late, chatting over their tea; or of another, who may prefer having their tea in the middle of the night; or of a third, who may want it before they go out at daybreak. On the whole, we feel that whenever we travel there, we shall prefer the tent, if we can but keep up any vital warmth in us at all. In a tent one can at least have a choice of posture, whereas in a Tartar inn the sleepers on a kang, if numerous, must lie in a circle, with their feet all together in the middle.

THE GENTLEWOMAN.—"I cannot forbear pointing out to you, my dearest child," said Lord Collingwood to his daughter, "the great advantages that will result from a temperate conduct and sweetness of manner, to all people on all occasions. Never forget that you are a gentlewoman, and all your words and actions should mark you gentle. I never heard your mother—your dear, good mother—say a harsh or hasty thing to any person in my life. Endeavor to imitate her. I am quick and hasty in my temper; but my darling, it is a misfortune which, not having been restrained in my youth, has caused me inexpressible pain. It has given me more trouble to subdue this impetuosity than any thing I ever undertook."

HAPPY OLD FARMER.—A venerable old Scotch farmer of eighty years, said to a relation on a visit to him, "I have lived on this farm more than half a century. I have no desire to change my residence; I have no wish to be any richer than I now am. I have worshipped the God of my fathers with the same people more than forty years. During that period I have scarcely ever been absent from the sanctuary on the Sabbath, and I have never lost more than one communion season. I have never been confined to a bed of sickness for a single day. The blessings of God have been richly spread around me, and I have made up my mind long ago, that, if I wished to be happier I must have more religion than I have at present."

AN AGREEMENT OF OPINION.—An old Connecticut pastor, whose peculiarities of preaching were proverbial, and who was blessed with a temper of great value, was one day told by a parishioner that he did not like his sermons. "Well," said the old man, "I don't wonder at it; I don't like 'em myself."

REMINISCENCES—"Uncle Winter."

Mingled with the recollections of the past is the image of of "one to fortune and to fame unknown;" but whose name doubtless is written in fair characters in the Lamb's Book of Life. He was a man of ordinary intellect, and almost entirely deficient in fancy and imagination. He had well improved the one talent committed to his trust. No one could avoid being struck with his appearance. He was one of Africa's sable sons, of middle stature, firmly and compactly built, his complexion was very black, his eyes large, mild, and serious. In short, his appearance was that of gravity personified. Though he was a slave, and of a degraded race, he compelled respect by his dignity, and the power and truth of his character. He would not have swerved from what he thought right to save a world. At one time in his life he belonged to a gentleman who felt it right, or necessary in order to save an amount of property, to have some work done on the Sabbath. When the work was done, the gentleman called his servants up to pay them for their work. Uncle Winter said, "No master! you are my master, and what you toll me to do I must do it; but I dont want any money." Yet he liked to have money, and such property as servants usually accumulate around them. As he was particular to respect the rights of others, he wished every one to respect his rights and privilege. I saw the old man turn round once in grave rebuke on a young preacher who called him "boy." We children would as soon have thought of being impertinent to our father as to Uncle Winter. I used to watch him with the observant eye of childhood; I never recollect to have seen him do wrong or lose his dignity. I do not remember to have over heard him laugh; he would smile seriously, and sometimes he would laugh heartily and shake his sides, but he would not laugh loudly. When he walked he seemed to put his feet down by mathematical rules, and to have a purpose in setting them down as he did. He seemed to obey the letter of the Scripture, which tells us to "ponder on the ways of our feet."

His wife belonged to a planter on another plantation, and Uncle Winter always spent his nights, Sabbaths, and holydays at home in his cabin, which was comfortable and surrounded with many conveniences. In the evening, after attending to getting wood and making a fire for his mistress, he would light a pine torch and start for his cabin. The road was for two miles through a thick forest. I have often pictured the scene to myself—the long, narrow road, the forest on each side, looking like dark frowning walls, and the grave, serious old man soberly walking along, with his flaming torch in his hand. That road could tell of many bright thoughts of Heaven. I never heard that the old man was ever molested, or even frightened but once. One night he was slowly wending his way along the still, lonely road when, suddenly raising his eyes, he saw a horrid monster standing before him just in his path. It was not like any thing he had ever seen before. It was as large as two or three cotton bales; its feet were like nothing that he knew of, and it had something that looked like old saddle-skirts on each side of its ugly head. "Ah!" thought Uncle Winter, "Old Satan hates me, I know, for the harm I have done his kingdom, and the many things I have said against him. Now he has come in bodily shape to scare me!" In a few moments he found out that it was a great elephant that the "show men" were driving along in the night to keep persons along the road from getting a sight of "the elephant" without paying for it.

When I knew Uncle Winter he was the servant of an itinerant preacher. He changed owners twice in his life, in order to go with his wife and his children. He was always an object of respect and consideration to those who were his owners. He joined the Methodist Church in South Carolina about the year 1804, and continued a member until the time of his triumphant death, 1843, I think. I used to hear him tell about his conversion in Love Feast. I recollect he said he "was mourning some time, and felt like a man carrying a heavy burthen; but when he was converted he felt like a person does who has been carrying a heavy stick of wood on his shoulder and thrown it down." I think he joined society under Hope Hull. I should like very much to have Uncle Winter's likeness as he sat in church, in his decent Sunday garb, listening with dignified attention to the preaching of that Word which had made him wise unto salvation. In our old church there was a short bench that sat near the pulpit on the black people's side; on this bench usually sat two men, who might have given lessons in gravity and dignity of deportment to a bench of Bishops; whose word was as good as any men's bond—Uncle Winter and Uncle Adam.

Uncle Adam had a kind master and the privileges common to faithful servants. His master was somewhat skeptical in religion; but I have heard that he said that if "there was any thing in religion, his man knew all about it." Uncle Adam still lives, a faithful servant to his master, and a happy child of God. His license to exhort was received only a few weeks ago. About a year ago God converted some members of his master's family. I think Uncle Adam loves his Saviour better than ever, now that he has given some of his kind master's household to his faithful prayers.

I do not think Uncle Winter ever pined for freedom. He was emphatically Christ's freeman, and that sufficed for him; and to please his Heavenly Master, and to do his duty to his indulgent earthly master, filled his whole being. Had I the time and talents of Mrs. Stowe, I could write a book about Uncle Winter which would rival "Uncle Tom's Cabin" for interest—and my book would be ALL TRUE.

Often, in the absence of his master, his mistress would gather the family together for prayers. She would read the chapter, we all would join in singing a hymn, and then getting on our knees, she would call on Uncle Winter to lead us in prayer. He was not a revivalist among his own people; but he reproved their evil ways, and stood up before them as an example of what a Christian servant should be.

MARY.

Clinton, La.

"MY WIFE IS THE CAUSE OF IT."

It is now more than forty years ago that Mr. L—— called at the house of Dr. B—— on a very cold morning, on his way to H——. "Sir," said the Doctor, "the weather is very frosty; will you take something to drink before you start?" In that early day ardent spirits were deemed indispensable to warmth in winter. When commencing a journey, and at every stopping-place along the road, the traveler used intoxicating liquors to keep him warm.

"No," said Mr. L——, "I never touch any thing of the kind; and I will tell you the reason; my wife is the cause of it." I had been in the habit of meeting some of our neighbors every evening for the purpose of playing cards. We assembled at each other's shop, and liquors were introduced. After a while we met not so much for they playing as the drinking, and I used to return home late in the evening more or less intoxicated. My wife always met me at the door affectionately; and when I chided her for sitting up so late for me, she kindly replied, 'I prefer doing so, for I can not sleep when you are out.'

"This always troubled me; I wished in my heart that she would only begin to scold me, for then I could have retorted and relieved my conscience. But she always met me with the same gentle and loving spirit.

"Things passed on thus for some time, when at last I resolved that I would, by remaining very late and returning much intoxicated, provoke her displeasure so much as to cause her to lecture me, when I meant to answer with severity, and thus, by creating another issue between us, unburthen my bosom of its present trouble.

"I returned in such a plight about four o'clock in the morning. She met me at the door with her usual tenderness, and said, "Come, in husband; I have just been making a warm fire for you, because I knew you would be cold. Take off your boots, and warm your feet, and here is a warm cup of hot coffee.'

"Doctor, that was too much. I could no longer endure it any longer, and I resolved that moment that I would never touch another drop while I lived; and I never will."

He never did; he lived and died practicing total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks, in a village which Intemperance has ravaged as much as any other in this State.

That men was my father, and that woman my mother. The facts above related I received from the Doctor himself, when on a visit to my native village not long since.

May we not safely infer that were there more wives like my blessed mother, there would be fewer confirmed drunkards?

SAURIN'S DESCRIPTION OF A DYING INFIDEL.—"Oh! were my tongue dipped in the gall of celestial displeasure, I would describe the state of a man expiring in the cruel uncertainties of unbelief. Ah, see! every thing conspires to trouble him now. 'I am dying; I despair of recovering; physicians have given me over; the sighs and tears of my friends are useless; the world cannot cure; I must die. It is death itself that preaches to me. Whither am I going? What will become of my body? My God, what a spectacle! The horrid torches; the dismal shroud; the coffin; the tolling bell; the subterranean abode! What will become of my soul? I am ignorant of its destiny; I am plunging into eternal night. My infidelity tells me my soul is nothing but a portion of subtile matter; another world, a vision; immortality, a fancy; but yet I feel I know not what, that troubles my infidelity. Annihilation, terrible as it is, would appear tolerable to me were not the ideas of heaven and hell to present themselves to me in spite of myself. I see heaven, that mansion of glory, shut against me. I see it at an immense distance. I see it, but my crimes forbid me to enter. I see hell—hell, which I have ridiculed; it opens under my feet. I hear the horrible groans of the damned; the smoke of the bottomless pit chokes my words, and wraps my thoughts in suffocating darkness.'

"Such is the infidel on his dying bed. This is not an imaginary flight; it is not an arbitrary invention; it is what we see every day in those fatal visits to which our ministry engages us, and to which God seems to call us to be sorrowful witnesses of his displeasure and vengeance. This is what infidelity comes to; this is what infidelity is good for; thus most skeptics die.

SELF-TAXATION.—The taxes are indeed, heavy; and if those laid on by government were the only ones we had to pay, we might more easily discharge them; but we have many others, and much more grievous to some of us. We are taxed twice as much by our idleness, three times as much by our pride, and four times as much by our folly; and from these taxes the commissioners can not ease or deliver us by allowing any abatement. [Franklin.

TASTING DEATH.—He was not so much buried as for a while deposited in the grave; for a small, inconsiderable space; so that even in this respect he may not inelegantly be said to have tasted of death; for a taste is transient, short, and quickly passed. [South's Sermons.

FISHING FOR COMPLIMENTS.—Some people angle for praise with the bait of humility. I hope you will never be caught by it. They condemn themselves, hoping that you will contradict them, and commend them. I join them in running down, [Swift.

Saturday Morning, December 11.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SELMA, Ala., Dec. 2, 2852.

MY DEAR W.: The "Fashion" landed me here this morning before dawn, with a goodly lot of passengers. Having breakfasted, and while waiting for the stage to Marion, which is expected in an hour, I drop you a few lines not by way of killing time, but filling it up pleasantly—to myself if not to the readers of the Advocate.

Monday evening last, on getting fairly out upon the breezy and bracing Lake Ponchartrain, I felt the usual delightful sensation of city escape. I like New Orleans much, but rather as a working place than a dwelling place. When friends inquire, as often they do—How do you like it? my answer is this: I like it as the physioinn likes a sickly and the lawyer a litigious place, because much is to be done in their line of business there. This I opine is the foundation of every preacher's preference for the Crescent City. One that he need not be ashamed of, truly. The Conferences come around not too often for me, offering not only an occasion of reunion with brethren beloved, but a fair pretext to get away from din and smoke, and take a deep, free, full inspiration of nir. "Air," to use the language of Hawthorne in going to Blithedale, "that has not been breathed once and again! Air that has not been spoken into words of falsehood, formality and error, like all the air of the dusky city!" But forsooth, it is rather too raw and chilly this morning to discourse lovingly on fresh air. So, as father Axley said about finely dressed yonng preachers, "If you please, we'll drop the subject."

There is one point of the short and pleasant trip from New Orleans to Mobile that I never pass without more or less nnxiety. It is the half-artificial canalway or cut-off, between the mainland and Dauphin island—Grant's pass. About day-light Tuesday I was awoke from dreaming slumbers by the struggling of the steamer, now backing, now trying a forward step, accompanied with interminable ringing of bells in the engineer's room. Having no time to lose, the result was waited for in suspense, not pleasant. I had a dreary memory of a day spent four years ago, on the same spot. By and by, there was a cessation of effort, followed by a noise as of steam letting off. My hopes went down with the steam guago. Stuck fast, nnd the tide must be waited for.

I venture that the face-scenes presented in the cabin of a steamer aground and waiting for a rise are no where else to be encountered. An effort at reconciliation to a necessity, a suspension of that eagerness of pursuit with which a tide will not sympathise; the certainty that it will rise in its time offsetting the certainty that we are resting on the bottom; the despair that now we can't go, struggling with the assurance that soon we will go—and thrown over all, the resolution to make the best of it—these combine to form in every countenance a peculiar expression.

Soon the yellow covered magazines were in pretty general requisition. The yellow covers: those light literature things that Dr. Bethune has well called the caterpillars of the tree of knowledge. A tract distributor would have done a fine business those six or eight hours we lay aground. I blamed myself much that I had not tracts to improve the occasion with and resolved not to set out again upon a day's journey in any direction without a well selected parcel. Let me make this suggestion to others.

We reached Mobile just in time to get aboard the Fashion, a fine, fast steamer, new and under a good captain. I may be allowed to say this with an independent and good conscience, as I paid my full fare and got the worth of it, and hope to be permitted to do the same thing again. As we neared the Mobile wharf several cabin boys were holding out the handbills of the boat and inviting passengers. One, in advance of his fellows, cried out lustily for patronage, holding up the large red lettered bill up side down. "Read, gentlemen," said he, "read it. See, there it is, 'fore your own eyes—Fashion starts torectly."

On board we had a large company, generally agreeable, including a judge and a Congressman from Texas, on their way to Washington, and some of the lawyers and planters and a doctor. But among all I found no such goodly companionship as in a Methodist preacher who got aboard at one of the landings, bordering his Circuit. I write it plain, Methodist preacher. I will not put it clergyman. Methodist preacher! The charm is spoiled when you refine it. Bro. A. Dickinson is on his way to Conference, where we both expect to be by noon of to-day. He is one of the four original preachers in the Alabama Conference. The other three are E. V. Levert, E. Hearn and W. Wier. By original, we mean they were members of the Alabama Conference at its first session, held in Tuscaloosa, 1832. Of all who were present and took part in the organization of this, now the first of the Southern Conferences, they alone remain. The others have located, transferred or died in the work. They belong to an age of far-travel and itinerant labor, that has been somewhat mitigated in these days that fall to our lot. The old English poet, Chaucer, has well described the itinerant pastor of that day—

"Wide was his cure, the houses far asunder.
Yet failed he not, for rain or thunder."

In my ante-breakfast walk through Selma, I have been impressed with the beauty of its location, its capacity of prosperity and considerableness, if not greatness, and its actual thrift. Houses are going up of the most substantial character and others of like sort are fresh from the mason's and carpenter's hands. Not the least pleasing and useful of the broad and level streets are four artesian wells, of 350 and 400 feet in depth, pouring out their pure crystal treasures, free as air, for man and beast. A railroad enters Selma or starts from it, leading northward. It is completed forty-two miles and the locomotive passes over it daily, with its lengthening train of commercial wealth. I saw some excellent coal this morning from the mauntainous region above, nn earnest of the immense mineral wealth that is just beginning to be tapped by the road. Mr. Parham, the factotum of all this iron rail business and locomotives, tells me that another road has been contracted for from this point to Woodville, in Perry county, Ala.,—the first section of the road intended to intersect at Jackson, Miss., the New Orleans and Great Northern Railroad.

Of course Selma must be increasing fast in population. Just this moment I asked the landlord—How large is your population? "Well," said he, "I really can't say. The place is going up so fast of late I havn't kept the run of it."

The Churches are well represented. The Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, Cumberland Presbyterians, and Methodists each have a neat and commodious church, well supported, nnd their pulpits well supplied.

Last week a Temperance Convention was held here, destined to exert an important influence upon the morality and prosperity of the State. Lower and Middle Alabamn sent up about 300 delegates; North Alnbamn very few. The Convention were decided as to the LAW they should recommend for State legislation. The clergy and old men in the Convention went for the MAINE LAW; the middle aged and young men for what they called the ALABAMA LAW. There was much and able discussion, but good feeling. Rev. Mr. De Votie, nn eloquent Baptist minister, ndvocated the former, and Mr. Clitherall led the party in favor of the latter law. The Convention agreed upon the latter. The difference is this: The Maine law prohibits, by an act of the Legislature, the introducing or sale of liquor in the State. The Alabamn law leaves it to the separate action of cities, counties, etc., to prohibit the liquor traffic in their bounds. In other words, the Alabama law so called, is but our Louisiann law. Good—but not good enough.

Yours, truly, H. N. McTYEIRE.

ZEAL.

Zeal bas been defined by lexicographers to be a certain heat or fervor of mind. It may be excited by any or all the motives that prompt men to netion entirely independent of the moral charneteristics of action. No doubt this susceptibility was implanted in our natures by our Creator for the wisest and most beneficent purposes.

But sin has perverted every capability of human nature, and we are now as capable of putting forth zenl in behalf of vice as we are of virtue.

The history of our race abounds with countless instances of zenl manifested in behalf of selfishness and wrong-doing. But the Bible, which nlways paints man and his motives true to life, presents us with the best specimens of the various developments of zeal.

We have the hypocritical and selfish zeal of Jehu—we hear him saying to Jehonadab, as he took him up into his chariot, "Come with me and see my zeal for the Lord." And how did this zeal for the Lord mnnifest itself? In putting Queen Jezubel and all the royal family to death, and the priest of Baal, who supported by their influence the royal house of Ahabe, whose place and thryne Jehu aspired to fill, Howbeit from the sins of Jetohoam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, Jehu departed not from after them, to wit: "the golden calves that were in Bethel and that were in Dan." So his pretended zeal for the Lord amounted to this—that he must get rid of all his rivals, and all who supported the claims of his rivals to the throne of Israel. It was thought dangerous for his subjects to go up to Jerusalem to present there their offerings to the true God—they might thus become attached to the house of David, and cooled in their attachment to the person and government of Jehu. So these golden calves at Dan and Bethel must be retained and idolatry taken under royal patronage to secure the ends of a selfish ambition.

We have another instance of perverted zeal—the zeal of bigotry in the early history of our Lord's disciples. John, who seemed on this occasion so speak for his colleagues, said, "Master, we saw one casting out devils in thy name; and we forbade him because he followeth not with us." What an unmitigated display of sectarian bigotry have we here. John acknowledges that the man was engaged in a good work, he was "casting out devils"—further, he admits that he was doing it by proper authority—"in thy name." The same authority that John claimed to work under himself—but but what? Why "he did not follow us" Ah! that was the difficulty and the only difficulty. If he had just followed us—if he had only joined our Church, it would all have been well enough. But we have chartered privileges—a patent right for doing good, and we do not intend to allow our perogative to be encroached upon yeat shall not do good at all unless you obtain letters patent from us.

Would to God that all such bigots could hear with faith and submission the broad minded and magnanimous answer of John's Heavenly Master: "Forbid him not, for he that is not against us is for us."

We have another remarkable instance of the perversion of zeal—a pretended zeal for religion that was only meant to subserve the ends of worldly gain—in the history of Demetrius, the silversmith, and his fellow-craftsmen of the city of Ephesus.

The preaching of St. Paul was attended with great success, and thousands throughout Asia Minor abandoned the worship of idols. Demetrius was a manufacturer af little silver images of the Goddess Diana, "which brought him no small gain." He clearly perceived that if Paul was allowed to preach it would prove highly injurious to his business. Something must be done; so he assembled the craftsmen and harangued them upon the posture of their affairs, and said: "Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth; moreover, ye see and hear that, not nlone at Ephesus, but almost throughout all Asia, this Paul hath persuaded and turned away much people, saying that there be no Gods which are made with hands; so that not only is this our craft in danger to be set at nought, but also that the temple of the great Goddess Diana should be despised, and her magnificence should be destroyed, whom all men and the world worshippeth." And when they heard these sayings they were full of wrath, and cried out, saying "Great is Diana of the Ephesians!" Yes, great is Diann of the Ephesians, and wherefore? Because this our craft is in danger. This was at the bottom of the whole of this mighty ebullition of zeal for the great goddess Diana.

We are frequently reminded of this passage in sacred history by what is passing around us in the varied movements of society. Specially have we been frequently of late called to recognise this same spirit, and this same demagoguing in the anti-temperance speaking and writing of the times. If the lovers of good order, humanity and religion propose to take any efficient steps to stay the onrushing and overwhelming flood of intemperance that is sweeping down the firmest stays and fairest hopes of society, you shall hear a mighty cry come rushing up from ten thousand throats inflamed with brandy, "Great is liberty—heaven-born, heaven-descended liberty. Our glorious sires fought for liberty—liberty to sell, liberty to buy and, above all, liberty to drink brandy!" Yes, that's it—their craft and their vices are in danger. The whole land must be filled with their brazen din, and the true lovers of their country and of their kind are called despots and tyrants, nnd these amiable brandy-selling citizens are the only true friends and exponents of the great principles of human liberty.

METHODIST PRESS.

We clip the following item from the Zion's Herald, as indicative of the progress of abolition in the Church North:

"Resolved, That in the judgment of the Wisconsin Annual Confereuce, our Discipline should be so modified as to prevent the future admission of slaveholders into the Church, and require those members now holding slaves to set the same at liberty, except in those cases in which, owing to the stringency of the slave laws, it may be found necessary to permit the legal relation to exist, for the protection and support of the slave.

"Resolved, That while we deem it expedient that provision be made for those members in the slaveholding States who desire the pastoral oversight of the M. E. Church, we nevertheless concur in the opinion, that no member should be admitted or retained in the church at the South, and that no missionary moneys should be appropriated to sustain domestic missions there, except on the conditions expressed in the foregoing resolution."

The subjoined, from the Northern Christian Advacate, would seem to be an argument against the expediency of a great mammouth paper—Church paper—and of the value of several mediums of public opinion. As the render will see, the extract is a part of the Bond and Hosmer controversy on the slavery question:

"First, the editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal is no longer a dispenser of fate. There was a time when that paper had a representative character; it was almost our only paper, and the editor could set up or put down as he pleased; where, when and whom were precisely at his control, and there was none to dispute his authority. That day has happily gone by, and long may it be before it returns. It not now in the power of one man to fix an ineffaceable stain upon another. Dr. Bond's decrees are much like papal bulls—once powerful, but now a mere farce."

We are gratified to hear the owners speak so encouragingly of the prospects and circulation of the Memphis Christian Advocate:

"The circulation of the Advacate has increased in the last year to a considerable extent, so that we have now the largest weekly circulation of any paper in the city, besides its being the fire-side companion of thousands in the interior of our State, in Mississippi and Arkansas. As a medium for advertising it presents facilities superior to any paper in the West.

We find the following judicious nnd well-tined remarks upon "Animal Excitement," from the editorial pen of the Holston Christian Advocate:

"But what is animal excitement? and what, in connection with a concern for the soul's welfare? We are sometimes told in a report of a revival of religion, that there was little or no animal excitement—and this is regarded as proof of the depth and genuineness of the work. We have been ever told that animal excitement is not only useless in time of revival, but dangerous also.

"Irrational animals are capable of excitement, and when excited, we suppose this to be animal excitement, because it is not the result of reasom—it is not the effect af motives moving n higher nature; but merely the instinctive impulses of fear, of rosentment, or of gratification; and ratiocination, or n connection of thought, or the nppreheusion of motive, is supposed to have nothing to do in producing the excitement. This, then, we presume all will agree, is animal excitement.

"When the animal nature of man is operated upon by similar causes, it will hardly be questioned that this too, is animal excitement. But when the faculties of a rational mind are called into exercise, and thought, reflection, and the power of motives, are brought to bear—we demur to the idea of animal excitement. We demur, for this plain reason—however the animal may be excited, it is the INTELLECTUAL and the MORAL man that leads in the operation, and is held responsible for the character of actions performed under the influence of the excitement."

REVIVAL INTELLIGENCE.

Since my last to you it has been my good fortune to assist my brethren in several very interesting meetings. At Raymond, Miss., and Vernon, Madison county, Miss., we have seen great and precious outpourings of the Spirit of Grace, and many precious souls have been brought to a knowledge of sins forgiven, and are now rejoicing in "God their Saviour." Our prospects are bright, and brightening. "The Lord has done great things for us," and we are rejaicing in "the multitude of his mercies," and "the riches of his grace." May we continue to enjoy "times of refreshings from his presence," until all the land shall be revived and blessed with an increase of every spiritual grnce.

I promised in my last to forwnrd you a few incidents connected with these revivals, which promise I fulfill. These cases are given simply to illustrate faith and the manner of its exercise, with the hope that it may assist others to "believe to the saving of their souls."

In June last, while assisting Bro. H. at a protracted meeting in Warren county, we met with a brother wha had been in the Church for years without the comforts of religion. For years he had been in Bunyan's Doubting Castle. If he had faith at all, it was by far too feeble to afford him comfort. He attended to every Christian duty, and was in all things circumspect. Yet he was "in heaviness through manifold temptations." Yet he was not blessed with "the full assurance of faith."

During this meeting there was a sermon preached on faith, in which the nature of faith, its elements, and the manner of its exercise, were brought in review before the congregation. The brother mentioned was intensely interested in every word spoken, and entered with all his soul into the subject. As the preacher advanced in his positions and proofs, there was a manifest yielding upon the part of that brother. It was exciting to see the changes and varied phases of his countennance, as his heart was assenting, nay, trusting; without reserve relying upon the great scheme of salvation by faith. The preacher closed his nrgument, paused a moment, and then challenged any present who had believed while he was preaching, and that moment "believed with a heart unto righteousness," to make "confession with their mouth unto salvation," by advancing and giving him their hands. The brother mentioned rose, threw up both hands, and exclaimed, "I see it!—I believe—I believe now!". It was a shock from Heaven's own battery of grace on the congregation.

Just at that moment the preacher's eye rested upon nnother—a lady, that during the sermon had been as deeply and as intensely interested as was the brother mentioned above. Her eye was downcast; her countenance fixed, as if the soul was forming some deep and desperate resolve; as if the soul was torn by some tremendous impulse. The eye, the countenance, the whole being, seemed summoned to some mighty net; some daring deed. She slowly but firmly began ta rise from her seat to make the required confession. That was the moment of triumph!—of complete victory! She believed, nnd in a moment God honored that faith by "sealing her with the holy spirit of promise," and loud and long did her soul praise nnd magnify the God of her salvation.

Others arose nnd testiefid their faith, nnd were blessed in "confessing the Lord Jesus." They believed, and were not confounded. Their faith saved them; for they "believed to the saving of their souls."

One other case, I select from a long list that I have noted, that I will mention, because there is in almast every community similar cases, that should their eye meet this ense their faith may be encouraged.

At one of these meetings there was a brother whose constant coming to the altar attracted my attention. On inquiry I found him to be a man of standing, of reading, and to possess a mind of no ordinary mould. I also found that he had been several years in the condition he was then in. He seemed indeed a mourner in Zion. His tears and deep heart-felt sighs testified to the sincerity and depth of his conviction. I approached him and, by a few minutes conversation, was fully convinced that he was not seeking salvation by faith, but "by the works of the law;" by his tears and penitence, in a way that excluded faith in the atonement. I stated my conviction of his case, explained faith, its element, its exercise, how God saved by faith through Christ. I urged him to believe then—there—at this moment! His tears ceased—he looked up—he believed—he was saved! He testified to the grace that saved by faith, and rejoiced in Him who saveth to the uttermost those that come unto God by Christ.

On the day following, in an "experience-meeting," this dear brother felt it to be so plain and easy to be saved by faith that he would tell to all, and remove the difficulty. He proceeded with great particularity, stated fully the fnct that he believed; but when he came to describe the effect of that faith he saw and felt his difficulty, and closed by confessing that he could not describe it; but one thing he did know, it was the simplest thing in the world, and that it made him feel very happy.

Having filled my sheet, I close this communication, promising you that if I can catch up time, and you do not interdict, I may give you an account of other cases that will if possible more fully illustrate the blessed truth that "we are saved by grace through faith, that not of ourselves, it is the gift of God."

GERMAN MISSIONS.

To Rev. E. W. Sehon, D. D., Secretary of the Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South:

DEAR BRATHER: Herewith do I wish to inform you again of our work in this city, and of the success that has attended our labor up to the present time.

The German Missians do not only exist, but they are alive, and enjoy the fostering hand of God, as well as of his Church. Your missionaries can report, that according to their ability and knowledge they have prosecuted the work assigned to them with assiduity and zeal; not trusting, however, to their own strength, but in the grace of God, and in the strength of His power. According to the Apostle's injunctinn, we preach the Word in season and out of season, with all long suffering, by visiting from house to house, as well as at our places of worship, and at stated hours.

We wish we could report a larger number of necessions to the Church at the close of this Conference year than we are enabled to do. It must be borne in mind, however, that our work among our countrymen is a peculiar work; that it requires time, patience and hard labor in order to make a general break upon the prejudiced minds of the Germans. Their religion, inherited from their fathers, is to them a sacred relic, although it consists in church creeds and ceremonies. To persude them to forsake their formality and take hold of the life and power of religion is, in their eyes, nothing less than sacrilege. Those that call themselves more enlightened (aufgeklart) smile at us contemptuously, and hold us up in no better light than did the Greeks at Athens the Apostle Paul. In their eyes we a set of crnzy babblers that have run mad with the superstition of a crucified Jesus! They ridicule the very idea of Jesus Christ being the Son of God and, the Savionr of the world. Hence, they consider the preaching of the Gospel a piece of folly.

Others that style themselves the true Christians, because they call themselves Lutherans and Evangelicals, Reformed, or Roman Catholics, who, of course, according to their traditions, are the only true and saving Church on earth, because their errors and superstitions have, in the wisdom of God, been permitted to become hoary-headed, anathematize each other, and every other society that does not believe as they teach, or obey what they command.

We should suppose, however, that the Lutherans and the Evangelical Reformed were yet the better portion; but, strange as it may sound, with Bible in hand, they teach the most absurd doctrines. The former, for instance, denounce the Papists, and call the Roman Catholic Church the mother of harlots and abominations, while they teach and believe that baptism is the new birth, and the bread and wine in the Lord's Supper is the real flesh and blood of the body of our Lord Jesus Christ. The latter speak of Faith, and of a justification by faith; but their faith is nothing more than a mere assentation of the truths of the Bible, and their justication, in most cases, nothing more than a mere nótion in the brain! With their lives they deny what they profess with their lips.

Thus, you see, that our success depends wholly on the power of God; for nothing but Almighty Power can convict and convert our fellow-countrymen. Glory be to God that this, his convicting and converting power has been displayed among us. From the different parts of Europe, as also from the different churches, God has, through the weak instrumentality of your missionaries, selected him a people zealous unto good works. Peaceably are they now united into one band of valiant soldiers of Jesus Christ, armed with the panoply of God, and their banner over them is Peace and Love.

The First Mission is now in a better condition than it ever has been before. We have built a temporary house of worship upon the back part of our church-lot, 28 by 48 feet. This house we will occupy until our contemplated Missionary Church is built, and then it is to be turned into dwellings. The membership of this Missson is at present seventy-five divided into five classes. The two Sabbath schools connected with it are in a prospering condition, well arranged, and ably conducted. They have six officers and sixteen teachers. About one hundred children in attendance.

The Second Mission is also doing well, the congregntion s are increasing, and the number in the Society is gradually swelling. They are now numbering 55 members: the prospect better than ever. Their Sabbath school is in a healthy and growing condition. It has 4 officers, 11 teachers, about 36 children in attendance.

The Third Mission has not been so prosperous during the year, on account of some ungovernable members who made as much trouble, but we have now got rid of them. We have dropped and expelled about 10, so that there are now but 15 left. The missionary has labored faithfully during the year, and we expect a better state of things in that part of the work.

We expect to make a beginning with the building of our Missionary Church immediately after Conference, although we lack considerable yet of the money necessary for its erection. We are encouraged, however, by the success we met with on our tour to East Alnbama, and hope we shall be able to make up a considerable portion of the amount yet required, by making another trip to West Alabama, as also in our own Louisiana.

The church we must have, and no doubt we shall have it. Our general success among the Germans in this city depends on it. Our prospects in the work were never so bright as they are now. We doubt not but what every Christian heart is ready and willing to assist in this glorious work of evangelizing these hundreds and thousands of foreigners that land week after week on our shores.

It is our earnest prayer that God may enable us very soon to become strong enough, so as to be able to help ourselves and pay back again into the Missionary Treasury what these missions cost to sustain them.

May the blessings of God rest upon you, dear brother, is the prayer of your humble brother in Christ Jesus.

JOHN M. HOFER.

FUNERAL CEREMONIES OF THE 9th.

The Morning.

Thursday last was the day set apart for the funeral pageant of the three great lights of the age—Clay, Calhoun and Webster. On the previous night the rain had fallen in torrents, and although many feared and some had predicted that the weather would continue unpropitious, a brisk wind came out from the North, scattering the mists, giving a freshness to the atmosphere, and leaving the sky without a cloud. On the morning of the appointed day the sun shed its splendor upon a scene ever memorable, and the like of which we shall not look upon in each day and generation. Whether we consider the fame of the great dead, in honor to whom the solemn pageant was instituted, or the diligence of their genius that shed its brilliancy on the declining years of a past generation and lent a lustre to the present age—whether looking at the magnificence of the preparations the outline and taste of the appointments, or the solemnity that marked the day's ceremonials, we may search the recorded of the time and find for them no parallel.

The only drawback experienced was from the rivers of mud that covered the streets in consequence of the previous night's rain, and meantime and feminine girl and urchin, felt its effects in soiled patent leather, draggled flounces and bedabbled pantalettes. Late in the day, through the warmth of the sun and the continued trampling of the hurrying thousands, the streets became comparatively dry. This muddy inconvenience had, however no effect in damping the ardor of those who wished to see the display, for, plunging into the dirty nightmare, they

"Skelpit through mud and mire."

On horseback and on foot, in carriages and every way. Before 11 o'clock the streets were crowded with busy thousands either preparing to mingle in the procession or brought thither to witness the display. The scene was one of great hurry and excitement, further characterized by the utmost good order and decorum.

The Decorations.

Owing to the heavy rain of the previous night the decorations were hardly of completion. At an early hour in the morning those who had been prevented by stress of weather from completing their arrangements were at work with nimble fingers, and before the appointed hour for the ceremonial the streets presented a metamorphic as wonderful as the fantastic creations boiled forth in stories of genii in the Eastern tales.

Commencing at Jackson Square—where the grey old edifices, charged with memories of forgotten times cast their dark shadows on the graves of saints, and heroes, whose very names belong to oblivion—we cast the first glance at the decorations. The Old City Hall—once the chosen abode of the city's collected wisdom, in times when its arcade were vocal with the clang of ladies' spurs, and its arches rang with the mellifluous laugh of Andalusian girls, (but now delivered over, lumberless and roof, to spiders and police aldermen and rats,—was decked out in a sombre appearding, mournful in keeping with its own antiquity and the solemnities of the day. Chartres and Royal streets were covered with a cloud of drapery, the limited space will allow us only to particularize the decorations that were chiefly remarkable on the 7 blocks. ments of Phillip Allenette Nos. 53 and 55 Chartres (Gipsy & Jamison, Madame Fryer, Belden & Co., the Union Bank on Royal street, and lastly, of the last scene at the corner of Chartres and Canal streets, presided over by the venerable D'Arcy, to whose courtesy we were indebted for a perch upon his house-top, where, like a keep crow, eagle or rooster we sat, flapping the wings of our fancy and "brooding over the vast abyss" of heads, hats, bonnets and parasols, whiskers and ringlets, bri ht eyes and ruby lips, that mingled in the busy scene below.

On Magazine street the fronts of Cuthwait, Grillen & Co., of Alfred Monroe & Co., of Montro & Stillman and of D. P. Baines were particularly de ening of mirth. The latter had a tomb surmounted by the busts of Clay, Calhoun and Webster, overhung with black velvet hangings that fell in graceful folds from the cornice to the ground.

Common street was resplendent in the number and beauty of its adornments. At No. 61 J. A Barrelli flung out two beautiful flags, one representing the Constitution of the "Two Sicilies," while above them wing the "stars and Stripes" shadowing the American house of W. L. Cushing & Co.

On Camp street the house of Norris & Way was especially remarkable. Upon a pedestal stood an elegant vase, crowned with most brilliant and tasteful wreaths, having underneath a bust of Clay, and a scroll bel with this words. "They still live."

Underneath the busts of the immortals was most appropriately written the words:

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the North wind's breath,
And stars to set, but all—
Thou hast all seasons for thine own O! Death!"

In Canal, St. Charles and Carondelet streets, there were few houses that were not conspicuous for the taste and care bestowed in their decoration. Number 13 on the latter street had the names "Clay, Calhoun, Webster" on a black ground, elegantly wrought with flowers, each surrounded with a wreath of roses, interwoven with sprigs of evergreen.

The flags of the shipping in port were displayed at half-mast during the day, cannon fired and the bells rung at intervals with a solemn music from the tongues of bells.

At 11 o'clock, A. M., the different bodies composing the five grand divisions having arrived and occupied the positions assigned them.

The Procession commenced its movement down St Charles street in the following order:

First Grand Division

Col. Charles A. Labuzan, Grand Marshal; Gen. E. L. Tracy, Assistant to Grand Marshal; Col. C. R. Wheat, Col. Henry Forno, Robert A. Grymes, Esq., Richard Richardson, Esq., Col. C. M. Emerson, Col. A. W. Roseau, Thomas Hunton, Esq., John Claiborne, Esq., Special Aids to Grand Marshal. Immediately following the Grand Marshal and his Aids came the excellent field band, under the direction of the veteran drummer, Adrian, preceding the Volunteers of the First Division Louisiana Militia under the command of Major General John L. Lewis, in military escort, as follows: Washington Regiment, Volunteer First Brigade Louisiana Militia, commanded by Col. W. W. W. Wood, accompanied by his staff Adjutant Keating and Surgeon Booth. Marching with the left in front, first came the Jackson Rifles, Lieut. Fiume commanding; the Crescent Rifles, Capt. Casey; Color Sergeant Campbell and the color guard of five corporals from the Emmet Guards; then the Emmett Guards, under the command of Lieut. Nolan and last the Louisiana Greys, Captain Leach. The regiment turned out about 140 strong, and presented a trim, neat and orderly appearance. The Emmet Guards—42 muskets, with their brilliant uniform and excellent drill—was the principal feature in this brigade, and attracted much attention.

Next in procession was the Louisiana Legion, commanded by Gen D Augustin, aided by a numerous staff. Marching in front, with axes on their shoulders, appeared eight Pioneers, their stature rendered almost gigantic by their huge bearskin caps. The Legion composed of five companies, in all 120 muskets, next followed, under command of Lieut. Colonel Eichels, and made an appearance highly creditable.

The Legion was succeeded by two batteries of three guns each, with their caissons accompanying, belonging to the battalion of artillery, and in their rear, in an open barouche, accompanied by Gen Theodore D. Wis, was the veteran Maj Galley, the father of the battalion. Four guns also with their caissons, forming the battery of the Washington Regiment, came next in succession, and were in turn succeeded by the Battalion of Artillery, under command of Captain Trivot, the senior Captain. The Battalion turned out 120 muskets, their appearance bearing the impress of men who had seen service, and were again capable of performing it.

Following the Battalion came two 6 pounders of U. S. Artillery, forty-five rank and file, under the command of Lieut. Col. Nauman in person, their precision of time, accuracy of movement, with the cool and neatness of their equipments, rendering them a highly conspicuous feature, and the observed of all observers.

Major General John L. Lewis, with a brilliant staff, closed the first division, which completed the Military, numbering in all, about four hundred.

Second Grand Division.

Col J. B. Walton, First District Marshal; J. K. Ray burn, Esq., Joseph Etter, Esq., N. Trepagnier, Esq., C. W. Canfield, Esq., Aids.

Officiating Clergymen and Orators of the day, in carriages. The carriage was succeeded by a superb open car for funeral car, draped in mourning, containing three urns supposed to contain the ashes of the illustrious dead. The car was drawn by six white horses, upon its black velvet, studded with silver stars. It was surmounted by a splendid gilt eagle, and on each of the four corners of its body was a large eagle in bronze. The guard of honor detailed as escort to the sarcophagus, consisted of six men from the command of Lieut. Col. Newman, six from Capt Grivot's battalion six from Lieut Col Eichels, and fifteen from the Washington Regiment, in all, thirty three men, under the command of Major Sora, of the Washington regiment. Thirty-nine pall-bearers representing the different States of the Union, each with their respective badges, followed immediately in the rear of the car. Then delegates of four each, from the States of South Carolina, Kentucky, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania. Then Joint Committee of Arrangements in carriages; to whom succeeded the citizens of South Carolina, Kentucky and Massachusetts in three parallel lines marching by 4 and, in double files, Kentucky occupying the right displayed a banner having on one side a portrait of John C. Calhoun, and on the other the coat of arms of the State. This body was about eighty in number. Occupying the centre line were the CROCODILE ROCKETEERS, full strong with sprigs and badges neat and appropriate to the occasion, having in front a beautiful banner with a green ground ornamented with gold, and fringed with crape. At the top of the flag were the words, "Our dead live in history" and "Sons of Kentucky." Two figures with clasped hands stood upon a sad colored

CONTENT—DISCONTENT.—BY TRENCH.

Some murmur when their sky is clear,
And wholly bright to view,
If one small spark of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue;
And some with thankful love are filled,
If but one streak of light—
One ray of God's great mercy gild
The darkness of their night.

In palaces are hearts that ask,
In discontent and pride,
Why life is such a dreary task,
And all good things denied?
And hearts in poorest huts admire
How love has in their aid—
Love that not ever seems to tire—
Such rich provision made.

ATTAKAPAS CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking for some time of giving a few items of matters and things in this part of our State. From its geographical position of the Attakapas parishes of Louisiana they have hitherto remained but partially known to the people of the South-west. Lying south of all the great thoroughfares of emigration to Texas, and hemmed in by the almost endless chain of lakes and bayous between us and the Mississippi, the foot of the traveler seldom touches our soil. For about four or five months in the year we have direct communication with your city. The remainder of the year we are subjected to all the expensiveness and delay of small boat conveyance. There is perhaps no part of our State that presents to the eye a more lovely map of country than the vicinage of the Bayou Teche. The scenery is not sublime or grand, but beautiful, mild and inspiring.

Berwick's Bay, formed by the junction of the Atchafalaya and the Teche, is a pretty sheet of water extending a short distance along the south-eastern border of the Parish of St. Mary, and thence through several outlets the waters lose their volumes in the expanse of the Gulf. I shall now leave the topographical features of our country and say something of its moral aspect and prospects for the time to come. Methodism in this country has been contending for a foothold, with varied success, since the days when the lamented Nelly, of precious memory, preached to the people under the live oaks, and in private houses, just as opportunity offered. They have been the vicissitudes through which the Church has passed since that day, and, considering the date of our beginning, and the labor expended, I am sorry to say that the results have not been such as might have been looked for; yet the land is before us and we must occupy, and in the name of our God still hold up our banner.

The population of this part of Louisiana is like itself and nothing else; a strange compound of human nature in some of its most complex and intangible phases. These remarks do not apply, except in a limited degree, to the Parish of St. Mary; but rather to the scope of country lying between the Teche and the Sabine. Over these vast plains, or prairies, are thousands of people who, from their childhood to the present, have not been brought into contact with any of the appliances of the, age calculated to elevate their social or moral amelioration. As their fathers have done, so do they. I allude particularly to the lower class of French, whose progenitors were the first occupants of the country. They are the sovereigns of the soil, and such will they remain like a nightmare on the bosom of the country, until some great convulsion, produced by railroads or immigration to their midst of enterprising men, who will either force them into the spirit of the times, or to seek remoteness from the intrusion of their American neighbors. The moral condition of these people is wretched in the extreme, yet they are not conscious of their own destitution. To them Methodism can have but little access. It would be primarily important to reach them to speak their language; also to study their habits, and a patient mingling with them in order to gain their confidence. And where are the men for this severe drudgery in the depths of stupidity and ignorance?

The question may be asked, is there no man to care for their souls? A hard question, verily. There are men who profess to care for them, but I cannot say whether the soul shares much in the tender concern of those Fathers, that Rome is ever and anon sending to look after these wild sheep of this distant fold. It is true that here and there over the country you see the steeple of some country church, rising like the beast out of the sea of religious ignorance; but, alas! the numbers who flock to these altars come away as they went, without a single idea of the Great Redeemer, whose glorious priesthood alone supersedes all the impious pretensions of men who have substituted the container for the thing contained. As to pure and simple Gospel instruction among these people, that is one of the matters yet to be. And may God, in his mercy, raise up some means for the gathering of these children of the plains into the fold of Christ.

I must not omit to say that notwithstanding this untoward picture of some parts of the Attakapas, we have many a lovely vine of protestant Planting that redeems, like an oasis, the moral wastes around.

A VISIT TO THE BAY.—Not long since, at the solicitation of some friends residing on Berwick's Bay, I endeavored to preach for the first time in that vicinity, and for want of a more suitable place, the congregation were invited to the mansion of the venerable Dr. ——, who for many years was the senatorial representative of this Parish in the State legislature. I shall not soon forget the associations of that Sabbath afternoon. The text without any design was strangely apt. Peter in the house of Cornelius, just freed from his Jewish prejudice, just opening the Gospel to Cornelius, his family and neighbors, with the glorious declaration that "God was no respecter of persons." My congregation was large and attentive. There sat the aged master, with the feet of seventy winters upon his brow, his neighbors, and outside of these his servants. The scene to me was one of inspiring interest. The subject—the Gospel is for all; yes, all the bond and the free. May God grant that the humble efforts of that hour may tell upon the eternal well-being of some or all of that company, when all human distinctions shall be done away.

THE RAILROAD.—On the very spot, just where we were assembled, is the intended crossing of the Great Western or Opelousas Railroad. Yes, we hope, ere long, to see the work so far advanced as to place its final completion among the things that will certainly be. This great work will do more for this country than all the efforts that have hitherto been made. No country in the South-west presents a more eligible route than from Berwick's Bay to Opelousas, which for its level and solid surface cannot be surpassed in any part of the South. Another consideration, we have thousands of acres of fertile land in these Attakapas parishes yet, lying undisturbed by the plough, that would be brought into market. Moreover, we want the very kind of population that such improvements always bring—a people to gather up our waste and vacant lands and bring them into lively cultivation. It is not these mammoth plantations that make a country desirable. Of all tendencies in our State there is none more to be dreaded than the tendency to merge the small plantations into the larger, thereby depriving us, not only of citizens, but of Church members, and of neighbors, and giving us in return, here and there, some proud lordling, who has no sympathy with any of the middle classes, or their interests. The railroad is the poor man's friend; whatever he can produce he is paid for in a market, like that of your city. The railroad gives him that market; he has a chance to rise, and secure for himself the means of a respectable providence. In addition to all this, we want some more certain connection with the Mississippi than the precarious and uncertain navigation of our bayous. And yet we have men among us who are bitterly opposed to the whole affair, simply because the railroad does not suit their convenience to ship their sugar. Others are opposed to it because it will be the means of bringing too many strangers into the country. They are afraid of these adventurers, and others opposed to the railroad tax. But with all these objections and objectors the work is going on, and when the work is completed, we may look for a new page to be written in the temporal, social, and moral condition of Western Louisiana. I was much pleased some weeks since in reading your editorial on the morality of railroads. There is no doubt that, in their legitimate effect, they tend to the best interest of any country like our own. I have extended this communication far beyond a proper limit and will therefore close. Yours, R. H. R.

HEAR WHAT A BISHOP SAITH!

The Bishop of Melbourne has been paying a visit to the "gold diggings," and having whilst preaching on one occasion, a stump for his pulpit, affording rather a precarious footing, he says, "you may imagine that I did not present a very Episcopal appearance." At the close of his services he spoke to the people on the importance of providing some building for public worship before the winter sets in, and it was agreed that subscription lists should be opened at once for that purpose. But he says: "I am not very sanguine respecting the result; for I find that there are already two Wesleyan ministers arrived, one from South Australia, and the other from Van Diemen's Land, and that there is also an Independent minister from the former colony; and I fear that the miners are of a class, of which almost all who feel an interest about spiritual things are Dissenters, and only the multitude of the careless and ungodly are professed members of our Church. The two Wesleyan ministers are at present the guests of Mr. P——, at whose house I am now writing, and I have availed myself of talking with them about their system and its practical operation. They certainly have a machinery admirably adapted, speaking after the manner of men, to carry out their objects. And when we contemplate it on the one hand, and that of the Church of Rome on the other, the deficiency of the Church of England in this respect, can not but be acknowledged and deeply lamented. My own growing conviction has been, that unless we can adopt some means for establishing some closer bond of union among our people, and enabling them to recognize and associate with one another, we shall never obtain any hold, as a Church, upon the mass of the population in the colonies. The gentry, and those who are utterly destitute of religion among the trades-people and laboring classes, will call themselves Churchmen; but among the mass of the people, the really pious, and such as are at all concerned about their salvation, will, almost to a man, join the Methodist, or some other Dissenting community."

So far, and so strongly, speaks the Bishop of Melbourne; he acknowledges some good in the system of Methodism, and certifies it to be "admirably adapted" to carry out the objects it has in view, which are nothing more than the Glory of God and the salvation of men. [Prov. Wesleyan.

A PRACTICAL ARGUMENT.—A pious old man of our church at ——, in reasoning with a Sabbath breaker, said; "Suppose, now, I had seven shillings, and suppose I meet a man and give him six shillings freely out of the seven; what would you say to that?" "Why, I should say you were very kind, and that he ought to be thankful." "Well; but suppose he should knock me down, and rob me of the other shilling; what then?" "Why, then he would deserve hanging." "Well, now, this is your case; thou art the man.' God has freely given you six days to work and earn your bread, and the seventh he has kept for himself, and commands us to [illegible] it holy; but you, not satisfied with the [illegible]ys God has given, rob him of the seventh; what, then, do you deserve?" The man was silenced.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE (Ala. Conf.) ON BIBLE CAUSE.

The Bible cause is one in which every lover of Christianity feels the deepest interest. With it is connected the true civilization and evangelization of the world. All of moral good found among men is attributable to the Bible. Through its influence sinners have been set free from their captivity, multitudes have been discipled unto Christ, and the valleys and solitary places have been made to rejoice and blossom as the rose.

The American Bible Society is a noble monument of Christian liberality and Christian faith. Those who reared it laid its foundation in prayer asking for it an enlarged and continued usefulness. Their prayers have not been in vain. A healthful moral influence has gone out from it far and wide. Its annual report for the present year informs us that the Bible, in the whole or in part, has been translated and distributed into 148 languages or dialects. "The people that walked in darkness have seen a great light: they that dwell in the land of the shadow of death, upon them hath the light shined."

The demand in the foreign field for books is said never to have been more numerous. The Society has recently received a letter from France, saying that the field there is ready, distributors ready, no serious opposition yet from Government.

The Methodist Episcopal Missionaries in Germany find a great demand for the Scriptures among the poor, and ask for means to publish them.

It is gratifying to know that within the last few months a State Bible Society has been established at our Capitol, under the name of the "Alabama Bible Society at Mongomery." Through the munificence of one individual, a new and large three-storied brick building has been donated to the Society, at a cost of fifteen thousand dollars, to be held in perpetuity. This building is situated on the main business street of the city of Montgomery. In addition to this there are subscriptions amounting to six thousand dollars, and payable in annual instalments, for the purpose of carrying on the business of the Society.

This Society propose to carry out the aims of the American Bible Society. It will furnish individuals and other societies throughout the State with the Scriptures, at the cost of the books at the Society's Depository at New York. This Society does all its business exclusively on the cash principle. As the Bible house is large, the Board of Directors has resolved that its rooms shall be opened as a depository for the works of the Sabbath Schools and Tract Societies; also the publications of the orthodox churches. The Society passed the following resolution: "Resolved, therefore, That we most affectionately invite all orthodox churches to deposit their books with us, particularly tracts and Sabbath school books, to be sold for cash only." For a fuller account of the Society, see its Constitution and By-Laws, etc.

The Governor of our State, in a private letter to a member of this Conference, desires that our ministers would do something towards obtaining contributions to be invested in good books to be furnished the convicts of our Penitentiary. His Excellency, with true Christian benevolence, would have a Bible and hymn book, together with other good books, placed in each cell, so that their inmates, though bound by earthly bonds, may be freed from the bonds of Satan and sin and become heirs of eternal life.

The Governor requests that the books, which the ministers of this Conference may obtain for this unfortunate class of individuals, should be sent to Judge Lenke, Wetumpka, with instructions how to dispose of them.

As a committee, we recommend this matter to all our preachers, and sincerely hope and expect their aid. Methodist preachers have done much to spread scriptural holiness over these lands, but they can do more in this good work and that by becoming regular colporteurs of the Bible. Each one should see that every family within the bounds of his work is furnished with a copy of God's word. Bibles of various sizes and qualities may be cheaply and conveniently obtained at the Bible House in Montgomery; and this Society, as a State institution, deserves the warm appreciation and hearty support of this Conference.

It appears that the American Bible Society has appointed Rev. D. W. Pollock as their agent for the Southern part of the State. This committee would recommend this brother to the kind reception of the members of this Conference, and solicit for him their hearty co-operation in the Bible cause.

OLD GILBERT ON PUBLIC SPEAKING.—We confess our likes for effective pulpit style. A minister is not a pulpit essayist. A minister is not a philosophic lecturer. A fine book is not a fine pulpit style. The heart is the minister of the desk. The best style is that which brings the intellect down through the heart, and melts all its precious metals in that hot furnace. If you want a specimen, take good old South; see what edge is in all he said. Playful, but not light; sharp, but not sour; imaginative, but not dramatic; using common words with uncommon power; speaking to you as if he expected to convince you; full of earnestness; decided, without dogmatism; witty, but not vulgar. All his words strike you like the explosion of torpedoes. Others are real artillery men—thundering and blazing. No objection to artillery men, if they will only throw balls; but it is rather funny to fire loud guns, and have very small shot.

Let every man keep his own natural style. All preachers can't preach alike. Personal taste should be rectified, and then become personal law. How would Milton's cold Gothic architectural style suit the simple-hearted Cowper? How would Charles Lamb look in Coleridge's Germanic idioms? How would Hall look in Chalmer's garb? How would Wesley appear in Hervey's gaudy robes? Let every man be natural. Nature is a very indefinite word now-a-days. If you have the volume of water of Niagara, then you may become a cataract; but a bucket-full won't answer. If you have electricity, you may afford to thunder; but not without.

THE NEW MONSTER TELESCOPE.

We have already alluded to the fact that an enterprising gentleman of England, the Rev. Mr. Craig, has for some time past been busily engaged in constructing, at his own cost, an immense achromatic telescope—by far the largest and most powerful in the world, and from which the most important discoveries may be anticipated. A late number of the London Morning Chronicle devotes more than a column to the subject. The building was commenced about four months since, and consists of a plain central tower of brick, the walls of which are about eighteen inches in thickness, the height sixty-four feet, and the diameter fifteen feet. It is erected upon a solid bed of concrete, and weighs two hundred and twenty tons. This tower is the very perfection of construction, so as to prevent the slightest vibration; and this can be still further provided against, if necessary, by loading the different floors, by which means the most complete steadiness is secured.

By the side of this tower hangs the gigantic telescope, the immense tube of which, measuring eighty-five feet in length, is shaped something like a cigar. At one end is the eye-piece, at the height of about five feet from the ground, and at the other the dew-cap, or covering, the object of which is to prevent the absorption and condensation of moisture which takes place during the night, when the instrument is most in use. The exterior is of bright metal, and the interior painted black, to absorb the divergent rays of light. The instrument has a focal distance which varies from seventy-six to eighty-five feet, and its greatest circumference is thirteen feet, the widest portion of the tube being about twenty-four feet from the object-glass, and the determination of this point was the result of repeated experiments, made with great care. The instrument has an object glass of two feet aperture, and has already given evidence of its marvellous power. One of the lenses is of flint, and the other of plate or crown glass. The two, placed in contact are used in combination, and constitute the achromatic glass. The tube, when mounted, weighs between three and four tons.

It has already been ascertained that, as a measuring instrument, or for penetrating space, the powers of this new contrivance are very extraordinary. "It separates minute points of light so distinctly that its qualifications as a discovering telescope must be extremely valuable. It resolves the 'milky way' not simply into beautiful and brilliant stardust, to use the language of astronomers, but subdivides this 'dust' into regular constellations, showing counterparts of the Orion, the Great Bear, and the other brilliant galaxies of our system, adorned, in addition, with the most varied and gorgeous colors. The lenses are so perfectly achromatic that the planet Saturn appears of milk-like whiteness; and as regards this planet, a good deal of scientific interest has been recently attached to it in consequence of the distinguished American astronomer, Bond, of the Cambridge Observatory, Massachusetts, having stated he believed he saw a third ring or belt round the planet. Prof. Challis brought the Northumberland telescope at Cambridge to bear upon it but failed in discovering it. Lord Rosse's gigantic telescope was also employed upon it in vain; and it became a matter of great interest to the astronomical world to ascertain whether there was a third ring or not, and this question has been solved by the Craig telescope, the third ring, of a clear brilliant gray color, having been distinctly seen. This is owing to the great quantity of light which the Wandsworth telescope brings to the eye of the observer from this planet, giving a bright appearance to what, in an instrument of less power, would have been completely invisible.

"Some idea of its powers may be formed from the fact that it magnifies the light of the moon 40,000 times, and in coarse objects, like the outlines of the lunar mountains and the craters, the whole of these rays may be allowed to pass at once to the focal point, as they do not in such objects confuse it in any appreciable degree. In the Craig telescope the moon is a most magnificent object, and perfectly colorless, enabling the beholder to trace the outlines of the various mountain ranges with such vivid distinctness as to make us long for fine clear weather in order to bring the whole powers of this marvellous instrument to bear upon our satellite. It is positively asserted that on a favorable evening, if there was a building or object of the size of Westminster Abbey in the moon, the whole of its parts and proportions would be distinctly revealed. As an illustration of its space-penetrating powers, and the manner in which it grasps in the light, it is stated that soon after it was erected it was directed to a test-object, a minute speck of light in one of the constellations, which is not to be seen at all times by the most excellent instruments, though guided by first-rate observers, and in profound darkness. The Craig telescope at once discovered that this test object was not a minute speck of light, but a brilliant double star. As soon as it is finally adjusted, Mr. Craig proposes to direct the instrument to the planet Venus, to examine it minutely, in the hope that he may be able to settle the question of whether she has a satellite or not.

"But, (continues the account,) wonderful as are the effects of this telescope, it is not yet perfect, and it has been found that a part of one of the lenses is too flat by about the five-thousandth part of an inch. To many it may appear incredible that the five-thousandth part of an inch can be estimated so as to be appreciable and measured, but the indistinctness of a portion of the image revealed the fact. The rays of light which fall upon that part of the lens go beyond the focal length, and render the object indistinct, and confuse the image. This portion of the lens has to be 'stopped out' when extraordinary accuracy of definition is required; as, for instance, in observing so fine a point as the third ring of Saturn; and, as the aperture is so large, the absence of this small portion of the rays is not important, the quantity of light being so great. It was at first feared that the attempt to correct this defect might produce the inconvenience of over-correcting it, and produce an error on the other side; but Mr. Grovatt has devised a plan by which the lens, which was polished in the first instance by four workmen, may now be re-polished by machinery upon such accurate mathematical principles as will prevent the possibility of error. The machinery is somewhat similar to that by which the reflector of Lord Rosse's gigantic telescope was polished, with the difference that, the reflector being concave, and the Craig lenses convex, the machinery will act reversely."

"Like Lord Rosse's great reflector, the achromatic telescope on Wandsworth-common can only exert its marvellous powers when the weather is clear."

THE VALLEY OF THE GREAT SALT LAKE.

The existence of a vast lake of salt water somewhere amid the wilds west of the Rocky Mountains has been known since 1689, when Baron La Hontan wrote an account, which, however, seems to have been as much indebted to imagination as to observation, of his discoveries in that region. Some attempts have since that time been made to explore its shores, but Capt. Stansbury's party are the first white men that have made the circuit of its waters. The results of the Captain's observations, which were carried on with much skill and immense labor, make the circumference of the lake, exclusive of offsets, to be two hundred and ninety-one miles. The neighborhood around is on the same gigantic scale, consisting of deserts sixty and seventy miles across, separated from each other by precipitous rocky eminences of great elevation. Many of these deserts, Captain Stansbury says, would furnish extended plains absolutely level, upon which a degree of the meridian could be measured to great advantage. This inland sea is believed by Capt. Stansbury to have been in a past age of infinitely greater extent. He says:

"Upon the slope of a ridge connected with this plain thirteen distinct successive benches, or water-marks, were counted, which had evidently at one time been washed by the lake, and must have been the result of its action continued for some time at each level. The highest of these is now about two hundred feet above the valley, which has itself been left by the lake, owing probably to gradual elevation occasioned by subterranean causes. If this supposition be correct, and all appearances conspire to support it, there must have been here a vast inland sea, extending for hundreds of miles; and the isolated mountains which now tower from the flats, forming its western and south-western shores, were doubtless huge islands similar to those which now rise from the diminished waters of the lake."

The first view that the party obtained of this extraordinary lake is well described in the following words:

"At our feet and on each side lay the waters of the Great Salt Lake, which we had so long and so ardently desired to see. They were clear and calm, and stretched far to the South and West. Directly before us, and distant only a few miles, an island rose from eight hundred to one thousand feet in height, while in the distance other and larger ones shot up from the bosom of the waters, their summits appearing to reach the clouds. On the West appeared several dark spots resembling other islands; but the dreamy haze hovering over this still and solitary sea threw its dim, uncertain veil over the more distant features of the landscape, preventing the eye from discerning any one object with distinctness, while it half revealed the whole, leaving ample scope for the imagination of the beholder. The stillness of the grave seemed to pervade both air and water; and, excepting here and there a solitary wild duck floating motionless on the bosom of the lake, not a living thing was to be seen. The night proved perfectly serene, and a young moon shed its tremulous light upon a sea of profound, unbroken silence. I was surprised to find, although so near a body of the saltest water, none of that feeling of invigorating freshness which is always experienced when in the vicinity of the ocean. The bleak and naked shores, without a single tree to relieve the eye, presented a scene so different from what I had pictured in my imagination of the beauties of this far-famed spot, that my disappointment was extreme."

This intense repose is broken at times by the presence of myriads of wild fowl:

"The Salt Lake, which lay about half a mile to the eastward, was covered with immense flocks of wild geese and ducks, among which many swans were seen, being distinguishable by their size and the whiteness of their plumage. I had seen large flocks of these birds before, in various parts of the country, and especially upon the Potomac, but never did I behold any thing like the immense numbers here congregated together. Thousands of acres, as far as the eye could reach, seemed literally covered with them, presenting a scene of busy, animated cheerfulness, in most graceful contrast with the dreary, silent solitude by which we were immediately surrounded."

The water is described as one of the purest and most concentrated brines known in the world—clear and transparent as the diamond; and on analysis it was found to contain twenty per cent. of pure chlorid of sodium, with about two per cent. of other salts.

PULPIT ELOQUENCE—ITS SOURCE.

The worth of a natural, as distinguished from an artificial rhetoric, is seen in the fact that it is connected, most intimately, with the vital religion of the man and the preacher; for no rhetoric can be organising and vivifying that is not itself organic and alive. Only that which has itself a living principle can communicate life. Only that which is itself vigorous can invigorate. The inmost essential principle, therefore, of rhetoric that is to be employed in the service of religion, must be this very religion itself; deep, vital piety in the soul of the sacred orator. Even pagan Cato, and the pagan Quinctilian after him, made goodness, integrity and uprightness of character the foundation of eloquence in a secular sphere, and for secular purposes. The orator, they said, is an upright man—first of all an upright man—who understands speaking. How much more true then is it that Christian character is the fount and origin of all Christian eloquence; that the sacred orator is a holy man—first of all a holy man—who understands speaking.

We shall not, surely, be suspected of wishing to undervalue or disparage a department to which we propose to consecrate our whole time and attention, and, therefore, we may with the more boldness say that we have always cherished a proper respect for that theory which has been more in vogue in some other denominations than in our own—that the preacher is to speak as the Spirit moves him. There is a great and solid truth at the bottom of it, and though the theory unquestionably does not need to be held up very particularly before an educated ministry, we think there is comparatively little danger in reminding the educated man the man who has been trained by the rules and maxims of a formal and systematic culture—that the spring of all his power as a Christian preacher is a living spring. It is well for the sacred orator, who has passed through a long collegiate and professional trainlag, and has been taught sermonizing as an art, to be reminded that the living principle, which is to render all this culture of use for purposes of practical impression, is vital godliness; that he will be able to assimilate all this material of Christian eloquence only in proportion as he is a devout and holy man. Without this interior religious life in his soul all his resources of intellect, of memory, and of imagination, will be unimpressive and ineffectual—the mere iron shields and gold ornaments that crush the powerless Tarpeia.

For the first and indispensable thing in every instance is power. Given an inward and living power, and a basis for motion, action and impression is given. In every instance we come back to its ultimate point. There is a theory among philosophers that this hard, material world over which we stumble, and against which we strike, is at bottom two forces or powers held in equilibrium; that when we get back to the reality of this hard and dull clod, upon which the swain treads with clouted shoon," we find it to be just as immaterial, just as mobile, just as nimble, just as much a living energy as the soul of man itself. Whether this be truth or not, within the sphere of matter, one thing is certain, that within the sphere of mind, we are brought back, to force—to fresh and living energies—in every instance in which the human soul makes an eloquent impression, or receives one. Examine an oration, secular or sacred, that actually moved the minds of men—a speech that obtained votes, or a sermon that, as we say, saved souls, and you find the ultimate cause of this eloquence, so far as man is concerned, to be a vital power in the orator. The same amount of instruction might have been imparted—the same general style and diction might have been employed in both cases—but if that eloquent power in the man had been wanting, there would have been no actuation of the hearer, and consequently no eloquence.

It is, therefore, a great and crowning excellence of the rhetorical method which we have been describing, that its lowest and longest roots strike down into the Christian character itself. It does not propose or expect to render the preacher eloquent without personal religion. It tells him, on the contrary, that although God is the creator and sovereign of the human soul, and can therefore render the truth preached by an unregenerate man, and in most unfeeling, irreligious manner, effectual to salvation, yet that the preacher must expect to see men moved by his discourses only in proportion as he is himself a spiritually-minded, solemn, and devout man. Here is the power, and here is its hiding place, so far as the finite agent is concerned. In that holy love of God and of the human soul which Christianity enjoins and produces—in that religious affection of the soul which takes its origin with the soul's regeneration—the preacher is to find the source of all his eloquence and impression as an orator, just as much of his usefulness and happiness as a man and a Christian. Back to this centre of all do we trace all that is genuine, and powerful, and influential in pulpit eloquence.

But this is not meant merely that the preacher must be a man of zealous and fervid emotions. There is a species of eloquence which springs out of easily excited sensibilities, and which often times produces a great sensation in audiences of peculiar characteristics, and in some particular moods. But this eloquence of the flesh and blood, without brain; this eloquence of the animal, without the intellectual spirits, is very different from that deep-toned, that solemn, that commanding eloquence which springs from the life of God in the soul of man. We feel the difference, all men feel the difference, between the impression made by an ardent but superficial emotion, and that made by a deep feeling; by the sustained, equable, and strong pulsation of religious affections, as distinguished from religious sensibilities. When a man of the latter stamp feels, we know that he feels upon good grounds and in reality; that the stir and movement of the affections is central and all-pervading in him; that the eternal truth has taken hold of his emotive nature, moving the whole of it, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind. It is the moral earnestness of a man who habitually feels that religion is the chief concern for mortals here below; it is the profound consciousness of the perfections of God, and of the worth of the human soul, which is the inmost principle of sacred eloquence—the vis vivida vitæ of the sacred orator.

THE JUDICIOUS WIFE.

I recollect a pretty incident which may not be uninteresting to the reader. A wild young fellow married a lovely girl, and having long been addicted to habits of dissipation, even the sincere attachment which he entertained towards his wife could not entirely disentangle him from its snares. His occasional irregular hours would have given any but one of so pure and sweet a disposition every reason to suspect that she did not hold that place in his affections which was her right; but the reflection scarcely ever intruded upon her spirits. The husband was far from being cruel, and really loved her, but his disposition was weak and his companions eloquent, and he seemed to grow worse rather than better in his habits.

It happened once that he was called out of town, and in his haste left behind him a letter, in which, to please an unprincipled friend, he had spoken of his wife in terms of carelessness if not in derision, and dilated freely upon his general course of life. Imagine the anxiety and suspense of the married pair, when he found himself borne by a rapid steamboat upon a journey which must of necessity be of several days duration, not remembering distinctly that the fatal letter was exposed and unsealed upon his wife's table. He recollected, too, with a pang, that he had wantonly, in answer to her inquiries, boasted that it contained a professed secret which he would not have revealed for the world. He paced the deck in agony of disappointment and shame. He pictured her opening the letter, turning pale with horror and indignation, perhaps fainting with anguish, alarming the servants, flying to her father and renouncing him forever.

As soon as possible he returned, but with a sinking heart, he entered his dwelling, bracing himself up to meet the fury of an enraged and wretched woman. He opened the door softly. She was bending over the table busily writing. A placid smile [illegible] her mouth with perfect beauty, and spread over her glowing features the mild expression of peace and joy; and even as she wrote, the fragment of a sweet ballad fell from her lips in low music that only flows from a heart entirely at rest. The husband stole noiselessly around and read, as her pen traced her gentle thoughts:

"Your letter is lying by me. The very, very letter containing the 'prodigal secret.' Now I could punish you for your carelessness; but my dearest Charles, how could I look you in the face on your return, after having basely violated, your trust in my integrity, and meanly sought to gratify my silly curiosity at the expense of honesty, delicacy and confidence. No, the letter is unopened, and lest you should feel uneasy, I enclose it to you with the sincere love of your affectionate wife," etc.

"What an angel!" uttered the conscience-stricken husband.

HISTORICAL CORRESPONDENCE.

MARION, ALA., December 6, 1852.

MY DEAR W.: I found the Conference, on my arrival last Thursday, generally present and well into business. None have died during the year; they look hearty as a body, and are reporting the results of a year marked with an encouraging degree of prosperity.

THE BISHOP.

Bishop CAPERS was present in person and opened on Wednesday the twenty-first annual session of this body with religious exercises. You will be glad to learn of his health. These ten years he has not enjoyed better. So say his friends. His old age is green, his cheerful dignity the same, and his strength continues, in answer to the prayers of the church, equal to his arduous labors.

COMMITTEES.

A committee of five on nominations, appointed at the beginning, secured judicious committees, to which has been turned over all committee business. The reports are coming in to-day. Another good step was to create a general interest and distribute the Conference business by appointing no member on more than one committee. The Conference is supplied with its usual ready and dexterous Secretary. Bro. Dorman is at his desk, and the assistant scribe, Bro. Heard, at his right hand. After organising and disposing of a few preliminary matters, the Conference adjourned, to hear the annual sermon by Dr. Hamilton. I count myself unfortunate in not having heard it, and hope the Doctor will yield to the request of the Conference to have it published, in connection with the minutes.

ADMISSIONS.

The prayers of the church have been heard. The Lord has sent forth laborers into his vineyard. There have been some locations and discontinuances, but a list of applicants for admission into the traveling connection has been presented, and already acted on, that is unusually large and promising. Most of them are young men, and have enjoyed very liberal means of education—young men of piety and hope. May the unction of the Highest be upon them! Bro. John W. Starr seems to have a school for the prophets in East Alabama, for he brought up five from his circuit—among them his own son. But I will give you names: J. L. Sampy, J. Loomis, L. Patterson, F. Walker, John W. Cook, Jas. W. Pushie, F. M. Crain, F. M. Grace, G. W. Brown, S. H. Cox, W. D. Nicholson, Rob't Scales, Ethelbert Smith, W. M. Sturdevant, N. W. Regan, Wm. A. Shegog, Walter C. Harris, W. S. Wingfield, Ell Hubbard, John Holt, Mack Andrews, J. B. Cottrell, Lewis F. Dowdell, J. W. Starr, Jr., Alex. M. Samford, J. M. Dupree, Wiley Ardis, F. G. McDonald. Let the church take this list and pray over it!

THE COLLECTIONS.

The present year falls short of the usual Conference year by one month, and that the most important fiscal month of the twelve. The planters had not all sold their crops and got returns when the preachers made their collections, and the collections were necessarily crowded together. Notwithstanding, the conference collections have sustained themselves well. There has been no step backward. The missionary collections of this year will foot up about $20,000. The Conference stewards will be able to pay about seventy per cent. on claims. The Joint Board works finely.

The anniversary of the Missionary Society was held on Saturday night, in the town hall. The audience was large and the speaking good. The management of the meeting was not ad captandum. About $400 raised.

THE SABBATH.

Marion is well supplied with churches—Baptist, Presbyterian, Christian, (or Campbellite,) Methodist and Episcopal. All these were opened and occupied on Sabbath by members of the Conference, except the last. The Sabbath was a lovely day, and I learn the various services were well attended and edifying. The Bishop, after preaching a Bishop's sermon in the Methodist Church in the morning, ordained five traveling and eight local elders. At half-past three o'clock he Sacrament delivered at same place a capital discourse on the Christian ministry, their authority, work and encouragement. It took true ground, defined it beyond mistake, and applied it well. After sermon, the Bishop ordained five traveling and eleven local deacons.

MISCELLANY.

The Baptists have largely the dominant influence in the place, but they, with other denominations and the citizens generally, have shown an admirable and exemplary liberality in the support of the Conference. The sessions are held in the basement of the Baptist Church, with excellent accommodations. The schools, seminary and college of the place form a substantial commercial basis and an elegant staple of society. The girls and boys, "young men and maidens," serve Marion instead of cotton bales. The boarding houses are the warehouses of wealth. The professors and teachers are the craftsmen and mechanics that keep the snug little village busy and thrifty as a beehive. Marion as a Methodist place, is looking up. Our church here, for several successive years, has been blessed with good pastors. A neat parsonage has been secured, (and, by the by, parsonages, neat, substantial and out of debt, are becoming happily prevalent in this Conference). Our friend and brother, Armstrong, is principal of a large and flourishing female seminary here.

The Conference will probably adjourn on Wednesday night or Thursday. But before adjourning an important society will be organized. Preliminary steps are already taken for forming a society to aid the education of indigent young men preparing for the ministry. Mark: Not a society to call young men or old ones, or any sort, to the ministry, or to make preachers, but aid those who feel themselves moved of the Holy Ghost to the ministry.

In a few days I will forward you further items and reports for publication; also, that interesting document, the Appointments. I presume they will be easily made, for the Alabama Conference as you know is little of loco-itineracy. Its members are available and moveable from East to West, from North to South.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

This body closed its session about 7 o'clock on Wednesday evening, December 8. The appointments were read out before a large crowd of citizens of Marion, and prefaced by appropriate and impressive remarks from Bishop Capers. We have never seen appointments take better. Made under God, with prayer for his direction, they will doubtless redound to his glory. So may it be.

The vote of thanks for liberal entertainment and hospitable accommodation in every respect, by the citizens of Marion, was well deserved and heartily passed by the Conference. Long and pleasantly will the Marion session be remembered. The authorities of the Baptist Church have been especially kind in providing the Conference not only with a session room, but committee rooms.

Nor can we close this passing notice without reference to the happy manner in which the entire Conference was arranged for. Every thing went through with harmony. The preaching was well attended, and we must do the choir of the Methodist Church the credit of saying that their singing has not been beat, if equalled, any where within our hearing. The pastor, Bro. Neely, seconded by his liberal members, had "done up" things well; and in the cycle of Annual Conferences, we hope another may be held at Marion, and that we "may be there to see."

The returns show a healthy and growing state of the church.

Increase of local preachers, 4. Missionary collections amounted to $19,999 27. Anniversary collection, $400. Total for this year, TWENTY THOUSAND THREE HUNDRED AND NINETY-NINE DOLLARS!

The increase of traveling preachers has been 31 on probation and 3 by re-admission; and there are about twenty more places wanting a laborer in this vineyard.

The Conference gratefully acknowledges the gift of the Lord of the Harvest in answer to prayers the past year; and a resolution on this subject was solemnly adopted, which will be found in another column, with others of importance.

The Conference collections exceed those of last year by $1,200, making for this, a little over $3,000—dividing to claimants, as before written, at 70 per cent. The Conference landably and earnestly aims at reaching the 100 per cent. on these high and almost sacred claims. It may be done, doubtless will, the coming year. The funds for the education of the children of traveling preachers and the orphans of those who have died in the work, amounted to $734. The Ministerial Education Society is well under way, and most auspiciously. Governor Collier is the President of it. The Constitution may hereafter be published. A local preacher, present at the organization, said: "Brethren, I have to leave; but let me say a word to you before I go. This is a noble cause, and will go ahead. I am going home, and will send you from my neighborhood for this fund, from one to five hundred dollars, by next Conference." Well said and well promised, and we make no question, will be well done.

FLETCHER'S STUDIES ON SLAVERY.—This is a Southern work by a gentlemen in Natchez, Miss. It has been very generally and favorably noticed by the press, and is said to be a work of learning and careful research. It may be had at Steel's or White's, New Orleans.

THE WASHINGTON NATIONAL MONUMENT.—The following letter would indicate that the city of New Orleans gave more than one-eighth of the entire sum contributed by the people of the United States to the Washington National Monument, on the 2d of November.

WASHINGTON NATIONAL MONUMENT OFFICE,
December 8, 1852.

James P. Freret, Esq., New Orleans, La.:

DEAR SIR—It is with sincere pleasure that I acknowledge the receipt, through J. B. H. Smith, Esq., Treasurer, on the 23d ult., of your esteemed favor, addressed to Mr. Smith, with a draft enclosed for eleven hundred and sixty-five dollars fifty-cents, being the noble contribution of the patriotic electors of the city of New Orleans, at the election polls on the 2d ult., to aid in the completion of the magnificent Monument now being erected by the people of the United States, to the "Father of his Country," and the Benefactor of the human race.

The Board of Managers desire me to express to you and through you to the generous contributors of this handsome sum, their profound and grateful acknowledgments.

Most sincerely and respectfully yours,

ELISHA WHITTLESEY, General Agent.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions held their monthly meeting in New York on Monday the 6th inst. A report was read by the Secretary, setting forth the melancholy fact that the Board had lost four valuable laborers, viz: Mrs. Fairbank, of the Bombay Mission; Mr. and Mrs. Porter, of the Gaboon Mission, and Mr. Sulven, missionary among the Armenians. The receipts of the Board, for the months of August, September and October, were $47,767. For the operations of the coming year $300,000 are wanted.

Report of the Committee on Education.

The committee to whom was referred matters connected with the educational interests of the Alabama Conference, beg leave to report:

I. Before considering the claims of our institutions, specially, they desire to submit some thoughts relative to the general subject.

1. The deep and growing interest manifested by the people of the South, and especially of Alabama, in Female education, must be, to every patriot and Christian, a source of delight. The girls now at school, must, in a few years, be the moulders of the character of a new generation; and that they have the best means of preparing for that work, is of the last importance to the country and the church. Now, when the first step is taken, shall not we, to whom this work is in part confided, see to it that the way be prepared for further advance; and that the evils, which to some degree, are inseparable from all human institutions, be diminished and weakened as rapidly as may be? Radical reforms are frequently dangerous, because revolutionary, and liable to result in anarchy. True progress is growth, —not the offspring of destruction. To healthy growth, lopping and pruning are often essential. We, therefore, as husbandmen in care of the vigorous plants of education, have no desire to lay the axe to the root of any of our trees, but simply to apply the knife.

To drop generalization and metaphor, we exceedingly doubt the propriety of public examinations in our female schools. Our reasons are: 1. They are no test of scholarship; 2. They foster habits of superficial study, and undue reliance on the memory, thereby defeating the highest intellectual object of schools; 3. We fear the effect upon the blushing modesty of girlhood, which, in woman, is matured into delicate refinement and graceful dignity; 4. If they do not stimulate an excessive desire and love of dress and personal decoration, our observation has failed to furnish facts for a correct induction. Other reasons might be given, but your brief time forbids; nor will leisure allow a discussion, in this place, of the arguments edducible from these predicates.

The matter of dress, however, is one of such moment that some words must be said. We do not state that, toward the close of the session, the young women and girls who are to occupy the benches in the gaze of five hundred spectators for several consecutive days, thrice each day, study the newspaper's patterns of the latest fashions as closely as their algebra or French; or that they vie in each other's dresses with as much interest as the exercises in prosody; or that the multiplication of the wardrobe is more fascinating than the correctly attained result of a sum in compound interest. Neither will we affirm that the solution of the mighty problem,—what dresses, ribbons, bracelets and breast pins, are to be worn at each coming together, occupies more time and anxious study than the mastery of the rules and examples in simple and quadratic equations; nor that the father's addition of the merchant's account for the daughter's finery, is as disagreeable to him as her proficiency in the complications of numbers. All this we cannot positively affirm, as we were never school girls; but suggest, if the statements were modified, they would contain more truth than poetry.

For the reasons herein stated, we should be glad if the Conference would adopt measures to insure, at as early a day as possible, the discontinuance of these public examinations. Be it remembered, however, that we discriminate between examinations and commencements. The sermon, the oration, and the exercises immediately connected with the graduation, are of course, to be kept up. But in these, we hope the Conference will so express itself that the present extravagant style of dress shall be discountenanced and laid aside.

We hope, moreover, that the Conference will recommend to the boards of trustees and principals of our schools, the adoption, with each successive year, of a higher, and yet higher grade of study; one in which greater emphasis shall be laid upon the thorough and practical branches of education, and stress withdrawn from so-called accomplishments.

2. We, of course, cannot be expected to discuss the merits of the male collegiate question. Take some suggestions. No one among us can undervalue La Grange College and its claims, yet none can deny the unfortunateness of its location, for us. It is needless longer for us to disguise the fact that natural obstacles separate us from it. These, combined with other circumstances, have made it impossible to concentrate the attention of our people on this institution, notwithstanding its able faculties, the munificent liberality of our preachers, and their tireless exertions in its behalf.

All this is said, not in disparagement of our adopted child, but to show the present and pressing importance of securing the establishment of a male college within our own bounds. The number, wealth, position and influence of our membership—the hold of our preachers on the public mind—their unrivalled ability to concentrate attention on a legitimate object of interest—the growing willingness of our people to dispose of their wealth to the advantage of Christianity and the church—the absence of an institution within our own limits, sufficiently commanding to prevent our young men seeking the four corners of the country for collegiate instruction. These, with cumulative imperceiveness, demand of us the establishment of such an institution. Meanwhile, let us fulfill our obligations to La Grange as best we may.

3. The history of the higher seminaries of learning in this country proves, if it prove anything, that in the present state of public sentiment, denominational education can alone be successful in subserving the highest ends for which such seminaries are designed. Were other evidence lacking, amplest demonstration of the position is furnished in the last thirty years' experience of Methodism in this country; we mean the number, efficiency and results of its schools.

This being granted, the necessity of concentration is apparent. We do not blame Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians and Romanists for the support they give their schools; but shall Methodists be less true to the claims of their Church responsibility, when such mighty results are dependent on that integrity?

One of the most noble peculiarities of our organization is the power to converge or focalize. Is there not reason to fear that, in the matter of education, we are overlooking the secret of our strength? While it is a source of grateful pleasure to us that members and local preachers of our church are betaking themselves to instruction—in touching beauty, sacredness and solemnity, second only to the pulpit itself—are not our travelling preachers under the deepest and strongest obligations to bring their fullest energies to bear in the support and upbuilding of our Conference schools? It needs not that we disparage the claims of a single local institution, to urge that we, as a Conference, and as members of a Conference, are bound to concentrate our interest on our own institutions.

There is one other point, under this head, we should be glad to discuss, but must waive all, save the bare mention. We refer to the association of normal schools with our Conference institutions; schools having for their object the education of young men and women, in limited circumstances, who are willing, as remuneration, to pledge themselves to teach a specified number of years. This thought put into practice will secure the advantages of instruction to many otherwise debarred, elicit the warmest sympathy and support of our people, and harmonize the interests of higher and common school education.

II. We come now to notice the claims of our institutions:

LA GRANGE COLLEGE.—In reference to this institution, we have been officially informed that Dr. Wadsworth has resigned his place as President, and that Prof. J. W. Hardy has been elected to fill the vacancy. The President has gained the highest confidence of all who knew him, as an educator of youth, and is fully competent to the task assigned him. We recommend the following:

Resolved, That we consider Prof. J. W. Hardy eminently qualified for the Presidency of La Grange College, and approve his election.

Resolved, That we pledge ourselves to the support of La Grange College to the extent of our ability.

CENTENARY INSTITUTE.—Dear to the heart of every Methodist, by reason of its double name; the first recalling the grateful affection of the thousands of our Israel toward the founder of our Church, after a lapse of a hundred years; the other—Summerfield—perpetuating the memory and influence of one of the loveliest and saintliest spirits that ever glowed in human form. This institution maintains its right to the strongest hold upon the regard and energies of people and preachers.

We hail with sincere pleasure the tokens of our Father's approval of this enterprise, furnished in the frequent out-pourings of his Divine Spirit, and the conversion to God of large numbers of the pupils.

The change made by the Trustees during the last year, in placing the institution upon a self-sustaining basis, meets with our hearty approbation; securing, as it does, all the rights and privileges hitherto guaranteed to the children of our preachers, freeing the Board from the liability to pecuniary embarrassment, and, at the same time, maintaining its virtual right in the selection of teachers. And may we not say that the headship of this institution, filled as it is by Dr. Mitchell, a brother well-beloved, who has grown in our confidence with its growth, is not the least reason for enforcing its claims upon our regards. Therefore

Resolved, That the action of the Board of Trustees, in placing Centenary Institute upon a self-sustaining basis, has our hearty sanction and approval.

Resolved, That, as Dr. Mitchell has staked his means and reputation upon the happy out-come of this enterprise, and, as its entire success is of the last importance to Methodism in Alabama, we pledge ourselves to sympathetic co-operation with him to keep its claims before the people; and, by provoking one another to good works, to incite our communion to a larger patronage of it than it has ever known.

MACON FEMALE INSTITUTE.—We are gratified to learn that, notwithstanding the discouragements of the last year, this seminary has opened its new session under auspicious circumstances. Fully endorsing the change made by the Trustees in placing the school upon the sure foundation of self-support; rejoiced that it possesses so competent and faithful a Principal as our Bro. Poindexter; and assured that it has the confidence, and deserves the patronage, of the community in the western portion of the Conference, we hope for it a bright and increasingly prosperous career. Therefore

Resolved, That we heartily sanction the change specified.

Resolved, That we heartily recommend the Macon Female Institute to the continued and earnest support of our preachers and people.

Resolved, That we confirm the election of V. L. Hopkins, T. W. Dorman, Jas. R. Smith, John W. Laney, and F. F. Hemphill, as Trustees of that Institute.

OAK BOWERY FEMALE COLLEGE.—We are sorry that we have no report from the secretary of the Board of Trustees. We regret, moreover, that the Visiting Committee made no report of the Examination, which, we have reason to know, was one of the very best. Rev. Thos. B. Russell has resigned his place as President, and Rev. William F. Sumford has been elected in his stead.

We close with the following recommendation: That the Conference appoint the usual Visiting Committees to La Grange, Summerfield, Macon, and Oak Bowery.

Respectfully submitted,
WM. H. MILBURN, Chair'n.
CLAYTON C. GILLESPIE.
CHARLES S. HUNT.
WILLIAM J. POWERS.

Resolutions of Ala. Conference.

TEMPERANCE.

Resolved, That this Conference heartily approve of the doings of the late Temperance Convention held at Selma, in which it was resolved to urge upon our next Legislature to pass a law empowering each county, town and beat to determine whether ardent spirits shall be sold in them, and that we will use our influence to promote the Temperance Reform through this process.

J. HAMILTON,
F. G. FERGUSON.

SUMMERS ON BAPTISM.

The Conference requested 1500 copies of this work to be deposited at Mobile, for the conveniences of the preachers, and passed unanimously the following resolution:

Resolved, That this Conference esteem the work lately published by Dr. T. O. Summers, on the subject of Baptism, a simple and able discussion of the subject which the author has taken in hand, rendering it well worthy of a place in the list of text books for candidates for orders in the ministry, and that we will disseminate it among our membership, as well calculated to edify by enlightening them in the design and benefits of Baptism.

J. HAMILTON,
J. L. COTTEN.

DAY OF FASTING AND PRAYER.

Resolved, That the Conference devoutly thank Almighty God for his goodness to us in the addition he has been pleased to make to the ministry in the probationers received at its present session, and that the first Friday in May next be set apart as a day of fasting and prayer, that the Lord of the Harvest may send forth more laborers into his harvest; and that the ministry in general may be more abundantly baptised with the Holy Ghost.

GEO. SHAEFFER,
JAS. L. COTTEN.

Report of the Committee of Ala. Conf. on Sunday Schools.

Your Committee on Sabbath Schools have performed the duties assigned them as far as practicable, and regret that so little time has been allowed them for the collection of facts, and the perfecting of this report. Their labors thus far has resulted in the conviction that, while there is some thing to commend in the efforts already put forth on this behalf, much remains to be done before we can appropriate to ourselves the title of workmen that need not be ashamed.

Brief though the time allotted to us for that purpose perhaps may be, it becomes us to make an extended and a minute survey of the interests that pertain to the spiritual nurture and salvation of the children committed to our charge. Some of the prophets among us are uttering the sorrowful burden of Isaiah: "Who hath believed our report, and to whom hath the arm of the Lord been revealed," and, while as a Conference, we joyfully recognize around us many living witnesses who testify to the authenticity of our commission to the Gospel of Christ, we may with propriety question why no larger success attends the outlay of the abundant means with which God has endowed us. The solution of this question would be as profitable as interesting, and your Committee would suggest that we be more careful in the selection of the soil we cultivate. The fallow ground is before us, and truly it must be broken up; but wherefore should we plow upon the rock, or cultivate the fallow ground alone. May God relieve us from the madness that would impel us to such a course.

To be brief, we too often neglect to take possession of the heart for Christ until the strong man armed has entrenched himself there; we neglect the mellow soil until it has become the path for the foot of every unclean beast; instead of shouting with the reapers, we bow sorrowfully among the hungry gleaners. That this is not mere croaking, let the following facts attest, namely: We have in the Alabama Conference 190 Sunday Schools; there should be at least 500. We have a Sunday School paper, in reference to which criticism opens not its mouth, but for the purpose of praise; we have about 1700 subscribers in Alabama, when the minimum should be 10,000. We have a book editor, appointed by the sages of the General Conference, who have evinced a proper sagacity in the selection of the man for this post, and he has performed the task of reading through the whole catalogue of the Sunday School Union; editing and revising—reserving the good, and throwing the bad away, until he has a catalogue of books ready to be published; the very books we need, and we were pledged to bring up a collection to aid in their publication; and here it is—the whole sum of $216. Again, in some Circuits, in thickly populated parts of the country, not a single Sunday School has been organized. Here permit us to say, in parenthesis, (the shepherd who totally neglects the lambs, shall ere long have no flock to follow him). But while some have neglected this work, as we believe, to a culpable degree, a few have acquitted themselves nobly; and, as chief among these, we would name the Rev. Chas. Strider, of the Carrollton Circuit, who reports twelve schools, in which are 293 scholars, with a library numbering in the aggregate 944 volumes. Who does not commend Bro. Strider's zeal in this cause? What man among us does not resolve to imitate it?

Before closing this hasty report, permit us to quote a paragraph in reference to Sunday Schools, from a report which has already been read before this Conference. It may well be repeated:

"It is a source of deep regret that this blessed enterprise has been so much neglected in many parts of the Southern Church. Would to God, the excellent provisions of the Discipline, in regard to the religious education of our children, were carried out to the letter. In the name of God! brethren, let us be on the alert in this matter. We have no time to lose; we have lost too much time already. Let us be up and doing. Let us preach at least twice a year, in all our pulpits, on this great subject. Let us organize a Sunday School wherever the children can be collected, though there be but one man or woman to take charge of them. Let us visit all our schools regularly, and encourage the teachers and scholars by our countenance and counsels. Let us make ourselves acquainted with the children of our charge—the children of our Church—and let us make them acquainted with us, so that we may be able to make them understand and feel their baptismal obligations, and practically assume them at the earliest possible period."

If we pursue this course, we shall save multitudes of the rising generation, who otherwise will be lost to our communion—lost to the cause of Christ—lost forever.

S. S. STATISTICS.

The statistics we have collected exhibit in the aggregate, 190 schools, 205 superintendents 1153 teachers, 7528 scholars, 19,682 volumes in the libraries, 1677 Visitors taken, $699 29 contributed for local purposes, $216 36 contributed for the publication fund.

In conclusion, the Committee recommend the passage of the following resolutions, to wit:

1. Resolved, That we tender to Dr. Summers the assurance of a more hearty and telling co-operation in the great work in which he is engaged.

2. Resolved, That we will endeavor to enlarge the circulation of the Sunday School Visitor until every Sunday School and family within our several charges shall be supplied with it.

3. Resolved, That some time in the month of May, of the ensuing Conference year, we will take up collections in our several charges in aid of the publication fund of the M. E. Church South, and forward the amount thus raised to the book editor at Charleston.

JOSIAH BARKER, Chairman.

ANALYSIS OF THE AMERICAN CHARACTER.

A few days ago we noticed the publication of a work in England, entitled "Two Years on the Farm of Uncle Sam, with Sketches of Location, Nephews, and Prospects." The following passage from the work indicate at least a degree rightly to appreciate the American character:

"Vieing with the gay Parisian in dress, the English in energy, cautious as a Dutchman, impulsive as an Irishman, patriotic as Tell, brave as Wallace, cool as Wellington, and royal as Alexander, there he goes, the American citizen! In answering your questions, or speaking commonly, his style is that of the ancient Spartan; put him on the stump, with an audience of Whigs, Democrats, or Bornburners, and he becomes a compound of Tom Cribb and Demosthenes, a foundation of eloquence, passion, sentiment, sarcasm, logic and drollery, altogether different from any thing known or imagined in the Old World States. Say any thing of any body (as public men) untied with ceremonial phraseology, he swings his rhetorical mace with a vigorous arm, crushing the antagonistic principle or person into a most villanous compound. See him at dinner; he despatches a meal with a speed which leads you to suppose him a ruminating animal, yet enjoying his cigarre for a whole hour afterwards with the gusto and ennui of a Spaniard.

"Walking right on, as if it were life against time, with the glass at fever heat, yet taking it cool in the most serious and pressing matter; a compound of the Red Man, Brummel and Franklin; statesman and laborer, on he goes, divided and subdivided in politics and religion, professionally opposed, with a keenness of competition in vain looked for even in England; yet, let but their national rights or liberty be threatened and that vast nation stands a pyramid of resolve, united as one man, with heart, head, hand and purse, burning with a Roman zeal to defend inviolate the cause of the commonwealth.

"To him who has lived among the Americans, and looked largely at the theory and practice of their government and its executive, there remains no doubt that the greatest amount of personal security and freedom has been produced by the least amount of cost of any nation in the world. Culling its principles and wisdom from the history of all empires, it stands the nearest of all earthly systems to perfection, because it is built on and embodies those principles which God hath proclaimed in his attributes.

"I notice that the Americans set less value on life than Europeans; that is, he does not think the loss of life the greatest loss—the ultimatum. When a man dies you see none of that sentiment (I use the best term I can think of) which surrounds such an event in older countries. The American is silent in manner, embarrassingly so at first, extremely accurate in his observation of human nature, and any man that can not bear to be scrutinized had better not come here. They judge much by the eye, and have a most enviable power of estimation; your temperament, speech, look and act, are all taken in by him; and if you can get at the tablet of his judgment, you will find a remarkable daguerreotype of your exact words written thereon. They are phrenologists and physiognomists, not merely as philosophers, but as practical appliers of those inductive sciences, and beneath a show of laziness and positive laogor, there is an amount of energy and action perfectly surpassing. They are not averse to the higher branches of literature and science, but they bend all to utility, and are, as a nation, the best arithmeticians in the world; and this science alone gives a terse, matter-of-face tone to their mental working; in fact, when a man wants to reflect on a proposition, he says: 'Wait till I figure up.'"

PUNCTUALITY.—Washington was a minute man. An accurate clock in the entry at Mount Vernon controlled the movements of the family. At his dinner-parties he allowed five minutes for difference of watches, and then waited for no one. If members of Congress came at a late hour, his simple apology was, "We are too punctual for you"; or, "Gentlemen, I have a cook who never asks whether the company has come, but whether the hour has come." Nobody ever waited for General Washington. He was always five minutes before the time; and if the parties he had engaged to meet were not present at the person appointed, he considered the engagement cancelled, and would leave the place and refuse to return.

A VALUABLE LIBRARY DESTROYED.—The Rev. J. M. Peck, of Rock Spring, Illinois, who has been collecting books and manuscripts relative to the history of the western country for more than forty years, had nearly the whole of them destroyed by fire a short time since. It is to be feared that much has been lost which would have thrown light upon the early history of western colonization and great leading events, the migrations and habitudes of the Indian tribes.

WASHINGTON IRVING CREATING A RIOT IN BOMBAY.—The Boston Journal extracts from a Bombay newspaper the particulars of an extensive and alarming riot, which took place in November of last year. The riot was caused by the publication in a Bombay newspaper, of an editorial translation of portions of the life of Mohammed, by our distinguished countryman, Washington Irving. The most aggravated feature, however, in the provocation given to the Mussulmans, was a defective likeness of their prophet. The Bombay paper, from which the extract is made, calls the print a "smeared and smudgy lithograph of Mohammed," taken from Simon Ockly's history of the Saracens. This riot lasted for three days, when the Mussulmans were at last pacified by the editor's apologizing for the translation and picture.

Annual Report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Hon. Lake Lee, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, has made an interesting annual report. The operations of the several agents, among the several tribes, during the past year, may be thus summed up as follows:

The dissensions among the Senecas in New York respecting their forms of government are not yet quieted, but have been taken which it is believed will lead to an early and peaceful adjustment.

The Michigan Indians generally are doing well—becoming orderly and industrious—their agricultural efforts encouraged with reward, while education is making encouraged progress. The same remarks hold good of the Chippewas in Wisconsin. The removal of the Menomonees, agreeable to act of Congress, has been effected—the latter now being located between the Wolf and Oconto rivers.

A removal of the Chippewas Agency has been made to the Crow River, west of the Mississippi. Some of the Crow Wing River, Indians, on territory recently ceded to the United States, but it is thought they will soon return to the ceded lands.

The Winnebagoes are discontented with their present location, and want to emigrate to the Crow river, and the Superintendent recommends that they have liberty to do so. The Sioux, of Minnesota, have given their assent to the treaty recently concluded in the summer of 1851. These treaties remove all fears of hostile collision with the Sioux in future. These Sioux cultivate the soil very extensively, and frequent cases intermarry with the whites in the vicinity of the far compassables.

The Ottawas and Chippewas of the Grand River, a poor and peaceful tribe, on the western boundary of the State of Iowa, have been of late the victims, to a disgraceful extent, of the white man's rapacity, and the incursions of more warlike tribes of Indians. The appropriation from the last Congress is now applied to their relief and protection.

The Sacs and Foxes of Missouri and Iowas of the Great Nemaha agency, and the Sacs and Foxes thereto attached, have acquired a interest from their field of industry, and they are all in a state of commendatory notice for their general good order.

Mr. Vrooman has now reduced to a comparatively small number, but it difficult to manage their public affairs, and are anxious to abandon their tribal organization and become citizens of the United States. To this end, they, in connection with many of the white population, are impatiently awaiting the establishment of a territorial government over the vast region north of the Arkansas and west of the Missouri rivers.

The Delaware Indians, distinguished for their adventurous roving and enterprising spirit, are steadily diminishing in consequence of their exposure to peril, which other tribes take care to avoid.

The Christian Indians, a peculiar and interesting band of Indians, of Canada, whence they emigrated from New England on the lands of the Wyandotts, who, like them as intruders and desire their removal.

The Shawnees are eminently successful agriculturists, and are advancing in general improvement. But for the evil influence of intemperance, in which their proximity to border settlements greatly expose them, they would become a highly moral and prosperous people.

The condition of the Pottawatomies continues substantially the same as heretofore reported. They depend chiefly for support, especially in winter, on their large annuities, and but little or no improvement is manifest in their mode of living.

The Kickapoos of the Kaazas Indians, in the country about Council Grove, on the great Santa Fe road, is unfriendly for them and the whites. They are a rifle and horse tribe, and little can be done for their welfare while they remain liable to the pernicious associations about them here.

The small-pox, reinforced by inability and general diseases, has this year dealt dreadfully with the Sacs and Foxes. Their numbers have been thinned by death with appalling hand. Agriculture is almost entirely neglected, their attachment to old habits, encouraged by their chiefs, materially retards their improvement.

The Sacs of Fox, Creek and Black River Chippewas of the Mississippi, and Fox agency are in a prosperous condition, though they have frequent and just complaints of the depredations of the Sacs and Foxes upon their stock.

The Great Nemaha, and Pinkeshaws, of the Osage river agency, continue to furnish evidences of commendable industry and steady improvement. It is to be regretted, however, that the Shawnees belonging to the same agency are not placed in this favorable notice.

The Cherokees are embarrassed by an onerous public debt which they are striving in good faith to discharge. Their claims and other public purposes they are anxious to have the United States the tract of country containing about 10,000 acres, known as the "Cherokee Neutral Land," and there is much force of argument in favor of the obligation of the government to relieve them by taking back the land at the price they were required by the United States for it when it was granted to them.

The convention, entered into in 1857, between the Creeks and Chickasaws, the latter, under certain conditions and restrictions therein provided, became a component part of the Choctaw nation. But they are becoming more and more dissatisfied with the political connection between them and the Choctaws; and there is reason to believe that the best interests of both would be promoted by a separation of the tribes.

The present state of things exists in relation to the Creeks and Seminoles.

The chiefs of Billy Bowlegs and other Semianoles to Washington are next alluded to. Late advices from Billy leave no doubt that his stipulation to emigrate will be adhered to.

The Indians in New Mexico are generally quiet. The Apaches, near El Paso, however, are troublesome, and a band of mounted men are asked for to keep them in check.

Arrangements are making for the removal of the encroaching Indians from the Territory of Texas.

The Navajos give promise of abandoning their predatory habits and betaking themselves to the cultivation of the soil.

Notwithstanding the Mountain and Prairie Indians continue to suffer from the vast number of emigrants who pass through their country destroying their means of support, and scattering disease and death among them, yet those who were parties to the treaty concluded at Fort Laramie, in the fall of 1851, have been true to their obligations, and have remained at peace with themselves and with the whites.

The appropriations provided for by a late act of Congress for the Camanches, Kioways and other Indians on the Arkansas river, have been necessarily postponed until the coming spring. It will then be expedient to make them known to the treaty of Fort Laramie, or to one containing those provisions.

The agent for the Utah Indians has recently made an addition to the various tribes therein occupying the region of the Great Salt Lake. The thoroughfare of the emigrants to California and Oregon passes through their country, and the object of the expedition was to prevent a recurrence, if possible, of numerous and often fatal collisions between the emigrants and Indians. It seems to have been eminently successful, as no murders or robberies are reported to have been committed by these Indians during the present year. To give some idea of the immense travel along this route, and the consequent importance of conciliating the Indians, the agent states that in returning he had to be passed on each of several days as many as one hundred wagons.

The Commissioner recommends to Congress some timely and efficient measures for the proper disposition and management of the Indians in California. Something also ought to be done for the Indians west of the Cascade Mountains in Oregon.

Annual Report of the Secretary of the Interior.

The annual report of the Hon. A. H. H. Stuart, Secretary of the Interior, fills six and a half columns of the National Intelligencer, and abounds in various interesting statistics, and many important suggestions.

The sum required for the department 1854 is less by $1,202 than for 1853, and the amount estimated for pensions shows a decrease of $850,193, while the public buildings will require an increase of $689,158, caused by an estimate of $800,000 for the Capitol extension, for which no appropriation was made in that year, and for other new objects in Washington. The estimate for agricultural statistics has been increased to $2200.

The report gives various statistics of the public lands, contained in the report of the Commissioners of the Land Office, already published at length in the Sun.

Upon the report of the Commissioner of the Pension Office, to which the Secretary refers, we learn that the whole number of the rolls of the Pension Office have been reduced to 15,868, and the 743 less than last year.

Under the act of 18th March, 1818, for the relief of officers and soldiers in indigent circumstances, 20,485 were allowed, of whom 1040 are now on the rolls; only 389 have received payment in the first and second quarters of 1853. 1,828 persons were pensioned under the act of 15th May, 1828, passed for the benefit of officers and soldiers of the Continental army, who served to the end of the war; 1,194 are on the rolls, but 42 only were paid in the first six months of the year.

Pensioners under the act of June 7, 1832, 33,066; on the rolls, 6,628 received payment; in six months, 1405.

Pensioners under the act of July 4, 1836, for revolutionary widows and orphans of certain volunteers and militia who died in service since 1818, number 5163. of these 978 remain on the rolls.

Under the act of 7th July, 1838, gave five years' pension to the widows and orphans of officers, soldiers and seamen killed or disabled in battle or who perished by disease in the service, etc., enrolled 1122, while the number pensioned is 960.

The whole number of the rolls, under invalid acts, were 10,761, an increase of 627, compared with the last annual return; 3,221 were paid in the first six months of the year.

There are now on the rolls 720 invalids entitled to Navy pensions, who receive annually $45,049 96. There are 114 widow, who annually receive $101,490, and 38 orphans, who receive $6138.

The aggregate increase on account of pensions since the last report, is about $1,500,000, embracing many claims allowed since the close of the last, but paid within the present year.

Various stringent measures are called for to prevent fraud in procuring pensions. In some parts of the country the business has been reduced to a system, and bodies of men are even confederated for the purpose of carrying into effect their nefarious schemes, by means so artful as to render detection almost impossible.

The cost of printing the sixth census was $178,895. Messrs. Robert & Co. now propose to publish 10,000 copies of the statistics of the seventh census, in two folio volumes of 1000 pages each, on fine type and paper, well bound and stitched, for the aggregate sum of $40,000, being less than one-third of the amount paid for the publication of the sixth census.

The progress of the extension of the Patent Office, and the great importance of the Bureau, are referred to, and the increase of the patent business, it is stated has called for a large number of models in the office was in the year 1836, 9,000; in 1851 they had increased to 26,000, and now reach nearly 23,000. Various suggestions for the benefit of the business are made.

Much space is devoted to the Mexican boundary survey, and the causes which, a few months ago, led to its suspension. The progress of the exploration of the capitol is detailed, and the propriety of an appropriation by Congress of a sum sufficient to erect and furnish suitable wings for the accommodation of the Vice President of the United States and the members of the Cabinet, strongly urged upon Congress. It is estimated that it would increase the expenditure of about $300,000, including the purchase of the necessary ground. In making the recommendation, the Secretary says:

"The cost of house-rent, provisions, fuel, and indeed of all the necessaries of life in Washington, has risen to such a degree as to require the most rigid economy to enable the members of the Cabinet and the Vice President to live within their incomes. As far as my observation has extended, few, if any of them, have been able to do so. This evil is increasing every year, and if measures are not adopted to arrest it, the day is not far distant when men of moderate means, but in all respects fitted to serve the public in high and responsible places, will be deterred from accepting them by the heavy pecuniary loss to which they must inevitably be subjected to."

The Secretary concludes by calling the particular attention of Congress to the affairs of the District of Columbia, and hopes the necessary appropriations will be made without delay to commence the work of introducing an ample supply of pure water into Georgetown and Washington. The erection of one or more permanent bridges across the Potomac, adapted not only for ordinary travel, but for the passage of railway trains, is also urged, and the necessary appropriations recommended. A grant by Congress of a portion of the District of Columbia, recommended by the Commissioner of Public Lands, the Secretary says, commands his cordial approbation.

Facts from the Census.

Many of the particulars in the report to Congress of Mr. J. C. G. Kennedy, Superintendent of the Census, have been heretofore given in some way in our columns. We, therefore, now glean only the most interesting facts, as follows:

The Population of the United States has increased 337 per cent. during the last fifty years. In that same period the population of France has increased but about 53 per cent. The population of the United States is now increasing at the rate of about three per cent per annum, whilst that of all Europe (we infer from the Secretary's partial statistics) is increasing at about the rate of one per cent. per annum.

Immigration has not swelled our population to any such extent as has generally been supposed. The census returns indicate that, of our twenty-four millions of people, only two millions and a quarter, or less than one per cent., were born in Europe—or, in round numbers, one million in Ireland, half a million in Germany, a quarter of a million in England, one hundred thousand in Scotland and Wales, half as many in France, one hundred and fifty thousand in Canada, and one hundred thousand in all other countries. The census-takers probably did not obtain complete lists of the nativity of all born out of the country—their inquiries may have been misunderstood to some extent, or imperfectly answered—still the Tribune considers three millions a liberal estimate for the foreign-born population of our country, or about one-eighth of the whole. We have known the Irish alone estimated at a higher figure.

Of the total population, the deaf and dumb are 9,717; the blind, 9,762; the insane, 15,768; the idiotic, 15,706. Of these the colored deaf and dumb are but 932; colored blind, 1,715; colored insane, 812; colored idiots, 1,476. That is to say, the colored persons afflicted with these serious infirmities are fewer in proportion to their numbers than the whites.

Of paupers, the census reports only 134,072 as having received public charity during the year preceding June, 1850, and only 50,353 as actually receiving a subsistence from the public on the 1st of June in that year. Of these nearly three-fourths (36,000) were natives. The aggregate cost of supporting paupers during the year aforesaid was reported as only $2,954,800, whereof New York paid $817,336, and Massachusetts $392,765. Pennsylvania ranks next, but disburses only $252,138 in public charity, and New Hampshire fourth, paying out $147,351. Virginia and Maine are just behind. These returns are partially imperfect, as a great many of the indigent are subsisted in hospitals, retreats, etc., on the gifts of private munificence.

The real and personal estate in the United States and Territories is returned as of the actual value of $7,135,780,725. We would raise that, to make it correspond with the year 1852, to $10,000,000,000, and estimate the present actual population of the Union at twenty five millions, giving $400 per head of property to each human being, or $2,000 to each average family of five persons.

The churches, or edifices for public divine worship, in the United States, number thirty-six thousand, (36,000) of which the Methodists own one-third, or 12,276, the Baptists nearly one-fourth, or 8701; the Presbyterians the next number, or 4384; and of the rest the Dutch Reformed Congregational Lutheran and German Reformed with the Presbyterian, (and the differences between all these seem slight and unessential,) the total is 8112. But the estimated capacity of the Presbyterian and allied churches is greater in the average than that of the Baptist and Methodist churches, so that while all the Methodist churches will accommodate but 4,209,333 worshippers, and all the Baptist but 3,730,878, the Presbyterian and related churches afford room for 3,760,211 worshippers. The Catholics have but 1112 churches, yet nominally 950,950 worshippers. The Episcopalians have 1422 churches, accommodating 625,203 worshippers. The average number that each church edifice in the Union will accommodate is 384; the total value of church property $89,340,639; and it all the churches should be filled at one time, they would hold 13,849,890 persons—probably something near the total population that could at one time attend church.

The Farm Lands of the United States are set down in the census as amounting to 113,474,022 acres of improved, 184,952,348 of unimproved; but 3,646,078,080 acres, worth in the average $10 per acre. The average value of the Farm Lands of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania is about $30 per acre (New Jersey highest, Pennsylvania lowest;) while Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont average about $15 per acre. We are rather surprised to see the farm lands of North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee valued in the average below $5 per acre.

Of Domestic Animals, the country had an early supply and has always been prolific—and the number continues to increase steadily and rapidly. The increase of horses, mules and asses, from 1840 to 1850 was 559,053, although the number has considerably decreased in all the States liberally chequered with railroads. New York has one horse to seven persons; Ohio one to four, and the whole Union about one to every five persons, or a little over four millions in all. Of neat cattle, the number in 1850 was 18,346,287—an increase in ten years of about twenty per cent.

The average product of butter appears to be about 49 pounds per annum to each cow, with 62½ pounds of cheese. We export annually a little over one million dollars' worth of dairy products. Of sheep there was on the 1st June last in the Union 22,500,108 between '49 and '50, notwithstanding a diminution at 640,855 in New England and 2,761,460 in the Atlantic and Middle States, equal to 45 per cent in the former and 22¾ in the latter. Sheep husbandry is tending rapidly westward and southward—to the middle slopes of the Alleganies and the prairies of Illinois, Missouri and Texas. New Mexico has six sheep to each person—an extraordinary proportion. Rest of all, the returns show that while in 1840 the average annual yield of wool was a little under two pounds per sheep, it was in 1850 nearly two and a half pounds per sheep, so that 21,600,000 sheep produced in 1850 forty-six per cent. more wool than 19,311,374 sheep did in 1840. An increase of twelve per cent in the sheep had been paralleled by an increase of 40 per cent. in the wool. And in Vermont, where the greatest attention had been paid to sheep husbandry, the average yield per sheep is almost four pounds. Yet we import considerably of wool—mainly the cheapest and coarsest. In 1850, the import was 18,487,791 pounds valued at $1,681,691, or between eight and nine cents per pound. The imports of wool have largely increased during three or four years.

Of Tobacco, the aggregate returned in 1840 was 219,163,319 pounds; in 1850 it was 199,752,040 pounds—a decrease of about ten per cent.

Of Cotton, the production continues largely to increase. The product is now over 3,000,000 bales or two-fifths of the whole crop.

Of Potatoes, the product would seem to have fallen off from 108,298,000 bushels in '40 to 101,055,000 bushels in 1850; and we presume this is correct; the reason being the effects and fears of potato rot. This disease would now seem to be passing away, and the culture of the root consequently reviving.

Of Wine, the production is steadily increasing. Our importation amounts to six millions of gallons per annum; our consumption to at least twenty millions of gallons; so that our home production must be not far from fourteen millions gallons. All this aggregate reasons that only 221,249 gallons are acknowledged in the census—hence we infer that our manufacturers of Madeira Champagne, Hock, etc., prefer not to "let their light shine before men," but meekly put aside the credit at their enormous consumption of cider, turnips, logwood and other domestic and imported products.

Of Spirituous and Malt Liquors, the annual product reaches the enormous aggregate of eighty-six millions of gallons, (six gallons for each person old enough to drink) —but imports and exports just about balancing each other. The Hop culture (mainly confined to New York state) is extending.

Of Flax and Hemp, the production did not materially vary from 1840 to 1850.

In our Silk Culture we produced in 1831 no less than 396,700 pounds of cocoons; in 1840 only 61,552 pounds; in 1850 barely 14,763 pounds! And yet it is demonstrable that we have every facility of climate, soil, unemployed hands, etc., for this branch of industry, and that its vigorous prosecution would add largely to the National wealth.

Our Sugar culture is extending. Our production (maple and cane together) in 1840 was 155,100,209 lbs; in 1850 it was 281,830,880 lbs., an increase (mainly in Louisiana and Texas) of 126,730,077 lbs. The sugar culture has now obtained command of the most admirable and efficient machinery, and is steadily working further and further Northward, through the gradual acclimation of the cane.

Iron and its uses.—Almost every day sees iron applied to some new purpose, combining durability and economy. The Boston Transcript states that a street in that city is now being paved with cast iron. That paper says:

The pavement is composed of circular boxes of cast iron, about twelve inches in diameter and five inches in height, divided into six compartments, as small as not to admit the hoof of a horse. In the present experiment, these spaces will be filled with gravel, but some other substance, such as a composition of asphaltum and sand or gravel, may be found more suitable. The surface of the pavement is grooved to prevent horses from slipping, and on the outer edge of each box are keys which fit into the edges of the surrounding boxes, thus binding the whole firmly together. The thickness of the outer rim and the inner divisions is about an inch.

This the street will be covered with a network of iron, filled in with a substance to produce a smooth and durable surface.

Fashions of the Empire.—The Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser, in his letter of the 14th ult., has the following paragraph of interest to the fashionable world:

All doubt upon the intention of the President in reference to a revival of the fashions of the Empire is dissipated. The ladies, over anxious to please his Highness, attended a late reception at St. Cloud in full costume of the year 1804. "Ladies," said Louis Napoleon, "you are very handsome, as you always are, but your dress is unbecoming and extremely out of date. I should prefer to see you in the fashions of the day." The ladies were dreadfully offended, but the sex in general is delighted to have their fears quieted, even at the expense of a little mortification of two of the sex.

Strange Story.—The Delhi Gazette relates the following almost incredible story, of the discovery of a boy who had consorted with wolves so early that nearly every trace of humanity had been lost. He walked or ran on all fours, and, after his removal into the service of an officer, he still delighted in the company of jackals, and other small four footed animals, whom he would make his treacher companions. He was never known to smile, and only spoke once to indicate that his head ached. He died suddenly after drinking some water. This poor creature was recognized by his parents; but they soon became disgusted, and deserted him. His age at the time of his death was apparently twelve years. (Fort Smith (Ark.) Herald.

Female Telegraph Operator.—The St. Louis Intelligencer says that a Miss Flinn is now engaged in the discharge of the duties of a telegraph operator at Pittsburg, Ill. The Intelligencer is in favor of having female operators altogether, and gives as one reason, that the labor is so light. We do not think the editor would say the labors were very light if he was perfectly conversant with them.

Important from the Rio Grande.

CARVAJAL AGAIN IN THE FIELD.

By a private letter received in this city yesterday from a reliable source on the Rio Grande, we learn that Gen. Carvajal has crossed the river with four hundred Texas rangers, and at last accounts was on the march for Monterey. It was generally supposed that this movement on the part of Carvajal was at the invitation of the State of Tamaulipas, and further, that Gen. Cruz, the military commandant at Camargo was indirectly aiding it.

The force under Carvajal's command is said to be composed almost entirely of the rangers called out by the Governor of Texas for the defence of the frontier against the Indians, and which the Government of the United States refused to pay, or receive into service. The friends of the movement feel confident that by this time, Carvajal is in command of the whole Sierra Madre, and that his success is certain.

Arrival of the Osprey.—The steamship Osprey, Capt. Powers, arrived yesterday morning from New York, via Havana, bringing papers from the latter place the the 11th instant.

The Diario de la Marina has further accounts of the late earthquake at St. Jago de Cuba, and other places in the eastern part of the island. The damage done is immense. The cholera was abating at St. Jago.

The Ravels are performing to crowded houses at the Tacon Theatre, Havana.

The Diario states that the Captain General has issued a circular, recommending the people of Cuba, to read a pamphlet written in Spain, called "What is Annexation?"

Louisiana Interior.

Alexandria.—The Republican says that the business season has fairly commenced in Alexandria, and that the town never looked more prosperous.

Vicksburg and Shreveport Railroad.—The South-Western of the 8th says:

"Mr Tournadre, the chief engineer of the Shreveport, Texas and Vicksburg Railroad Company, and Col H. L. Douglass, President of the company came up in the Cadde. We learn that the survey has been completed from the Mississippi to Monroe. Mr T states that the county is particularly well adapted for a railroad, and estimates it can be built for $10,000 a mile. The chief engineer is waiting the arrival of the Texas commissioners, to determine at what point the road shall cross the State line, when he will commence surveying the route from Shreveport to the terminus of the road."

Hail Storm.—The Shreveport South-Western of the 8th says that a severe hail storm visited that place on the Monday evening previous, which was succeeded by a heavy fall of rain, and closed during the night with a gale of wind. The same paper says: "If the inclement weather continues much longer, it will entail inevitable ruin on our planters."

Cotton.—About 30 000 bales of cotton have been received at Shreveport since the first of September last.

Emigration to Texas.—The Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser says that the emigration from that State to Texas which has been large for several years, is constantly on the increase. Nearly all the papers from the interior mention the fact.

The African Squadron.—The United States ship John Adams, Commander S. Barron, was at Loando, South Africa, on the 11th of September—officers and crew well. She would sail on the 15th for Ambriz, Ambrizette, Prince's Island, and Monrovia, and expected to be at Port Praya by the 8th or 10th of November. The Germantown was at Princes Island, officers and crew all well. The Perry was cruising in the Bights, having been spoken on the 17th of August, all well.

Metallic Life-Boats.—We see it stated that it is the intention of the "Francis Metallic Life-Boat Company," of New York, manufacturers of the celebrated metallic lifeboats, to start a manufactory of those boats at some point on the Western rivers and also at a point on the lakes at the earliest practical day. As the steamboat law commences life-boats among the means of safety with which all vessels propelled by steam are required to be provided, this information will be of interest to Western owners.

Mr. Marsh, the United States Embassador, it is said, is satisfied that the Government of Greece is in the wrong, in the affair of Mr. Kling, the Missionary, and that he is now only awaiting instructions from Washington before proceeding to demand satisfaction and reparation for the wrong inflicted upon Mr. Kling, and if this is refused, to enforce his demand with such power as he may have at his disposal.

An Old "Us."—Michaux a celebrated Frenchman who traveled in America about half a century ago, and wrote a valuable work entitled "North American Sylvia," yet survives in Paris, active and cheerful, at the age of eighty-three. He was a passenger in Fulton's first steamboat on the Hudson river, and has recently executed a bust of Fulton which has been placed in the gallery of the Louvre.

M. Kossuth is residing at Bayswater, suburbs of London, with his wife and children, under the adopted name of Smith. The name of Smith appears to be popular among political refugees in England. Louis Phillippe adopted the name of John Smith when he left France in 1848. An American who lately visited Kossuth, says he is living very plainly in a small house, mostly on the remnant of his property which he has managed to rescue from Hungary, and that he appears like a disappointed man, but is yet hopeful and determined.

Grant's Pass.—The reported delays, says the Mobile Advertiser, of the New Orleans mail boats lately, are we learn, caused by obstructions in Grant's Pass. We should like to know the specific terms of the act which gave certain parties a monopoly of this pass. If we are not mistaken, a minimum depth of water was guaranteed to be maintained by the grantees; it this be the case, either the terms of the act are not observed, or else it needs revision. A heavy toll being exacted from all craft using it, it behooves the public to see they have value received.

The Pacific Railroad.—"Iota," of the Baltimore Sun, writing from Washington, says: "An association has been formed in New York for the purpose of building the great National Railroad from the Mississippi to the Pacific, upon a contract with the Government. The last and indeed the only mode in which the work can be done is by paying for the road, as fast as it may be finished, out of the Treasury. The New Yorkers will undertake to execute the work in four years."

"Large Hogs.—At Jarvis & Co's pork house 560 hogs were killed yesterday, which averaged 370 lbs per head. None weighed less than 336. They belonged to Messrs Moore & Campbell, and were brought from Boyle and Mercer. [Louisville Journal 9th.

From the Cape of Good Hope.—We have already mentioned the arrival at Philadelphia of the U.S. sloop-of-war St. Marys, from a cruise on the coast of Africa. She has been absent twenty-seven months, and arrived from Capetown in thirty-nine days.

The St. Marys brings Capetown papers to the 26th of October. The Great Britain steamer for Australia arrived at Table Bay from Liverpool on the 10th.

The papers contain details of the Kaffir war. Collisions between the troops are mentioned, but no decided battles. A band of the rebels from the colony of Albany were routed by the force under Commander Barney, and five rebels killed. Five guns were captured.

Capt. Hegrue and two men of the 12th regiment had been killed by the Kaffirs.

The St. Marys left at Capetown, loading for Boston, the American clippers Springhook and Ocean Wave.

From Rio DeJaneiro—Dreadful Tragedy.—By the ship Caroline, arrived at Philadelphia, the Baltimore Sun has received the following communication, dated Rio, Oct. 13:

We are now having much rainy weather, but with little or no sickness.

On Sunday last the American flags in the harbor were at half-mast, caused by news of the wreck of brig Emily Jane, and the death of Capt. Foxwell, her commander well known and much esteemed as an old trader to this port.

An awful tragedy occurred here last night—a father murdered his daughter, son and an Englishman. The young girl had been wronged. The father discovered her shame; swore death to the seducer, the Englishman—found him with his daughter; drove a bullet through his heart and dashed madly at his daughter with a knife. The son and brother placed himself before her and received the blade of the knife in his side. The father, seeming almost a maniac, wanted more blood to wash out the stain upon his daughter's honor, and, with another plunge, stabbed her to the heart. The Englishman died immediately; the son lived three hours, and the daughter still breathes but will not live. The father, a highly respectable Brazilian, gave himself immediately up to the authorities.

Arrival of the Daniel Webster.—The steamship Daniel Webster, Capt Oraffam, arrived yesterday morning, five days from San Juan, Nicaragua. The Webster was detained several days over her time, which is explained in the following memoranda furnished us by the purser:

The cause of such unusual detention of the Webster was partly owing to a collision of the S. S. Lewis, the Pacific steamer, with a sailing vessel in the Bay of San Francisco, by which she was prevented leaving till the 17th ult., and partly from an accident befalling one of the San Juan river boats, which—was sunk from the effects of striking a snag. The Star of the West left for New York on the 9th. The vessels remaining at San Juan on the departure of the Webster were as follows, viz: Bark Falmouth, bark Mopary, brig Bolian, brig Townsend Jones, and schooner Bicker. U. S. brig Perry sailed on a cruise on the 8th; H. M. mail steamship Trent arrived at San Juan on the 6th, and sailed the following day.

A new two act farce has been brought out at the Lyceum, in London, under the name of "Those Dear Blacks." It is a translation from the French. A London letter says:

Mr. Charles Matthews has one of his father's parts, which he developed in his usual inimitable manner. It bids fair to hold a prominent place in the Lyceum bills for some time to come, particularly as it contains one or two judicious raps at "Uncle Tom's Cabin," the mawkish sentiment and lying detail being now somewhat used up by a better and more intelligent part of the community.

Later from Santa Fe.—We clip from the St. Louis Union of the 6th inst. the following items from New Mexico. The Union says:

We have received the Santa Fé Gazette of October 1 and 30. It discusses at great length the project of a rail road to the Pacific, and strongly advocates the selection of the following route:

Let the beginning of the main trunk of the Pacific Railroad be fixed upon the present South fork of Red River creek. This will give it the latitude of a little over 38 deg. North, and at a point something over two hundred miles from Independence, Mo. for the junction of the Northern system of railroads. Let the Southern trunk thus formed run to Fayetteville, Ark. and the distance to the point we have designated on Turkey creek is a little over two hundred miles. Thus it will be seen that the point on Turkey creek is just about equi-distant from the points to which the two systems seem to be at the present tending. And here we would say that one object in the construction of the Pacific Railroad should be to avail ourselves of all the railroads already constructed or under contract. This will be a material saving of expense.

The Southern mail arrived here on Thursday night. The mail from San Antonio for last month had an escort to meet it at Paso del Aguila, but unfortunately provision for the escort was not made for the opposite direction. Some sixty ought to bring 20 cents, to be equally remunerative—but when short staple prices will at the present price of 9 and 10 cents, the production of Sea Island must be reducing, which, instead of twice, it brings more than four times as much—or 40 to 46 cents per pound.

Fossil Mastodon Exhumed.—The Zanesville (Ohio) Courier says:

A highly interesting discovery of what is termed the "Fossil Elephant," was made yesterday, on the river bank near the residence of B. Vanhorne, Esq., in the eastern portion of our city. The parts exhumed, and the appearance of the grated bank in which this was found, indicate that no entire "Monster" of this species has been imbedded in this place, the fossiliferous remains of which have in a natural and tolerably good state of preservation. This is the third find of the same species that has been discovered in the same locality within a few years past, the leading features of which being distinctly marked so as to be easily recognized, of these exact animals left their remains within the boundaries of this city. The one found yesterday was in much the best condition, and may, when completely exhumed, show almost the entire bones and frame of the huge monster, much beyond, perhaps double the size of the living Asiatic or African elephant. The molar teeth, four in number, all that the fossil possesses, were found in the jaw-bone and undisturbed, and two weigh twenty pounds each, and two four-teen pounds each. The tusks were not in good condition, only one being sound enough to bear moving. This one eight feet in length, measured at its base twenty-six and a half inches in circumference, and at the point, eight feet distant, where it is broken off sixteen and a half inches in circumference, the whole length of which was probably twelve feet or more. We learn that it is intended to postpone the exhumation of the other portion of the remains for a day or two, in anticipation of the arrival of our old townsman, John W. Foster, Esq., United States Geologist, from Lake Superior, who has advised a friend here to await in that time, when we will probably be furnished with a scientific report and full details of the interesting discovery.

It was discovered by Messrs. Thomas S. Sedgwick and Albert Spaulding, from whom we have learned since the above was written, that the tusk was broken off at its point by the laborers while grading the railroad a short time since, without being aware of its nature or value. The tusk has been deposited with Mr A. C. Ross, and the teeth with Mr J. J. Ross, where an inspection will give some idea of the kind of animals that were roaming over the "wild woods of America" in antediluvian times.

Sentence of Philadelphia Rioters.—Seventeen young men—several of them mere youths—who had been convicted of the rioting during the present term of the Court of Quarter Sessions of Philadelphia, were arraigned on Saturday, the 4th inst. for sentence. The Bulletin says the appearance of most of them was quite respectable, and that a majority of them intelligent. The faces of two or three of them were strikingly handsome. They nearly every one proved excellent general characters, and their cases excited much commiseration. The court-room was crowded and among the audience were the distressed wives, mothers and sisters of several of the prisoners. The account adds:

His Honor Judge Kelley addressed the prisoners at some length. After referring to their unfortunate position, the anguish which their lives dissipated had caused their relatives, and the causes which had led to acts which had brought them where they stood, he spoke of the volunteer fire department of our city and county. He said that, although he would bear cheerful testimony to the high character of many of the companies, as well as to the unexceptionable conduct of numbers of the members, still he was obliged to declare the volunteer system, as now organized, a scandal; in as it was impossible to conceive almost any thing to be.

For a benevolent institution nothing could be more inefficient for good. The fault was in the large number of young men and boys, known as the rangers or to the engines and hose companies, to whom permission was given to run, and whose presence was countenanced.

He then drew a most graphic and touching picture of the evils and distresses which had so indirectly upon the community by the spirit of rowdyism and lawlessness engendered by the existing association of firemen. The oath upon the lawless acts of the boundary's oath laid made with the property of the poor man in the suburbs and vividly portrayed the riotous excitements and fights that had so often taken place in the districts.

The Judge, in conclusion, said that it was the determination of the Criminal Court, in future, to exert all its energies for the suppression of rioting, by the summary punishment of the rioters. Hereafter, all the rioters might rest assured that their punishment would be more severe than what he should inflict on the prisoners.

The following sentences were then passed: Charles Letherbury, for riot, nine months; Jas. or C. Lewis, seven months; William H. Wharton, five months; Henry Shenk, seven months; Joseph Fritz, five months; Samuel Wyatt, six months; William Wright four months; John Taylor, four months; Thomas Lennoon, four months; William McNeil, four months; James McGinley, seven months; James Moan, three months; John Dougherty, three months; John McQue, three months; Charles McNae, four months; John Lesquere, four months.

Nicholas Harris, one of the prisoners, whose youthful wife, to whom he lately plighted his troth, was present, and who is now utterly destitute and friendless, by being deprived of his protection and support, made a most affecting speech to the court, asking for mercy on her behalf, and declaring that rather that suffer a long imprisonment, he would prefer to expiate his offence on the gallows. Judge Kelley, however, said that he intended to punish him more severely than the rest, on account of having been before the court once before on the charge of homicide. As the jury had found him not guilty of that offence, the court was inclined to believe him innocent. He then sentenced him to twelve months' imprisonment. Harris was one of Harney's brave band of dragoons in the Mexican war, and he fought gallantly in the brilliant affair at the Puente Nacional he had his sabre shot away.

Loss of the Steamer Western World.—The steamer Gen. Lafayette, which arrived yesterday morning, brought down the melancholy intelligence of the sinking of the steamer Western World, and the loss of twelve lives.

On Wednesday morning last, about 4 o'clock, the steamer H. R. W. Hill, bound up, and the Western World, Capt. Norton, bound down, from St. Louis came into collision about five miles above Princeton. The stem of the Hill struck the Western World on her larboard bow, and cut her down below the water's edge. She filled in about fifteen minutes, turned on her larboard side, and remained in that situation about ten minutes. Her boilers and deck freight then gave way, which caused her cabin to break loose from the hull. The hull turned bottom up, and both cabin and hull floated off together. The hull floated down the river about one hundred miles, and lodged on a sand bar. The cabin was passed by the steamer Gen. Lafayette about 125 miles below the scene of the disaster, still floating, but much torn to pieces.

The boat, cargo, papers and books are a total loss. She had about eighty head of cattle on board, which were all lost. The baggage of the passengers and crew was lost. The steamers Mohican and Gen. Lafayette brought down the passengers and part of the crew of the Western World.

A Complimentary Compliment.—Horace Mann, in his late lectures at New York on Woman, to illustrate the difference of the sexes, instituted a comparison between Henry VIII and his daughter, Queen Elizabeth. These two monarchs, the lecturer said, were as much alike as they can be, and the only difference between them was the same characters in both was modified by their sex—for said he, while Henry was made of ten thousand bears, Elizabeth was made of ten thousand cats.

Loss of an Indiaman and Sixty Four Lives.—The English ship Successor, Capt. Hatderson, was wrecked in the Madras Roads, Oct. 8, and sixty-four persons drowned. She was bound for Rangoon. The schooners Struggle and Poppy were wrecked in the same gale.

PARIS CORRESPONDENCE.

[Special correspondence of Advocate.]

Paris, Nov. 22, 1852.

I have long wished to place before the readers of the N. O. Christian Advocate n few statements on the religious progress of France. These statements, will, I hope, prove far more acceptable at the present time, since the Christians of Europe in general, and the Methodists of France in particular, have just seen the interest they take in the welfare of this benighted country: the first by sending an ecumenical deputation to Florence, in order to intercede in behalf of the Madiais; the second, by opening a Methodist mission at Nice, in Piedmont.

About ten years ago an effort was made by evangelical Christians to spread the word of God in Italy; but no fruits were visible until five years ago, when a small tract, of which great numbers were distributed, especially in Germany, was the cause of the great revival which is now taking place in that country. This revival is chiefly the result of the Bible alone, the reading of which, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, has sometimes been the much blessed as to create spontaneously small assemblies of Christians. As an instance of this, I can relate the case of an Italian, who, by the reading of the Bible, had his eyes opened to the errors of the Church of Rome. He sought the Saviour, found him, and was baptized with the Holy Ghost. Scarcely had he found peace when he began to exhort his wife, his daughter, his servants, and they also received the Gospel gladly. He then spoke to his friends of what the Lord had done to his soul, and thus a small flock was formed around him, without the help of any minister, through the sole word of God. The result has been that fifteen brethren of that locality went last Summer to take the sacrament to the Protestant Church of the Waldenses. They meet by companies of twenty to fifty, to read the Bible and pray together. The brother who presides was arrested, it is true, and put in prison, but he was not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, and he still perseveres.

Other churches have been established in the same manner, and it can be asserted, without any exaggeration, that during the six months many hundreds of Italians have also given proofs of real conversion to God. The foreign human agency there has been very little, and it is so ordained by a wise Providence, because the people of Italy have much mistrust for whatever is foreign. In politics they hate foreigners, because they have always been lorded over by them. In religious matters their antipathy is greater if anything. Accustomed to hear their priests continually pouring maledictions on Luther and Calvin; they spare whoever has any thing to do with those hateful names. Hence the importance, for the conversion of Italy, of the Waldensian Church, which is Italian, and which can be proved to be at least as old as the XIIth century, so that it can not owe its origin to the Reformation of the XVIth Century.

But, to enter into particulars, let us see what is the state of evangelization in the chief cities of Italy.

ROME.

As could be expected, the opposition to the Bible from the Pope is not abated in the least, as the following instance will show: Some time ago an Englishman, driven from the city on account of his faith, was searched before his departure, and his own English Bible was taken from him. He complained of this, saying to the police officers that he was about to leave Rome, that his Bible, moreover, being written in a foreign language, could do no harm to Italians, that he was an Englishman, and that he would appeal to his ambassador. The officer paid no attention to these remarks, and simply answered: "The Government of the Holy Father is resolved upon destroying the Bible wherever it be found, and by any means whatever."

But this hatred is powerless. Pious travellers often manage to introduce in the Papal States leaves or parts of the Sacred volume, and the papers repeatedly complain of the English tourists on this account. Sometimes these Bible-smugglers are found out, and then stricter orders are given to the custom-house officers; but these orders are not always obeyed. I have heard of a case, in which one of the examining officers having found a certain number of Italian Bibles in an Englishman's trunk, offered to let them all pass provided he would give a copy to each of them.

Not only are books prohibited in Rome, but also the preaching of the Gospel. No Protestant services can be held within the wall of the city, except at the American Consul's, to whom leave has been granted, as an acknowledgment of his having saved, during the Republic, the College of the Propaganda. This gentleman has now for chaplain a young, devoted minister, a son of the Rev. Dr. Baird, of New York. His predecessor having met with many obstacles, arising from the opposition of the Inquisition, I do not know what degree of liberty Mr. Baird enjoys for the present.

Another very different cause of hindrance to the progress of the Gospel in Rome, is to be found in the circumstance that, during the revolution of 1848, the Gospel was used by political men as a weapon against the clergy. These men, who had only a negative idea of Protestantism, declared themselves Protestants, and thus made a very wrong impression upon the people as to the character of true Evangelical Protestantism.

FLORENCE.

In Florence an extensive revival is going on, hence the violent war waged against the Gospel in the case of the Madiai, and others. In April, 1851, a decree was passed, empowering the Conseil de Préfecture to send for hard labor, without the formalities of a trial, any individual guilty of having attacked the religion of the States, in consequence of this decree, which is made to mean any thing the priests please, a respectable and wealthy Florentine was, in January last, condemned to prison for one year, with hard labor, for having taken his children to the Swiss Protestant Chapel! A poor farmer was condemned to the same punishment for having broken to pieces some images of the Virgin and of the saints. More recently ten men were thrown into prison, because they were suspected of reading the Bible. The Confessional is made use of in order to intimidate individuals, and force them to denounce their own relations. A father was thus compelled to inform against two of his sons. He had been positively told that he could not receive the absolution until he had informed against them. He did so, and his sons were thrown into prison.

But, notwithstanding the extraordinary efforts of the Jesuits to destroy all the copies of the Scriptures, and the tyrannical measures employed to prevent the people from reading them, there exists a remarkable desire among the population to have them, and to know what they contain. Bibles are so much sought after that thousands could easily be disposed of in ten days. The difficulty is to pass them through the Custom-house; as one or two only can be passed at a time, they are still very scarce. This scarcity has caused some individuals to copy parts of the New Testament. A pious foreigner having lent one to a Florentine brother, found that he had kept it a rather long time, and asked him whether he used it. The Florentine was at first unwilling to answer, but at last he confessed that he had lent it to one of his friends in the country, and he begged the foreigner to wait for another week, until his friend had finished to copy it. "None," says an ocular witness, "but those who are here can form an idea of the abundant harvest which could be gathered in, in this country, could the Gospel be preached publicly. I do not exaggerate in saying that two-thirds of the population are ready to abandon the Romish Church." Lord Roden, who is just returned from Italy, said two days ago, at a meeting which I attended, that in Florence and the neighborhood there were 10,000 (ten thousand) persons awakend to the truth of the Gospel, and one hundred and twenty really converted and pious Christians.

MILAN.

The capital of Lombardy has few means of grace. It possesses, however, a Bible depot of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and a Protestant place of worship, which is maintained notwithstanding numerous obstacles and difficulties. No Papists are allowed to attend it, and I have not heard of any religious movement in that city.

TURIN.

Since the new constitution religious liberty has become the law of Piedmont; so that many of the Florentine exiles have sought a refuge in this country. The clergy have protested, it is true, and opposed the measures taken by the Sardinian Government: first, to screen public instruction from their exclusive influence, then to abolish the ecclesiastical courts, and lastly, to make valid the civil ceremony of marriage. But happily this opposition has not been successful.

The first result of religious liberty has been the full emancipation of the Waldenses, who now enjoy their political rights, and even have a member to represent them in the legislative body of the country. As if the Piedmontese wished to make amends for the persecutions which have long been exercised toward these faithful servants of God, they are now treating them with marked favor. The King gave $500 to the College of Labor in their valleys, which contains seventy-five pupils, and is destined partly for the preparatory studies of such young men as intend to become ministers of the Gospel. Encouraged by this and other acts of protection, the Waldensians, who now number about 23,000, have began to build in Turin a fine church, where Divine service is to be celebrated in French, whilst an Italian chapel accommodates 500 hearers every Sabbath. They also publish an Italian weekly paper, The Good News, which has been honored with a terrible mention in the Pope's Index Expurgatory, so that its sale has very much extended of late. This, and the Eco di Savonarola, published, I think, in London, are the only Italian Protestant periodicals in Europe. In short, the Waldenses have become so popular that when, some time ago, a large number of students met to celebrate the abolishment of the ecclesiastical courts, and paraded all over the town, stopping before the palace and the dwelling-houses of the chief magistrates, they also stopped before the Waldensian church, shouting, "Long live the Vaudois Church! Long live our Vaudois brethren! Long live the liberty of worship!"

Such liberty is a great boon. But it is the more precious when we consider the mission entrusted in Italy to this Church, which the Lord seems to have kept up for so many centuries, notwithstanding the efforts of a bloody Inquisition, in order that it may now spread the light of Truth in these enthralled countries.

This mission the Vaudois Church has understood, and it is endeavoring to fulfill it. Some of their students in theology are studying the Italian language (French being the vernacular tongue of the Valleys) in order to become Italian missionaries. Bible depots have been established in various places; colporteurs are employed to spread the Scriptures, and some weeks ago bills could be seen in the streets of Turin announcing Testaments for sale at 30 cents.

GENOA.

The second city of the Sardinian States had not remained a stranger to this revival of religion. The inhabitants, formerly noted for their superstition, are now infidels; but their infidelity is gradually yielding before the preaching of the simple Gospel of Truth. The Confessionals are forsaken, and a recent correspondent of a French religious paper mentions twelve priests who are ready to abandon the Church of Rome. The Waldenses hope to build a chapel in this place when that of Turin is finished.

NICE.

A Methodist mission has been opened in Nice, a place on the shore of the Mediterranean, well known to invalids, on account of the salubrity of its climate. This mission is under the direction of the French Methodist Church, but funds have been kindly furnished for the first year by the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North. As the minister only entered into his field of labor about a month ago, little can yet be said. He writes, however, that his prospects are encouraging, and his meetings pretty well attended.

I have only one thing more to add about Italy, viz: that the members of the deputation sent to the Great Duke of Tuscany were not even received by His Imperial Highness, and that the chairman alone of the deputation, Lord Roden, was allowed to visit the Madiais in their respective prisons. He was here last week, and held a meeting, in which he gave us a most affecting relation of his interview with them. Rosa Madiai, the wife, seems to be a woman of superior intellect, and her patience, her meekness, her love for her detractors and persecutors, are remarkable. A letter from her to her husband, which Lord Roden had with him, drew tears from many present. The husband, whose health is very bad, is also resigned and firm. He was, however, painfully affected when he heard that the endeavors of the deputation for obtaining his freedom had not been successful. Lord Roden expressed a belief that should he not soon be released, his state of health is such that the prison will kill him! Who would have expected to hear of martyrs for the truth, in civilized Europe, in the nineteenth century!

The refusal of the Grand Duke was foreseen. Still, it is generally believed, that the sending of the deputation will not be useless. It has made a great stir in Europe. The daily press have taken up the matter in good earnest, and even in France, when the Univers declared that the Grand Duke was in his right, and had nobly acted in repressing heresy, two influential papers, the Presse and the Journal des Débats, protested at once, and wrote in favor of religious liberty two remarkable articles, from which I would extract did not the length of this letter forbid.

I had intended to say something on the decisions of the Senate, and the decrees of the Government, respecting the Empire, but I have no room, and besides, you already know all about it. The general character of the whole movement is, for the present, an utter indifference. When two persons meet, politics are, in general, the last thing they think of. Yesterday was the day for voting, but it was impossible to notice the least agitation or rumor in the streets. The result can not yet be told, as the ballot-box is still open to-day. It has been remarked that whilst after the coup d'état nearly all the Roman Catholic bishops issued circulars in favor of Louis Napoleon's constitution and new régime, very few have invited their respective dioceses to vote for the Empire.

Louis Napoleon has of late checked the zeal of his prefects and other officials by decisions which have put them altogether out of their reckoning, and they are now at loss how to proceed in order to please the Prince. For instance, they had begun to persecute the Protestants in some localities, when he declared that religious liberty was to be maintained. They had given orders that none of the electors who had been condemned for political motives should be allowed to vote. Louis Napoleon announces they may. The prefects and the mayors were taking much pains to prevent the democrats and legitimists from making known their protest against the Empire, when these very protests were published by order of the Prince in the official Moniteur, and widely circulated all over the country.

Being too late for last mail, I have waited until to-day to send the results of the votes. In Paris seven-eighths of the electors have voted; four-fifths of the votes were ayes. In the country the majority is greater still, some departments having had unanimous ayes. The general result is not yet known. The legislative body meets to-day. The number of men in the army is to be reduced to 370,000. Before the revolution of 1848 it was 380,000. In '48 it was raised to 446,000. Louis Napoleon reduced it gradually to 400,000. He has now decreed to reduce it by 30,000 men more on the 1st of December. J. P. C.

EIGHT FEARS.

A pastor, in a Congregational paper, has the following FEARS—the first eight respecting himself—the other six respecting his brethren:

1. I fear that I am not sufficiently thankful for the privilege of preaching the Gospel.
2. That I think too much of the trials of the ministry.
3. That I am not entirely devoted to my work as a minister.
4. That I have given my people occasion to utter just complaints respecting my sermons.
5. That I have needlessly caused them to feel dissatisfied with my prayers.
6. That I have not visited them as I ought to have done.
7. That some have already gone to hell through my unfaithfulness.
8. That others, who may now form a part of my charge, will perish in like manner.

SIX MORE FEARS.—1. I fear that some have entered the ministry without being called.

2. That some who have been called have not entered it.
3. That some who were called, and who did enter it, have left it without permission.
4. That their influence, in leaving, has been evil, and only evil, to the ministry.
5. That some, now in the ministry, are more intent on acquiring the world than on saving souls.
6. That merchandise, agriculture, animal magnetism, electricity, and a thousand other secular interests, are carrying captive numbers of the watchmen of Israel.

FEMALE EXCELLENCE

Female piety occupies a conspicuous place in the inspired volume, and, in relation to the work of redemption, God hath put signal honor on the woman. It is required of the husband that he "give honor unto the wife, as unto the weaker vessel." This is what the Husband and Lord of the Church himself hath done. By woman he hath he sent redemption to his folk. From his relation to this sex, a peculiarity of designation is given to the Most High to which nothing parallel does or could occur with respect to man. He is called the "Seed," or offspring of the woman. It was on the promulgation of the first promise that Adam called his wife Eve, "because she was the mother of all living." She thus, at the same time, expressed his faith in the promise of God, and his gratitude for the great mercy promised. Similar honor is put on Sarah, because she judged Him faithful who had promised. The first announciation of the miraculous conception was made to a woman. "The angel Gabriel was sent from God unto a city of Galilee named Nazareth, to a virgin espoused to a man whose name was Joseph, of the house of David; and the virgin's name was Mary. Well might the heavenly messenger use this method of salutation to her. "Hail! thou that art highly favored. Blessed art thou among women!" Well might this unassuming maiden say, "Behold, from henceforth shall all generations call me blessed!"

A woman was the first who was honored to confess the incarnate Word—to proclaim Him as the object of her faith. "Whence is this," said the venerable Elizabeth, "that the mother of our Lord should come to me!" The first herald of Christ to the inhabitants of the holy city was a woman; for "Anna, the prophetess," spake of him to all them that looked for redemption in Israel. During his public life women were the most assiduous attendants on his ministry. To them especially was allotted the honor and the pleasure of supplying his temporal necessities. They "ministered to him of their substance." Nor was this merely an occasional proof of love; they persisted in this good work. They did so while he was in Galilee, while he was on his way to Jerusalem, and during his residence there. There seems to have been an amiable rivalry among them for this honor. "Many women followed Jesus from Galilee to Jerusalem, ministering unto him." When the male disciples, when the Apostles themselves, were scattered, every man to his own home, these holy women knew no home but where their Lord was. They had followed him from Galilee, and they cannot leave him at Golgotha. So strong were the cords of love by which they were held, that neither the fury of his persecutors, nor the terror of the preternatural darkness, and of the earthquake, could make them desert their station. They "stood by His cross;" they remained there till the dreadful scene had terminated. Not even then could they leave him; they follow him to his grave. They who stood by his cross now "sit down over against his sepulchre," as if they meant to adopt the language of her whose faith they followed—"Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried." These women could not tear themselves away from the sepulchre till the great stone rolled to the door of it, separated between them and that disfigured form, that was lovelier in their eyes than all that had life. They seemed to leave it only that they might have time before the Sabbath to make the necessary preparations for giving a further testimony of their love. Nicodemus had brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about one hundred pounds weight, "and wound the body of Jesus in linen clothes with the spices. But as if they had thought that the expense that Nicodemus had bestowed were too little for the occasion, or could not bear the idea that some of their own substance should not be consecrated to so noble a purpose, "they returned and prepared spices and ointments, that they might anoint the body of Jesus." After the rest of the Sabbath, these women were the first visitors at the sepulchre. They had the first intimation of the resurrection. They not only found the stone rolled away, but the sepulchre away. And here there is reason to admire the wisdom of Divine Providence, which so regulated events that the grave should be first visited by them who would be less liable to the suspicion of having carried away the dead body. They who, with such ardor and intrepidity, testified their love to Jesus, had an honor conferred on them which was withheld from the eleven. They had a vision of angels, who assured them of the truth of the resurrection. Who so worthy of this honor as they who seemed to rival angels themselves in their permanent ministry to the Lord of angels, in their pure and ardent love, in their cheerful service, in the holy vigils which they kept at the place where his body had been laid! They not only prevented the Apostles in their visit to the tomb, but provoked them to a similar instance of love. The Apostles were loitering every one in his own home, perhaps indulging in carnal sloth, as if unmindful of their bereavement, and indifferent to the promise which respected this momentous morning; when they were aroused by these women, whose ardent affections had put repose to flight.

Is it too much to say, that in this manner hath it seemed meet to God, as it were, to indemnify the sex for its original subjection, and to remove, in some degree at least, the reproach of the fall? According to the primitive constitution of our nature, the man is not of the woman, but the woman of the man, neither was the man created for the woman, but the woman for the man.

It may be further remarked, that the conduct of holy women is recorded in Scripture as an example to others of their sex. The history of Sarah was written for their instruction, that they may, on the one hand, avoid her severity and temporary unbelief; and, on the other, imitate her faith in God, and her obedience to her husband. The faith of Rahab, as productive of that good work of receiving the spies is commended, although she sinned in telling a falsehood. We have a beautiful example of the influence of wisdom in counteracting the fatal folly of a churlish husband, and of the efficacy of the law of kindness in assuaging the wrath of an insulted warrior, in the narrative given of the meeting of Abigail with David. The good sense, the sound logic, the devout confidence of Manoah's wife were finely displayed in the sensurable and beautiful appeal which she addressed to the benumbing apprehensions of her dejected husband. Esther, having commiseration for her people, when a severe edict was published to destroy them all, and sweep them from the face of the earth, exposed herself, with great danger to her own life, to the displeasure of King Ahasuerus, purchasing thereby the freedom of her nation, and her own just celebrity.

The munificence of Mary, in anointing her Lord, though it rankled the latent covetousness of the traitor, is evidently recorded as a testimony of the Divine approbation of liberality and zeal in the things of Christ. The fact is expressly extolled by the Saviour himself, while he ascribes it to an end proposed in the purpose, and secured in the providence of God, which the immediate agent could not have in view. "She did it for my burial." He declared that the savor of this single act of love should be co-extensive in circulation with the sound of the Gospel, and coeval in duration with the flow of time. And when Christ would powerfully recommend compassion and beneficence to the needy and afflicted, when he would engage the affections of the tender sex in such labor of love, a real character is exhibited. Tabitha is held up to view as full of good works and alms deeds, which she did, which were an odor of a sweet smell, fragrant as the cedars of Lebanon; the memory of which, also, like these trees of God, is incorruptible. What a blessing in any place is a Tabitha! A mother to the young, a daughter to the old, a sister to the middle-aged, eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, a deliverer of such as are ready to perish!

Herod having slain James, the brother of John with the sword, and seeing that it pleased the people, proceeded further to take Peter, and put him in prison, delivering him to the charge of four quaternions of soldiers to be kept; but the angel of the Lord appeared to him in the night, took off his double chains, and led him out of prison; who having passed the first and second watch, the iron gate opened to them; and finding that which he thought to be a vision to be a reality, Peter came to the house of Mary, the mother of John, whose surname was Mark, where many were at that time assembled for prayer. When he knocked at the door, a maid, whose name was Rhoda, who, hearing and knowing Peter's voice, opened not the door for gladness, but ran in and told the company that Peter stood without at the gate. In this narrative mention is made of two women, memorable for their zeal and piety; namely, Rhoda, the handmaid, whose joy was so great at the sound of the very voice of Peter, which proclaimed his release from the prison of Herod, and Mary, her mistress, who was a devout hostess, and who, notwithstanding the persecution then raging, gladly entertained the disciples of Christ in her own house, that there they might perform their zealously religious exercises. Lydia, a seller of purple, believing the Gospel which Paul preached, was baptized with her whole household; after which she entreated Paul and those that were with him in these words: "As ye have judged me faithful to the Lord, come into my house and abide there; and she constrained them."

How much interest is felt in Martha and Mary, on account of their conduct towards Christ! How impressively do they manifest their thankful minds to him! As the one by receiving him into her house, and the other by entertaining him in her heart. As he was God, he was received by Mary; as he was man, he was received of Martha. The names of many other women are preserved in the writings of the New Testament, who are characterized by their sanctity and wisdom, and are eulogized by the inspired Apostles for the zeal, and talent, and liberality with which they helped them much in the Lord. In the early ages of Christianity, also, many pious females were conspicuous for their heroism and successful service in the cause of Christianity, and many were happy and glorious in martyrdom. Cecilia, when Tiburtius contended with her in disputation, refuted the opinions then generally held concerning the idolatrous worship of the false Pagan gods; so that, having convinced him with undeniable propositions, and irrefragible arguments, he became a zealous convert to the true Christian faith. Catherina Alexandrina, under the tyranny of Maxentius, argued with all the best and most cunning sophists of those days, and, syllogistically refuting all their schismatical opinions, caused many of them to yield themselves to the sincere profession of Christianity.

Tabiola, a Roman matron, was very laborious in the reading and understanding of the sacred Scriptures. She had the Prophets, the Gospels, and the Psalms of David almost by rote, and, by her continual reading, became practised in extensive and more perfect knowledge, and was held in such reverent respect amongst the learned that St. Jerome dedicated to her one of his learned works. Marcella Romana, for her industry in the Scriptures, in which she was zealously skilled, was in many of St. Jerome's Epistle saluted by name. He also testifies of Eustochium, that, being excellently well acquainted with the Greek and Latin dialects, as also with the Hebrew characters, she gave herself up chiefly to meditation upon the Scriptures, reading the Psalms of David without the least difficulty, and was therefore called, in her time, "the new prodigy of the world." Anastasia was a devout woman, who, for her faith and ministering to the saints, was arraigned and condemned to the fire, and publicly suffered a most glorious martyrdom. Constantia is deservedly inserted in the catalogue of women famous and excellent in learning and piety. She, from her childhood, was so laborious in the best discipline that, without any premeditation, she was able to discourse upon any argument, theological or philosophical, and was admirably well-read in the works of Jerome, Ambrose, Gregory, Cicero, and Lactantius.

How nobly, how heroically, too, have women borne persecution and death for the name of the Lord Jesus! Julitta said, "We women ought to be as strong and constant as men in Christ's cause;" and so they were. Priest's wife said to one who offered her money, "I am now going to a country where money bears no mastery;" and when sentence was read to her, she exclaimed: "Now have I gotten that which many a day I have sought for!" Lady Jane Grey, when about to be beheaded, being requested by the Lieutenant of the Tower to write her symbol in his book, wrote the following: "Set the glassy condition of this life never deceive thee; there is a time to be born, and a time to die; but the day of death is better than the day of birth." Alice Crymer, when the chain was put about her neck, remarked, "Here's a good neckerchief! God be praised for it!" Elizabeth Stokes, embracing the stake, said, "Farewell all the world; farewell faith; farewell hope; and welcome love!" Michaela Caignola, a noble matron, seeing her judges look out of the windows, said to her fellow-martyrs, "These stay to suffer the torment of their consciences, but we are going to glory and happiness!" And to certain poor women that were weeping and crying, "Oh, madam, we shall never now have more alms!" "Yes," she replied, "hold you, once more;" and plucked off her slippers and gave them, with such other parts of her apparel as could with propriety be spared from the fire. Joan said to her husband, who was at the stake with her, "Be of good cheer! Our wedding was but a shadow, an earnest and contract of that solemn and blessed marriage which the Lamb will now consummate!" Anne Audebert exclaimed, "Blessed be God for this wedding-girdle!" (Meaning the chain). "My first marriage was on the Lord's-day, and now my second, to my spouse and Lord, Jesus Christ, shall be on the same!" Windehauta said to one that told her that she had not yet tasted how bitter death was, "No," said she, "neither ever shall I; for so much hath Christ promised to all that keep his word, neither will I forsake him for a sweet life or bitter death."

All these are but a small number of a cloud of examples, in which the faith and fortitude of female Christians have shone forth resplendent in the face of the most appalling dangers and terrific deaths. Such instances might be multiplied were this the place or the occasion for citing them. And if in later ages persecution has not been permitted so to rage as to call for actual martyrdom, yet every true Christian is a little martyr. [Rev. Joseph Beaumont, M. D.

DIVINE DESIGN IN THE GOLD DISCOVERIES.—"Among the accidents," says the London Quarterly, "which have influenced the fortunes of the world, will hereafter be ranked the erection of a saw-mill on a branch of the Sacramento." In the order of Divine Providence a magnificent chain of effects has been linked to that seemingly insignificant cause. But the right time had come. A nation was to be born in a day. A new epoch was to be opened. The work of centuries was to be accomplished in months; and the ends of the earth were to be put into vital communication. The erection of a saw-mill is spark enough to fire the train when every thing is ready. "In my opinion," says Sir Humphrey Davy, "great and minds are the most likely to think lightly of the resources of human reason, and it is the perfect superficial thinker who is generally strongest in every kind of unbelief. The deep philosopher sees chains of causes and effects so wonderfully and strangely linked together, that he is usually the last person to decide upon the impossibility of any two series of events being independent of each other." In the case before us, it is admitted that the hand of God is plainly to be seen. "In the expansion of our trade," says the Quarterly Review, "the increasing commerce of the world, the rapid growth of our colonies, we hope to reap the fruits of this latest gift of Providence. Whenever we see movements of great masses of men, as lately towards California and new towards Australia, we think we can recognize Divine design more plainly than in other facts of history. The singular manner in which gold is spread over certain tracts of the earth, the ease with which it can be collected by individual effort, and the universal opinion entertained of its value, seem to point it out in an especial manner as one of the agencies by which intercourse between nations is to be promoted, and the social condition of man raised." And let not the Christian fail to observe how the spread of Christ's kingdom in the world is to be accelerated by the proper use of the same agencies. Let not the Church falter in her high mission of the world's conversion, when God for this special purpose lays under contribution the resources of his Providence in a manner so remarkable.

MYSTERIES OF SADNESS.—Who that reads the following beautiful passage from an accomplished writer, will not bear witness to the correctness of the description? Who hath not had experience as thus truthfully portrayed?

"There is a mysterious feeling that frequently passes like a cloud over the spirits. It comes upon the soul in the busy bustle of life, to the social circle in the calm and silent retreats of solitude. Its powers are alike supreme over the weak and iron-hearted. At one time it is caused by the flitting of a single thought across the mind. A sound will come booming over the ocean of memory, gloomy and solemn as the death knell, overwhelming all the bright hopes and sunny feelings of the heart. Who can describe it? and yet who has not felt its bewildering influence? Still, it is a delicious sort of sorrow; and like a cloud dimming the sunshine on the river, although causing a momentary shade of gloom, it embraces the beauty of returning brightness."

ENTIRE CONSECRATION TO GOD.

Unquestionably the greatest want of the Church at the present day is "entire consecration to God," without which it is utterly out of the question to look for the "fullness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace." Our blessed Lord came into the world that he might destroy the works of the Devil. All sin, whether the depravity with which we were born into the world, or the transgression for which we have made ourselves personally accountable, is the work of the Devil. To suppose, therefore, that we can not be "sanctified wholly" (cleansed from all sin) in this life, as well as "justified freely," is to suppose that the great scheme of salvation is not equal to the work for which it was devised—to destroy the works of the Devil. No one can read his Bible and believe for a moment that he can enter Heaven with either the pollution or guilt of sin upon him. He must be pure, cleansed from all sin, before he can enter there. How, then, are we to be saved from all sin? By works of righteousness that we have done? Nay, verily, the sad experience of thousands, in all ages of the Christian Church, who have groaned to establish their own righteousness, testify that, after all their personal afflictions, all their griefs and sorrows, all their tears, they have had to come back to the "righteousness which is by faith" ere they could learn by happy trial that the "blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth from all sin."

The atonement of Christ, the aid of the Holy Spirit, and man's faith, are the means of present and eternal salvation. "As your faith SO it shall be unto you." "Ye believe in God, believe in ME"—ME, who came to destroy the works of the Devil—ME, who came to save you from the pollution and guilt of sin in this world, and the consequences of sin in the world to come—ME, who will send the Comforter, the Holy Spirit. "He shall teach you all things; He shall aid all your infirmities. "Ye believe in God; believe also in ME." "Faith is the substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen." Who hopes for full salvation in the world to come, let him "believe also in me," and he shall enjoy the substance of things hoped for; who would enjoy the unseen bliss of a state of purity and of love, let him "believe also in ME" and he shall have the evidence—the witness within himself—the spirit itself bearing witness with his spirit, of things not seen by mortal eye, nor hath entered into mortal heart to conceive. But it is impossible; how can one who dwells in a sin-disordered body, surrounded by a sin-stricken world, and tempted by a sin-inventing Devil, hope to be cleansed from, and live without all sin?

"All things are possible with God"—"with Christ strengthening me, I can do all things." "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." But all can not see it so. It is plain to many minds that we must go down to Jordan with some of our sins. Death will make an end of sin, and we shall come up out of its cold waters prepared to meet God, and dwell with him in Heaven.

Jordan can not cleanse us; death came by sin; sin is the cause of death; the effect can not destroy the cause. The cause must first be destroyed, and then the effect will cease. Christ came to destroy sin, and he that believeth will experience when he comes down to Jordan that he has exchanged death for life; "death is swallowed up of life." The justified soul may be cleansed when he comes to Jordan, but not by its waters. The circumstances attending his near approach to death may lead him to "cast all his cares upon him who careth for him," and he may, at that late hour, learn what he might have known in health, that "the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin." Neither time, place nor circumstances can add one jot or tittle to the efficacy of Christ's atonement; nor to the energies of the Holy Spirit; nor to the powers of a living faith; nor to the willingness of God to cleanse from all sin. The means of entire salvation are as efficacious and as available now as they ever were, or ever can be. He, therefore, who will make an entire consecration to God, of himself, all that he has, and all that he hopes to be, and will take God at his word, and believe that the "blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth (present tense) from all sin," will know to the joy of his heart the meaning of the words, "As ye believe SO it shall be done unto you."

JOHN KNOX.—It was his ordinary practice to read every day some chapters of the Old and New Testaments, to which he added a certain number of the Psalms of David, the whole of which he perused regularly once a month. During his last sickness, he had read to him every day the seventeenth chapter of the Gospel of John, the fifty-third of Isaiah, and a chapter of the Epistle to the Ephesians. Through the belief and love of this truth, he triumphed gloriously in the last struggle. His language was, "I shall change this mortal and miserable life for a blessed immortality, through Jesus Christ."

THE POPE'S POWER IN PERU.—The power of the Pope has awakened a protesting spirit in Peru. A correspondent of the London Christian Times says:

"A worthy priest in Lima, the capital of Peru, about a year ago published an extensive work in that city condemnatory of the Pope's usurpation and aggressions on the civil and on the ecclesiastical authorities. The nail was hit on the head. The Pope felt it; and, in consequence, the work was formally condemned and prohibited to be read. A pamphlet was published by the priest in Lima, in which he refuted all the grounds which the Pope had alleged for condemning the work. This pamphlet was circulated extensively, as it was easier of access, and sooner read than the work about which it treated. This again brought the work more into notice. A second and abridged edition was then published, and to this the Government of Peru openly subscribed, in the face of the Pope's prohibition. The subject is being taken up with interest in that country, both in a civil and religious point of view.

MISSIONARY REPORT.

The report of the Alabama Conference Missionary Society has been received from the Secretary, but too late for publication this week. It will appear next. The following are officers of the Society: W. Murrah, President; W. Weir, Vice President; Thos. O. Summers, Secretary; O. R. Blue, Treasurer; A. H. Mitchell, R. S. Finley, J. A. Clement, P. P. Neely, C. C. Gillispie, Managers. The foregoing were elected at a meeting of the Society, in Marion, December 1, 1852.

A CHURCH BURNED.—The Moreau street Church, in this city, was burned to the ground on Saturday last. The fire was doubtless the work of an incendiary. "An enemy hath done this."

This edifice was a newly finished, beautiful and commodious structure, and was dedicated by Bishop Capers three years ago. It was insured for ten thousand dollars. This will cover about two-thirds of the loss. The Sabbath School library, which supplied with instruction over a hundred and fifty pupils, was destroyed. The pastor, Rev. H. C. Thweatt, whose office was in the basement, met with a very serious loss in the destruction of the larger portion of a valuable library, and of accumulated and valuable manuscripts, among them a volume ready and intended for publication.

This congregation will soon select another spot, or proceed upon the same one, to rear another Church.

☞ We invite attention to the card of the editor of the Visitor. It speaks urgently. It ought—it must be heeded by the Church. And now it occurs to us to make our best acknowledgment to Dr. S. for a bound copy of the first volume of the Visitor. It makes a neat and very readable book. And if any copies remain, we would advise our readers to acquaint themselves of the fact, and secure one for themselves.

ROOM FOR REFORM.

It appears from the last census, that the consumption of spiritnous liquors in the United States, amounts annually to eighty-six millions gallons. This puts about six gallons to the share of every adult person. Who can compute the fearful moral and physical ruin contained in those millions of gallons! Take one barrel, and let Senator Rusk, of Texas, tell us how an Indian computes it. Mr. Rusk says he was present on one occasion at an Indian "talk," when a man drove up with a barrel of whiskey. And old Indian who was sitting by fixed his eyes on the barrel, and after looking earnestly for some time, asked Mr. Rusk if he knew what was in that barrel. He said it was whiskey, he presumed. "No," said the Indian, "there are about a thousand imps and fifty fights in that barrel."

Apply the Rule of Three, and an appaling result is announced. The announcement ought to wake up the coldest philanthropist, and make him a LIQUOR LAW reformer.

The cause goes on pretty well. The Selma Convention of Alabama have got promised the efficient co-operation of the Alabama Conference. The Baptist Convention of that State have also taken their stand. The Temperance men of Alabama must carry their point.

In our sister State of Florida we learn that a bill is now before the Legislature, giving to the people of each Justices' District the right to prohibit or allow, in their respective districts, the retailing of spirituous liquors; it has passed the Senate by a vote of 14 to 2, and the Floridian has no doubt it will pass the House.

And Louisiana, which was counted the most hopeless of them all on liquor issues, is in advance of them all. The State law has been already secured. Its local application is now being tested. On next Monday (27th) the people of New Orleans will decide this question for themselves. If the battle against Alcohol is carried on the 27th December, it will be entered on our calendars as memorable as the 8th of January.

PROSPEROUS.—The North Carolina Conference reports an increase of 2337 members, 1642 whites and 670 colored, during the year. Its missionary collections amounted to $6200, being an increase of $2200 upon the collections of the preceding year.

PUBLISHED RECEIPTS.—The printer, and editor too, would like to keep Christmas. Therefore the paper is issued this week on Friday, instead of Saturday. This day in advance, together with giving attention to many matters that had accumulated in our absence, makes it impracticable to publish receipts this week. Our good agents and friends shall have their favors, (which are encouragingly numerous,) duly acknowledged.

COMPARATIVE CHURCH STATISTICS.

The late report of the Superintendent of the Census to Congress has brought to view some highly interesting information in the department of Church statistics. Last week we published, with other public documents, a large synopsis of this official document, but we think the Church item deserves to be brought out into prominent notice, and treated with emphasis in our columns. Here it is:

"The churches, or edifices for public Divine worship, in the United States, number thirty-six thousand (36,000), of which the Methodists own one-third, or 12,376; the Baptists nearly one-fourth, or 8791; the Presbyterian the next number, or 4584; and if we count the Dutch Reformed, Congregational, Lutheran and German Reformed with the Presbyterian (and the differences between all these seem slight and unessential) the total is 8112. But the estimated capacity of the Presbyterian and allied churches is greater in the average than that of the Baptist and Methodist churches, so that while all the Methodist churches will accommodate but 4,209,333 worshippers, and all the Baptist but 3,130,878, the Presbyterian and related churches aforesaid have room for 3,705,211 worshippers. The Catholics have but 1112 churches, accommodating 620,950 worshippers. The Episcopalians have 1422 churches, accommodating 625,213 worshippers. The average number that each church edifice in Union will accommodate is 384; the total value of church property $86,416,639: and if all the churches should be filled at one time they would hold 13,849,895 persons; probably some thing near the total population that could at one time attend church."

Thus it appears that religion needs no patronage from the state. The "voluntary principle" will provide accommodation for all the people who can attend public Divine worship at one time. The people of the United States are now provided. Happy the people who are in such a case!

It also appears that the Church of Christ is increasing, and that at a good rate. Dr. Baird, who is very competent in such statistics, has ascertained that the Evangelical Churches in the United States have multiplied ten times in the last fifty years. But the population has not, in the last half century, increased to quite five times its number. This shows an encouraging advance of Church members in proportion to the whole population.

This synopsis was hardly made up by a Methodist; so one would judge by the "buts," and "onlys," and "so thats" occurring. But it is official. The items have been extensively searched for and accurately ascertained. The figures speak for themselves. We make them an occasion for a few reflections.

1. Methodism is not on the decline. Notwithstanding all the prophets that have risen up and sagely uttered themselves, she still holds on her way, rejoicing in the favor of God. So far from going down, we doubt if the annals of any Evangelical Church, since the Reformation, in any place, have gone forward at such a rate. The youngest in her American planting of all the above denominations, now stands first in the number of her chapels, her membership and her congregations. In the beginning of this century there were not 40,000 Methodists in the United States. In the middle of it, the Superintendent of the Census announces to Congress that there are 36,000 edifices for public Divine service in the United States, of which the Methodists own more than one-third—12,376—accommodating 4,209,333 worshippers. Alas for the prophets! And they still persevere in their vocation! Our argument with them and those who echo their illbodings is a short one. We refer them to the census.

2. There be those who have much to say, and more to insinuate, about the republicanism of Methodism. They leave us in doubt whether a system of Church government is to be drawn from the writings of Thomas Jefferson or of St. Paul. For all such an answer is ready: Our Church seems to agree, as well as others, with the civil and social conditions of a Republic. The vine well affects the soil, and the soil the vine. Methodist Church government and democratic State government flourish remarkably well together. Non constat, but that they are mutual friends. This demonstration of success ought to suffice those who have scruples! The citizens who have the most liberty of thought and speech, who are most jealous of right of any in the world, seek to the altars and chapels of Methodism in greater numbers than to any other American Church. Such citizens swell the masses of its members and its worshippers beyond those of any contemporary denomination. There is a vast fact of inference here. Let all consider it.

3. The relative size of edifices for public worship is against us, and we are content that it is so. As a general rule, very large ones are not desirable. Where eight hundred worshippers can be accommodated, that chapel is large enough. If the number increase, let the hive swarm, and another congregation be built up. Chapels will not be over large or very costly, if erected and distributed according to the wants, rather than the wealth of the people. Many noble piles bear our name. But while concentrated wealth and city multitudes are thus accommodated, we rejoice that the word of life is being sent forth from other places, of humbler architecture, but of equal utility. Of many such a happier record is kept above, than of those of richer display and magnificence. At the last, it will be written of thousands of redeemed souls, "this man was born there." In such places—

> "Faith's pure hymn beneath a shelter rude,
> Breathes out as sweetly to the tangled wood
> As where the rays through blazing windows pour
> On marble shaft and tesselated floor."

4. Let those of our membership too ready for every suggested change, ponder the instrumentality and ecclesiastical polity by which, under God, these results have been attained. Henceforth we hear the exhortation to walk by the same rule and mind the same things.

5. We have, as a Church, been subjected to fewer divisions and "splits," than any other—a very suggestive fact. Our general superintendency and itinerant pastorate have largely worked this.

6. Let us "rejoice with trembling." How great a responsibility is devolved upon us by this showing? What immense debtors we have become, by this success, to the State and to the general Church of Christ. To lead and instruct so many millions of active, thinking, immortal souls—how great our need of a ministry: a pure, zealous, enlightened, self-denying ministry! To furnish religious reading and denominational indoctrination to these millions, how active must the religious press under our control be, and how diligent its agents in distributing its issues! What a work to be done in Sunday Schools! What a demand for well sustained denominational schools, seminaries and colleges! How largely has the reputation of Christianity and its conservative and saving influence upon the morals of the country and the world fallen to our custody! Let every one that is called a Methodist do his duty.

"I HAVE NO CIRCUMSTANCES."

"Circumstances" do wonderful things. They alter cases. A Yankee genius has given the world notice of an invention of a machine made to go by "the force of circumstances."

There are two places where (as we have learned from others) "circumstances" are very much in the way—hard things to arrange. It is in the Bishop's Cabinet and on the floor of Annual Conferences. This brother suits there; but his "circumstances" forbid. That brother is needed here; but his "circumstances" are in the way. And these circumstances, like facts, are stubborn things. A case comes up in which a preacher is too sound to superannuate, and too zealous to quit preaching—"circumstances" compel him to locate. Another comes up in which an appointment that strains the utmost construction of the Discipline is asked for. The Bishop hesitates; the Conference doubts. But the brother's "circumstances"!

We were once present at a Conference session in which "circumstances" were plead all round, and were carrying the day over every thing. A member, quick and eloquent, who sees through glasses, but not darkly, got an inkling of what these "circumstances" were, that so seriously clogged the itineracy. He sprang to his feet and said to this effect: "Bishop, I have just learned the meaning of 'circumstances.' When a brother can't take a suitable appointment, or must locate, or fails to come up to the full measure of an itinerant Methodist preacher, it is said to be on account of his 'circumstances.' Circumstances, in Confsrence parlance, I find to mean a little land, or a house, or a few servants, some real or personal estate, etc., etc. These 'circumstances' are embarrassing us. For my part, I thank God I have no circumstances."

LETTER FROM DR. SEHON.

ASBURY MANUAL LABOR SCHOOL,
Creek Nation, Nov. 12, 1852.

DEAR BRO. MCTYEIRE: Two months since, I left home to visit the St. Louis, Missouri, and Indian Mission Conferences. My intention was to be present also at the sessions of the Texas and East Texas Conferences, but on my arrival at the Indian Mission Conference, I found that it would be impossible for me to visit the schools and missions in this Conference, and do so. I therefore was compelled reluctantly to abandon the idea of visiting Texas. This I much regret, as I had much wished to do so. But the duties of my office require that these schools and missions should be visited by me.

I have been graciously preserved thus far in my long and difficult journey, for which I am truly thankful to our kind Heavenly Father.

The St. Louis Conference held its session in the city of Lexington, Mo. Here I met Bishop Paine, who was in good health and spirits, and who presided, as he always does, to the great satisfaction of the preachers. The session was a most interesting one, and greatly blessed to the Church and people. A number of precious souls were converted and added to the Church. In this Conference is the Kansas District, which formerly was a part of the Indian Mission Conference. Over this District, Rev. J. T. Perry presides, who is well qualified for his important work. The different Indian Missions within its bounds are all doing well. The Fort Leavenworth Manual Labor School, under the superintendence of the Rev. Thomas Johnson, was never in a more prosperous condition. I spent several days at this school, in company with Bishop Paine, both going to and returning from Conference. The mission farm contains about one thousand acres, and about eight hundred of which is under fence and in cultivation. The buildings are large and well adapted to the purposes of the school. The number of scholars is about ninety. Their proficiency is far beyond what is generally supposed by our friends at a distance. The good order which is observed in the school and the general deportment of the scholars, speak most favorably for the wise and prudent management of the Superintendent and his Assistants in instruction. This is our oldest mission and school among the Indians, composed principally of the Shawnees and Delawares. Bro. Johnson also has charge of the Kansas school, numbering about forty scholars. This is also doing well.

The session of the Missouri Conference was held in the new and flourishing city of St. Joseph, five hundred miles above St. Louis. The Conference was a profitable and harmonious one. The preachers all seemed in the spirit of their work, and looked and labored like men of God, and the true successors of the Apostles. Both the St. Louis and this Conference greatly increased in the amount received for missions the present year above the past, and both took very decided action in reference to future and further effort in favor of the great missionary enterprise.

At Bro. Johnson's, we were met by the Rev. D. B. Cumming, of the Indian Mission Conference, who came on purpose to meet the Bishop. He brought us safely in his carriage, after nine days travel, to the Clear Spring, the seat of the Indian Mission Conference. It was a long journey, part of the way rough, and sometimes hard fare; but we were blessed with good weather, good health, and good appetite.

The session of the Indian Mission Conference was indeed, to me, a novel and most interesting scene. Would that you, my dear Brother, and all of our editors could have been present. You would each be more than ever zealous in pleading for increased effort in favor of sending the Gospel to this deeply injured, fading race. Bishop Paine is a great favorite with this Conference, as he richly deserves to be. This is the third time in six years he has been present with them.

It was every way important and necessary for a Bishop to meet them; for two sessions past they had none. The business of the Conference progressed in great harmony and with great dispatch. There were representatives, by native preachers, from the Cherokees, Creeks and Choctaws, etc. Scenes of most thrilling interest occurred from time to time throughout the Conference. Ever and anon the native preachers, in their own tongue, would address the Conference with eloquent look and gesture, and, of course, with eloquent words, and then the Interpreter would present the same to us in our own language. One of the most interesting events of the Conference was the ordination of several native Indian preachers. God was in our midst, and every heart was moved by the Divine impulse. This is a great glorious work in which our brethren of this Conference are engaged—a work of great trial, privation and sacrifice. May the Church more than ever pray for the full success of their labors.

Among other talented and useful native preachers I met here, was Dixen Lewis, a native Choctaw. I had met him many years, when in Mobile, in the kind family of Bro. Thos. Capers. He is now a very popular and useful minister to his tribe and people.

The missionary meeting was a most excellent one; more than three hundred dollars was raised in money, making more than one thousand dollars collected during the year for missions. My visit has been one of great profit to me, individually and officially, and I hope of some good to this people. It was necessary, in order to a correct knowledge of this important field of labor, that the Secretary should have a personal knowledge of the work and of the men engaged it; and I assure you, I now rejoice, however laborious the journey, that I have been permitted to visit them. May God abundantly bless them.

Here I parted with the Bishop, he going on his way to the Arkansas Conference, and I on mine to visit the different schools under our care. From the Conference I proceeded to Tablequah, the Capital of the Cherokee Nation. Here you would be agreeably surprised at the evidences you would meet of the improvement and advancement of this people in civilization, education and religion. This is seen in their houses, stores, shops, farms, schools and churches. They have a fine system of public instruction, in the form of neighborhood schools, after the manner of the common schools of our country. They have, also, near Tahlequah, two large and beautiful brick academies, one for males and one for females, each capable of containing one hundred students. These are called National Schools, or Academies. The tuition and boarding of the pupils are free of charge, and paid by the Nation—truly, a most benevolent and praise-worthy feature in their government, and one worthy of example by the States.

The Principal Chief, John Ross, Esq., resides here. He is a man of great energy of character, and of a strong mind and liberal principles. He was the projector of these schools, and is most indefatigable in his efforts for their prosperity and full success. The Nation is now making application to the Government of the United States for funds, in exchange for a large body of land, formerly received from the Government, by which they may be able to insure the safety and final success of their noble plan of education. I most sincerely hope they may prove successful in their application.

My home, while in Tablequah, was in the kind family of Geo. M. Merrill, Esq., so well and so favorably known in our Church. His excellent wife is the daughter of Louis Ross, Esq., the brother of the Chief. I was also entertained frequently and most kindly in the amiable family of the Chief. I became truly interested for this people and this place.

We much need here a good Methodist Church. I have made an appeal to our friends generally through the Nashville and Louisville Advocates, for the purpose of raising the funds necessary for the erection of such a building. I hope you will present and urge the appeal through the medium of your paper. One thousand dollars only is needed; the balance will be raised by themselves. Come, who of your many readers will join me in giving ten dollars, or give their twenty, fifty or hundred dollars for this purpose. All who will do so, will please forward to you, or myself at Louisville, the funds and their names, and due acknowledgment shall be made of the same. This, among the many important calls, I assure you, is not behind any. Please press the call for funds for the Church in Tahlequah. Let us have the amount by the first of January next.

From Tahlequah I came on by the way of Fort Gibson to this place. This is the seat of the Asbury Manual Labor School for the Creeks. The school numbers eighty scholars, and is under the superintendence of our worthy Brother, Rev. T. B. Ruble. The scholars appear orderly, and deport themselves well in and out of school. They evidence great desire to learn, and are making great and commendable advancement in their studies. The building is of brick, one hundred and ten feet in length and three stories high, of strong and good materials, and well built. They have a good farm in cultivation, and will raise the present year over two thousand bushels of corn. The school is evidently doing well, and every thing connected with the Institution speaks favorably of the Superintendent.

I shall leave this place on Monday next for the Chickasaw Manual Labor School, about one hundred and forty miles distant, and which is under the superintendence of Rev. J. C. Robinson. From thence I go to the Colbert, Fort Coffee, and New Hope Schools; thence by the way of Van Buren and Little Rock home, hoping, if spared, to make there by the 15th of December, when I shall have been three months from my family. Duty thus calls, and it is my pleasure to heed the call, however long the absence or great the sacrifice. My trust is in God, both as to my own safety and preservation and that of my loved ones at home.

In conclusion, I have a word to say in regard to your "suggestion," in a late number of your excellent paper. It certainly is due that the correspondence from all our missions and missionaries should be through the Secretary. This is the requirement of the Discipline, and thus all our missionaries are instructed, and from time to time their attention has been called to this subject. There are, however, good reasons, perhaps, for publishing a part of this correspondence, addressed, it is true, to the Secretary through the papers which are in the immediate vicinity of their writers and their fields of labor. In reference to the proposed mode of publishing the missionary intelligence, no one would rejoice more than the writer to be able to do so. I have most earnestly desired it. But we have no press at Louisville, and this cannot be done without considerable expense, and unless ordered by the General Conference. It is much more labor now for me to write, as I do, a long communication to the paper, and send it by mail, together with all letters received for publication.

This, however, I do, as you will perceive from time to time, as far as my presence at home and in my office will admit. As the Nashville and Louisville Advocate became the nearest to us, we send these for publication these reports. They have always appropriated generously as much room as is called for, and under the proper head of Missionary Intelligence our communications are placed.

I wish with you, however, yea, much wish, we had a monthly paper—a Missionary Herald—published at Louisville, in which a condonsed summary might be published. You may hear from me again during my journey. God bless you. Yours truly,

E. W. SEHON.

METHODIST PROTESTANTS IN LA.—It may be interesting to some of our readers to know the condition of the M. P. Church in this State. From the official paper we extract the following statement of the Eighth Louisiana Annual Conference, which met at "Seventy-Six" October 13, 1852:

The Conference was opened with the usual exercises by the President, Br. John Queen, and by appointing Br. P. McDonald Secretary, and the following list of ministerial members made out:

Brewer, do. Holly Spring, R. B. Gourlie, claim $200; received $54 20, due 145 80. Beouff River, not heard from. Marion, J. M. D. Rice, claim $200, received nothing.

On motion, it was

Resolved, That the President of this Conference be authorized to negotiate with the President of the Arkansas Conference for that portion of their district lying South of the ridge of mountains running from Little Rock to Red River.

DIVISIONS OF CHRISTENDOM.—According to a calculation made by Dr. Wiggers, an eminent German writer, whose work was published at Hamburg in 1842-'43, the chief divisions of Christendom consist of the following numbers:

Roman Catholics	142,145,000
Protestants	62,785,000
Greek Church	57,110,000
Armenians, Copts, etc	5,850,000

The millions of Roman Catholics are governed by priests of various grades, at the head of whom is the Pope.

The Greek Church is twin-sister of the Catholics. The Armenian Patriarchs have great authority. The Copts, etc., are subjects of arbitrary governments, and can know little, if any thing, of religious liberty.

THE HYMN.

BY MILTON.

I.

It was in the winter wild,
While the Heaven-born child
All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies;
Nature in awe to him
Had doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great Master so to sympathize;
It was no season then for her
To wanton with the sun, her lusty paramour.

II.

Only, with speeches fair,
She woos the gentle air,
To hide her guilty front with innocent snow;
And on her naked shame,
Pollute with sinful blame,
The saintly veil of maiden white to throw;
Confounded, that her Maker's eyes
Should look so near upon her foul deformities.

III.

But he her fears to cease
Sent down the meek-eyed Peace;
She, crown'd with olive green came softly sliding
Down through the turning sphere
His ready harbinger,
With turtle wing the amorous clouds dividing;
And waving wide her myrtle wand,
She strikes an universal peace through sea and land.

IV.

No war, or battle's sound
Was heard the world around.
The idle spear and shield were high up hung;
The hooked chariot stood
Unstain'd with hostile blood;
The trumpet spake not to the arm'd throng,
And kings sat still with awful eye,
As if they surely knew their sov'reign lord was by.

V.

But peaceful was the night,
Wherein the Prince of Light
His reign of peace upon the earth began;
The winds, with wonder whist,
Smoothly the waters kiss'd,
Whilst seeming new joys to the mild ocean;
Who now hath quite forgot to rave,
While birds of calm sit brooding on the charmed wave.

VI.

The stars, with deep amaze,
Stand fix'd in steadfast gaze,
Bending one way their precious influence,
And will not take their flight,
For all the morning light,
Or Lucifer that often warn'd them thence;
But in their glimmering orbs did glow,
Until their Lord himself bespake, and bid them go.

VII.

And though the shady gloom
Had given day her room,
The sun himself withheld his wonted speed,
And hid his head for shame,
As his inferior flame
The new enlighten'd world no more should need;
He saw a greater Sun appear
Than his bright throne, or burning axletree could bear.

VIII.

The shepherds on the lawn,
Or ere the point of dawn,
Sat simply chatting in a rustic row;
Full little thought they then,
That the mighty Pan
Was kindly come to live with them below;
Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep,
Was all that did their silly thoughts so busy keep.

IX.

When such music sweet,
Their hearts and ears did greet,
As never was by mortal finger strook,
Divinely-warbled voice
Answering the stringed noise,
As all their souls in blissful rapture took:
The air, such pleasures loth to lose,
With thousand echoes still prolongs each heav'nly close.

X.

Nature that heard such sound,
Beneath the hollow round
Of Cynthia's seat, the airy region thrilling,
Now was almost won
To think her part was done,
And that her reign had here its last fulfilling:
She knew that such harmony alone
Could hold all heaven and earth in happier union.

XI.

At last surrounds their sight
A globe of circular light,
That with long beams the shame-faced night array'd;
The helmed Cherubim,
And sworded Seraphim,
Are seen in glitt'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to Heaven's new-born heir.

XII.

Such music (as 'tis said)
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung,
While the Creator great
His constellations set,
And the well-balanc'd world on hinges hung,
And cast the dark foundation deep,
And bid the weltring waves their oozy channel keep.

XIII.

Ring out, ye crystal spheres,
Once bless our human ears,
(If ye have power to touch our senses so,)
And let your silver chime
Move in melodious time;
And let the bass of heaven's deep organ blow;
And with your ninefold harmony
Make up full concert to th' angelic symphony.

XIV.

For if such holy song
Inwrap our fancy long,
Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold;
And speckled Vanity
Will sicken soon and die,
And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould,
And hell itself will pass away,
And leave her dolorous mansions to the peering day.

XV.

Yea Truth and Justice then,
Will down return to men,
Orb'd in a rainbow; and, like glories wearing,
Mercy will sit between,
Thron'd in celestial sheen,
With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering;
And Heaven, as at some festival,
Will open wide the gates of her high palace hall.

XVI.

But wisest fate says no,
This must not yet be so,
The Babe lies yet in smiling infancy,
That on the bitter cross,
Must redeem our loss;
So both himself and us to glorify:
Yet first, to those ychain'd in sleep,
The wakeful trump of doom shall thunder through the deep.

XVII.

With such a horrid clang
As on Mount Sinai rang,
While the red fire and smouldering clouds out brake:
The aged earth aghast,
With terror of that blast,
Shall from the surface to the centre shake;
When at the world's last session,
The dreadful Judge in middle air shall spread his throne.

XVIII.

And then at last our bliss
Full and perfect is,
But now begins; for from this happy day
Th' old Dragon under ground
In straiter limits bound,
Not half so far cast his usurped sway,
And, wroth to see his kingdom fail,
Swinges the scaly horror of his folded tail.

XIX.

The oracles are dumb,
No voice or hideous hum
Runs through the arched roof in words deceiving.
Apollo from his shrine,
Can no more divine,
With hollow shriek the steep of Delphos leaving.
No nightly trance, or breathed spell,
Inspires the pale-eyed priest from the prophetic cell.

XX.

The lonely mountains o'er,
And the resounding shore,
A voice of weeping heard and loud lament;
From haunted spring and dale,
Edg'd with poplar pale,
The parting genius is with sighing sent;
With flower-inwoven tresses torn,
The Nymphs, in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn.

XXI.

In consecrated earth
And on the holy hearth,
The Lares and Lemures moan with midnight plaint,
In urns and altars round
A drear and dying sound
Affrights the Flamens at their service quaint;
And the chill marble seems to sweat,
While each peculiar power foregoes his wonted seat.

XXII.

Peor and Baalim
Forsake their temples dim,
With that twice-batter'd god of Palestine,
And mooned Ashtaroth,
Heaven's queen and mother both,
Now sits not girt with tapers holy shine;
The Lybic Hammon shrinks his horn,
In vain the Tyrian maids their wounded Thammuz mourn.

XXIII.

And sullen Moloch fled,
Hath left in shadows dread
His burning idol all of blackest hue;
In vain with cymbals ring,
They call the grisly king,
In dismal dance about the furnace blue;
The brutish gods of Nile as fast,
Isis and Orus, and the dog Anubis, haste.

XXIV.

Nor is Osiris seen
In Memphian grove or green,
Trampling the unshower'd grass with lowings loud:
Nor can he be at rest
Within his sacred chest,
Naught but profoundest Hell can be his shroud,
In vain with timbrel'd anthems dark
The sable-stoled sorcerers bear his worshipped ark.

XXV.

He feels from Juda's land
The dreaded Infant's hand,
The rays of Bethlehem blind his dusky eyne;
Nor all his gods besides,
Longer dare abide,
Not Typhon huge ending in snaky twine:
Our Babe, to show his Godhead true,
Can in his swaddling hands control the damned crew.

XXVI.

So when the sun in bed,
Curtain'd with cloudy red,
Pillows his chin upon an orient wave,
The flocking shadows pale
Troop to th' infernal jail,
Each fetter'd ghost slips to his several grave,
And the yellow-skirted fays,
Fly after the night steeds, leaving their moon-loved maze.

XXVII.

But see, the Virgin blessed
Hath laid her babe to rest
Time is, our tedious song should here have ending,
Heaven's youngest-teemed star
Hath fix'd her polish'd car,
Her sleeping Lord with handmaid lamp attending:
And all about the courtly stable
Bright-harnessed angels sit in order serviceable.
